John Ragland Talks of Ray's Future Plans

WITH Arthur S. Kane's election to the presidency of Associated Exhibitors, the duties of John C. Ragland as vice-president and general manager of Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation have been considerably expanded. Included among his other duties is the handling of the details of Charles Ray's business, though Mr. Kane continues to look after all major deals affecting Mr. Ray's interests and will present his productions through First National and United Artists. Discussing Mr. Ray's affairs, Mr. Ragland said this week:

"Notable as has been this picture player's past career, I am confident that his greatest triumphs are yet before him. Mr. Ray's plans call for productions which are certain to increase his already remarkable prestige and virtually universal popularity. In producing only two pictures a year, as provided in his contract with United Artists, he will have time and opportunity for that close attention and study which he considers requisite in the production of films of the very highest order.

"Mr. Ray's hundreds of thousands of friends may rest assured that he will continue to play roles of the natural, human type, in pictures which portray the homey atmosphere of clean-blooded American life. The only difference between his future performances and his most impressive achievements in the past, if there is any difference at all, will result from his unswerving determination constantly to advance to bigger and better things."

"Gypsy Passion" Premiere

Vitagraph's French Picture Will Open March 26 at New York Strand

THE twenty-sixth of March has been selected as the date for the "first night" on Broadway of "Gypsy Passion," the spectacular French picture released by Vitagraph. Manager Joseph Plunkett of the Strand theatre was so impressed by the box-office success made by "The Sheik's Wife," Vitagraph's other French film, which opened at the Strand on Sunday, March 5th, that he determined to follow it up as soon as possible with "Gypsy Passion," declares a statement from the Vitagraph home office.

"Gypsy Passion" was taken from the gypsy story, "Miarka, the Child of Bear," by the well-known novelist, Jean Richepin, of the Academie Francaise. Besides being the author, Mr. Richepin adapted it for the screen and acted one of the principal roles, that of the Count de la Roque. Madame Rejane reputed to be second only to Sarah Bernhardt on the French stage, plays the part of the old gypsy woman, Romany Kate. This is Mme. Rejane's only appearance on the screen. The roles of the two young lovers are assumed by Desdemona Mazza, a young Italian actress, and by Ivor Novello, a youthful Englishman. One of the best actors in the whole cast is Pouzzli wonderfully trained Balkan bear. One of the big scenes of the picture is his fight with the villain.

"Gypsy Passion" was directed by Louis Mercanton, known as the David Wark Griffith of France. M. Mercanton has a unique technique in his handling of pictures. He has no studio; all the shots are made on locations. In a country like France, filled with beautiful old chateaux, medieval churches and antique ruins, this method is said to give a wonderful atmosphere to the film."

Charnas Purchases Special

Well Known Exchangeman Is Latest Buyer of "Wandering Boy"

FOLLOWING its record sale of practically fifty percent of the territory on "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight" within twenty-four hours after the picture's premiere at the Criterion theatre in New York, Equity Pictures announces this week the sale of this B. F. Zeidman special to Harry Charnas, of the Standard Film Exchange of Cleveland, Ohio.

This latest sale is offered as proof of the universal appeal of this unusual state right picture. Mr. Charnas, in his years in the industry, has won a reputation of being one of the most discriminating buyers of the independent field. A keen student of the public tastes and the exhibitors' requirements, he has succeeded in the past to control many of the leading state right features for his territory. In the purchase of "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight," Mr. Charnes has indorsed the judgment of such other well known independent exchangemen as Sam Grand of Boston, Ben Amsterdam of Philadelphia, Joe Friedman of Chicago, and Samuel Zierler of New York. He has fallen in line with the men who believe that the public's taste has swung around the cycle of motion picture entertainment and is now centered in clean, wholesome, heart interest dramas—the same type of entertainment that enthralled the past generations on the speaking stage.

"We might twenty-four sheet the entire country," states J. I. Schnitzer in speaking of the sale to Mr. Charnas, "and it would not present as forceful an argument to the exhibitor as the fact that Mr. Charnas selected this picture as one which is going to crowd the theatre in these days when only the unusual production can fill the house. We consider his indorsement—and by expending his own cash he is giving the picture the strongest indorsement possible—as high a compliment as could be paid this sincere, simple, yet gripping drama of American life."

One big booking is already announced in the Ohio territory. S. Barrett McCormick, managing director of the Allen theatre in Cleveland, will run "Where Is My Wandering Boy" during the week of April 16th. "Cleveland is a city of the keenest competition," continued Mr. Schnitzer, "and Mr. McCormick is selecting his pictures carefully from all that the market has to offer. He is looked upon as one of the most enterprising exhibitors and keenest showmen in the country. We understand that he already has plans under way to give this picture an elaborate presentation and unusual exploitation."

Warners in Foreign Field

Schlesinger Heads Department; to Negotiate for Big Pictures

GUS S. SCHLESINGER, one of the best known and best informed men on foreign distribution, has entered into an arrangement with Harry M. Warner, of Warner Brothers, to handle the foreign rights of all the Warner productions, it is announced. Mr. Schlesinger has been made general manager of foreign distribution.

The newly organized foreign department is in keeping with the rapid expansion of the Warner Brothers. In addition to the foreign distribution of the Warner product, Mr. Schlesinger said that the organization was open to negotiate with all producers for the foreign rights to their productions.

"The foreign department of the Warner Brothers," said Mr. Schlesinger, "is ready to negotiate for the foreign rights of only big productions. Our service to foreign buyers will always be of the highest standard, and only those productions containing good heart interest, lavish investiture, with a requisite amount of adventure will be considered. These can be either star or all star features. An idea of our requirements can be gleaned from the Warner Brother's productions, 'School Days,' with Wesley Barry, and the serial feature, 'A Dangerous Adventure,' with Grace Darmond."

Mr. Schlesinger has successfully carried on negotiations with buyers from Trinidad to Russia. He spent six years with the Inter-Ocean Corp, as sales manager of foreign distribution, and following his resignation last June opened his own offices as a broker and foreign distributor of his productions. He has had a wide and varied experience in both the theatrical and cinema world, having spent more than twenty years in both fields.

New Pine Trees Picture in Production

CARL E. MILLIKEN, treasurer, Pine Tree Pictures, Inc., Portland, Maine, is now in New York supervising the production of the latest James Oliver Curwood picture, now being produced under the personal direction of Dell Henderson at the Paragon Studio, Fort Lee, N. J.

The working title of this production is "Love and the Law," and both the Arrow and Pine Tree officials are most enthusiastic over the story, for they consider it one of the strongest ever written by Mr. Curwood.

Mr. Henderson has selected a cast including Zena Keefe, Gypsy O'Brien and J. Barney Sherry, besides many other popular players.

Remarkable Sets Seen in "Determination"

"Determination," the special production now being distributed by Lee and Bradford and at present enjoying an extended run at the Cameo theatre in New York City, contains many unusual sets. The action of the story is laid part in the Whitechapel district in London and in Paris, and these sets were all constructed at Grantwood, New Jersey, at considerable expense.

Among the most remarkable series is one showing a street in the Whitechapel district in London. This was built under the supervision of a London engineer to insure its perfection. Another set required was that of an Apache den in Paris. This set alone took several months to construct owing to the peculiar formation of the pillars and the odd shape of the ceiling. The other large set representing life in Paris is the interior of the International Sporting Club. The interior is finished in marble and magnificently furnished with oriental rugs and tapestries.

Flora Finch to Appear in Torchy Comedy

Flora Finch, well-known comedy actress, will soon be seen in Johnny Hines's latest comedy which is temporarily called "Torchy's Hold-Up," to be released by Educational.

John J. Hayes, the young president of the Pacific Film Company, of Culver City, Cal., which is now state righting a series of feature pictures

Long Run Bookings for "Ten Nights"

William Conn, president of the Premier Pictures Corporation, who several weeks ago purchased the right to "Ten Nights in a Barroom" from Arrow Film Corporation for the Southern territory, reports many long run bookings for the picture. Among the theatres which will show Arrow's popular melodrama for at least one week are: Rivoli Theatre, Columbia, S. C.; Academy Theatre, Charleston, S. C.; Alamo Theatre, Raleigh, N. C., and the Amuzu Theatre, Winston-Salem, N. C.

This is thought to be a record for first run stands in this territory and Mr. Conn is justly jubilant over the interest and attention "Ten Nights in a Barroom" is creating in North and South Carolina.

Heavy Second National Bookings Continue

Bookings of "David and Jonathan," first release by Second National Pictures Corporation, a visualization of E. Temple Thurston's novel, are increasing in volume with each passing day, according to officials of the concern. Bookings of the second release, "Her Story," written and directed by Dion Titheradge, also are being made at a rapid rate, and many inquiries are being received regarding the third release, "The Night Riders," picturized from the Northwest adventure story by Ridgewell Collu, which scored a notable success in novel form.

Among the theatres which booked "David and Jonathan" for runs in March are the following: Boston Theatre, Boston; Band Box, Irving and New Strand, Chicago; Novelty, Apollo and Evaline, Pittsburgh; Family and Ruby, Philadelphia; Star, Huntington, Pa.; Grant, Johnstown, Pa.; Arcade, Carnegie, Pa.; Aris, Erie, Pa., and Keystone, N.P E. City, Pa.

Franchises have been sold by Second National, it is stated, for three-fourths of the territory in the United States, and offers have been received for practically all the remaining territory. These are now under consideration.

"I Am the Law" Campaign

Consumer Advertising Will Herald All-Star Production, States Burr

ANNOUNCEMENT comes from Affiliated Distributors that a nation-wide publicity campaign is to feature the release of "I Am the Law." This new "snow" picture is now in the course of completion on the Coast under the direction of Edwin S. Carewe and features Alice Lake, Kenneth Harlan, Rosemary Theby, Gaston Glass, Noah and Wallace Beery and Hector Sarno Consumer advertising, it is announced, will be put to a very definite and decisive test over a period of time that is calculated to prove just to what extent the distributor of a picture can market his reels in a manner similar to that used in the distribution of commercial products. Every possible medium will be taken advantage of, it is stated, to tell the public direct what sort of picture "I Am the Law" is and who are responsible for its origin.

In addition to trade paper and billboard campaigns which in themselves will be extended to the greatest possible limit, every fan magazine on motion pictures in the country will carry the advertising message of the production. Extensive space will be reserved in leading newspapers of key cities coincident with the first runs. Rotagravure sections will carry reproductions of the stills and special stories are now being syndicated to all agencies for general circulation. The Saturday Evening Post will come in for a share of the appropriation and in addition space will be taken in all regional papers. Arrangements are being concluded for the production of numerous exploitation novelties as well.

One feature of the campaign is represented in arrangements for the working out for the exhibitor of his own particular local campaign and tie-ups. A complete local appeal will be planned and forwarded to exhibitors requesting this service. Such a service, based upon information sent in to Affiliated's publicity department by the exhibitor is calculated to take the place of the expense of a special exploitation man.

"Her Story" Press Book Is Issued

Still retaining the name of "Exhibitor's Guide," under which the first press issued by Second National Pictures Corporation for "David and Jonathan" was put out the second press book for "Her Story" has made its appearance. It is eight pages, devoted almost entirely to material for actual use by exhibitors in exploiting the Titheradge photo-drama.

"Felix" Cartoons Sold for Canada

Miss M. J. Winkler who controls the rights of the series of "Felix" cartoons for distribution on the state rights market, reports this week the sale of the series of twelve subjects to the Regal Film Service for physical distribution throughout the Canadian Dominion.

Polo Announces His Policy

Promises Exhibitors Bigger Serial Series at Reasonable Rentals

Eddie Polo, well-known serial star and at present the producer and featured player in "Cap'n Kidd," first of a series of six special serials which he will make for distribution on the state rights market, has issued the following statement:

"For eight years I have been starred by Universal in countless serials. I may say with pardonable pride that my pictures have been very successful. That company has treated me fairly; I have no complaints to offer. I felt, however, upon the expiration of my Universal contract that I could accomplish a good deal more as the star and head of my own company, and since it is the natural aspiration of everyone to some day branch out on his 'own,' I obtained my release from the Universal Company when the opportunity presented itself.

"My decision to enter the producing business was not the result of a personal whim to have myself exploited as the head of my own company. It was the result of many years of careful deliberation and thought.

"I am not unmindful of the obligations I have commited myself to in the formation of my own company. I realize that I will have to make bigger and better serials than ever before—and what is more, justify the confidence which those exhibitors who have booked my pictures in the past have in my present plans.

"As the head of my own company, I shall enjoy that freedom which is so essential to the making of a really big picture.

"My pictures shall be sold direct to the state rights buyer, and I shall see to it that he gets it at a price at which the exhibitor may book it at a safe margin of profit.

You ask me how I, an actor, can guarantee the fulfillment of such a pledge? Well, in the present instance I shall be not only actor, but one of the principals in the producing and distributing unit. And every territorial contract closed shall await my approval before its consummation."

Contents of Latest Official Movie Chat

THE forthcoming issue of the "Official Urban Movie Chats of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America" sounds an editorial note of optimism at the outset and picturizes a phase of agriculture as it is practiced on an immense scale in the Northwest.

Basket ball on roller skates is shown in detail. Then comes the "Household Hints." An expert housekeeper shows how to make common household ammonia for three cents a pint and then shows the manifold uses to which it can be put.

The Public Service section shows how the State of Oregon is raising great flocks of China pheasants. There are pictures of hunters indulging in trap and open-shooting. The section on Science this week is devoted to biology, showing how the "Venus flytrap," a plant growing in North Carolina, obtains its food by catching insects. "The Great Outdoors" shows some extraordinary fishing pictures, an unusual combination of fun, industry and scenic effects.

"The Public Forum" concludes the reel.

Fine Reports on All Kineto Showings

Reports coming into New York from various localities all over the country bespeak a most unusual enthusiasm for the Kineto pictures which are being distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

The feature production, "The Four Seasons," the series of one-reel biographical-dramatic classics in "The Great Authors" series, are both getting big audiences and the finest sort of praise.

The series of "Great Authors" is repeating the success over the country that it has been making at the Mark Strand in New York where Joseph Plunkett is playing them at the rate of one a month.

Miller Starting Production at Port Heny

Charles Miller, head of the Charles Miller Productions Co., has selected the cast for his first independent picture, "The Long, Long Trail," and work on it will be commenced this week at the Miller Studio in Port Henry, N. Y.

The list of players includes Earle Fox, Frank Losee, Fred Benton, Charles Mackey, Harry Lee and "Peggy," a talented young lady in whom Mr. Miller believes he has uncovered a "find," For some time past Miller has been dividing his time between Port Henry and New York City, working out the plans for his future operations which include four independent offerings during the coming year. The first, "The Long, Long Trail" is a Northwestern story by Jasper Ewing Brady. Mr. Miller will personally direct it, and supervise the cutting and assembling. It is expected to have it ready for release some time in May. Distribution plans will be announced later.

Depression in Scandinavia

Its Buying Power Over-Estimated, States Swedish Biograph Official

AN interesting resume of film conditions as they exist in the Scandinavian countries is given by Nils Bouveng, one of the officials of the Swedish Biograph Company and the founder of the Skandia Film Company which organization effected a union with the Swedish Biograph several years ago, in a recent statement. Because of the depreciated money and stagnation of business as well as the great lack of employment, theatre conditions in those countries are very poor. An illustration of this is afforded by the fact that the amusement taxes paid by the motion picture theatres of Stockholm show a decrease of 27 per cent during 1921, as against the preceding year.

"Every one is, of course, looking for better times, but no signs are perceivable. Even if the nucleus of the Scandinavian film and motion picture business is able to endure the depression, it certainly is necessary to act with solicitude and carefulness, and this assuredly will be done. Discrimination and caution is absolutely what is needed of all film producing concerns—American as well as foreign—who are interested in maintaining their hold on the Scandinavian market, and on the highly cultivated and exacting Scandinavian public."

Mr. Bouveng further states the buying capacity of Scandinavia has been over estimated. Norway, Sweden and Denmark, while of great area, are of comparatively small population, since the northern sections are very sparsely populated. During the war it was necessary to stock up with American features and at that time many new theatres were built. The total number of theatres never was more than 700 and this number is rapidly decreasing. Half of these theatres are not able to play more than two or three times a week.

Mr. Bouveng, who has been for some time director of production for the Swedish Biograph Company, has been spending the winter and spring in the United States arranging for the distribution of the Swedish productions on the American market. George H. Hamilton, president of George H. Hamilton, Inc., is now engaged in the territorial distribution of these pictures, the first one of which "Give Me My Son!" is available for release. The second and third releases will be "In Self Defense" and "When Knights Were Bold."

Pacific to Change Policy

Minimum Production Cost to Be Set on All Pictures, States Hayes

A NEW distribution policy in regard to initial cost of production of feature-length photoplays will be placed in operation April first by the Pacific Film Company, according to John J. Hayes, president of that organization. Comedies about to be released by Pacific will also be affected, states Hayes.

No subject over five reels in length will be considered by Pacific for distribution where the certified cost of production is less than $30,000, according to Hayes. In an article to the motion picture trade press Mr. Hayes says:

"Cheap pictures for independent release cost the distributor, the exchange and the exhibitor too much in the long run. To 'buck' competition we independents must offer the best that the market affords. The screen value of a photoplay is nearly always measured by the staging of a production, its direction and the cast. A good story, poorly staged, is a liability to independents. A good story, with unskilled direction and a cheap cast, comes within the same category. It follows, then, that money must be spent to secure a favorable output; not lavishly, but with an eye for the effect it will have on the audience. I think a good photoplay cannot be produced under $30,000 net and Pacific has set that figure as the minimum sum to be expended on any picture we will offer after April first.

"Neither will a cheap grade of comedies, no matter who the star is, be released through Pacific channels. The minimum for comedy cost will be $10,000 for a two-reel subject and $7,500 for one-reelers."

"The Emerald Isle" for St. Patrick's Week

Kineto's "The Emerald Isle," one of the most beautiful travel pictures among the Urban Popular Classics, is at the New York Strand this week to give the atmosphere called for by St. Patrick's Day Managing Director Joseph Plunkett has given it a beautiful musical surrounding.

"The Emerald Isle" is one of almost a hundred reels in the travel group Charles Urban is preparing as a special series among the many other groups in the Kineto library of film. Many critics have pro-

Philadelphia Trade to See "Your Best Friend"

"Your Best Friend," the Warner Brothers' production produced by Harry Rapf, starring Vera Gordon, will be given its first trade showing at the Stanley Company's Carlton Theatre, Phila., on March 19, by Lou Berman, of the Independent Film Corp., of that city, it is announced. Mr. Rapf will put on a prologue with a number of well known stage players.

Mr. Berman has purchased the exclusive territorial rights for the Gordon picture for Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and District of Columbia.

McGovern and Egler announce the sale of the Shorty Hamilton Series in the following territories: Celebrated Players Film Corporation of Chicago, for Indiana, Wisconsin and northern Illinois; Fine Arts Film Company of St. Louis, for eastern Missouri and southern Illinois; Federated Film Company of Omaha, for Iowa and Nebraska; Crescent Film Company of Kansas City, for Kansas City and western Missouri, and Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions, for the six southeastern states.

ADOLPH ZUKOR

The Romance of Famous Players

IN March, ten years ago, a brief, quiet man entered the Fifth avenue office of the Motion Picture Patents Company, and asked audience. It was not an especially impressive office; nowadays it would not compare favorably with the quarters of a prosperous motion picture exchange. But to the visitor that day it was grim and forbidding, its walls and ramparts of a fortress; its gate the bristling portal of a walled city; for intrenched within were the few men who controlled the motion picture business—such as it was—of the world. They owned the patents on the only projecting machines then in use, and separate patents on different parts of the mechanism, and when a man ran a picture from a source that hadn't their okeh, they closed down on his machinery.

The visitor, on this day, was invited to sit on the bench in the outer office and wait the pleasure of the men within. It was the sort of reception room in which solicitors, cranks, messenger-boys, book-agents, bootblacks and last-hope inventors feel at home. Persons with legitimate business usually waited inside, in more secluded quarters. Our visitor waited, and kept on waiting. The minutes lengthened into an hour, the hour became two. Many had come in, and, with small delay, passed into the portal of the great. They came out, seriously, or jocularly, or importantly, and went their busy ways into the world. No one paid any attention to our visitor. From time to time a waiting messenger looked at him curiously or skeptically. Some of the important, fortunate men who had to wait only half an hour or so gave him a pitying glance as they dashed in or dashed out. From time to time our visitor sought, respectfully, to remind the great powers that he still waited. But of course no one paid any attention to him, for he was not very prominent, and this was the grand headquarters of a new industry—an industry full of those big new features in two reels, an industry built on a foundation of nickels and dimes, an industry that paid a few salaries as high as two or three hundred dollars a week.

An early day group of players and directors at the Lasky studio, most of whom will be identified without caption

But finally it did occur to some one inside that a small man with a still smaller proposition—probably —was hanging around outside. Why not see him and get him on his way? Freezing out hadn't done any good. They had kept him out, now, for more than three hours; yet he still waited: grave, quiet respectful.

So they showed him in.

But they didn't show him up, for the little man spoke first.

He said, in the same even, steady voice that he always uses: "Gentlemen, I came to you with a legitimate business proposition. I had nothing to ask. I wanted to give you a chance to make money, in return for an opportunity you could give me. You wanted to show me how big you were, and how small and contemptible I am. You took the best possible way of doing it. For three hours I have sat on a wooden bench with messenger boys, and old actors trying to get jobs, and carpenters and house-painters trying to collect their bills. And now I want to tell you something. I brought you Sarah Bernhardt's 'Queen Elizabeth,' a great film by a great actress, but where you made me wait three hours, I am going to make you wait three years. You could have bought this film for fifteen thousand dollars, but you couldn't have it, now, for ten times that amount. I am going to play it myself, in independent theatres, and if there are no independent theatres, I am going to make them. I am going to be an independent, as long as I live. Gentlemen, good-day."

History doesn't tell what the great men did when little, unknown Adolph Zukor turned his back on them and walked away. Probably they called him a nut, laughed, and went on with the important

Paramount's Tenth Anniversary

TEN years ago Adolph Zukor saw, in the trivial amusement of the day, the infinite possibilities of the future. Today the whole world is the better for his vision. All that he hoped and believed and foresaw he put into Paramount Pictures, and in their ten years of existence they have become one of the great moving forces of civilization.

To house them, magnificent theatres have been built; to make them, great artists and great authors have given their best; and out of them has grown the mighty industry which supplies the chief entertainment of the whole race of mankind.

So the world today celebrates, in gladness and gratitude, the tenth anniversary of the birth of feature pictures. And it knows that Paramount will go on, in the coming decade as in the past, so that ten years from now we will look back upon a period as full of achievement as the ten years of progress we look back upon today.

In token of this continual improvement in quality, we give in the following pages an announcement of the Paramount Pictures for the coming months. No finer group of quality box-office productions has ever been offered.

And for Next Season—

IN the season of 1922-23, beginning September first, the steady improvement in Paramount Pictures will be continued, and as always, the entire producing organization will concentrate on giving to exhibitors a continuous, dependable supply of the highest quality of box-office productions.

Realizing that the so-called program picture is no longer sufficient as a steady diet for a discriminating public, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will release a greater number of big special productions than ever before in history. The practice, so successfully inaugurated in the present season, of putting several stars in one big production, will be continued.

Here are a few of the pictures to be released in the coming season:

CECIL B. DEMILLE'S production, THOMAS MEIGHAN in "Manslaughter," with a cast including Leatrice Joy. From the novel by Alice Duer Miller.

RODOLPH VALENTINO in "Blood and Sand," a Fred Niblo production, from the novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez. Cast includes Lila Lee and Nita Naldi.

DOROTHY DALTON in "The Sea Bride," directed by Irvin Willat. Milton Sills is leading man.

"THE OLD HOMESTEAD," the famous old play produced on a lavish scale by Rollin B. Sturgeon, with an all-star cast.

"THE LOVES OF PHARAOH," the sensational Ernest Lubitsch production now doing record business at the Criterion, New York.

WILLIAM de MILLE'S production "Nice People," from the stage success by Rachel Crothers; with Wallace Reid, Bebe Daniels, Wanda Hawley and Conrad Nagel.

WALLACE REID in "The Dictator," from the novel by Richard Harding Davis. Lila Lee in the cast. Directed by James Cruze.

THOMAS MEIGHAN in "If You Believe It, It's So," by Perley Poore Sheehan. Theodore Roberts in the cast.

WILLIAM de MILLE'S production "Clarence," from the successful comedy by Booth Tarkington.

JACK HOLT in "While Satan Sleeps," from the novel by Peter B. Kyne, DOROTHY DALTON in "The Siren Call," directed by Irvin Willat.

GLORIA SWANSON in "Her Gilded Cage," David Powell and Walter Hiers in the cast. A Sam Wood Production.

GEORGE MELFORD'S production "Burning Sands" from the novel by Arthur Weigall.

MAY McAVOY in "The Top of New York," by Sonya Levien.

things. But history ought to tell, for that was the day of the Boston Tea Party in the picture business, the hour in which Caesar fell, the red dawn of Waterloo. The great Patents Company, the most complete and perfect Trust the picture industry ever knew or ever can know, had in that hour reached the top of its peculiarly Great Divide, and had commenced the descent to oblivion. From that hour the independents multiplied like mushrooms in a forest after spring rain, and the great figures which have made the screen the most popular art began to leap from various obscurities. Today the Patents Company is a thing almost wholly unremembered by the general public, while its makers and controllers have passed out of sight, and not into history!

"Automatic Vaudeville" Palace at 48 East 14th St., where the foundation of Adolph Zukor's success was laid

Ten years ago!

And now the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, celebrating its first decade, fulfils the prophecy of the little man ignored on the bench, and fulfils it manyfold.

The Organization's Scope

It is the most powerful, far-reaching combination of men and talents in the art history of the world. More than that, no other aggregation of men in history have served, in a recreative, entertaining, artistic way, so many of their fellow men. The sun never sets on the dominions of Britain, and the stars are forever shining on the revealed works of Famous Players. There is never an hour, or a moment, in which an audience, somewhere, is not looking at a Famous Players picture. It has conquered prejudices as it has conquered nations. It began at a time when the motion picture was a trifling toy, considered seriously not even by men who were making fortunes out of it, and raised it to a dignity in which it receives the homage of the world. Famous Players was the first picture producing organization to take a stand for dignity and importance, and it has maintained that lead throughout the brief, dazzling annal of the screen.

It has reached its tenth anniversary as full of serene honors as some ancient banking corporation celebrating an opulent centenary. It is receiving, not only daily, but hourly, the congratulations of success and greatness in every country.

Famous Players is so irrevocably bound up with the career of Adolph Zukor that its history is his history, its struggle is his struggle, and its ideals are his.

The moton picture has been chided for the commercial origin of the few men who have made it great. This is a paradox. It is inconceivable that the motion picture should have been developed, and made the servant of all the people, by any secluded body of artists, by solitary thinkers or rapt idealists. The motion picture is the property of the world's men and women and children. It is and must be as fundamental as the commonest things of life, for it deals with commonest things of life—love and strife and ambition—and its emotions are the great dominant emotions of existence, not the orchid-like feelings of transplanted, hot-house souls.

The first thing to say about Adolph Zukor is that while he is the great patriarch of the film business, he is not yet fifty years old. The second thing is that he is living with his first and only wife, and has seen his two children happily married—his son and assistant, Eugene, to a Kansas City girl; his daughter to the son of Marcus Loew. All of which bears out the patriarchal simile.

The First Motion Picture

About 1904, or a little earlier, a young man borrowed some money from his cousin, who was in the fur business. He wanted to establish some penny-arcades, in down-town New York. Hand-cranked Mutoscopes, at a penny a look, held the first crude form of a picture in motion. At first these penny-arcades prospered, but, anon, they didn't, and the young furrier who loaned the money had now to devote his business acumen, and his labor, to save the whole venture from failure. He took it over. He saw possibilities in it, and soon had a chain of successful arcades extending up Broadway to Forty-second Street. The new owner—that is to say, young Mr. Zukor—was next attracted by the very first form of real motion picture shown outside a vaudeville theatre. "Hale's Touring Cars," they were called; and a hundred feet or so of film, taken jerkily and laboriously from the end of a moving train, were projected on a white sheet beyond an interior which more or less resembled an observation platform on a transcontinental limited. The people came in flocks as long as the pictures were new; but there were few of these trembling views to be had—and the enterprise failed for lack of material.

But the pits of failure have only served as footholds of success to some men. Here again Mr. Zukor learned a lesson—the lesson of the public's enormous demand for motion pictures. He promptly threw out his mutoscopes, which were a fading attraction; and his "touring cars," which had exhausted their supply, and established real motion picture theatres, showing the short—and usually distressing—films of the day in them. Here the oft derided name "store show" originated, for these "theatres" occupied unused store-rooms.

It is well to remember that so far Mr. Zukor was only an exhibitor, but he was realizing, as no exhibitor did, the public's need of genuine picture entertainment, and the total lack of anything really supplying that need.

Among his theatre properties was the Comedy, on Fourteenth Street, managed by his brother-in-law, Al Kaufman. To this came a picture of amazing length —"Oliver Twist," in five reels, performed by no less person than Nat Goodwin. Whether that picture survives or not, no one seems to know, but it should survive in a museum, for it gave Adolph Zukor the original idea of Famous Players, and the determination to have such a company.

"That is what they want!" he exclaimed. "Real stories, performed by really good actors!"

Early Stumbling Blocks

He found few who shared his enthusiasm. It was generally agreed that five reels was a preposterous length. Why, even though people were willing to sit through such a picture, it would ruin their eyes!

Mr. Zukor had no name for his organization that, as yet, had no existence. No one was interested enough to give him a name. But early one morning, riding home on the subway after more than eighteen hours of labor, he closed his eyes and as he dozed a single phrase beat monotonously into his brain with each click of the rail-joints, "famous plays by famous players . . . famous plays by famous player . . . famous plays by famous players . . ."

Suddenly he woke with a start: "Famous Players!" It was to be the name of the new corporation

He interested Daniel Frohman. Daniel's great brother Charles, no greater as an artist, but much more extensively engaged in the theatrical business would not take the trifling movies more seriously than stamp photos, or souvenir postcards.

After tremendous persuasion, James O'Neill was persuaded to perform "The Count of Monte Cristo." It was the initial venture—and in Chicago Col. William N. Selig, a real picture pioneer, with more experience and the best facilities in the world at that time, got a rival "Monte Cristo" on the market before they were through shooting.

It was a serious blow at the young company's finances, but "Monte Cristo" was shelved, and Daniel Frohman persuaded Mme. Bernhardt to make "Queen Elizabeth" in France, with the new American company taking only the rights for this country.

Both Mr. Frohman and Mr. Zukor have told the story of the arrival of the tin container containing the print and one negative. For quite awhile they walked up and down before the little box, almost afraid to look at its contents. Their ready money had gone into "Monte Cristo"; their last reserves had gone into "Queen Elizabeth." If the picture were a failure, Famous Players was dead at birth.

But it was far from a failure, and there was still to happen that stirring and epoch-making incident in the office of the Patents Company.

The first American-made production, "The Prisoner of Zenda," with James K. Hackett, was a smash-g success, topping "Elizabeth" by a gross of many housands.

The rest of the history of Famous Players is a mat- r of multiplication and addition—multiplication of s ever-widening circle of interests, and the addition, eadily, of the greatest names of the stage and among riting men.

But Zukor was not through pioneering, though his eet were firmly established on the road of film suc- ess. He was soon to gather in and develop a ma- ority of the little-known people whose names have een made familiar in every country on earth; he was o completely revolutionize the sale and distribution f motion pictures; and it was he who was to prove o the theatre that the screen was not its poor relation, ut its big brother.

Mary Pickford Returns to Films

Mary Pickford, who had already made some suc- ess on the screen, had abandoned films for the stage, ppearing in David Belasco's production, "The Good ittle Devil." Mr. Zukor determined to return her o her proper sphere, and through negotiations with Ir. Belasco, conducted by Mr. Frohman, purchased he play, and the services of the company, for $15,- 00. Back among the Klieges, the present Mrs. Fair- anks was like a kitten returned to its birthplace, and he had been delighted to receive—in October, 1912 -a contract calling for her services in still other pho- oplays at the commanding figure of $500 per week. Daniel Frohman's great, rambling, artistic old office bove the Lyceum theatre became the meeting place nd green-room of these frontier-folk of the new art; nd every day, after studio hours, they met to have upper about the hospitable Frohman board and dis- uss the day's work and the plans of tomorrow.

"Tess of the d'Urbervilles" brought Mrs. Fiske o the Famous screen, and there followed such players as Laura Sawyer, Carlotta Nilsson, Lily Langtry, John Barrymore, Cyril Scott, William Farnum, Gaby Deslys and Henry E. Dixey.

The office of Famous Players, in the Times building, then had a working staff of no more than four or five persons—a bit of contrast, with the present group of nearly nine thousand employees—and the first pictures were made at the Biograph studio.

Mr. Zukor felt that it would be a great advantage if all their activities could be encompassed by one set of walls, and presently a loft building was found in West Twenty-sixth Street. The partitions of the top floors were torn out, and under the general direction of Edwin S. Porter the long series of early star vehicles was made in the big, rambling studio thus constructed, with the general offices of the company adjacent to the working floor. A few years ago this building was destroyed by fire.

It was about at this time that Mr. Zukor finally convinced his faithful friend, partner and admirer—Mr. Frohman—that the last vestiges of reason had deserted him. He told him that he believed a certain director working obscurely at Biograph had great possibilities. And he was to offer him—fifty thousand dollars a year! They didn't have fifty thousand dollars a year in the whole organization. It was considerably to the relief of Mr. Zukor's associates that the unknown director turned out to be absolutely insane. He rejected the offer! He proved to be a genial, highly intelligent man, and a very pleasant acquaintance, but he demonstrated a whole set of loose screws in his mental machinery in this spurning of a perfectly fabulous salary. He said, crazily enough, "I believe I can make more money making my own productions." His name was David Wark Griffith.

D. W. Griffith's Entry

Now we come to another great forward movement in motion pictures, destined to be as revolutionary, and as lasting, as the establishment of great stories interpreted by high-class actors. Thus far, the producers had ceased their connection with the business when their pictures were made. They sold them outright to the exhibitors. Mr. Zukor sold Mary Pickford's early pictures in that way, but when, increasing the worth of his stories, his supporting cast, his direction, the salary of his star and the opulence of her setting, he found it imperative to increase the price to $25,000 for the American rights, outright—there the exhibitors threw their cards on the table and refused to play. Zukor next challenged the whole "outright buy" system. He demanded the privilege of work-in on the percentage basis, which today seems, of course, the only fair and equitable scheme of distribution. Met by a point-blank threat that if he persisted in his demands the exhibitorial exchanges would bar his pictures from the public, he replied that he would organize his own exchanges for the nation. This was the beginning of the exchange system, and the inauguration of percentage distribution on a basis of sixty-five per cent to the manufacturer, and thirty-five per cent to the exhibitor.

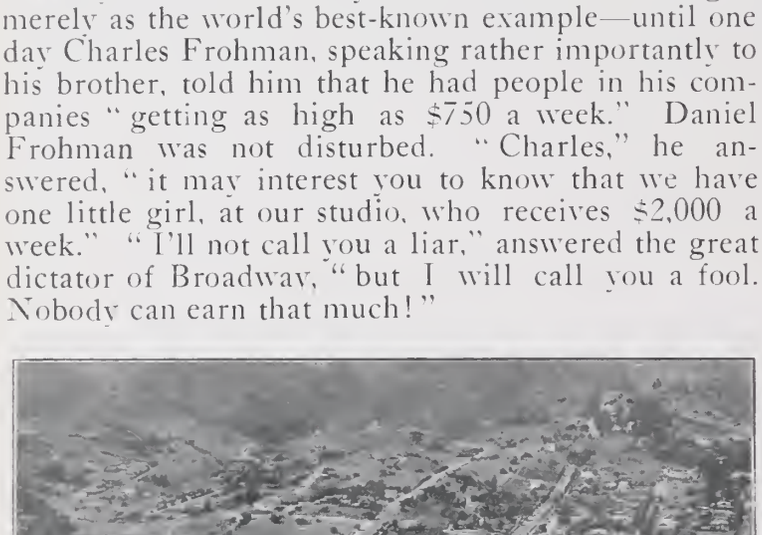
It is not the purpose of this story to become statistical. This is the romance, not the bookkeeping, of Famous Players. The next few years were unbelievably romantic.

Mary Pickford's salary rose—to use this little girl merely as the world's best-known example—until one day Charles Frohman, speaking rather importantly to his brother, told him that he had people in his companies "getting as high as $750 a week." Daniel Frohman was not disturbed. "Charles," he answered, "it may interest you to know that we have one little girl, at our studio, who receives $2,000 a week." "I'll not call you a liar," answered the great dictator of Broadway, "but I will call you a fool. Nobody can earn that much!"



View of Hollywood with the Lasky studio in the foreground covering 25 times the original area of the lot where "The Squaw Man" was made

But Charles Frohman rapidly proved to his own satisfaction that his brother and Adolph Zukor were not fools. And from then on the doors of the greatest library of material were wide open to them, and they had the co-operation of a man who had risen from boy-of-all-work to become criterion as well as arbiter of the American theatre.

Cecil B. De Mille, director general, Famous Players-Lasky Corp.

Lasky and De Mille

Meanwhile, there was an energetic and interesting young man in the West whose destinies were to be irrevocably linked with the Zukor enterprises. He was the grandson of a pioneer who had crossed the plains in '49. He began life as a theatre musician, became a San Francisco newspaper reporter, and was among the first hundred men to reach Nome in the Alaskan gold rush. His adventures here might give Rex Beach a whole brace of new novels. Did he return wealthy? He did not. He came back thoroughly, completely broke. He recovered his balance as a musician, and then began to produce vaudeville acts. He came East finally, with another young man, son of a famous American dramatist, determined to produce motion pictures. He and his friend had little money between them, but, somehow, they managed to get to Hollywood, and—nip and tuck—to make the picture they planned to make. The young man was Jesse L. Lasky. His pal and first director was Cecil B. DeMille.

It is characteristic of Mr. Zukor's policy of life and work that he has been a master of the film business, a patriarch of the business if you will, but never a monopolizer—a leader, but no selfish destroyer; no trust. He saw the first effort of the "Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company," in 1913, and sent the well-known producer a telegram of congratulation. The entente cordiale thus established led to the formation, three years later, of The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in which the artistic intentions of both may have risen to full power, without submerging the personality of either.

The progress of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation from that point is as broad and clearly marked as the highway of Imperial Rome. The concern has gone from triumph to triumph, but not with the ease that is popularly supposed to attend success. Indeed its problems have been as strenuous as its accomplishments have been mighty, and the snares attending its stride to universal dominion have been many and artful. But these belong in a more detailed narrative

It is proper, here, only to summarize the things it has done, and to reflect, as far as words can do so, the intentions of the Napoleonic little man whose hand is still at the helm.

One of these intentions, and fulfilments, was the Paramount Pictures Corporation, formed in 1915, and distributing, throughout the world, a definite and regular number of consistently high-class photoplays. Under the Paramount banner were immediately grouped the releases of the Eastern Famous Players studio, the Lasky studio in Hollywood, and the Palais and Morosco studios, of the same Southern California city. The forty-eight pictures a year distributed by Paramount immediately set a standard which has consistently and steadily risen with the advance of photoplay art. The story of Paramount, its struggles, its battles, its dynasties, its civil wars, would make a novel full of dramatic interest, suspense and thrill—or a formal corporation record, bristling with statistics and figures as a porcupine's back bristles with quills. Paramount is significant to us, in this compressed annal of Famous Players-Lasky, as a great, wealthy and progressive machine for the promulgation of better and better photoplays.

The significant thing is that Paramount has endured. It was organized in a time when many another distribution or production corporation came into being, flourished, and disappeared. A great majority of these were formed for promotion purposes. A majority of the "big" picture business men of that day were in pictures to promote stock-selling schemes, to make quick money and get out, or else turn to forming more new companies. A great railroad builder once said that no venture could be permanent unless it served the public. Paramount served. It was organized to serve—to systematically distribute good pictures. It prospered because it fulfilled the honest and constructive purposes of its makers.

Originally there were four stockholders in Famous Players. Five years ago the stock was held by the executives, about ten in number. To-day, on the stockbooks, there are over 1,900 holders of common, and over 1,800 holders of preferred.

The First Famous Players pictures were made on leased space in the old Biograph studio in New York. Today the great Famous Players studio on Long Island is the model studio building of the world.

The first Lasky pictures, in Hollywood, were made with equipment so modest that the business of the tiny company was transacted at night, on the desk and other office furniture of the little set in which, with a single much-used camera, a photoplay was being made by sunlight during the day. Now, the Lasky studio covers two entire blocks in the heart of the coast city, on land worth more than half a million dollars, while no exact appraisal has ever been made of the hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of electrical equipment, period furniture, costly furs, rare costumes, acres of towering scenery and nearly one hundred buildings, great and small. It also owns a great California ranch, solely devoted to picture "exteriors."

When those first pictures were made, Charles Frohman—as we have said—looked with kindly but puzzled indulgence on the crazy whim of his elder brother, who seemed to have started a peanut stand, or its artistic equivalent. on Fifth Avenue. Today Charles Frohman is dead—yet Charles Frohman lives, and is a dramatic name. Why? Because Famous Players owns his business and his great Empire Theatre, and is producing great plays that would have delighted him; yet, in reverence, no hint of the ownership is ever placarded, or ever permitted to go officially abroad. It is still: "Charles Frohman presents——"

In early days the first Famous Players pictures were shown in store-rooms, even along Broadway, with accompaniments of a rheumatic piano and a wheezy violin. Today three of the four great photoplay theatres in the Times Square district—the theatrical heart of the world—are controlled by Famous Players; and they are structures of the highest class, in which, in addition to varied screen programmes, there may be heard magnificent orchestras of symphonic structure and proportion—orchestras of a calibre equalled ten years ago only by three or four of the great symphony orchestras of America.

In several weeks during last year it was necessary to deliver film at the rate of a million feet, or more, on single orders. During one week a new record for film export shipments was made, with the loading of approximately 1,500,000 feet of film on shipboard in New York harbor.

Paramount pictures form the great bulk of the photoplays shown in all the civilized countries of the globe. In Buenos Aires they are shown regularly in 100 of the city's 140 photoplay theatres. In Australia, four years ago, Paramount had but six per cent of the business. Today it has sixty per cent, and is still growing.

Foreign Supremacy

In Scandinavian countries Paramount pictures are screened in approximately 1,000 of Scandinavia's 1,300 theatres.

Paramount Pictures are regularly shown on private machines at Buckingham Palace, on board the Prince of Wales' own warship, "Renown," at Lloyd George's country home, in the Imperial Palace in Tokyo, in the Palace of the President of Brazil, in the various homes of the King of Italy, and before the President of the United States.

During the war, when the European producers were compelled to restrict their activities, Paramount came to the front as the most dependable supplier of high-grade productions, and despite the submarine warfare, the foreign department shipped abroad approximately 50,000,000 feet of film, without the loss of a single foot—a service-feat equalled by no other company.

It may be said of Adolph Zukor that he found the camera a toy, and made it the creator of a new art. He claims no credit for the invention of the camera, but to him very rightly belongs a major portion of credit for what it has done.

A Stickler in His Belief

In a time when finances were hazardous, when the world was upside down, when a weary and anxious public sought never for art, and always for amusement, he never "played down" to a low level of taste, for he believed that public taste was basically sound, and that, as the gospel of the screen went abroad, photoplay appreciation would rise. His belief has been justified—how much by his own efforts only the future historian of the movies can rightly say.

In his entire motion picture career Adolph Zukor has never invited financial aid as such. He "carried on" through depression and fitful disinterest. He supplied the inspiration for producer, director, writer and actor. He determined to devote his life to intelligent photoplays in an hour when every intelligent author and playwright looked generally upon the screen as pastime for the ignorant; at its best as a trifling amusement, at its worst as a positive menace to the intelligence of the rising generation. In a few years Mr. Zukor has brought to the screen not only original efforts of the world's greatest writers, but what is more, the faith, the enthusiasm, the unqualified belief of these writing men and women.

Adolph Zukor's Creed

Mr. Zukor's screen credo is as simple and direct as his policies and action.

"The motion picture of today," he avers, "is the greatest educator in the world. It develops tolerance, culture, a taste for music, a knowledge of other peoples and other lives. The motion picture theatre is a school-room, but not a school-room of bare walls and cold books. It teaches by showing life as it is lived, by transporting the beholder actually to the place described, by interesting, and enthusing, rather than by showing a mass of detached facts or some one else's comments.

"We have developed theatres in the same way that an art-lover puts the pictures that he loves in proper frames. And that is all a theatre can be—a frame. Yet if the frame is shabby or inadequate, or if its light is chipped, or if the lighting above is poor, and its location dreary and uninteresting, the picture must suffer accordingly.

"It has been said that the picture has become at once the diversion, the life-saver and the school of the workingman. But I believe that its greatest service has been to the average family. A dozen years ago the restless young people went evening ways that were no part of their fathers' and mothers' lives, and of which the fathers and mothers knew but little. There was nothing for father and mother, then, except to sit around the old-fashioned 'center-table,' read awhile—and go to bed. The motion picture has united the family in the evening. It is a common interest, for it brings the appreciations of maturity to the youngster—and it returns youth to those who are old.

"The motion picture has restored the glamor of the theatre. Only a little while ago the metropolitan audience was the sole gathering which had the privilege of seeing a fine play done by able actors, and with magnificent equipment. Today the world's greatest cast and the world's richest setting are as duplicable as copies of a newspaper. It is a great thing that the smallest trading-post in Canada can see a picture-play performed, in every detail, as it is performed in New York City.

"This universality of the picture requires constant care in the selection of material, and in its presentation. I do not think it is necessary to discuss the 'moral' side of the photoplay, or to argue that every good photoplay should contain a 'moral'—so-called.

"My belief is this: Motion pictures must teach the true principles of life.

"These lessons are not all to be learned in joyous rewards at the end of the film, for some of our greatest lessons arise from the depths of sorrow. I think it is as wrong to teach that virtue and right living will invariably be presented with 'happiness ever after' as it would be to teach that craft and scheming are the only things that count. The boy and girl who have been led to believe that virtue has a sure material reward have been dangerously unfitted for the struggles and perplexities of real life. I believe that the screen should teach that honor, and respect of women, and hard-won strength of character are greater than any material awards, or any happiness, much as we all like peace and personal satisfaction.

"But let me say that we are making films for the American people first, last and all the time—not for any one else on earth. It is the character of the American to be simple, to be human, to be morally clean, to laugh through difficulties. Those are the fundamental truths that we depict in our stories, and shall continue to depict."

Past Progress and Our Future Growth

By Jesse L. Lasky

First Vice-President, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in Charge of Production

IT is entirely fitting that at this time the motion picture industry throughout the world should pause a moment to celebrate that period ten years ago when the novel mechanism of "pictures that moved" was rescued from the destruction of mediocrity and placed on the road to its true development as an artistic entertainment. It is right that we should point with pride to the growth we have attained in this last decade.

But, wonderful as that progress has been, we cannot stand still; we must increase our efforts toward even greater progress, we must set our face toward the future and resolve that now, more than ever before, greater productions are absolutely necessary.

One of the means of increasing the artistic merits of our productions is that of having our stories enacted by persons of well-known ability—stars and leading people whose worth already has been established with the public. The establishment in the Lasky studio a number of years ago of a stock company made up of players carefully chosen for their versatility and possibilities has proved an immense success and has assured to Paramount pictures casts that were well-balanced and composed of men and women known to the public.

From the Lasky stock company have been graduated some of the best known stars of the screen, among them being Gloria Swanson, Bebe Daniels, May McAvoy, Wanda Hawley, Elliott Dexter, Agnes Ayres, Lois Wilson, Lila Lee, Walter Hiers, Jack Mulhall, and others who have established large personal followings among picture enthusiasts.

We plan to continue this stock company idea on an enlarged scale, thus assuring to future Paramount pictures casts that will embody the best known artists of the screen.

During the last year we have released an unusually large number of notably fine pictures. But fine as these productions have been, our plans for next season call for even bigger pictures.

One of the biggest pictures of next season should be Rudolph Valentino's first starring picture. In the space of one short year Mr. Valentine has become one of the most popular stars of the screen, and his first starring picture, "Blood and Sand," is expected to place him definitely in the front rank of box-office attractions. "Blood and Sand" is from the novel and play of the same name by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, author of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," which was produced so ably by Rex Ingram. The scenario has been completed by June Mathis, who did the scenario for "The Four Horsemen," and the picture is being produced by Fred Niblo, who directed Douglas Fairbanks in "The Mark of Zoro" and in "The Three Musketeers." Lila Lee will play the part of the wife and Nita Naldi will be the Spanish vamp.

Jesse L. Lasky

Another splendid picture for next year will be Cecil B. DeMille's production of Alice Duer Miller's widely read novel, "Manslaughter." Thomas Meighan will be seen in the wonderful role of the Irish-American district attorney, and Leatrice Joy, whose work in "Saturday Night" won high praise, will be cast for the role of the reckless young society girl. The rest of the cast will be equally well chosen, and Mr. DeMille is planning to make this one of the biggest productions of his career.

Thomas Meighan already has made a picture, to be released early in the fall season, which we all believe is the true successor of Mr. Meighan's other great success, "The Miracle Man." This is, "If You Believe It, It's So," from Perley Poore Sheehan's story and, surrounded by a cast including Theodora Roberts, Pauline Stark and Joseph Dowling, Mr. Meighan does the finest acting of his career.

Mr. Meighan also is working now on another big picture, "Our Leading Citizen," written especially for him by George Ade. Leatrice Joy is Mr. Meighan's leading woman in this picture also.

William DeMille, whose "Miss Lulu Bett" and "Bought and Paid For" are among the outstanding hits of this season, already has two big productions under way for next season's release. One is "Nice People," the well-known Broadway stage success in which Francine Larrimore scored a sensation, and the other is "[illegible]ence," Booth Tarkington's best k[illegible] play, which ran all last season on B[illegible]way. Mr. DeMille has just return[illegible] the coast to do "Nice People," and [illegible]ara Beranger, who has written the sce[illegible] for his recent pictures, is now at wor[illegible] on the script for "Clarence."

George Melford has found a succ[illegible]sor to his greatest success, "The Sheik," his is "Burning Sands," which is a desert [illegible]icture giving the other side of the pro[illegible]em presented in "The Sheik."

Elsie Ferguson, whose last pic[illegible]re, "Forever," in which Wallace Reid [illegible]o-starred, was one of the finest pictures [illegible]er produced, will return to the screen [illegible]x season in "Outcast," a picture of [illegible]er greatest stage success.

Penrhyn Stanlaw's next picture will be a big special production, "Pink Gods [illegible]d Blue Demons," with Constance Bin[illegible]y and Anna Q. Nilsson leading the cast.

Other pictures include Dorothy Da[illegible]n in "The Chattel" and Miss Dalton [illegible]d Jack Holt in a special production of "[illegible]e Sea Bride," an original scenario by [illegible]d-ward Sheldon, the famous dramatist. Jack Holt also will star in "The Man Unc[illegible]querable," and Agnes Ayres will be star[illegible]d in "The Three of Us." Rudolph Valentine will be seen later in the season [illegible]n "Amos Judd," a powerful novel by Jo[illegible] S. Mitchell.

These are a few of the things we p[illegible] to do next season, with our list of st[illegible]s, leading players and our directors—w[illegible] all the production resources of our stud[illegible]s we are bending every effort to make p[illegible]-tures that will surpass anything we h[illegible]e ever done. For the opening of the seco[illegible]d decade of motion pictures sees the pub[illegible] educated to a finer sense of discriminati[illegible], sees a public demanding bigger pictur[illegible] better pictures, more artistic pictures th[illegible] ever before. And this anniversary ce[illegible]bration which we are having now wou[illegible] be unsuccessful unless we faced that f[illegible] and looked forward to the future.

In conclusion, I wish to pay a tribu[illegible] to the man whose vision, whose fairne[illegible] whose co-operation and constant helpfu[illegible]ness has made this progress and this futu[illegible] program possible—Adolph Zukor. Th[illegible] picture world today is paying tribute [illegible] Adolph Zukor, the man whose genius h[illegible] made this industry what it is today. I ca[illegible] think of no finer tribute to Mr. Zuko[illegible] than to exert every effort possible to mak[illegible] our pictures from now on better pi[illegible]tures than we have ever made befor[illegible] to the end that Paramount pictures sha[illegible] steadily and consistently approach th[illegible] ideal of artistic entertainment that M[illegible] Zukor set before him ten years ago whe[illegible] he found the motion picture a toy an[illegible] made it an art.

Distribution Problems; Future Policy

By S. R. Kent

General Manager, Department of Distribution, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

IN the ten years since Adolph Zukor startled the entertainment world by the introduction of Sarah Bernhardt a a picture star, the distribution of pic- tes has gone through many experiments a l many vicissitudes. But in the last two yrs radical changes have been made in d tribution, so that today the distributing e l of our industry is emerging from the c otic conditions of a few years ago and is rapidly developing into a science.

The term "distribution" can no longer h confined to the mere handling of pic- t es; in fact, I might say that almost the l st important of all the functions that a d tributing organization should perform i that of making the initial sale. The i ms of service, of advertising, the man- r and class of the advertising done, the e ploitation of productions, and the assist- i g of the exhibitor in getting his money c t of the product he buys—all these s nd out pre-eminently as the really big d stribution problems to be solved today.

The time has passed when any dis- t buting organization can live and feel i is delivering its full quota simply be- c use it has taken a contract that repre- s nts to the distributor a satisfactory a nount of money for his product. It has l come increasingly necessary for the dis- i butor to be interested in the exhibitor's l siness. By that I do not mean from t e standpoint of profits, but from the s andpoint of taking out every possible i surance in order to see that the product h buys is such as to return him the great- t possible profit at the box office and the g eatest possible comment from his pa- t ons.

As greatly as distribution has improved i the last two years, and no one can d ubt that there has been some improve- m ent, the changes still to be made are m any. Were I to outline today what I c nsider must be the ultimate in distribu- t n in the next five years, I probably w uld be called an impractical idealist.

In the last two years we have witnessed a gradual improvement in the quality of p oduct. We also have seen a gradual i provement in service and in distribu- t n. We also have seen a decided im- p ovement in the class of man power, in t e type of men entering this business.

This question of man power is tre- m endously important. If I were asked t day what is the biggest single problem o the distributor I would say—man p wer. Better pictures and better dis- t ibution will mean nothing unless there r sults from this a better contact with t e exhibitor, and a constantly improving q ality of manhood for the carrying out o the plans and policies of the future. A s far as Paramount is concerned we have tried to outline policies we felt would be progressive and of benefit to the exhibitor as well as ourselves. For the proper execution of these policies we are trying to bring into the picture industry, and have brought in, a constant stream of new blood, with the idea of building up the class of men representing us. Because building up our product and building up our policies go hand-in-hand with building up our personnel.

There must come in the future a closer understanding and improvement in the contact between distributors of pictures and their customers. I think one of the greatest and most constructive steps taken in this direction in the history of the business is the Board of Arbitration, consisting of members of the National Board of Film Trade and the New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce. This is a great step in the right direction and is bound to result in both exhibitors and exchange men gaining a closer and more sympathetic understanding of each other's problems. It also will result in confidence being established that will do much to eradicate the unwarranted suspicion that has existed on both sides. However, the move recently made in New York is one of the sound indications of what we may expect and should work for in the future.

At this point I should like to say a word on the percentage playing of pictures. I believe one of the big items to be settled this next year or two is the question of playing pictures on percentage basis. This is not because the distributor wants it or because he desires it. It is going to be thrashed out on the basis of what is equitable to a man who has a piece of property which has tremendous possibilities and which the exhibitor cannot risk paying for on a flat rental basis that may be destructive to him.

I believe that somewhere there is a happy medium for a percentage idea that will do away with all the bickering and bad blood that exists today because of rentals asked and rentals required that do not meet with exhibitors' ideas.

It is to the credit of no exhibitor to sit back and say he will not play pictures on a percentage basis. Neither has the distributor the right to say that this is the only basis on which he will play a picture.

The question of how the producer is going to get an equitable return for his pictures, and not at the same time work an abuse on the exhibitor, is a thought that is worthy of consideration in all branches of the industry. It is a problem that cannot be dismissed by the exhibitor's declaration that he will not tolerate it. And it also cannot be solved by the distributor's saying that he will force percentages.

This whole percentage question is one of the things in this business that is going to be solved and must be solved if better pictures are to be made and exhibited. There must be an open discussion of the question, and some time soon it will come up. At the present time we are playing many exhibitors on a percentage basis and have done so for the last three years. However, we are not forcing percentage on anyone.

It has been the policy of Paramount in the past to do everything possible to create a pre-sale of its product to the public before the product actually came into the hands of the exhibitor. This policy will be continued in the future, only in a more direct and profitable manner. Instead of advertising in a general way, we shall concentrate on each picture and through the releasing of a smaller number we will be able to give each one more specific attention. By concentrating on individual big releases from which exceptional profits can be made at the box office, we shall be doing a distinct service to the exhibitor.

Exploitation stands out today as one of the new departments in distribution and one of the units that will contribute in the future very largely to the success of any successful distributing organization. The exhibitor is entiled to help in the product that he buys, and the exploitation department is one department in our business that will be expanded as rapidly and thoroughly as conditions will permit.

Successful motion pictures in the future must be scientifically merchandized.

The Exchange Service Department

A DEPARTMENT in the Paramount organization about which little has been said but which has been instrumental in saving the exhibitors of the United States and Canada hundreds of thousands of dollars is the service division, presided over by Frank V. Chamberlin.

"We have not talked much about exchange service," said Mr. Chamberlin, "because it is our belief the exhibitor is entitled to 100 per cent service from our exchanges and if he gets anything short of that, no matter how good the service may be, we are not fulfilling our complete duty. Perfection is the ideal of all of us, of course, but in the service which our exchanges give to exhibitors perfection must be the routine, and anything short of perfection must be the exception."

It is in the attempt to make perfect service a matter of routine that Mr. Chamberlin's department, since he reorganized it nearly four years ago, has saved exhibitors enormous sums of money by increased efficiency in handling film and advertising accessories. The "miss-cut" evil—the failure of the exchange to deliver a print to a theatre, resulting in a dark house—has been practically eliminated in the Paramount exchanges by a thorough system of checks and counterchecks which Mr. Chamberlin put into operation. This checking system embraces bookers, shipping clerks, film inspectors and accountants, and, according to a statement from the Paramount offices, the chances of human error in the shipment of film from exchange to theatre has been as nearly eliminated as possible.

Another reform Mr. Chamberlin has instituted, which has brought a big benefit to Paramount exhibitors in increased efficiency, is the uniform layout of exchanges. All Paramount exchanges, except a few which are in the same buildings today that they were in when Mr. Chamberlin took charge, are now laid out on the same plan. This plan was adopted after a thorough analysis of exchange operation, and has reduced waste motion to a minimum. All Paramount exchanges to be opened in the future will be on this same plan, and eventually all Paramount exchanges throughout the country will be alike.

A thorough-going system of film inspection, beginning with the training of a big staff of competent inspectors, and including a constant check on the condition of prints, has resulted in a high standard of quality in the physical condition of Paramount pictures. This system not only protects big theatres, but also applies to the smallest daily change houses.

Another innovation which Mr. Chamberlin has made in exchange service has to do with the handling of advertising accessories. Under the present system no exchange can be without a complete line of advertising accessories on all pictures in work, and at the same time elimination of waste in piling up excess stocks of advertising accessories also has operated to reduce the cost of these accessories to exhibitors.

The same effort towards the elimination of waste in the number of prints allotted to exchanges has also had its effect on the rental prices of Paramount pictures.

Aiding the Pre-Sale of Product

SO closely has the progress in the advertising of motion pictures been associated with the progress of the picture itself that in the wide field of advertising Paramount has come to be looked upon as practically synonymous with the motion picture.

It was about six years ago that Paramount inaugurated its campaign of selling the motion picture to the public. It was a campaign designed not to create a market but to develop and broaden it. It was a great idea, as the history of the past six years has proved. Through the medium of foremost national publications the gospel of "going to the movies" was preached, month in and month out. It was a broad principle to work upon and was handled in the broadest possible manner. Paramount was deliberately subordinated to the motion picture. Graduallly, through a period of years, attention was focussed more and more upon the Paramount product itself, so that today, the public being completely sold on pictures as the world's foremost entertainment, the demand for Paramount Pictures is felt in every city and village in the United States where there is a picture theatre.

The only pictures that are continuously advertised nationally, exhibitors everywhere seek the Paramount product, for they know that their patrons firmly believe that "If it's a Paramount Picture, it's the best show in town." Experience has taught them that their biggest showmanship asset is the line, displayed in type or electric lights, "A Paramount Picture."

The Paramount publicity and advertising department is under the direction of Jerome Beatty. In personnel and in the results obtained, it continues to lead the way in the industry. Its trade paper advertising, press books, advertising accessories and publicity in newspapers, fan and general magazines and trade press hold to the highest standards of art, style and good taste, providing a tremendous selling force in the industry and maintaining the well- established prestige of Paramount Pictures.

Exploitation As Exhibitor Insurance

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION offers its exploitation department to the trade with the slogan:

"Paramount Exploitation is Paramount Insurance."

Every time an exhibitor buys a Paramount picture he is providing against box-office failure by having the services of trained showmen who can not fail to put the picture over.

S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has maintained this service in the field as one of the several guarantees that go with Paramount pictures.

Two and a half years ago Claud Saunders went out into the field with eight men to put over "The Miracle Man." The industry as a whole watched the experiment and to the delight of everybody, Paramount exploitation "caught." Not only did it "catch," it grew until one exploiteer was stationed in each of the exchanges.

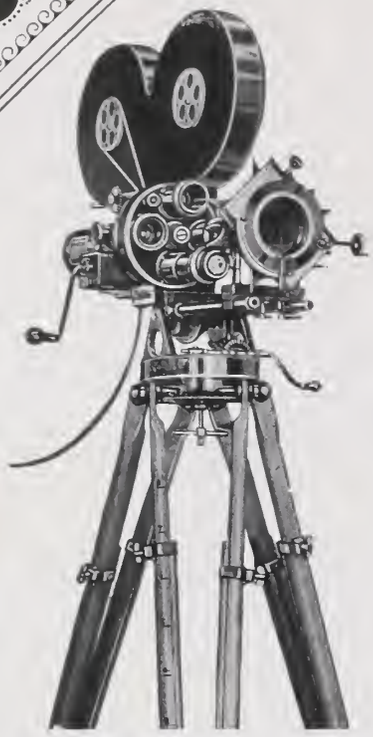
PARAMOUNT PICTURES

are made and processed with

BELL & HOWELL Standard Cinemachinery

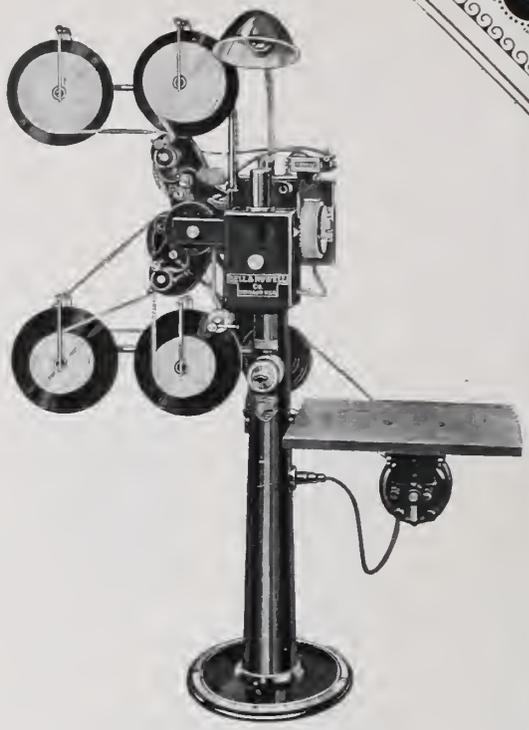
Affording the only standardized line of equipment offered to makers of motion pictures.



B & H Standard Cinematograph Camera

has made 95% of America's Feature Productions for the past fifteen years.

Kept abreast of the times for every conceivable result, including Slow Motion Analysis.



B & H Standard Automatic Step Printer with 1,000 foot flanges

Unmatched for Speed or Quality. Made also in Semi-Automatic and Continuous Feed Types.

Capacity for Automatic Machines:
Step Motion.....28,000 feet per day
Continuous .....50,000 feet per day
Capacity for Semi-Automatics:
Approximately 70% of Full Automatics

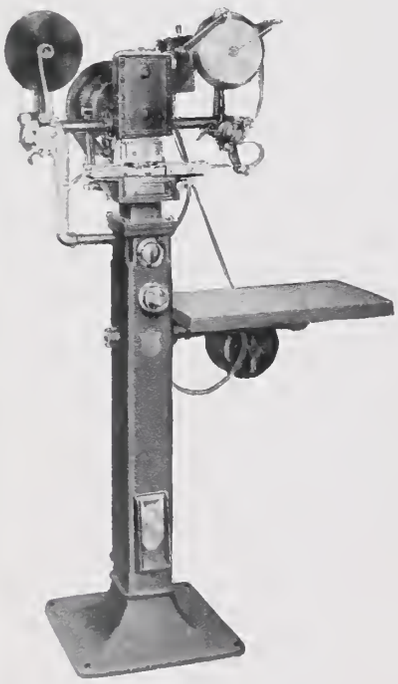
Add to the superior design and construction the advantage which comes from standardization and you have the secret of B & H efficiency.

All movements are original and basically protected by U. S. and foreign patents.

Manufacturing accuracy for all interchangeable movement parts is within limits of .0001 inches, which gives a keen conception of the precision predominating in the registration of pictures made and processed with B & H machines.

We have many design imitators, but none in achievement of workmanship and performance. Prospective purchasers are especially cautioned against purchasing instruments which resemble the superior B & H Design. There is only one standard of Cinemachinery and that carries the B & H TRADE MARK—SYMBOLIC OF PERFECTION AND SUPERIORITY.

Established in 1907.



B & H Standard Film Perforator

Built for Perforating Film to the Universal Standard established by the B & H Co.

B & H gauge is the recognized standard everywhere. 100% of film used in America is Perforated with our machines.

Reg. U .S. Trade Mark

B & H Standard Film Splicing Machine

[illegible] to 500% greater production per operator, with corresponding degree of improvement in the quality of output. Indispensable for Laboratories and Exchanges.

Don't Go Broke!

SHOWING rainy, flickery, jumpy and defective films. The public don't like them and will not patronize theatres showing such films—The best pictures produced lose their entertainment values when poorly projected on the screen.

Exchangemen—Don't try to force them upon exhibitors if you are the exhibitors' friend, and if you are for the progress of the motion picture industry.

Sell films free from rain, flicker and other defects.

Your film, whether one week, one month or one year old, will look alike on the screen if you use regularly our renovating process.

"Save money by extending the life of your films!"

Our scientific patented processes are the result of 12 years of endeavor to accomplish and perfect this art.

WE DON'T USE BUFFING METHOD.

Demonstration free.

The use of our service by producers and exchanges will prove of great financial benefit to them as well as invaluable to the industry as a whole.

Prolong the life of your films!

Perfect projection can be obtained by using our special processes.

Negative defects removed—Negatives preserved—New positives processed—Commercial films restored to original projection value—Reclaiming films our specialty.

Cooper Hewitt Light Reflections from Stars

WILLIAM S. HART
"It is a pleasure to work under COOPER HEWITTS, for they do not hurt the eyes."

TOM MOORE:
"Motion Pictures without COOPER HEWITT LIGHT would be like golf without one's own clubs."

MAY ALLISON:
"California now boasts of twin wonders—sunlight and COOPER HEWITTS."

PAULINE FREDERICK:
"The light that lies in woman's eyes, never lies, when caught by the COOPER HEWITT."

BERT LYTELL:
"The light of midday skies finds COOPER HEWITTS a brilliant rival."

TOM MIX:
"COOPER HEWITTS are fine lights to work under both from an eye strain standpoint and a picture standpoint."

MAE MURRAY:
"It is impossible to think of interior photography and not think of COOPER HEWITT LIGHTS."

NAZIMOVA:
"I am glad to be able to say that I have nothing but praise for COOPER HEWITTS."

MABEL NORMAND:
"The COOPER HEWITT LAMP has lighted many a gloomy day for me."

EARLE WILLIAMS:
"The best LIGHT used in the movies."

Lights for Motion Picture Photography

Mr. Frederick S. Mills, electrical illuminating engineer at the Famous Players-Lasky Hollywood Studios, is standing to the right in the above illustration, says:

"GOOD lightings are now an absolute requisite of good motion pictures. The best story in the world enacted by a picked cast, directed by the foremost producer and staged in the most exquisite of settings would be a miserable failure were the lighting not up to standard. Good lighting is an essential of good photography and good photography is the life and soul of any picture."

EVERY LAMP IN THE ABOVE EQUIPMENT BEARS THE NAME

Kliegl Bros.

It is the name that is found on all Lighting Apparatus in all theatres and studios where good lighting and good photography are paramount.

S. R. Kent on Distribution Problems

It is not sufficient today to advertise that you have a good picture. You must tell the public why and the things that make it good, and put it before them in an appealing manner. The successful salesman of five years from now will be the man who will have combined in his make-up the rudiments of exploitation. Many exhibitors today would be perfectly willing to pay more money for product, if they were convinced they could take it out of the box office, but in the absence of knowing how, they must do the only thing possible, and that is play safe. I am convinced that most of the cheap buying done in this industry is only a result of lack of education along exploitation lines.

We have heard a great deal in the past of shrinkage in the number of pictures. I am positive this will come about this coming season. As for our own organization this fall will see the first drastic cut in the number of productions to be released by this institution. The number is being reduced only in the interest of greater quality. By making few productions we shall be able to concentrate more on each picture, making it more successful for the exhibitor and more profitable for the organization.

Those exhibitors who have in the past relied on an over-supply of pictures for their particular communities to bring down prices to an unfair basis will find an entirely different situation existing this fall, I am certain.

There has been much agitation the last few months regarding prices paid for pictures. Demands have been made that all film rentals be cut arbitrarily, irrespective of whose pictures the cut affects. Nothing more basically unsound can be suggested- and when I say this I am not pleading for the Paramount product. It applies to every producer who has good pictures.

As a matter of fact the greatest profits made this year have been on pictures for which the exhibitor paid more than ever before in his life. In fact, the slogan today might well be not "how high the price," but "how good the picture."

Film rentals for individual pictures that excel will no more stand still than the development of this business can stand still. When the limit has been reached and a price automatically set for productions, just that minute is the stranglehold put on the creative end of this industry.

As a matter of fact, neither producer, distributor nor exhibitor is in full control of what prices motion pictures shall bring. The public has a great voice in this question—in fact, the deciding voice, because this business cannot live next year or the year after w the class of product it produced the year before. Ju as soon as we reach the limit our progress will au matically turn downward instead of upward, becau we cannot stand still.

There are many motion pictures today that are brin ing too much money. There never was a time wh the mediocre picture meant as little as it does no I said last fall that the picture that can deliver with 75 per cent of the box office receipts it obtained t year before would be the premium picture as far price was concerned. That statement has been bor out in fact. There have been many cases of ov selling, but the over-selling and extraordinary rent for motion pictures cannot be laid at the door of t really worth-while box office attractions.

Our production policy for the future has one mo thought in view, and that is a quality which will res the present depressed times and that will make it p sible for exhibitors to do business with a reasonal margin of profit, even though conditions may contin for another year or eighteen months approximately they are now.

I feel optimistic as to the future. I believe this will see a reasonable increase in box office receip but not a startling one. I believe this fall the publ will respond to greater and bigger pictures as wonde fully as they have this past season. I believe th will also turn up their noses at the mediocre pictu this fall even more than ever in the past.

The only safe policy any producer can pursue this time is one of insurance against bad times. pictures are made today with the thought in view th times will be soft within the next year or two, I belie they are doomed to failure.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will put behin every individual release every effort it possesses insure that release to the greatest possible extent f the exhibitor. Because we cannot sit back, we mu push forward.

Exhibitors' Insurance

Recently Paramount exploitation crossed into Canada and an exploiteer works out of the Toronto exchange.

In the first place Paramount exploiteers do not exploit pictures; they exploit theatres. They are never given a job to put over one certain film. They are directed to help a Paramount exhibitor out no matter what picture he plays. The exploiteer would sooner run over to Squeedunk and help the Gem Theatre put over "Forbidden Fruit" than to give his time to the opulent metropolis theatre playing "Saturday Night."

The exploiteer is not a trick showman, who can visit a town only once and then make a "get-away" before the newspaper or police come down on him. He is a sound showman, under instructions to "shoot-square" and build up good will.

His work is not pyrotechnic but constructive. He does not aim for a flash but for a sound advertising method that will bring money.

When the exploiteer approaches an exhibitor, it is not to show him how to spend a lot of money but how to invest a little in something that will come back big.

These are a few of the principles that have made Paramount exploitation the only service of its kind in the industry.

"Prisoner of Zenda" Is Shipped East

THE first print of Rex Ingram's new production, "The Prisoner of Zenda," is now being brought East by special messenger. This subject has been undergoing the final process of cutting and titling for the last seven weeks at the hands of Mr. Ingram. The executives at the Metro offices are in high state of anticipation, as it is predicted "The Prisoner of Zenda" will prove Mr. Ingram's most powerful box-office attraction of all his successes. Arrangements are under way for the presentation of the new Ingram production at a Broadway theatre.

The cast includes Alice Terry, Lewis Stone, Robert Edeson, Stuart Holmes, Ramon Samaniegos, Barbara LaMarr, Edward Connelly, Malcolm McGregor and Lois Lee.

Anachronism Banned in Vignola Picture

The following incident is submitted by Robert Vignola's office as an instance of the extreme care taken in filming "When Knighthood Was in Flower." The story, of course, is laid in medieval times during the reign of Henry VIII. Director Vignola is especially alert that no anachronistic touches creep into the picture. Last week an "extra" wearing a D. S. C. as watch-fob appeared before the camera in a number of the scenes. The fob dangled, unnoticed from his belt outside of his costume. The scenes were "shot" and when the "rushes" were shown in the projection room the discordant note was discovered in the extra's costume. Despite the trifling character of the error, Vignola insisted on a re-take of the scenes.

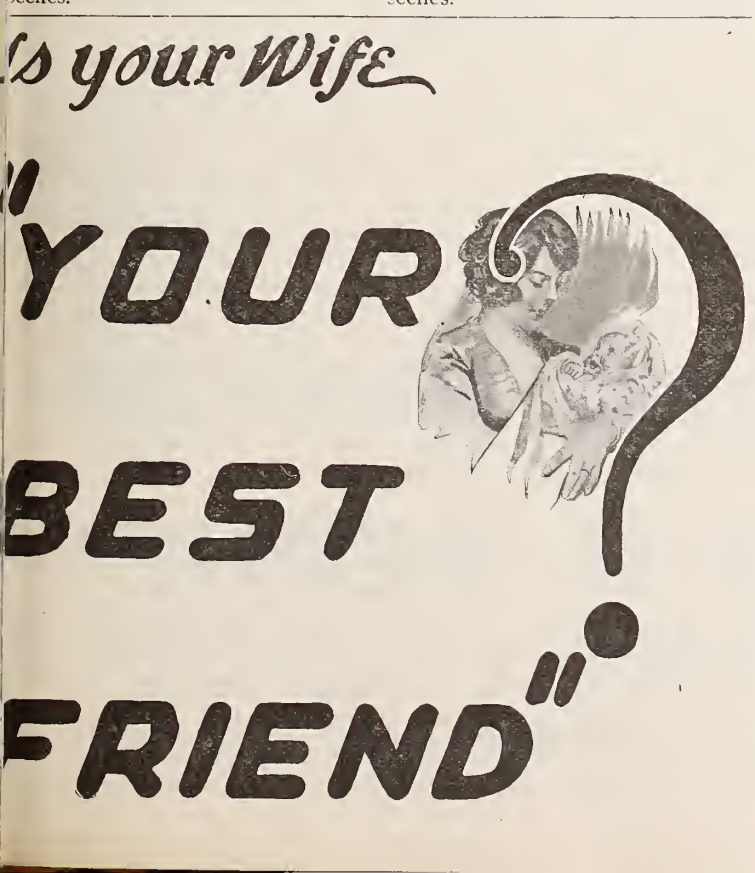
"Four Seasons" Shown at N. Y. Museum

A private showing of "The Four Seasons," an Urban Popular Classic distributed by W. W. Hodkinson, was given in the American Museum of Natural History in New York recently for School Nature League. The School Nature League was organized to promote the study of nature in the public schools of New York City.

Big Cast in "The Soul of a Child"

The Louis Burston production, temporarily titled "The Soul of a Child," co-starring Gercth Hughes and Bessie Love, has been proving a bonanza for the "extra talent" who work on a day-to-day basis. In addition to previous sums paid out more than $3,000 went to these actors one week recently. The picture is of the orphanage type, and calls for numerous atmosphere people in both interior and exterior scenes.



First National Lists Pictures for Lent

FIRST NATIONAL has compiled a list of its feature releases which it offers as especially suitable for the Lenten season, which will continue until Easter Sunday, April 16. There are sufficient pictures in the group for week-stand houses, three-day and two-day theatres to book their Lenten programs solid, if exhibitors so desire. The list is as follows:

"Penrod," a Marshall Neilan production, with "Freckles" Barry; "The Rosary," a Selig-Rork special with an all-star cast; "My Boy," Jackie Coogan's latest; "Hail the Woman," Thos. H. Ince's big woman appeal special; "Smilin' Through," Norma Talmadge's latest, slated for early release; "The Song of Life," a John M. Stahl "mother" picture; "Tol'able David," the sensational Richard Barthelmess production; "The Child Thou Gavest Me," another Stahl production with little Richard Headrick; "Her Social Value," a Katherine MacDonald picture; The Chaplin Revival—four subjects, including "A Dog's Life," "Shoulder Arms," "Sunnyside" and "A Day's Pleasure"; "The Sky Pilot," the Katherine Curtis production made from Ralph Connor's famous romance of a preacher in the cattle country; "The Kid"; "The Oath," the R. A. Walsh production dealing with racial-religious prejudice; "The Jack Knife Man," a King Vidor production with a Golden Rule theme; "Peaceful Valley," one of Charlie Ray's best; "Salvation Nell," a celebrated stage play with strong drama and stronger moral; "The Ten Dollar Raise," a comedy drama with a universal appeal to clean-minded people; "Mother O' Mine, an Ince production; "Scrap Iron," Charlie Ray's great fight picture with a boy's devotion to his mother as its central theme; "The Silent Call," the remarkable Trimble-Murfin production with the great dog, Strongheart, featured; "Homespun Folks," a rural comedy drama produced by Thos. H. Ince; and "The Last of the Mohicans," Maurice Tourneur's historic production founded on James Fenimore Cooper's immortal story.

Fox News in Fast Work on Wedding News

The Fox News office reports some quick work in getting views of Princess Mary's wedding to Broadway screens on Wednesday evening of last week. The negative was not removed from the transatlantic liner Olympic until seven o'clock Wednesday evening. The film was developed, screened, edited, and prints made in fast order, and at 10:04 P. M. Assistant Manager Joseph LaRose of the Rialto theatre, New York, signed the delivery slip for the finished print to be screened at the Rialto.

Widespread Interest in New Pathe Serial

The Pathe home-office reports that announcement of the release date of the forth-coming Charles Hutchison "stunt" serial, "Go-Get-'Em Hutch," April 9, has produced evidences of greatly increased serial activity in all sections of the country. Correspondence from branch-exchanges is said to indicate lively advance bookings of the alternating releases of the Hutchison and the Ruth Roland productions.

Arliss Vehicle Scores on Keith-Moss Chain

Following a series of eighty days booking of "The Ruling Passion," starring George Arliss, a Distinctive picture distributed by United Artists Corporation, Arthur G. White, booking manager for the "home territory" of the U. B. O. (Keith-Moss chain) in the Palace Theatre Building, New York City, last week expressed himself as gratified with the reports he received from all of the theatre managers in which the Arliss comedy was shown.

Mr. White's bookings, including Albany, Schenectady, Troy, etc., theatres in all five boroughs of Greater New York, and several in New Jersey, occupied two weeks.

"It is one of the most delightful comedies we have booked, and everybody enjoyed it," Mr. White said. "Personally, I am gratified with the results."

Lila Lee Replaces May McAvoy in New Cast

According to an announcement from the Coast, Lila Lee will play the role of the wife in the Paramount production of Ibanez's "Blood and Sand," in which Rodolph Valentino will make his stellar debut under Fred Niblo's direction. Originally May McAvoy was chosen for the part, but it was later decided that she was not quite suited to the type.

Charles Jones' Next Is "Western Speed"

"Western Speed" is the title of a new William Fox picture Charles Jones is making at Hollywood. It is from the western novel, "Lynch Law" by William Patterson White. Wallace Dunlap, a new director at the Fox studio is in charge.

ITEMS OF THE EXCHANGES AND THEATRE

WESTERN NEW YORK

D. W. Griffith came to Buffalo to look after some changes in "Orphans of the Storm," showing at the Criterion. He was the dinner guest in the Hotel Lafayette at noon. He spoke at the Criterion in the afternoon and again in the evening.

Nickum's Gem theatre in Olean, N. Y., this week is celebrating its first anniversary. When the house opened a year ago the feature was DeMille's "Forbidden Fruit."

The Olympic, Buffalo, has closed for several weeks, during which time alterations will be made, putting the theatre in shape for an exclusive picture policy.

George R. Miller is the new owner of the Elite theatre in Niagara Falls, N. Y. The house has been redecorated and new equipment installed.

Sam Carver, manager of the Academy, Buffalo, is putting on "Acquaintance Week." He is offering patrons two tickets for the price of one for a week.

Mrs. Mary Carr spoke before a number of organizations during her recent visit to Buffalo. In addition to her appearance in person at the new Lafayette Square, she spoke before the Western New York unit of the M. P. T. O. A., the students of Lafayette and Masten Park high schools and several professional clubs.

Fenton Lawler has resigned from the Pathe sales staff to accept a similar position with the local office of R-C Pictures corporation. He will cover the "Ham and Egg" circuit in the Southern Tier.

O. T. Schroeppel, former assistant manager of the Realart office, and recently connected with General Theatres corporation, has been engaged as booker at the Niagara Pictures corporation office in the Warner building.

J. L. Cook, who has been a member of several local sales forces, has been engaged by Manager Robert T. Murphy as a Pioneer booster.

Federal Judge John R. Hazel has denied the motion of Lodowick Jones that a receiver be appointed for the Academy in Buffalo. He has also denied the motion of the Amalgamated Burlesque Houses, Inc., for dismissal of the case because the local court has not jurisdiction.

Buffalo theatres last week collected cans of condensed milk to relieve starving children in the near East. Patrons were asked to bring a can each and deposit it in the barrels in the lobbies.

Admission prices are going down. The Strand, Palace, Pastime, Majestic and Olympic have cut scales in Buffalo. The Bellevue in Niagara Falls announces a decrease.

SOUTHWEST

The Odeon theatre, at Robstown, Texas, has moved into new quarters. Many new improvements have been made and a new screen has been installed.

E. E. Hughes and associates have commenced the erection of a new theatre at Nashville, Ark., which will be strictly modern and up to date.

Mrs. Fifer has sold her theatre at Tehuacana, Texas, to Mr. Horn, and will open a new theatre at Jakehamon, Texas, in the near future.

R. C. Bromley, of Dallas, Texas, will build a new movie theatre at Richland, Texas, in the near future.

Phipps and Layton are enlarging the Monogram theatre at Childress, Texas.

The Joy theatre opened Feb. 22 at Hope, Ark., to capacity business.

S. B. Johnson succeeds P. E. Morris as manager of the Regent theatre at Marianna, Ark.

The Liberty theatre at Leonard, Texas, has bought out the National theatre. The National will be moved to Celeste, Texas, in near future.

The Palace theatre, costing $50,000, was opened at Wortham, Texas, March 1.

Pepper Bros. have purchased Ola theatre, at Ola, Ark., from W. F. Thompson.

A. V. Wade has purchased the Queen theatre at Yoakum, Texas, from Edward Ryba and took charge Feb. 22.

The City Council at Wichita Falls, Texas, passed as an emergency measure an ordinance creating a city board of censors to regulate picture shows. The ordinance became effective Feb. 23.

Following several conferences between local motion picture films distributors and city officials at Dallas, Texas, City Attorney James J. Collins announced Thursday that an equitable settlement had been reached as to the storage of picture films in the City of Dallas.

The principal feature of the new ordinance is a requirement of the construction of fireproof vaults for film storage.

Saul S. Harris, secretary and general manager of the Arkansas Enterprises, Inc., which operates the Palace, Gem, Crystal, Capitol, Royal and Kempner theatres in Little Rock, Ark., has sold his entire interests in the concern and has withdrawn entirely from management of local theatres.

CLEVELAND

The Metropolitan and Liberty theatres of Cleveland, which have been running a five act vaudeville program in addition to feature pictures, have switched their policy to a straight picture program. Prices have been cut, too.

The Second National Film Company has opened a Cleveland office in the Film Building.

The Strand theatre, Cleveland, one of the chain of local houses owned and operated by Paul Gusdanovic, has inaugurated a new policy which is meeting with marked success. The policy consists of running the big specials second-run down town for twenty-five cents straight.

A. H. Abrams, manager of the Odeon theatre, Canton, has let a contract for a new motion picture house. It will have about 900 seats, and all the latest equipment.

Frank Murphy, manager of the Murphy theatre, Wilmington, Ohio, diagnosed the trouble with the movie business as "too much seriousness." So he prescribed a comedy bill for his patrons. He called it "A Week-End of Laughter." The program was all comedy, including Buster Keaton, Ben Turpin, Harold Lloyd and Larry Semon. Murphy recommends this treatment for all sick theatres.

Klinger and Stotter, owners of the Alvin theatre, Ontario avenue, Cleveland, have just taken over the Carlyon theatre, Superior avenue at Carlyon Road. The house is being completely redecorated, and will run only big feature productions.

SPOKANE

Bert Van Tuyle, manager-director f the Nell Shipman Production Syndicat just organized here, is now on his w to Los Angeles, Cal., to look after t rushing of the company cast and t $50,000 Shipman Company zoo to Sp kane. A two-year contract has been signe up here and a syndicate organized finance the production of pictures in t Spokane country, with S. M. Smith of t Bavaria Investment Company and Smith & Co. undertaking establishmen as president. The production syndica is a financing company. The arrang ment calls for the deposit of $150,000 b the syndicate and $125,000 by the produ tion company.

Mr. Van Tuyle estimates that work o the first super feature, "The Grubstake, will be started in about two weeks. Abou 14 pictures will be made the first yea here. The Nell Shipman Company ha taken over the Minnehaha studio on two-year lease.

"The Silent Call" played to capacit houses at every run at the Casino a week.

The reappearance of "The Sheik, which Ray Grombacher of the Libert honored with a two-weeks run at hi house several weeks ago, is meeting wit unusual interest.

Other pictures to be seen at Spokan houses during the week were: "Alia Ladyfingers" at the Class A; "Love' Redemption," featuring Norma Talmadg at the Liberty; "The Child Thou Gaves Me," at the Clemmer; "Man-Woman Marriage," with Dorothy Phillips at th Majestic, and "Isobel," with Hous Peters and Jane Novak, at the Rex.

Gladys Walton made personal friend on her visit to the Liberty theatre thi week.

Competent Engineering Safeguard in Theatre Construction

Prospective Builders Should Be Familiar with Correct Procedure

By H. Robins Burroughs

Worth Serious Consideration

Apparently there is a lack of definite knowledge among those who wish to have theatres constructed as to the correct procedure that should be followed, especially in reference to the engineering and architectural phases. Some one must be given the responsibility of inspecting and passing on the engineering of the theatre. Naturally, the services of some professional specializing in theatre building is sought. However, there still remains the problem of selecting the professionals best able to handle each particular part of the work.

Mr. Burroughs, who has had a great deal of experience as a theatre consulting engineer, here discusses the procedure for the prospective builder to follow in selecting the personnel responsible for the successful erection of the theatre. Several suggestions as outlined by Mr. Burroughs differ from the common practice of today and are worthy of serious consideration.

Comparatively little has been written in ther technical magazines, periodicals or wspapers concerning the vital importce of theatre construction from an gineering point of view. Owners, investrs and others financially interested in eatre projects, in general, have not sufiently realized that the building of a eatre is a very serious matter and inlves considerable responsibility, not only om a financial point of view or returns the investment, but from liabilities e to the grade of construction which ey employ. Lack of knowledge on their rt may be very often due entirely to rce of circumstances. Consequently, if e financial interests are not conversant ith the management and execution of nstruction work, and it appears that w are, they are confronted with the oblem of selecting an agent who is able d willing to carry out the work to be me.

Selecting a Competent Agent

The selection of a competent agent is t a simple matter and is a vitally imrtant one. The usual method of produre is to select an Architect and leave e entire matter of design and construcn within his power, as it has been genally understood that an Archetict was operly the person to look to. Theatre nstruction, like other buildings, accordg to general education, involves Archicture and, therefore, an Architect; but not a few instances, to these financial terests or owners education has not ought them to realize that engineering is so involved in theatre construction and equal if not greater importance than rchitecture. Architecture is not enginring any more than Engineering is Archecture, and neither can supplant the her.

In the language of Webster, an Archict is one versed in the art of building, d Engineering is the art and science by nich natural forces and materials are utiled in structures or machines, hence one pplements the other, but which of the o, if either, is the more important?

An owner told the writer only recently, ter his theatre had collapsed, that it had ever occurred to him that engineering played an important part in theatre design or construction. The architect was his counsel and builder, but the collapse of his theatre has awakened him to the realization that engineering is of vital importance and that the lack of it was the cause of his sad experience.

To-day is the age of specialists. It is physically impossible for one man to be expert in both architecture and engineering. Therefore, the construction of a theatre requires the combination of experts, and if the best results are to be otained it means a combination of several experts. First and above all others is structural safety, for of what value is the most architecturally beautiful theatre if it is not absolutely safe in every respect against structural collapse? Of first importance then is the structural engineer. The theatre may be poorly designed architecturally, that is, have bad sight lines, homely decorations, poor acoustics, incorrect projection, the electric lighting may be faulty or the heating inadequate, or the ventilation bad, still no hazards are involved if all of these or any one or more of them obtain, if the theatre is structurally sound and cannot collapse. Hence it at once becomes evident that the main desideratum in theatre construction, from the owner's point of view, is structural engineering.

It may readily be seen that mechanical and electric, as well as acoustic engineering, play an important part, as does architecture, but faulty design or execution of any or all of these will not entail loss of life, but faulty design or execution in the structural engineering may cause a total collapse and with it the loss of lives of hundreds of people. With this in mind, the Owner is brought face to face with problems of how to proceed in the selection of Engineers and Architects to design and supervise the construction of his theatre.

Courses Followed

There are several courses which may be pursued. The usual one is to select an Architect and leave the engineering to him. This has developed, in general, to be unsatisfactory, especially in the light of recent disasters. It is not recommended. It should be noted, however, that this arrangement could be made satisfactory and depends entirely on the ability and integrity of the Architect. Unfortunately, Architects in general have not given proper consideration to engineering work and have had a tendency for one reason or another to discount its importance. This attitude on his part and his unwillingness to engage or associate himself with competent engineers, has been largely a tributary to disastrous results.

An arrangement of this kind usually works out to the effect that the Architect who is paid his usual fee, or even quite likely less than that, is required to pay for all engineering work and in order to economize as much as he thinks is consistent with his professional duties, undertakes to have his engineering work designed by an engineering draftsman in his own office, or perhaps he may even engage an outside engineer, whose fee will not exceed a certain percentage, and usually a small one, of the Architect's fee for the proportion of the work involved, which usually means only the steel or reinforced concrete work.

New Musical Instrument Proving Big Asset To Exhibitor

Installation in Blackstone Theatre, Indiana, Proving Successful

A new design of a very popular musical instrument, the phonograph, is now being installed in motion picture theatres with indications of a very promising success. This instrument is the Seabrook Concert Grande Phonograph, built by the Dodge Manufacturing Company, Mishawaka, Ind., and is a modified model of the phonograph with which we are commonly acquainted, reproducing the music records in volume sufficient to fill houses with a very large seating capacity.

This instrument is not intended to replace the orchestral organ but is used as a supplementary unit adding variety and a most pleasing feature to the musical program. However, it is claimed that this instrument will tend to eliminate the necessity of an orchestra which, in these days of economy, should prove a most welcome feature to every exhibitor.

The phonograph illustrated on this page has been installed in the Blackstone theatre, South Bend, Ind. Possibly a description of the method and results of using this phonograph in this theatre will convey to the exhibitor the possibilities of adapting such a unit in his own house.

"Mutual music was given its first tryout at South Bend, Ind., on January 24th. Briefly, here's what happened when a cooperative plan was formed between the Blackstone theatre, seating 2000 people and the Victor, Edison, Brunswick and Okeh record dealers whereby the current record releases are given a theatre presentation to the people in South Bend each month. The medium of reproduction is the Seabrook Concert Grande Phonograph, an instrument of enormous power and fully capable of filling the larger motion picture houses with exactly the same volume and tonal qualities that attend the original recording of the record. Hence the matter of reproducing the famous Isham Jones or Paul Whiteman dance orchestras in local houses is no more difficult than showing on the screen a picture taken in California.

"As each selection is played, an illumnated board on the instrument announces the name, number and make of the record, for example, "Gypsy Blues," "Victor, 18839." The playing occurs during the regular rest period of the orchestra or organist and fills an unpleasant void in the program that would otherwise exist, Manager G. E. Berkson of the Blackstone theatre expresses the belief that Mutual Music constitutes a new theatre service which will be enthusiastically received by picture house managers generally. He says, 'Up to a few months ago our music program consisted of a large orchestra and an orchestral organ. Upon discontinuance of the orchestra we experienced an unpleasant void during the organist's rest period which is now satisfactorily filled by the big phonograph. Our audiences have received the idea of playing all makes of current dance, orchestral and vocal records in the light of an added service to them and one which they cannot obtain elsewhere in the city.'

The records issued by Victor, Edison, Brunswick and Okeh are played upon their release and continued for the greater part of a week, during which period the theatre announces in their newspaper advertising that these records are being played as an additional feature to the regular program. The record dealer advertises simultaneously with the theatre saying, Go to the ———— theatre. See a good picture; Hear ———— — March records. During the first month's tryout the Blackstone theatre received over nine hundred inches of newspaper space using the Blackstone logotype for which they paid nothing. It was not necessary to increase their own newspaper appropriation inasmuch as mention of the records was made in their regular space

"Satisfaction Guaranteed or Your Money Back"—so reads the Gold-Seal Guarantee which is pasted on the face of all Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum.

A Sturdy Floor-Covering for Theatre Lobbies—

In all weathers people come tramping through the lobby tracking dust, grit, wet, and mud from outdoors. To resist such grinding traffic, a floor-covering must possess oak-like durability.

For such service you need Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum. Built according to the strict specifications of the U. S. Navy for linoleum, this floor-covering stands even the terrific wear given the decks of our men-of-war.

That is why it stands up so remarkably under the wear-and-tear of service in theatre lobbies, foyers, interiors—wherever a sturdy floor-covering is needed. Moreover, this remarkable linoleum is sanitary, non-absorbent, silent underfoot, very easy to clean, and comparatively low in cost.

Gold-Seal Cork Carpet

Where absolutely quiet floors are desired, we suggest Gold-Seal Cork Carpet. This durable floor-covering is as silent and comfortable underfoot as a thick woven rug. A super-quiet covering for aisles, rest-rooms, etc. It is made in 6 attractive shades.

We strongly recommend that you have your Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum and Gold-Seal Cork Carpet laid by experienced layers, and according to the Gold-Seal Specifications. No matter how well linoleum or Cork Carpet is made, incorrect laying invites trouble.

Competent Engineering

These plans, whether prepared in or out of the Architects' office, are sent out for bids. The Contractors discover that the work has been ill designed and proceed to propose alternates for improvement. This is satisfactory to the Architect, who has confidence in the ability of the contractor's engineers; but the contractor's engineers are also relatively low salaried men, in general, and consequently the engineering features are peddled around from pillar to post, until the Contractor, who must build the theatre, goes ahead and does the best he can, which in general is not the best, for the reason that a general organization, such as contractors, do not and are not expected to, or can afford to, carry high grade experts. The purpose of a contractor is to execute and build in accordance with the design and direction of other master minds. They should not be looked to as being in an advisory capacity. It would be prejudicial to the desired results, if they were. It is thus seen that unless there be an independent engineer, of recognized standing, selected by either the Owner or the Architect, in his behalf, there can be no competent definite direc- representing. It cannot be done. No man can serve two masters. The sooner own- tion of the engineering problems.

Occasionally this defect is eliminated by engaging a competent professional engineer to act only in an advisory capacity, to check and approve the contractor's designs. This is some improvement, but also lacks finality, as very often, as may be expected, the contractor's designs are not what they should be, or what the consulting engineer would like to have, but the design is usually rather far advanced if not entirely completed when submitted for approval and to make radical changes would entail considerable loss of time and delay in actual construction, so that the engineer approving the work is obliged to make the best of a bad job and reinforce the weak points as best he can, in order to make the structure safe.

A better plan and perhaps the best one, is that the Owner select an architect and an engineer of recognized ability, whose fees shall be in harmony with the importance of each, and leave their powers and responsibility to assume such proportions as is in keeping with the two separate and distinct professions. If either offers himself as competent in both lines, he is misers awaken to this fact, if they have not already done so, the better protected th will be.

Importance of Structural Engineering

The most important element is seen be competent structural engineering, which the foundation and physical streng of the structure depends. With a sou and healthy structure as a basis, the i surance risk is practically eliminated a owners will know that their buildings w live long lives of security. Owners shou not leave the selection of so important a element as the structural engineer to a architect or anyone else. They should s lect their engineer as they would couns at law and then leave the case with hi The engineer should be able to assum full responsibility and protect his clie to the fullest extent. He must be tho oughly competent and conversant with a angles of the particular work to be don Again to reiterate, very carefully sele your structural engineer, since the safet of your theatre depends entirely on hin compensate him in accordance with hi responsibilities.

The Independent Movie Supply Company has been attracting considerable attention through their recent expansion movement. In the March 18 issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, which carried a special section on this expansion movement, was published an article listing the many theatres recently equipped by this company. Unfortunately, in error, a statement appeared crediting another theatre supply company with these installations, we therefore take this opportunity for correction of same. The section referred to on page 1,652, third column, first paragraph, should read:

"The following partial list brings out very forcibly the representative field in which the Independent Movie Supply Company have extended their activities."

Prolonging the Life of the Film

Albert Teitel, film expert who started as one of the pioneers in this industry fourteen years ago, gives the following interesting talk regarding a subject which is of vital interest to all concerned in the motion picture industry.

"The motion picture industry has advanced to a point where perfect product and economy are vital interests as in any other business. Millions of dollars are lost to the industry for the reason that the physical life of the film is short.

"Small theatres representing an enormous total investment have in some cases proven unsuccessful because the managers, among many others, did not believe that rainy, flickery, jumpy films would produce dissatisfaction among the patrons.

"Exchanges have lost out by these failures and these imperfect films have been a foundation for the oculist's denunciation of movies as detrimental to the eyesight of those who consistently attend this form of entertainment."

Mr. Teitel claims that it is possible to extend the life of the film through proper treatment, and to eliminate to a large degree the imperfections in the used films as we see them today. Thus the exhibitor would readily book film two months old if they knew they were getting equal projection value as if they had run these prints when they were new.

This process, as patented by Mr. Teitel, consists of three steps:

1. A fatty base applied to the emulsion which is absorbed through the pores embeds itself in the stradum (first coating non-sensitized after the celluloid), thus acting as a feeder of elasticity to the celluloid, making same pliable and preventing sprockets from chipping or cracking prematurely.

2. Lubricating sprockets to remove stickiness of same.

3. After enough fluid has been absorbed, a continuous running matter such as decomposed silver, superfluous tone tints, salt deposits, carbon dust, oil spots and stains, etc., thus tending to eliminate flicker, giving clean and clear photography free from all above mentioned objectionable defects.

Local 306 Annual Bal

The Moving Picture Machine Operators Lo 306 Entertainment and Ball was held last S urday evening at the 71st Regiment Armo Park Avenue, N. Y. City and was the m successful function ever held under the auspi of that organization. Thousands attended, riving in time to enjoy a vaudeville performan which was supplied by acts donated for the c casion by the leading circuits. The entire pr ceeds are to be devoted to the sick and distre fund of Local 306, which is from point of me bership and prestige the most importa operator organization in the country.

One of the features of the evening was t presentation to President Kaplan of a han some solid ivory gavel trimmed with gold. Th was given as a tribute of the 1,000 members his successful management of the union's a fairs for a period of over five years. Th tribute as well as a beautiful sterling silv dinner set presented to Mrs. Kaplan was pu chased by popular subscription taken up amor the members.

Fitting speeches were made by Mr. and Mr Kaplan and both were visibly affected by th demonstration of good will and affection.

Under the direction of Earl Rossman, movin pictures were made of the event and an adde attraction to the relatives and friends of mem bers of Local 306 was the appearance of sever of the moving picture stars whose appreciatio of the important work of the operators in show ing their films led them to attend.

Suppose You Had Only Music to Sell

Forget your pictures for a moment, what else does your house offer your audiences? Stop and analyze—Comfort? Service? Music? In many good houses, music cannot stand the spotlight; is yours one?

People love music, instinctively—good music—more than any other influence in their lives. Music goes back through ages, centuries before your pictures were dreamed of. Give your audiences the kind of music they would come to hear if you had only music to sell. You can do it with a Barton Organ.

Do not confuse the Barton with ordinary organs; it is a real theatre Orchestral Organ—built to fulfill your need of economic music and built to satisfy your patrons with wonderful variety and volume of melody. You cannot get Barton results without a Barton.

Don't wait—you can get a Barton now so reasonable, in both price and terms, you cannot afford delay.

Studio Lights of 300,000,000 Beam Candle Power Prove Success

Motion Picture Taken of Recent M. P. T. O. A. Annual Ball

By the use of two large studio lights of 300,000,000 beam candlepower each, successful motion pictures were made of the movie ball held recently oin the Albany, N. Y., armory by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, at their annual convention.

Ballroom pictures are common occurrences in the life of the motion picture director but when such pictures are taken in the studio banks of Cooper-Hewitt, lamps or other lights are used to flood the scene. This was the first time in the history of motion pictures that effective pictures have been taken of a ball in a public hall without elaborate overhead lighting effects.

Two G-E high intensity lights played powerful beams over the dance floor and the camera, mounted three feet above the floor, "panoramed" with the beams which penetrated the entire depth of the hall—245 feet. Light for objects close to the camera and beneath the beams of the studio lights, was supplied by six carbon flood lights which were placed directly in front of the platform supporting the camera.

Five thousand people filled the armory. Most of them were attracted by the presence of several motion picture stars, including Doris Kenyon, Montague Love, Monte Blue and Lew Cody. The camera caught the reception of the stars and the near riot which ensued when the actors of the screen were conducted into the hall through a lane made by 200 Boy Scouts and a detail of police. Pictures of the ball were taken under the supervision of C. F. Bateholts, director of the visual instruction section of the General Electric. The film was exhibited at the banquet of delegates to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners convention. News Weekly camera men also recorded the ball for the screen.

The new studio light was perfected by searchlight engineers of the General Electric Co. and is so made that it can be used as a spot or a flood light. When used as a flood light the glass mirror at the back, which focuses the light rays, is removed and there is a general spread of light from that end of the projector. The light has a 24 inch mirror; its carbons are fed together electrically, requiring practically no attention. The lights are mounted on a base with rubber-tired wheels of large diameter and it can be raised to an elevation of ten feet. The total weight of the light and standard is 600 pounds.

Among the advantages of the light is its adaptation to the studio. When moonlight or sunlight rays through windows or doorways or the illumination of large sets is required the studio light can be wheeled into place. It is valuable for backlighting, as great depth can be gained. The lights can also be used to counter t shadows caused by other lighting apparatu

A special field for the new high intensity li t is the outdoors on dark days or for ni t scenes. The mechanism may be mounted o motor truck with a portable power plant a conveyed to distant locations. A gas eng drives an electric generator which supplies s ficient power to operate the powerful lights

For over two years our engineers worked to perfect this MAZDA lamp for motion picture projection; and our confidence in it is justified by its successful use during the past year in over 700 theatres throughout the country.

This means that at last we have a 600-watt and a 900-watt Edison MAZDA Lamp for motion picture projection in theatres with main floor capacity up to 1000 seats, or for a 16-foot picture, or for a throw up to 120 feet.

For further particulars apply to the nearest office of the General Electric Company.

National Anti-Misframe League Forum

Dear Editor:

Enclosed are two applications for the Misframe League; will you please see that they are taken care of? Sometime ago Brother Leo Martin of the Orpheum Theatre sent in his application for the League and has not heard from it. Will you please look it up? Brother E. G. Sutphen (410) and myself (1536) would like to have some labels, as we have run out.

We are for the bronze button and hope that they will soon be out. Please let us know as soon as they are on hand, as we will want one for each of us.

One of the requirements of this Society is "that every member shall belong to the "National Anti Misframe League." We believe that this will get us better film service, and it will.

Hoping to hear from you soon, we remain,

Yours for better service,

MEMBERS OF SOCIETY OF PROJECTIONISTS,
A. J. Calmari, Sec'y., Box 238, Rockford, Ill.

Brother Calamari's letter head "Society of Projectionists—For Better Projection." This certainly sounds interesting and we'd like to hear about this club if it has any new ideas as the motto would suggest. Let's go, Brother Calamari.—ED.

Dear Editor:

Inclosed find a drawing of an idea for a safe place to keep operator's license of the Pennsylvania type, as the law requires to keep the license to be in display, during the time that the projectionist is on duty. This applies only on Simplex machines and for Penna. license as I do not know what kind of license the other states give. The idea will keep the license always in display, and in a neat and clean condition. Very truly,

PATSY CORDI,
Derry, Pa.

Dear Ed:

I want to know what you have to say about this. I have two new Powers 6B projectors and I can remove the tension screw from one machine entirely without showing a jump in the picture, but I can't do this with the other. Is it because one of these machines is made wrong?

Here's success to the League.

L. ROBERTSON.

In answer to the question asked by Brother Robertson, I would say that first, the fact that the tension screw can be removed from one machine without showing a jump in the picture and the same could not be done with the other, does not necessarily indicate that there is a defect in either machine.

Here at Last—Labels

I suppose a great many of the brothers have been getting right down, disgusted with us for not renewing our supply of labels before this. However, they are all ready now, so send in for them while they last and we'll promise you that no such delay will happen again. We won't run out of them this time, because when this lot is nearing its end there will be a new bunch coming in.

Show the industry that there is one group of projectionists that are trying to help correct some of the evils of the business. Use the labels.

Who's to be the first to land in on this new supply?

Simplex Licence
1922
Place for Pennsylvania Projectionists to keep their licence
Place piece of tin in back of licence to protect from oil and dirt.

The tension springs that the screws bear against are of varying temper, and it is very probable that the two machines in question have springs that are of quite different tension. This would account for the fact that the tension screws act differently on each machine.—ED.

Dear Sir:

Enclosed please find my application for membership in the N. A. M. L. I have been reading articles from different operators and find th very interesting. I have been reading the M ager's NEWS. Show business is "all wet" l now, but we manage to plug along. I h some interesting items to send in later on equipment, which consists of a Simplex Motiograph, some combination. Thanking in advance.

Yours for better projection,

RICHARD WEAVER,
Reaper Theatre, Monroe, Mich

Glad to receive Brother Weaver into ranks and we all hope you'll become an act member. Don't forget about your promise send in some items for the columns, as probably have some ideas that will be mig interesting to the other fellows.—ED.

Dear Ed:

Have been a constant reader of the Mot PICTURE NEWS and the part that interests most is the N. A. M. L.

I have been chief operator at the Rialto t atre at Nikoosa for the past three years a have always tried to do what is right in profession.

Am enclosing blank for membership a would be highly honored if you would c sider and send me membership button and oth necessary articles.

Hoping to hear from you soon in regard this, I am,

Respectfully,

FREDERICK BAUMGART,
Rialto Theatre, Nikoosa, Wis

Being chief operator Brother Baumgart m have had experiences that have led him adopt interesting ideas for his departme We're waiting, Brother Baumgart.—ED.

Dear Editor:

I am trying to get my assistant, L. K. Davi son, to join your league. Good luck to t badges. If they do not cost over $1.00 send one C. O. D. Yours truly,

NATIONAL ANTI-MISFRAME LEAGUE PLEDGE

AS a motion picture projectionist who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the projection-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in reasonably good condition, according to conditions of film when received. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother projectionists and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Projector. Well that is what I call good salesmanship, because anybody can sell what you ask for, but it takes a good salesman to sell you what you didn't ask for. Mr. Hawk said he would bring the machine up in about two weeks, so please don't disappoint me, for I want to run a show for the children as soon as I can."

The Simplex Projector was delivered and installed, as promised by Hawk, and a few days later Mr. Hornstein received another letter from the Rectory, but this one was a personal letter written by Father Hines himself in which he stated the following:

"Your Mr. Hawk brought the Simplex Projector last night and I am immensely pleased with it. Rest assured I appreciate it all and I wish you all the success in the world."

The moral of which seems to be—"The Simplex is indeed in the hands of the livest of distributors."

Competent Theatre Engineering

orations, the remaining engineering problems, such as heating, ventilation, electric, acoustic, projection, etc., may best be left to the recommendation of the consulting engineer. The general planning, seating arrangement, interior and exterior decorations, etc., in full detail, should play in the important part of the Architect, who with a safe and sound structure to work with may embellish and elaborate to the fullest extent of the investment.

From what has been stated it may be the conclusion that the ideal combination to be drawn on for theatre construction is an association or partnership comprising both a consulting engineer and architect, who have specialized in this character of work. Unfortunately, up to the present time, very few, if any, such combinations exist, in actuality. A great number of architects misrepresent in this respect, since they offer both architectural and engineering services, and it is presumed they are equally competent. In some instances they associate themselves with a consulting engineer, which is proper and practically amounts to the ideal combination. However, a greater majority do not do this, for one reason or another, and the owner does not get the results he should. This is to be carefully guarded against and avoided for best results.

Encroaching on Safety Factor

Theatre projects for which a certain maximum appropriation has been made, for a certain capacity house, should not be embarrassed by the necessity of limited economy in any one direction. The tendency in the past has been to find that estimates over-run appropriations. The next move is to cut here and there until they approximately balance. In making these cuts, alteration is usually first directed to the structural work—steel for instance—but seldom are the architectural features sacrificed. This is a dangerous procedure. Assuming that the structural design has been economically laid out and designed, any reduction enroaches on the factor of safety. This is important and should not be disregarded, simply for the reason that it involves a considerable amount of expenditure. It would be safer and wiser to confine any necessary cuts to less important items. This may be done in numerous ways of simplification of general design or even, if necessary, a reduction in capacity. The point to be emphasized is that to reduce the size and strength of structural members beyond a certain degree, is more or less dangerous and involves additional hazards. Consequently, the principles and limitations of economics should be rigidly enforced and insisted upon by the owner as well as the consulting engineer.

Many factors enter into the construc on of a theatre. Owners in general have ot seemed to realize in the past that they ve been building one of the most com ex type of structures. Considerable stress as been placed on the elimination of all s- ible columns, supporting the balcony It has been practically demanded in mos n- stances that the entire visibility be u b- structed beneath the balcony and r z- zanine floors, leaving the orchestra cl r. In some cases two columns have been r- mitted, one at either side in the rear al g the side aisles.

In either case long spans are involv d with intricate angles of cantilever des n, in order to support the front of the l- cony. Frequently side boxes are u d along the walls without any visible me s of support. This necessitates comple y of design and with a large number of p- ple, both above and below, whose lives e dependent on safe construction, the v l importance of careful and compet t engineering is again apparent. It is s that makes the construction of a thea e a great responsibility on the part of e owner. He cannot safeguard himself o much, he should and must use every av - able means to insure permanency a l safety to his patrons and the public n general, to which they are entitled. t should be mandatory.

Therefore, in conclusion, the wri r would recommend that owners and bui - ers of theatres make certain that they e- gage thoroughly competent architectu l and engineering services.

TransVerteR

Produces a Perfect Arc and a Steady, Brilliant White Light

TRANSVERTER (Double Arc Type) is a series arc motor generator, having automatic voltage regulation.

No more amperes used than actually required for the light or dark pictures.

Only such voltage is generated as is used in the arc itself (no ballast being used).

TRANSVERTER produces better results and uses less current than any other device.

TRANSVERTER gives better light and better pictures. It is easy to operate, thoroughly reliable, and is an important factor in drawing full houses, by reason of superior projection.

Another theatre in La Porte, Ind., retained the orchestra for the evening performance only, the organ and phonograph being used in the afternoon, the orchestra and the phonograph in the evening. The La Porte house accompanied the vocal records with the organ or orchestra and reports unusual satisfaction on the part of the audiences at the variety and newness of the musical program. No attempt has been made as yet to follow the feature with phonograph music. However, this is quite feasible.

It has been estimated that the number of phonograph enthusiasts in the country are nearly as numerous as "movie fans." Many people are interested in both. As the new plan aids in the welding these factions of phonograph and motion picture industries into one clientele and these millions of people can be made to depend upon their local theatre for both, it should help to increase the patronage that is so needed by the theatres just at present.

The idea of mutual service was furnished by Mr. Kenyon W. Mix, director of publicity Division of the Dodge Company, who are owners of the Indestructo Trunk makers and other associated interests.

Plans are under way to extend the service as rapidly as possible and a most ingenious method of installation has been provided to facilitate reducing the cost to a minimum for the theatre.

New Barton Organ

The Bartolina set of pipes and an exclusive feature with the Barton Organ, invented by Mr. Dan Barton, has been improved so the quality can truly be called a golden tone. Refinements have been added to the electric controls which have increased the flexibility and speed of the action so that the rapidity of the present rendition is such that every organist who have been privileged to try it has been enthusiastic.

"The general appearance of the beautiful Barton console remains as before except that a new system of console lighting has been installed which insures perfect lighting on the stop tablets, manuals and pedals without in any way interfering with the darkness of the theatre or throwing any reflection on the picture screen.

"One of the most exasperating troubles in pipe organs has been the very constant nec of adjusting the Tremolo or Vibrato. I new Barton a Tremolo arrangement has perfected which has cut the necessity adjustment down to a minimum.

Proven Prosperity

IN the following pages you will find announcements of seven Paramount Pictures, chosen out of hundreds because they are the seven greatest box-office pictures ever released by Famous Players-Lasky.

Every one of them broke records when it was shown. Every one of them was acclaimed universally as a masterpiece. Every one is remembered by public and exhibitors as marvelous entertainment.

Give your patrons a week in which to see the pictures they've been hearing about for two years. Give them a chance to repeat that wonderful thrill they experienced when they first saw them!

That's what Hugo Riesenfeld is doing, in the Rialto Theatre, New York. He's showing these seven during the week of March 26th. And it's an idea that every theatre in the country can profit by following.

New prints and a complete line of accessories ready at all exchanges.

Dear Mr. Chaplin:-

Just as D. W. Griffith set a standard for dramatic motion picture production with his immortal "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," so did you for comedy drama with "THE KID." I think that everyone is ready to admit that "THE KID" was the best picture of its kind ever made.

When we started on Owen Moore's latest, "REPORTED MISSING," Director Henry Lehrman, the entire production staff and myself resolved to make it a better picture than the best ever made. I think we have succeeded.

Thank you for the inspiration.

Very sincerely yours,

Lee-Bradford Corporation,

New York City.

Gentlemen:-

The opening day of the engagement of "Determination" at the Empire yesterday marked the largest attendance in the history of the playhouse, even exceeding the attendance on the opening day of "Over the Hill". The seating capacity of the Empire is something over seventeen hundred. We open at one oclock. Before three the theatre was completely filled including the allowed standing room in back, and at three thirty the outside lobbies were packed solid.

Before eight oclock the congestion at the Empire become so great that officers from the Police Department ordered us to close the box office, and the sale was not renewed until nearly 9-30, some minutes after the starting of the last show of the evening. This is the first time to our knowledge that a large picture house has been forced to close their box office for so long a space of time.

We might add that the business exceeded our fondest expectations, although the film was given good publicity. Congratulations.

Sincerely,

EMPIRE THEATRE

The Truth About News Reels = = =

You exhibitors who were present ten years ago when the news reel made its first appearance remember the persistency with which producers forced scenes of ship launchings, baby parades and other such subjects into each issue. Week after week, month after month, and year after year news reel producers continued to feature these same subjects—baby parades, ship launchings, etc. Even now the majority of news reels show week after week these same listless subjects. For lack of REAL news they find it necessary. Not so one producer. A short time ago Lewis J. Selznick decided that after ten years of stand-stillness in the news reel field, improvements were in order. He decided to mould his news reel after the fashion of the successful newspaper, publishing real, honest-to-God news only. That's why Selznick News stands superior to all other news reels—because it publishes NEWS while its contemporaries continue to publish views of the same old parades and ship launchings. That's why Selznick News unquestionably is the World's Greatest News Reel.

Get Your Share of our Profits—and start right NOW

It's the sign that points the way to profits

WELL, we started something. When we announced last week that Mr. Carl Laemmle had turned over to us all the Universal Exchanges to be run during the months of April and May as we saw best and, further, that we intended to share our profits with you, we did not dream of the sensation this would create in the industry.

Guess we've caught the true spirit of Universal. Judging from the letters and wires from exhibitors, we've originated a striking, novel plan by which exhibitors will cash in big with us in celebrating Universal's tenth anniversary. And this at a time when they'd like it most.

But our plan is more than merely novel or original. We're going after business in a big, strong way. We intend to make some real money for ourselves and our friends, the exhibitors,—for, the bigger our profits the greater your share.

So, get busy. Come in and see us at once—right now!

Disraeli Engagement Closed

It is unusual for a theatre to spend money to tell people of a picture that has closed its engagement.

And the Plazo hos no intention to return "Disraeli."

"Disraeli," with George Arliss in the title role, which closed a week's engagement lost night, wos, in the opinion of the management, one of the very best, if not obsolutely the best picture that ever played the house.

Further, the previewer for the Ploza, who sees as many pictures every week as most people see in many months, believes it to be the best picture he ever saw, considering everything, and from all angles.

With no selfish interest in view, we are spending a considerable sum to tell you about this picture, largely as a compliment to its makers, whom we do not even know, and to its distributors, The United Artists.

Here ore some of the reasons we believe give this picture its high rank:

First, its entertainment value. People go to theatres to be entertained, rather than instructed, or "preached at." It has wit rother than comedy; scintillating brilliancy; it portrays most vividly a worthy lore of youth's springtime, but far more forcefully that most wondrous love of all, perhaps, the pure time tried love of a sweet, kindly, brilliant, witty man—the first man of a great nation at its height, for his wife—and such a wife!

And the story—its theme so great—the attainment of practically a continent by a notion—the battle of wits of the very nations themselves—if notions have wits—its historical accuracy and value; its lack of the cheap and tawdry, its omission of the flapper type, of the gunman, the roughneck—and its general artistic excellence. Never have we seen better photography. The projectionist at the theotre remarked, at its last showing, "The ONLY FLAWLESS picture I have ever seen"—and he has been with the industry from its start.

And last of all, Arliss. Upon him the mantle of the great actors of the past seems to have fallen. We say—and the critics bear us out—that he is the FOREMOST actor in the world today, bar none.

"Disraeli" was only moderately successful. Did YOU see it? Hod we written this earlier, you might not have believed.

PLAZA THEATRE.

We Thank You.

THOSE who believe that the revitalization of the Motion Picture is its strength of theme, the compelling sincerity of its acting and the flawlessness of its production are finding DISTINCTIVE pictures in every way worthy of the name.

We reproduce herewith one of the most remarkable advertisements in moving picture history.

It is but another evidence to us that the DISTINCTIVE IDEA of motion-picture making is taking a firmer hold each day....

The New York Reviewers Say:

"A smashing good melodrama. The cast is without a flaw. The people act like real people. The best all-round romantic melodrama we have seen in a long time."—Harriette Underhill, New York Tribune.

"A picture thoroughly worth while. One of the best film attractions seen on Broadway in some time. Commands attention at the start and holds the interest to the final fade-out. Not a dull moment. Love interest is well upheld; cast well chosen; direction beyond criticism. 'Fair Lady' can be recommended as sterling photo-dramatic entertainment. A picture that can only bring praise to all concerned in its making."—R. W. Baremore, Morning Telegraph.

"Thrill follows on thrill. Love interest of a high degree of intensity. Sumptuous interiors."—New York Journal.

"An absorbing photoplay, distinguished by effective acting. It will be a popular picture wherever shown. 'Fair Lady' ought to do well."—Quinn Martin, New York World.

"A thrilling moving picture drama. Notably good cast. A story based on actual facts. Has a particularly human appeal."—Evening Telegram.

"The picture is a good one; the story well suited to the screen; has been skillfully done. A story of adventure and romance."—The Globe.

"A stirring melodrama exceedingly well played. Will make the pulses quicken. Has a strong thread of romance. An exceptionally interesting as well as thrilling film. Every player fits perfectly into the character."—Evening Mail.

The Film Trade Papers

KEEP your eyes on the film Trade papers next week for one of the most sensational announcements on a Nation-wide exploitation and publicity tie-up the picture business has seen in a long time, in connection with H. B. WARNER in "THE SHEIK OF ARABY," a startling revival of this wonderful picture formerly titled, "The Man Who Turned White." In territories where this picture has played the possibilities for a genuine box-office clean up are immense. In theatres where this picture has yet to be shown the possibilities are even greater. Not alone the presentation of a wonderful picture with the popular star, H. B. Warner, but an advertising tie-up that will make thousands of money-hungry film men applaud. To all exhibitors who are looking for real money, here's the biggest smash of the season. Watch and Wait. FILM NEWS AND REVIEWS

'Gypsy Passion' or 'The Child of the Bear' is Great

BY ROB REEL.

There are moments when a motion picture reviewer is the last person on earth fit to criticize a picture. He sees so many of them in the course of a week that many times they bore him before "Finis" is written, and he's likely to blame it on the film!

"However, there is one production that the most blase critic—or reviewer—could never criticize.

"Gypsy Passion!"

Here is a play that proves Shakespeare's words, "The plays the thing." Here is a cast that proves the power of proper selection. Here are scenes that are truly beautiful—genuinely picturesque. "Gypsy Passion!"

It is taken from the story of Jean Richepin, "Miarka, the Child of the Bear."

A baby is cared for by a great black bear—a wee brown gypsy baby whose mother died and whose grandmother, Romany Kate, is her only living relative. "It is written," insists Romany Kate, "that you shall meet the chief of all our tribes at the shrine of the saint, Lady Mary of the Sea." And Miarka, child of the bear, shudders, because she loves the son of Count de la Roque, a French gentleman, and the gypsies' friend.

There is one Louis. A rascal! He loves Miarka—or, at least, desires her. He schemes to have Romany Kate placed in prison, and when the girl is left alone—except for the great bear—he seeks to abduct her.

But he has not counted the beast! There is a battle—man and bear—and the man goes down before the bear's huge body with lacerated face and broken bones.

Oh, you will like "Gypsy Passion!" It is unlike anything else ever screened. It is vivid, beautiful, delicate as poetry and decent as all life.

Madame Rejane as Romany Kate handles her part with conscientious care—a truly excellent actress! Jean Richepin himself appears as the dignified old count. Desdemona Mazza as Miarka is charming and very lovely. Ivor Novello, already famous in another field (for he wrote "Keep the Home Fires Burning"), plays the juvenile lead. Others in the cast are well chosen, as I have already said, and further than this I can only add—

SEE IT when it comes, for you will be doubly pleased.

Comment of Critics on "THE FOUR SEASONS"

Philadelphia Evening Ledger—

An innovation, so very praiseworthy and likely to be so far reaching in effect as "THE FOUR SEASONS," which was shown last week at the STANLEY THEATRE, is worthy of more than passing mention in review. There is an appeal in this novel film that passes far beyond the regular fans and fannettes. . . . It is to be devoutly hoped that the makers of "THE FOUR SEASONS" will come again—and soon. . . .

Columbus, O., Citizen—

Urban's "THE FOUR SEASONS" is one of the best excuses for the movies that has been here for some time. . . . At the SOUTHERN all week.

Pittsburgh Press—

Those persons unfortunate enough to miss "THE FOUR SEASONS" shown at the STATE THEATRE last week had better hunt up where it is being shown this week and see it. . . . It is instructive and of the greatest entertainment.

From the Los Angeles Times—

Wonders new and unrevealed, wonders of sky, water and earth, wonders of a life that hold you enthralled . . . serve to captivate you in the unusual feature . . . "THE FOUR SEASONS" at GRAUMAN'S THEATRE this week.

From the Cincinnati Times—

. . . "THE FOUR SEASONS" at the STRAND THEATRE all week is the finest thing of the kind this reviewer has ever seen. . . .

"A Splendid Audience Picture!"

—Exhibitors' Herald

Newspaper critics and trade experts unite in praising picture replete with love and thrills. Read 'em!

FAR ABOVE ORDINARY

THRILLING TRAIN WRECK

"The train wreck certainly is a thriller and the boat chase down the rapids toward a waterfall is very exciting. Unusual twists to the plot. The acting is unusually good."—Portland Telegram.

"A strong picture that proves quite convincingly that love never dies. The story is replete with thrilling wrecks and daring rescues. The two big scenes of the picture are a railroad wreck in which a fast-moving train plunges off a high bridge into a stream many feet below and a river scene wherein the hero attempts to rescue his wife's second husband from his suicidal plunge over the falls. Aside from its melodramatic possibilities the story of love never dying is most entertaining and pleasing. There is a strong current of love throughout that draws the skeins together in the aid for a happy fade-out."—Atlanta Georgian.

BIG HEART INTEREST

"A good heart interest drama. King Vidor is strong for the simple virtues of love and faith and expresses them. There is a thrilling train wreck and a picturesque and vivid rescue scene. It inspires sentiment and romance."—Motion Picture News.

APPEALS TO LADIES

"A splendid audience picture and one that will appeal especially to the ladies."—Exhibitors' Herald.

ACTION IS RAPID

"Rapid action and a liberal assortment of thrills. Lloyd Hughes does sincere work and Madge Bellamy is appealing."—Exhibitors' Trade Review.

Read What the Trade Experts Say:

CASH IN ON THE NAME OF THE STAR

"Not only have exhibitors the strong cashing-in possibilities of the star's name, but they may use to advantage the presence of a number of film favorites in the supporting cast. Theatre managers, it is almost unnecessary to say, know by this time that Barthelmess' name means the pleasing jingle of a steady placing of coins on the box office till. And playing him in this picture in your house as soon as possible after 'Tol'able David,' his finest work, you will reap the benefit of the enthusiasm created by that production.

"'The Seventh Day' is a pleasing entertainment. The work of the star and his unusually fine supporting cast is sincere. The picture is invested with his personality, which is saying much. Henry King, the director, also injected good atmosphere and staged the scenes in an expert manner."—Moving Picture World.

BARTHELMESS IS A REAL ACTOR

"After 'Tol'able David,' one has reason to expect great things from the combination of Henry King, as director, and Richard Barthelmess, as star. Many, if not all, of these expectations are realized in their second offering, 'The Seventh Day.'

"This picture is consecutively interesting, because it is set forth in a sensible and intelligent way. The same qualities that characterized 'Tol'able David' and made it notable are evident all through 'The Seventh Day,' particularly the genuineness and the sincerity. Nearly all of the scenes were taken in the open air, without the aid of Cooper-Hewitt sunshine, and the atmosphere and the back grounds are real. There is no suggestion of painted scenery.

"Richard Barthelmess is a serious young sea captain, and he lends an air of real force and distinction to the role. He has risen above the position of a mere matinee idol and is now a real actor; for which he deserves considerable credit."—Life.

STAR IS CAPABLE AND SINCERE

"Director King has taken the company to an attractive seaport town where practically the entire story is laid. There are some pretty shots and the photography throughout is excellent. Of course, the real attraction of the picture is Barthelmess. He is capable and lends a certain sincerity to his playing that is unmistakable.

"If an agreeable star and a picture that is very pleasing to look at will satisfy them, you can feel quite safe in showing 'The Seventh Day.' There is a delightful atmosphere of a New England fishing village and many pretty and attractive shots in and around a palatial yacht that will please a good many. Then too, there's always a good sized crowd who like to see how people such as those represented in the yachting party, live and idle away the time. They will get a good idea of how they do it in 'The Seventh Day.'

"Barthelmess' name and his performance is the talking angle of first importance that you should stick to. Tell them they will like him in this and catchlines will give a good idea of the story, sufficient to let them know what it is about."—The Film Daily.

WILL WIN FRIENDS FOR SILENT DRAMA

"To those who doubted that Richard Barthelmess could follow up such a fine picture as 'Tol'able David' with another as good we recommend they see 'The Seventh Day.'

"With the story set in an old-fashioned seaport town and the characters a mixture of New York pleasure-seeking young people and the hard-working seafaring men of the fishing village, Porter Emerson Browne has devised an interesting tale. In the film the contrasts are well brought out and there are many little touches that stamp Director Henry King as a master of his craft. Thus 'The Seventh Day' combines a good story with excellent direction and when one adds to this the capable playing of the cast and the exceedingly fine photography there is nothing more that could be asked for.

"Richard Barthelmess has been well cast as the young captain of a fishing schooner. As usual he plays with that easy naturalness that makes it such a pleasure to watch him on the screen. Many of his scenes are real gems.

"'The Seventh Day' is the finest of cinema entertainment. It is clean, well done drama: in short, the kind of motion picture that will win many friends for the silent drama and a feature film that stands high on the list of photo-dramatic productions."—New York Morning Telegraph.

A CREDIT TO STAR AND DIRECTOR

"Henry King has been consistently of and in the picture game but until he came through with 'Tol'able David' he had not been identified as a director of exceptional genius and imagination. 'The Seventh Day' reflects an equal amount of credit on Mr. King and his star, Mr. Barthelmess.

"He has evolved a picture that holds attention by its scenic beauty, atmospheric details, bits of characterization and skillful handling of a fine cast of types.

"Mr. King has taken his simple story about some idle rich young people who are forced to sojourn among the folks of a New England sea coast village for a week and developed it without melodrama, heroics or sickly sentiment. The picture goes from one sequence to another tranquilly explaining how the honest fisherman won the Broadway flapper and how the lounge lizard, who was a pretty good scout at heart, fell for the simple miss of the little village."—Motion Picture News.

BUSTER KEATON'S VOYAGE IN A HOME-MADE BOAT

IN the capable hands of Buster Keaton a sailing vessel is made the vehicle for no end of hilarity in "The Boat," the comedy at the California. "The Boat," one of the funniest two-reel comedies that Keaton has made, is the best constructed of his offerings. It concerns the ship-building activities of an amateur sailor who builds a boat so that his wife and two kiddies can have the sea air recommended by the family physician. He has innumerable difficulties in getting the boat to the ocean for a launching and still more trouble in sailing it. Caught in a storm and wrecked, he manages to escape more through the assistance of fate than through his own ingenuity.

Something novel in western stories is offered by ~~Raymond~~ Hatton in "~~His Back Against the Wall~~," a five-reel drama which is the companion picture on the California bill. ~~Hatton~~ in this picture blossoms forth as a star and gives a capable performance. It may be difficult to imagine a western hero who cannot shoot, ride or fight, but such is Hatton in "His Back Against the Wall."

Herman Heller and the California orchestra play the "Tannhauser" overture and a popular number.

Motion Picture News

OUR high appreciation and sincere thanks to Harry Leon Wilson for his Saturday Evening Post serial "Merton of the Movies." Perhaps we, of the trade itself, enjoy it most keenly; but, at last, the public at large will have the true story of Young America and the motion picture. Also the true, the inside story, of the studio colony called Hollywood.

We happen to know something of how Mr. Wilson wrote his novel. He didn't, for instance, write from a newspaper desk in New York—with instructions to "dope" it out quickly and make it yellow. He didn't see it afar through the strange spectacle lenses of a Canon Chase or the publicity crazed eyes of a John Roach Stratton. He didn't see and know it all after a week in a Los Angeles hotel plus a superficial glimpse of a studio in action.

On the contrary he went to Hollywood a year ago to work. Ben Hampton, who is enough of a journalist to sense the real heart-beat of the picture folk—perhaps the most humanly interesting and colorful colony that ever existed—urged him to go slowly and see deeply. And he did—just that. What he saw is as funny as all humans are funny—not excepting in the least the more or less human Chases and Strattons—and as pathetic and noble and aspiring and heartrending as is the whole human struggle to get a little higher than the clods of the earth, a struggle some million years old but still some million years young.

So much for the studio.

Now—will some one write a true story of the industry of the picture? The indnstrial job of feeding film to ten million people a day;—of making the job pay—as pay it must;—of satisfying the entertainment hunger of this cosmopolitan horde;—of the tremendons and feverish creative effort, its hopes, mistakes, successes, losses;—of the industrial machinery needed, and its discouraging waste. Not a "dope" story of a Klondyke; but a story with actual figures and facts so that, at last, the public and the legislator and the reformer will see under the surface and—perhaps—sense the utter futility of having a state set up three little humans with the utter power to regulate this complex and tremendous thing.

Never before, in the history of this country, was knowledge so greatly needed as now. Fanaticism won't make things better; it never did. Knowledge always has and always will. And Fanaticisn is the antonym of knowledge.

Who will write this story? For if ever there was an institution, a great and highly important one, about which there is no knowledge at all it is the industry of the motion picture.

Washington to Be Mecca for Exhibs May 8

M. P. T. O. of A. Headquarters Reports Flood of Inquiries Assures Big Convention

THE National offices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, in New York, are literally flooded with mail from interested theatre owners in all parts of the United States, seeking specific information on this or that phase of the coming National convention of the organization, and suggesting different matters to be discussed there.

The National Convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will be held in Washington, D. C., during the week of Monday, May 8. Present arrangements indicate that it will continue five days but it is likely to take up the entire week. The interest of the theatre owners in all parts of the United States in the convention is most gratifying as it shows unusual activity in the ranks, rarely attained by any organization. It presages a wealth of work there advantageous to the Motion Picture industry as a whole.

Definite arrangements have been made by the National Convention Committee, of which W. A. True, of Hartford, Conn., is chairman, for fare and one half on all railroads to and from Washington during the period of the convention and such additional time as will permit theatre owners and others to make the trip. This will save every theatre owner and member of his or her party coming to the convention 25 per cent of the regular fare to Washington and return. It will afford all an unrivalled opportunity to see the National Capitol in May, the most favored month in the year for that climate.

All theatre owners will receive a certificate which will entitle them to secure this railroad rate reduction and the necessary ticket arrangements can be made with the local ticket agents. This reduction applies to all railroads in the United States.

Agreeable arrangements have been effected with the proprietors of the Washington hotels for the accommodations of the theatre owners and others who will attend the convention. The rates, copies of which will be forwarded from the National office to all theatre owners, will be found to be entirely reasonable, meeting in every way the requirements of those who may come to Washington for this event.

Congress will be in session during the period of the convention and this will afford all an excellent opportunity to observe the processes of every division of the National Government in complete operation, as well as give to the theatre owners and others a chance to meet their Senators and Congressmen on the scene of their official activities, converse with them on home matters or other topics and thus establish lines of relationship and contact which will be very advantageous to the motion picture industry.

Washington is the busiest official in the world. Men and women from parts of the United States are there engaged in different lines of Government work. There is scarcely a section of the country which has not one or more employed, from the President down to Department clerk. Every theatre owner or other person attending this convention in May next can thus get into neighborly company at Washington and meet a friend from the old home town.

Theatre owners are urged to come to Washington for this convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Some of the highest Government officials will be present at different sessions and many men and women prominent in the various states will attend. This convention will be featured by constructive work throughout. Many agreeable surprises will be projected and advanced lines of action will in all instances take precedence, it is declared.

Ample arrangements have been made for the entertainment of the theatre owners and guests and all will be able to see the wonderful sights of the nation's capitol.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

DEVELOPMENTS the past week in the First National-Goldwyn situation indicate that some kind of a merger is probable. Neither concern, however, will make any statement whatsoever; nor to date no definite facts whatsoever are made public. The New York newspapers have carried accounts of such merger which, as usual, are ridiculous in mis-statements. It is not as yet known when a statement will be made to the public.

Thomas Dixon, the novelist, who did such valiant work before the Virginia Legislature in connection with the recent censorship battle, is anything but optimistic over the censorship situation in general. Asked by MOTION PICTURE NEWS as to what influence turned the tide in Virginia for censorship he said without hesitation: "The women's vote spurred on by the professional propagandist." He believes that other southern states will fall in line.

SOME of the speakers' statements that registered at the A.M.P.D.A. dinner to Will N. Hays:

Secretary of Labor Davis: "You know where you're going, all; take care of yourself."

John Emerson: "The movies need something and we think Will Hays."

W. R. Hearst: "Mr. Hays you can give us cohesion, confidence."

Peter J. Brady: "You (the industry) can come through you unite and work together."

W. H. Hays: "I come in all humility, knowing what I don't know.—I want to know.—Then to suggest—then all work together to do what we can—All for one and one for all."

And finally, of course: any expressed or implied criticism of censorship. N.B. This applies to the motion picture only, not to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

And we are told that the law that creates and gives such power to rule to such a Board of Censors is not opposed to the Constitution of these United States!

We have but one consoling thought to offer to the supposedly free citizen of Ohio: Read Well's "Outline of History" and note that the human race even survived the great glacial periods of the world's history.

Blundering gaily along its way, the New York State Censor Board continues to exhibit a frozen intellectuality in its actions. Were it possible for a vaudeville act to incorporate just a part of the nonsensical "business" daily enacted by the Board, in an act, what a "wow" that turn would be!

The latest is a deletion from Official Urban Movie Chat No. 8. The scene in question shows a glass carafe set in a window so that the sun focused through it upon a pair of lace curtains. The vessel after some hours becomes a burning glass and the curtains catch fire. The object of the scene was to illustrate the danger of fire.

The censors, more far-seeing than common mortals, immediately glimpsed little children in future patiently carrying out this experiment with disastrous results, and the scene was ordered cut!

Movie Chats No. 9 will carry the following message from Rev. Thomas Dixon: To the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America:

"Censorship is the vilest word in history. It reeks with the memories of tyranny and of blood. God has not yet made the man wise enough to be clothed with the autocratic power to strangle human thought."

The business foresight which has made Watterson R. Rothacker's name what it is today is best exemplified by a booklet, simply titled "Motion Pictures" which we have at hand.

A masterpitce of printing and engraving skill in its get-up, it is also the most dignified and yet forceful argument of the practically unlimited power and value of the motion picture in our present day life that we have yet encountered.

It is, indeed, a masterly sales agent, not alone for the Rothacker organization, but for the industry as a whole.

AN Italian girl pilot and a Fox News photographer step gaily into an aeroplane. The machine glides gracefully up the slope of Mount Vesuvius. Presently it skirts the ragged edge of the great crater in the center of which a cone can be seen steaming high with the vapors of the burning earth. So far so good. An unusual and instructive travelogue! But—you certainly don't expect the aeroplane to head suddenly straight toward the cone itself. And still less do you expect a close-up of the inferno. But there, quickly it is, before your eyes—only fifty feet away—the sub-title says, and that's right by every sign—great jets of steam belching forth and with every pulsation a shower of lava fragments like rocks from a blast. Red hot lava! Then blur!—the film clouds, the camera rocks—and it's over. The next picture shows a wrecked plane on a mountain side. Here's a veritable thriller. A regular death-defier.

J. D. WILLIAMS says that there will be big changes within the trade this year. Big pictures will be made because the public wants big pictures. The changes that will happen in production and distribution, will happen as and because of this demand for big pictures. Big pictures will be the central and determining force. Advertising and selling will change radically. too, for this same reason. Heretofore the selling and exploitation effort has been about equal on pictures, good bad and indifferent. This year the big effort will be made on the big picture.

When J. D. Williams takes a look into the future it is always worth listening to—and generally right!

Herbert Hancock, director-in-chief of Fox News, says that one element in the selection of future presidential candidates will be their ability to photograph well. Yes, the news reel is that important. Public men know it well. Mayor Hylan, for one, says it is. .Not long ago it was difficult to get the camera in at public gatherings. Now it is as difficult to keep the camera out. Everybody is a lens hound. The greatest men in the public eye have cultivated a camera smile.

The serial has developed a marked change from its customary trend if one considers Universal's way of overcoming traditions. Time was when the general scheme of making a serial employed unadulterated melodrama with no thought paid to realities. And a star was invariably chosen who possessed unlimited courage to flirt with death in a series of wild escapades. Universal has cl bed off the conventional treadmill. hey have had the foresight to capitalize pon vivid historical episodes on the a ven- turous classics of fiction. The p neer days of the West, Stanley's expec ion, Robinson Crusoe's exploits and B falo Bill's life—these are brought forw d in terms of moving drama. What th im- agination has colored from the p ted page is not misrepresented here.

The thought arises that too uch tribute should not be paid to the s ril living when he fertile dead offer u im- ited scope for exploration. The cl sics of literature—the vital chapters of history may just as w be incorporated in the serial photoplay as in the picture of fe ure length. Universal has started the ball rolling. We dar say they will be widely imitated before the wolves howl in ack again—indicating another snug-winter.

Selznick News reel has taken a real step forward. I vid Selznick has announced that hereafter all pictures of nip launching, baby parades and laying of cornerstones wi be eliminated.

Next step should be to eliminate close-ups of politica or stage notables seated at table, center foreground, laborcsly attaching their signatures to contracts of various kinds.

HAVE you a little radio in your home? It is quite pos ile that the exhibitor, who knows his patrons intimely is asking them this pertinent question. It behooves hi to discover the fact if his attraction is playing to empy s ts. This pastime of "listening in" on the songster, the preacer, the actor, the teacher, is certainly keeping the family by he fireside these nights. Analyzing the psychology of the ass mind or making a Freudian gesture—we would say that he radioites are experiencing the new invention complex.

Remember when the telephone was first installed—how ev y- one called up his neighbor just to hear the sound of the voe? And what about the first days of the phonograph? The 'e- phone and the talking machine have come to stay. So has he radio outfit. Also the motion picture. Just at present the n- sation of listening in on the silver-tongued orator or the gi d song-bird is a fad. When the excitement is over they ll only turn to the radio when Charlie and Mary come over or the evening or when the heavens release their volume of te s.

Since the newspapers are devoting whole pages to the nov ty most everyone is endeavoring to climb aboard the band wa n. The popular neighbor is he who has the electrical wires on is roof and something palatable in his cellar. In the meant e the wise exhibitor, who feels his lo s too keenly, will install an outfit in is theatre. Then everybody will be hap y.

ADVICES from Kansas indicate that the exhibitors of that state may, during the convention held in Wichita, March 27 and 28, be recipients of a most revolutionary offer from a producing or releasing firm. The idea, as tentatively advanced (and possibly it may go no farther) is that the concern will come to the aid of such exhibitors as are proven to be in financial difficulties and through low rental, or no rental at all, keep them on their feet until they are able to stand alone. It is also suggested this concern will announce a big reduction in the rental of all its film.

YOUR Best Friend"! The very title seems to suggest Vera Gordon, the mother in "Humoresque," the mother in a successful vaudeville sketch.

So, with an appealing "mother" theme, careful production on the part of Harry Rapf, word and art titles that exactly fit, and a dignified prologue and presentation, "Your Best Friend" went over as a big hit before a thousand Philadelphians, and a score of New York trade paper men in Philadelphia last Sunday night.

The Stanton theatre, one of the Stanley houses, was the scene of the initial presentation. H. M. Warner of Warner Brothers, whose production it is, was host to the visiting delegation.

The full story of the presentation will be found on page 1962.—G. D. GOULD.

Will Hays Formally Welcomed by Industry at M. P. D. A. Ball

Representative and Colorful Gathering on Hand for Gala Occasion

SURROUNDED by nationally known figures high in the affairs of government and industry, Will H. Hays, president and director-general of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, was extended a hearty welcome into the ranks of the motion picture industry at the occasion of the fourth annual dinner-dance of the Motion Picture Directors' Association held on Thursday of last week, March 16th, at the Hotel Astor, New York City. Probably no other industry on earth could have assembled so representative and colorful an audience to greet a newcomer into its midst as that which hailed Mr. Hays upon his first public appearance as a member of the motion picture industry.

"The motion picture industry accepts the challenge in the demand of the American public for the highest quality of art and interest in its entertainment," was Mr. Hays's greeting to the great throng of producers, directors, writers, distributors, and stars that filled the Gold Room of the Astor.

On the dais with Mr. Hays sat Albert D. Lasker, chairman of the United States Shipping Board; Secretary of Labor John J. Davis; Mayor John F. Hylan of New York City; Hugh Frayne of the American Federation of Labor; William Randolph Hearst; Peter J. Brady, Supervisor of the City Record; Albert Firmin of the New York Post-office; Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Sidney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; Marcus Loew; John Emerson, president of the Actors' Equity Association; Miss Betty Blythe, Arthur Brisbane, John H. Cochrane, Albert Firmin, Samuel Goldwyn, Miss Corinne Griffith, Miss Anita Loos, Francis Marion, Jules E. Mastbaum, Miss Mae Murray, Sidney Olcott, Channing Pollick, Saul E. Rogers, Lewis J. Selznick, Courtland Smith, Miss Constance Talmadge, Robert Vignola and Kenneth Webb.

John Emerson acted as toastmaster during the speechmaking. Sidney Olcott, president of the M. P. D. A., made the opening address. While Mr. Hays's speech was the feature of the oratorical program, that of William Randolph Hearst was considered as preeminently representative of the attitude of the industry toward the entry of the former Postmaster General into its ranks. Mr. Hearst eulogized the new executive's mission as one designed to place the business as a whole on a sounder basis and designed to inspire confidence in the greatness of the screen's public service and enterprise. Another address considered significant by many was that of Sidney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who, speaking as the chief of the exhibitors' national organization, declared:

"We welcome all men and women of brains, capacity and broad Americanism into the motion picture industry. In this relation I extend the hand of friendship to Mr. Hays and all others who in any way contribute to the motion picture business, merit, character and integrity.

"To bring our business to a most acceptable position, it will be necessary to have a degree of harmonious relationship within the industry which will eliminate sharp practices, unbusiness-like methods and repeated attempts to secure lines of control which militate against peaceful progress."

Another remark which was of notable significance, in view of the inuendos raised since Mr. Hays first announced his intention of affiliating himself with the industry, was uttered by Alfred D. Lasker, head of the United States Shipping Board, who declared that he knew Mr. Hays had refused a larger salary to go into pictures because "he refused it from me."

Mr. Hays's pledge to preserve the integrity of the screen and to advance its educational and moral potentialities was greeted with cheers. During the course of his speech Mr. Hays said:

"The motion picture industry accepts the challenge in the demand of the American public for the highest quality of art and interest in its entertainment.

"The industry accepts the challenge in the demand of the American youth that its pictures shall give to them the right kind of entertainment and instruction.

"We accept the challenge in the righteous demand of the American mother that the entertainment and amusement of that youth be worthy of their value as the most potent factor in the country's future.

"By our opportunities are our responsibilities measured. From him to whom much is given much is required. The potentialities of the motion picture as a source of amusement, which is necessary, and as a moral influence and educational factor are limitless.

"If this is so, and it is undeniable, then just as that opportunity is great, so in like measure is the responsibility. That responsibility is accepted. Our association is dedicated to the aid of the industry in the discharge of these obligations. It is a task that commands the best efforts of everyone.

"With an appreciation of this industry's importance in the business world and a full knowledge of its own great future, yet in that spirit of humility which recognizes difficulties and limitations, this association takes up its work in the confidence born of the knowledge of its own earnest purpose and with the conviction that we will have the sympathy and co-operation of all those connected in any way within the industry itself and the co-operation and sympathy of the public whose servant the industry is."

After being introduced by Mr. Emerson as "the owner of a great chain of newspapers and the head of one of the finest producing organizations in the country, Cosmopolitan Productions," Mr. Hearst paid a glowing tribute to Mr. Hays'

Only One Case Is Appealed Out of Seven Hundred

"THEY come in looking worried but they leave with a smile."

That we believe describes better than a wealth of cumbersome detail just how expeditiously and satisfactorily the Board of Arbitration, recently instituted under the Hoy Reporting Service, works in New York City. We sat through the best part of an afternoon recently watching the Board function, and no Court of Equity ever deliberated with greater care and precision the cases submitted for its decision than does this Joint Board of Exchangemen and Exhibitors.

The Board is constituted of three exchangemen, three exhibitors, and a chairman, who is an exchangeman. The exchange members are appointed by the president of the local F. I. L. M. Club; the exhibitors by the president of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce. In case of a tie, the chairman votes. If either plaintiff or defendant is dissatisfied with the decision rendered, he has the right of appeal to a Board of Appeal comprising three exchangemen and three exhibitors. If the Appeal Board fails to reach a majority decision, an outsider is agreed upon, the case submitted to him, and his judgment accepted as final.

As soon as a complaint is presented to the Board, the parties involved are notified by registered letter and given a definite time to appear before the Board. On presenting themselves each party signs an agreement to abide by the findings of the Board. Defendant and plaintiff are permitted to present their case with whatever exhibits of evidence or witnesses they desire. The Board members are privileged to cross-examine. After a case is heard, the parties involved are dismissed; the board members deliberate on the arguments presented and reach a decision. The plaintiff and defendant are recalled before the Board and made acquainted with the decision.

Over seven hundred cases tried since December 26th, 1921, and of that number only one case appealed: Can you beat it!

"Federal Censorship Just as Bureaucratic"

"IF any one is still under the delusion that Federal censorship of motion picture films will ever prove satisfactory in this country, he shows amazing ignorance of the psychological motives which keep the censorship agitation alive," says W. D. McGuire, Jr., Executive Secretary of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, whose offices are at 70 Fifth avenue, New York City, in a recent interview in regard to the proposal for Federal censorship.

"The demand for motion picture censorship has nowhere originated with the people who attend the theatres and know whereof they speak. It comes from that ever enlarging group, many of whom entered social and reform work during the war as volunteers and are now making reform a profession. They have found that self-righteousness frequently pays handsome salaries, as witness J. Wilbur Crafts of the International Reform Bureau hurrying about the country. These reform groups attack the motion picture because it is always easier and safer to attack the poor man's amusement than the rich man's pastime. They take the money away from the rich and the joy away from the poor.

"I happened to attend the conference of state censors which was held in California under the auspices of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company last summer. Representatives of all the state boards except Ohio and the newly appointed New York Board were present, as well as representatives of most of the provinces of Canada. Hours were spent in threshing over questions of censorship and types of pictures which were frequently criticised, but absolutely no unanimity of opinion was evident. The censors simply could not agree among themselves, and this is now reflected in the conflicting decisions rendered by the various state boards.

"Federal censorship will never work in America, where the whole theory of democracy is based upon the right of the smallest community to work out its own salvation as far as this can be done without interfering with the rights of a larger group either in state or nation.

"Throw the work of a censorship committee into politics or center its authority in the hands of a central commission, and the work of review will become as arbitrary and bureaucratic under Federal control as it has proved under state control. The whole question of motion picture censorship boils down to the fact that the people who hate the pictures and do not go to the picture shows do not trust the good intentions and good spirit and wholesome-mindedness of those who love the pictures and enjoy the picture shows."

Advertising Men Appear in Motion-Picture

What is probably a record in picture making was established by Director Ellis and his staff in the making of the first picture of the industry's advertising men. Owing to the widespread publicity given this picture last week the title has been changed from "Returned Checks" to "An Ill Wind" because of the numerous complaints from publicity and advertising men that the first title hit too close to home. The picture will have its premier at the Naked Truth Dinner of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers March 25.

Seventy scenes were shot last Saturday afternoon in the Belles Arts Film Company's studio with Director Ellis in charge. Assisting Mr. Ellis were cameramen Walter Pritchard and Tom Swinton. The work was carried on under the supervision of the new company and Bob Dexter, author of the scenario, with the following working cast: M. Blumenstock as leading lady and Charles Einfeld and Paul Gulick, Lin Bonner, Arthur Brilant, Tom Wiley, Horace Judge and Walter Eberhardt.

Additions Made to Palmer Photoplay Staff

The Department of Education of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation announces the addition of a number of new names to its advisory council and contributors. Rex Ingram, who leaped to prominence through his direction of the "Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and other notable pictures, becomes a member of the advisory council. The special lecture contributors for the 1922 term are Jeanie MacPherson, Reginald Barker, Marion Fairfax, June Mathis, Clarence Badger, Paul Bern, Eve Unsell, Eugene Presbrey, Rob Wagner, Eugene V. Lewis, Kate Corbaley and Denison Clift.

Rhode Island Managers to Fight Daylight Savings

The Providence, (R. I.) Theatre Managers' Association will hold a meeting March 31 in that city to discuss plans for a mass fight against the daylight saving plan.

While the daylight saving plan has been in force in Rhode Island, managers of theatres, especially of the motion picture theatres, have faced a heavy weekly loss of patronage, it is declared. Some of them state the loss, measured in dollars and cents, would approximate around the $1,000 mark each week. A state-wide textile strike has occasioned a big drop in attendance at all theatres. The coming summer offers a proposition which is causing most of the theatre men worry. With daylight saving, a continuation of the strike and the usual dropping off in summer business, a period of depression is feared.

Reader Has His Say

"Motion Picture News.

"Gentlemen:—

"An open letter which I sincerely ope and trust that you will publish in fa ess to the truth. I read and heard that A lph Zukor claims that he produced the irst five-reel feature with a well known tar in America.

"The trade papers will all recall i the early spring of 1912 that I produc at the Crystal Studios a feature produ ion known as 'Oliver Twist,' featuring Nat Goodwin and his entire company of ay-ers that produced this play at the ew Amsterdam theatre at that time wit he exception of Marie Doro and Len H d-ing, who were replaced by other pla rs. It was several months after this that a m in New York produced Blanche Wals in a feature known as 'Resurrection,' nd not until a few months later did Ad ph Zukor come out with James K. Hac tt in 'The Prisoner of Zenda.'

"It is only fair that inasmuch as Zu or has sent out the information advi g that he was the first producer of fea re pictures in America I desire the truth be given publicity. Hiram Abrams at at time bought the rights on Nat Good n as Fagin in 'Oliver Twist' production r New England, and many other promin nt exchange men of that day also bought e state rights to the picture.

"I would appreciate if Mr. Ado h Zukor can furnish me with any data t t would prove that he had actually produ d in America any feature of five reels r longer with a big star by a well kno n, prominent author prior to my produc g 'Oliver Twist,' featuring Nat Goodwin

"I was at that time sole owner of a company known as the Motion Pictu e Distributing & Sales Company. Under e company named I produced the first fi -reel feature in America and every one f the trade papers, if they will go back t their files, will find that I am stating t truth, and in fairness to the misapprehe sion that has been created by Mr. Zuko s statement I ask that this letter be pu lished.

"What Mr. Zukor did do was to i port a foreign feature entitled 'Que Elizabeth,' featuring Sarah Bernhar which was not made in this country, a at the time that this was done my pictu 'Oliver Twist,' was in the course of pr duction.

"Yours very truly,

"H. A. Spanuth,

"President Commonwealth Pictures Co Chicago, Ill."

(Editor's Note:—The claim made b Julian Johnston in his article for Motio Picture News, captioned "The Romanc of Famous Players," is not that Adolp Zukor produced the first five-reel pictur in America, but simply that he bought th American distribution rights on "Quee Elizabeth," which was made in France

Selznick Announces Important Appointments

Morris Kohn Made Treasurer and J. S. Woody Becomes General-Manager of Distribution

ANNOUNCEMENTS of particular interest were made during the week by President Lewis J. Selznick, of Selznick Corporation. The first was the effect that he has engaged Morris Kohn for the important position of Treasurer of the Selznick company. Mr. Kohn succeeds Henry Clay Siegel, who recently resigned, and his tenure of office begins at once.

Mr. Kohn's career in the motion picture industry is familiar to practically every one in the business. Directly or indirectly, at one time or another, he has been associated with practically every big producing and distributing organization. His most recent connection was with Realart as president. Some years ago Mr. Kohn was identified with Mr. Selznick in the original select organization, which set such a terrific pace immediately after it was organized. In his work for Realart Mr. Kohn accomplished wonders in a remarkably short space of time until the consolidation of that firm with Paramount was decided upon.

The new treasurer of the Selznick company brought to the motion picture industry a great deal of valuable experience which he had acquired in the commercial world, and, in his earliest contact with the motion picture business, gave every indication that he had found just the place for which he fitted when he began to figure the transferred ways of producing and marketing photoplays.

Mr. Kohn's reputation, based upon his past performance, is expected to add materially to the strength of the Selznick organization in these days when combinations and consolidations for strategic effect seem to be the prevailing fashion.

John S. Woody
Gen. Mgr. of Distribution for Selznick

Morris Kohn
Treasurer of Selznick

John S. ("Jack") Woody, widely known throughout the motion picture industry, and until recently General Manager of Realart Pictures Corporation, has been engaged by President Lewis J. Selznick to become General Manager in charge of distribution of the Selznick Corporation. This announcement follows the statement last week that Sam E. Morris, Vice-President and General Manager in charge of distribution, has been transferred to the Selznick European branch as President of Select Pictures, Ltd., with headquarters in London.

Mr. Woody's present employment with the Selznick company is his second in association with Lewis J. Selznick, the first having been with the original Select organization. Because of this, the work which he is now taking up is not expected to be attended with any considerable difficulties or with any revolutionary changes. Mr. Woody's energies will be expended directly upon the task of selling the Selznick product, and in this he will have direct charge of the various Selznick selling units throughout the country. Because of his previous association with the Select organization he is very familiar with Selznick policies and, indeed, he already knows by their first name a large number of the branch managers and salesmen at present in the employ of the company.

It is expected that Mr. Woody will spend a great deal of his time in the field working personally with the selling crew and the work he is doing in New York just now, prior to Mr. Morris' departure for Europe, is in quick preparation for his first swing around the Selznick circuit to renew acquaintances and let folks know he is on the job.

John J. Rotchford, long identified with the Selznick organization and most recently as assistant to Sam Morris, will continue with his duties as in the past, handling much of the detail which has to do with the proper distribution of pictures.

From neither Mr. Morris nor Mr. Woody is it possible to obtain any kind of a statement which even remotely suggests the possibility of the revolutionary changes which sometimes come about when high executive authority is passed from one motion picture man to another. It is the apparent desire of the Selznick company, Mr. Morris and Mr. Woody, that the conduct of the business of selling Selznick product be continued along the lines which have long been established as so highly successful, the improvement hoped for to result from an intensifying of effort and changes which will be made higher up than the selling end of the business and because of constantly improving trade conditions.

Selznick Production Units to Go to West Coast

DEFINITE announcement that such future motion picture production as is at present contemplated by the Selznick corporation is to be made on the Pacific Coast has just been made by Myron Selznick, vice-president of the company, in charge of production.

The exodus from the East to the West will take place about the middle of April. Preparations for the move are now actively under way.

Among those who will make the journey westward are Vice-President Selznick, his assistant Joseph W. Schleiff, and James Dent, studio manager, of the production forces; Ralph Ince, Victor Heerman, and George Archainbaud, of the directorial staff, and Elaine Hammerstein, Eugene O'Brien, and Owen Moore, of the corps of Selznick stars.

The Selznick productions of the immediate future will be made in the plant of United Studios, Inc., of which M. C. Levee is president. Not long ago Myron Selznick became one of the biggest stockholders in this newly organized company which has taken over the property formerly known as the Robert Brunton studios, situated at No. 5541 Melrose Ave., Los Angeles.

North Branch, Minn., Votes Sunday Movies

By a two to one vote Sunday movies won out in the March 14 election at North Branch, Minn. The little village has been the scene of a bitterly waged fight for a year. Charles E. Power, a North Branch merchant, had just opened a handsome theatre when the council yielded to pressure and passed an ordinance prohibiting Sunday shows and providing for a censorship committee to be composed of the mayor and members of the village council.

The Minnesota division of the M. P. T. O. A. became interested in the case and carried it to the courts. Joy was rampant in two-thirds of North Branch when the district court at Stillwater held the ordinance could not be enforced. The other third of the village had their innings however when the case was appealed to the supreme court. Although divided on the question, this court reversed the district court and sustained the ordinance.

Mr. Powers complained that he could not afford to rent a film, pay the charge and then risk it being condemned because a councilman scented or imagined impropriety. So he closed the theatre and merchants in surrounding villages exulted for the farmers no longer came to North Branch of an evening but the neighboring towns enjoyed their profitable visits.

Excitement has been at a fever heat at North Branch. Long standing friendships were torn asunder in the controversy in which a man was either dead right or dead wrong. But now all is joy in North Branch for on the first Saturday in April, Dr. C. W. Paulson will be sworn in as mayor along with a favorable council and that red letter day will mark the demise of the obnoxious ordinance. North Branch citizens will then have the right to enjoy their Sunday evenings as citizens elsewhere have and—merchants will dust off the cash registers and welcome the farmers.

Exhibs of Western Pennsylvania to Convene

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania Convention will be held at Pittsburgh, Penna., Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, April 10th, 11th and 12th. The following appeal was sent out by State Secretary F. J. Herrington:

"It is the duty of every exhibitor to be in attendance as you understand the so called 'reformers' are always on the job making your burdens always greater, and we must act to at all times be in a position to defend our business against all unjust attacks, and the ever increasing burden of taxation. Let us not be in the same position as we were during the last session of our State Legislature, at which time there were more than a dozen bills introduced, everyone of which affected the motion picture theatres of the State. The voluntary action of a number of exhibitors giving their time and money, and going to Harrisburg, defeated the above bills, and we all benefited at their expense. It is not right that the few should bear the burden, and to avoid this in the future, we appeal to you to attend the convention, so that by the time the Legislature convenes next January, we will be in a position to act, and all exhibitors will know that their interests are being protected. Remember this is a period of taxation following after the great war, and the men or the business not organized will be forced to bear the greater burden. This is our reason for appealing to all exhibitors to attend the Convention."

Ohio Censor Squabble Is Not Fully Settled

The Ohio motion picture censorship storm ahs blown over — temporarily. Things have been done to appease the motion picture men, but not enough has been done to make them feel secure. Here are some of the things that have been accomplished. No longer can Mrs. Evelyn Frances Snow, head of the Ohio Censor Board, travel around the state making speeches, while films wait indefinitely in Columbus for the official sign of approval. Mrs. Snow must, according to the newest ruling, stay in Columbus, censor films as soon as possible after their arrival, and send them back to the exchanges at her earliest convenience. Also Mrs. Snow has been restrained from talking for publication. Hereafter all of her public statements shall be submitted in writing, and shall have been censored by the Educational Director, Mrs. Snow's immediate superior. Furthermore, in the future, films shall be censored by all the members of the board, not by Mrs. Snow alone. However, if Mrs. Snow disagrees with the board, she shall have the power of enforcing her opinion as against that of her associates. And that's why the local film men are not satisfied with what was hoped to be a final settlement of the controversy.

Albert C. Wyckoff

ALBERT C. WYCKOFF, Comptroller of Fox Film Corporation, died of pneumonia on Monday afternoon, March 20th, at the Elizabeth, N. J., General Hospital, to which institution he had been removed on Sunday from his home at 1213 Fairmont Avenue. He had been absent from his office since Tuesday evening, the 15th, when he complained of a severe cold. He leaves a wife, two sons and two daughters. The funeral was held from the residence at 2:30 on Thursday. Among those in attendance was a large delegation from the Fox Company.

Mr. Wyckoff was a well-known figure in motion picture financial circles in New York. Born in Brooklyn 54 years ago, his business life was passed wholly in the accountancy field, in which he long had been recognized as an expert. He entered the motion picture industry in 1915 as general auditor for the selling organization of the V.-L.-S.-E.—the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay Combination. In October, 1918, he resigned his position to become Comptroller of Fox Film Corporation.

In Favor of Fewer "Anniversary Week" Drives

At a special meeting of the Distributors' Division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, held Thursday last at the Hotel Claridge, New York City, it was the unanimous opinion of those present that anniversary weeks have not proven commercially profitable, and that fewer such special drives for business would be made in future. Percy L. Waters, Chairman of the Division, presided at the meeting.

A letter was read from Frank E. Hickey, secretary of the Denver Film Exchange Managers' Association, addressed to the association. Mr. Hickey wrote it was the sentiment of his organization that anniversary weeks, which has been so extensively celebrated by many distributors recently, disrupt bookings to a large extent without bringing in compensating benefit, and that they cause great expense for telegrams, long distance telephone calls and other things, with no great returns. The distributors' division declared that Mr. Hickey has voiced the general opinion about the failure of anniversary weeks very well. No concerted action to drop them is likely to be taken. They will simply be discontinued.

The meeting also voted not to accept the suggestion in a letter from Floyd Brown, manager of the Associated First National offices in Indianapolis, that the industry employ one or more special inspectors to see whether or not all machines are in a fit condition to display films. Chairman Waters led the discussion against accepting this suggestion. It was the unanimous opinion the association had better not take action.

Wampa's Frolic Prove a Gala Affair on Coas

The film industry and friends t the number of more than three tho and attended the first big social event ven by the Western Motion Picture A er- tisers (nicknamed Wampas), know as the Wampas Frolic at Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, on the evening of March 15th.

Ray Leek, former president of the so- ciation, was chairman of the various om- mittees in charge of the preparations nd to him and his co-workers must be ven credit for a very successful event. Harry Wilson introduced Fred Niblo as m ter of ceremonies and he, in his usual od form, introduced a number of highly en- tertaining acts between dances.

Included in the entertainment feat es was the introduction of the thirteen by stars selected by members of Wampa as the coming stars of the screen. Ja cie Coogan gave a tomboy dance; Wa ce Reid a saxophone solo; Jacqueline Lo an imitated a Follies dance; Maryan ye sang "Mammy"; Lena Baskette di a solo dance number; Bull Montana, th the aid of Pete Smith, impersonated n y celebrities of screen, stage and history id ballets from all local dancing schools ol- lowed in delightful numbers. L ry Semon and Lucile Carlisle, Bebe Dan ls, Wanda Hawley, Ruth Roland were on e program for individual numbers.

The mammoth dining room was on- verted into a studio stage, the walls b g decorated with various signs, sets id props to be seen in the studio, and e entire space lighted by sunlight arcs id Winfield-Kerner lamps, making poss le motion photography during the en e evening. At midnight the baby stars d many other girls of the screen bec e news butchers, selling the first and c y issue of the Midnight Wampas, a sixte n- page satire on press agentry in which ll members of the association were c n- tributors.

South Carolina Neglect. Hostile Legislation

The General Assembly of South Ca- lina adjourned sine die at two o'clock S n- day afternoon, March 13, without en ing into law any of the proposed legis tion adverse to the motion picture indus Four bills aimed at the industry h been introduced. A censorship bill, p viding for a state board, a seating capac tax and a film tax which would h amounted to $75,000 per annum died the Senate calendar. Film tax providin levy of $83,200 per annum, passed House and was killed in the Senate. luxury sales tax providing a levy of $12 000 per annum passed the House and w killed in the Senate by a vote of thirty ten. An occupational license tax amou ing to about $15,000 per annum for t state at large passed the House and Se ate, but failed of ratification.

How One Exhibitor Replied to Villifiers

WHEN it comes to protecting the name of the industry of which he is a part, A. L. Middleton, proprietor of the Grand ea e, DeQueen, Ark., is a man of action. The sc pulous and unwarranted attacks by yellow w papers on the motion picture business which ev out of the William D. Taylor murder in ol wood aggravated him so much that he ok his pen in hand and wielded it in vitrolic sh n.

T result was a broadside that is a classic gic and common sense. Although his u is a small one—being situated in a town 00—Middleton was big enough as a show- r to get to considerable expense to dis- b e his message, which was printed on news- p stock, 22 x 16 inches.

A copy of the broadside was sent to Asso- t First National Pictures, Inc., which points as an example of excellent judgment, and the exhibitor can do to counteract the of the slanderers of the motion picture try.

A two column editorial, written by Mr. leton, leads off the sheet. It is headed:

uppose it turns out that a banker murdered am D. Taylor, the famous motion picture tor—would that fact cast a reflection on ntire banking industry?

uppose it turns out that a lawyer murdered Shall we ever hold all lawyers in our s as an immoral set, seeking whom they destroy, looking for feminine prey, etc., hen what if a motion picture star did it?"

ie next two columns are devoted to a re- of newspaper attacks on the business, and instances of newspapers resenting the slurs heir colleagues. Columns five and six are pied by an editorial, reprinted from the ago Herald and Examiner, denouncing the iers of the screen, and by a reprint of a originally published in the Moving Picture ld, under the title: "In Hollywood the Pop- Blow" and cleverly satirizing the scandal- gers. Mr. Middleton's peppy editorial fol- :

Oh! THE RIDICULOUSNESS! of that spaper stuff written for a scandal loving ic, who are ready to accept as a fact the est imaginations of a paid writer for two al purposes. To sell papers and to force motion picture industry to buy advertising e in which to deny allegations.

The motion pictures have lived, improved gained in popularity all the days of their g lives against all kinds of propaganda ist them without ever buying newspaper e to fight back, but the big news syndicates letermined to make the industry buy space which to protect its good name and that ie people engaged in it.

The Los Angeles police, detectives and Dis- Attorney's office have repeatedy announced the Taylor murder is apparently an im- trable mystery, yet the newspapers would us believe it is easy. Why not appoint guy out there, who writes so well, a special tive to bring the guilty party into court. not have him also bring all the actresses actors about whom he writes so knowingly into court to answer for the wild, demoralizing parties, etc., he accuses them of.

"Dear reader, did you ever stop to think that there are probably as many actresses, actors, directors and producers and others connected directly with motion picture production in the state of California as there are lawyers or preachers or doctors in the United States or as there are people in the cities of Little Rock, Fort Smith and Texarkana combined? When this fact is considered the wonder is that only two big sensational scandals have come to light in the motion picture business in ten years, while we read almost daily of such things happening in Little Rock, Fort Smith or Texarkana, or of some preacher, doctor or lawyer in the United States being murdered or getting mixed up in some big scandal, and the newspapers usually print the news items and carry the facts as they are unraveled for a few days and we hear no more about it.

"They do not try to lead the public to believe all the people in Little Rock are immoral, wild characters simply because some particular person was murdered, and although a preacher, doctor, lawyer or banker is accused of a scandlous act the public does not hold the entire profession to account, neither do the news syndicates ask the public to believe rot.

"But when something happens to one of the hundreds of thousands of motion picture people what do they say and why? You know well enough what they say. You have been reading it daily in the papers. But why? Here is why:

"If you go to a court room when a person without any title or reputation—good or bad—is being tried for some minor offense you can always get a seat. But if some big, scandalous, sensational affair is before the court you are lucky if you get standing room in hearing of the witnesses.

"If you go to hear a minister preach who has announced a Bible subject and has a reputation for preaching the simple Bible truths you see empty pews, but if some big, sensational subject is announced you will probably not be able to get a seat unless you go early.

"The newspaper that publishes in ghastly detail on its front page all the wild, scandalous imaginations a high salaried writer can dope out about the murder of a man or woman that everybody knows, and paints a glowing picture of everybody in the same profession and tries by hook or crook to connect this widely known and popular person and that widely known person—that paper will sell by the thousand on the streets of every city and hamlet in the United States, while the little newsboy with a bundle of clean, wholesome newspapers under his arm with no big murder mystery or motion picture scandal to cry out about, will go home tired and hungry with papers unsold. The next day he will probably go around to the office of the scandal sheet and apply for a job selling papers the people want to buy.

"If the Grand theatre should announce motion pictures on to-days program of some big sensational scandal, showing all the parties, thereto and everything a fiction writer could sandwich in for good measure, the house would not hold the people and hundreds of people who talk against pictures and picture people would take chances of getting a leg broke in the wild rush for seats. But pictures do not deal in this class of subjects.

"For proof, consider the Clara Smith-Hamon scandal of a few months ago. After the trial, with its widespread publicity, a gentleman announced the formation of a company to make a picture featuring Clara Smith Hamon and purporting to show her life's history on the screen. The National Organization of Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, through their president, Mr. Sidney Cohen, of New York City, advised this company that there would be no market for this picture as we would not show it on our screens. But they thought we were joking—that we would not turn down the opportunity to play up this ghastly affair and cash in on it at our theatres. They made the picture entitled, 'Fate,' a big sensational affair in eight reels. When it was released and advertised to be shown on certain dates by exhibitors (picture show managers who did not belong to the organization of theatre owners), the organized exhibitors went directly to town councils, county officials, chambers of commerce, ladies' clubs, etc. and caused the showing to be prohibited or stirred up so much sentiment against the manager who was trying to make his money by playing on the curiosity of a sensation-loving public, that the picture failed to draw.

"There are thousands of people in the motion picture industry who are as clean and pure as any person in any other profession. There are some who are not, but when one is found out he or she is lopped off.

"Practically all important producers of motion pictures today have a clause in their contracts with stars and players to the effect that should they by their acts or conduct bring disgrace, scandal or shame on themselves and the industry, the contract shall end at once and said star shall be responsible to and reimburse the producers, etc. Yet you hear some people who 'know' everything about any subject you mention say, 'that girl can't get a job with a motion picture producer unless she signs away her virtue, her honor and everything.' We believe more people are for unjust accusation and criticism of their fellow men and women and girls than will ever go to heaven for reforming them through the medium of the sensational press and street gossip and slander. Anyhow, the news syndicate have two very good reasons for playing up the sensational side of such things as the Taylor murder. First, it sells papers and helps the newsboys to make a living. Second, they force the industry to present their side of reasoning in paid advertising space, and this keeps the force at work and drawing pay to support families. So here we leave you, kind reader, with your condemnation or your praise, but beg of you to be just, in your judgment be reasonable, be considerate. The motion picture industry has offered the guy (we understand) who wrote so knowingly about a certain moonlight party in the newspapers February 9, a hundred thousand dollars to prove it. Watch the papers. See if he can prove it.

"This message has been rolling over and over in the mind of ye scribe until we just had to write it.

Proprietor Grand theatre, De Queen, Ark."

Will Hays Formally Welcomed

ability as an organizer and outlined the task that confronts him in his capacity as head of America's producers and distributors. Mr. Hearst said:

"Speaking as a motion picture producer and as a Democrat, like my friend Mayor Hylan, I am glad to see the Honorable Will H. Hays taken out of the Republican party and put in as manager of motion pictures. I have seen that gentleman at work and I know how efficient, how painfully efficient, he is.

"I was in Chicago and I saw him take a down and out party—I will mention no names—and brace it up and get it a brand new, hand-me-down, ready-made, ready-to-wear set of principles and get it the best job in the country.

"Now, my friends, it seems to me that successfully managing a big industry is not so different from managing a big party. All he has to do for us is to bring us together, brace up us, get us a good set of principles, high ideals and a proper regard for the requirements of the public and then lead us to equal success.

"Most of the criticism of the moving-picture industry has been due to prejudice, the prejudice that always awaits something new. And while the moving-picture industry is well known to us, it is still something new to a great many people. You all remember how automobiles were subjected to criticism when they first came into general use, how much mud was flung, figuratively and literally, and how little boys stood on the corner and shouted, 'Get a horse!'

"But the man who now is opposed to automobiles is the man who hasn't got one. And back of all criticisms is a little of that natural human envy.

"There is that same kind of envy, too, toward motion pictures. When a man who is a brilliant actor, writer or director commands a salary of thousands of dollars a week, which it has taken him a lifetime to achieve, it is only natural that he should be subjected to envy.

"But I do not see why anybody should envy the motion picture producer. (Laughter.) They do not make any money. I have been in it for five years and all the money that I have been able to make out of newspapers I have sunk in motion pictures. I feel like the racing man who was asked if there was any money in horse racing and who replied: 'Sure all my money.' When anybody asks me if there is any money in motion pictures, I say: 'You bet your life! All mine!'

"I have a pretty wide acquaintance among motion picture producers, and I have noticed that there are quite a number of others who have made what you might call 'an artistic success.'

"Now, my friends, I don't think that Mr. Hays can prevent that. I don't think that he can prevent extravagance in matters of that kind, but I do think that he can put the industry as a whole on a sounder basis. He can unite, he can inspire, he can give us cohesion and he can give us strength, confidence in our leader, confidence in ourselves, and confidence in the greatness and worthiness and public service of our enterprise.

"And for that reason, ladies and gentlemen, and for reasons of good fellowship, too, I welcome Mr. Hays to the position he will occupy."

Mayor Hylan's speech was halted several times by the applause of the diners. He spoke very highly of the co-operation given him by the motion picture interests of the city since his advent into office. The other speakers included Arthur Brisbane, Albert D. Lasker, Secretary of Labor Davis, Hugh Frayne of the A. F. of L., Peter J. Brady, Adolph Zukor and John Emerson.

George L. Sargent, chairman of the executive committee, was the recipient of a host of congratulations from members of the M. P. D. A. for the overwhelming success of the entire affair. Dancing followed the dinner and speechmaking and the merrymaking continued until about 4 a. m. Friday. The committees in charge of the function follow:

Executive Committee: George L. Sargent, chairman; Ashley Miller and John W. Noble.

Reception Committee: Augustus Thomas, chairman; Charles J. Brabin, James Vincent, George B. Seitz, Travers Vale.

Entertainment Committee: Kenneth Webb, chairman; John Emerson, Charles Giblyn.

Finance Committee: C. Jay Williams, chairman; E. M. Simpson, George Irving.

Floor Committee: Robert C. Vignola, chairman; William F. Haddock, Tom Terriss, Harry Millarde, Del Henderson.

General Representatives: David R. Hochreich, Montgomery Moses.

South Carolina Exhibitors Perfect Organization

The recently organized South Carolina Theatre Association held a successful meeting at the Jefferson Hotel, Columbia, S. C., Sunday, March 12th, at which time their organization was completed, by-laws adopted and an executive committee elected.

The executive committee, under the by-laws, is charged with all governing and administrative authority. The officers are as follows: L. T. Lester, president: Max Bryant, first vice-president; T. L. Little, second vice-president; E. C. Haselden, treasurer; H. Wells, A. C. Cowles, J. M. O'Dowd and C. W. Irvin.

A Grievance Committee, to handle differences between South Carolina exhibitors and exchanges was appointed. A budget and a method of assessment was adopted providing an annual income of from $5,000.00 to $7,000.00.

Washington Exchange Housing Problem Settled

Through the efforts of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, the exchange housing situation in Washington, D. C., has been settled satisfactorily to the companies involved.

The Washington authorities some time ago served notice upon all film exchanges in the District of Columbia to the effect that on or before March 3rd they must comply with all existing safety regulations in the buildings which they occupied or must file acceptable plans for new buildings prior to that date.

On March 2nd the Washington exchanges of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, Universal Film Mfg. Company, Vitagraph, Inc., and Fox Film Corporation filed plans for new buildings with the authorities. On the following day, however, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia decided to throw the matter into court. The case was adjourned until Thursday, March 16th.

In the meantime, conferences were held between the authorities and Jack S. Connolly of the National Association's Washington Bureau, with the result that when the court case was called on Thursday, the Commissioners announced that the plans filed by the four film companies named above had been approved. The court proceedings were suspended indefinitely.

Work on the new buildings for these four companies will begin on Monday, March 20th. Each of the companies will have a separate exchange building.

Mansfield, O., Is Threatened with Sunday Closing

Word has just come from Mansfield, Ohio, that the Sunday closing epidemic has broken out there in a very virulent form. In fact, the disease is making such rapid strides that it looks very much as if there was no hope for the patient—the patient being the motion picture theatre.

This is what happened. Mansfield has seven motion picture theatres. They have been playing good, clean pictures. The managers of the houses have always co-operated with the churches and civic associations by turning over the houses to them whenever requested. The one of the exhibitors ran the Carpentier-Dempsey fight pictures on a Sunday. This acted like a stick of dynamite. Immediately all the churches and clubs blew up. They demanded that the Mayor of the city close the theatres on Sunday. The Mayor is reported as being favorable to the movies. He took no action. The next move on the part of the reformers was to circulate a petition. It is said that the petition is getting thousands of readers signers. If there are enough signers on the petition, the Mayor will have to stand by the majority and close Mansfield picture shows on Sunday.

aramount Celebration Stimulates Revival

Anniversary Month Advertising and Publicity Drive Helps Business Everywhere

HE widespread effect of Paramount Anniversary Month is being reflected by reports of a general ial of business in the motion picture res throughout the country, according statement from the Paramount office. stics show, according to the state- , that the gross revenue of theatres March will exceed that of any other h in nearly a year.

e heavy expenditure by Paramount ts anniversary month in advertising tly to the public, together with the istive publicity campaign carried to re patrons in every corner of the d States, has had much to do with ing about this general improvement. is the Paramount claim, and figures ffered in substantiation.

e total expenditure in advertising tly to the public, for the direct benefit xhibitors, during and immediately ding the present month, approxi- s $133,000, divided as follows: Satur- Evening Post, three pages, $21,000; fan magazines, $5,000; newspaper advertising in over 900 leading newspapers, $90,000; free accessories, $17,000. This is said to be by far the largest amount of money ever expended in direct-to-the-public advertising in a similar period by the company, and consequently by any company in the industry.

Supplementing this advertising was the most complete campaign of publicity which Paramount ever attempted. Articles dealing with the history and progress of the feature picture, from the time of the organization of Famous Players with its adoption of the multiple-reel feature as its fixed policy to the present, were judiciously placed in magazines and newspapers, starting many weeks ago, with the result that a wide popular interest was awakened and thousands who had temporarily deserted the theatres were won back to the movies.

The chief feature of this publicity campaign was the inauguration in many cities of what was termed "Go to the Movies" Month. This idea was tried out by the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, which made a big success of the movement in that city. The newspaper offered liberal co-operation to the exhibitors and they returned in kind. A series of full-page advertisements was run in the newspaper, urging people to go to the picture theatres, and the result was that the picture business in St. Louis was placed once more firmly upon its feet.

These admirable advertisements were secured by Paramount from the Post-Dispatch and arrangements were made to run them in many other leading papers throughout the country. The complete co-operation of these papers was easily secured, and articles by prominent local people, including chamber of commerce heads, presidents of boards of education, clergymen and others, were published. The result in every instance was a duplication of the St. Louis success, all exhibitors in the territory profiting by it.

rnest Shipman to Make Picture in Canada

Signs Contract with Sault Ste. Marie Company for Production of "The Rapids"

NEW motion picture company, to be known as Sault Ste. Marie Films, Limited, has been formed to uce under the direction of Mr. Ernest man a motion picture production l on Alan Sullivan's novel, "The ds," which deals with the career of F. H. Clergue and the establishment ie steel and paper industries in Sault Marie, Canada.

ie directors of the new concern are W. C. Franz, president of the Algo- Steel Corporation, Mr. P. B. Wilson, president of the Spanish River Pulp aper Mills, Limited. Col. C. H. L. s, manager of the Spanish River Pulp aper Mills, Limited, Mr. J. D. Jones, ral manager of the Algoma Steel Cor- tion, James Lyons, president of the rd of Trade, George A. Montgomery, president and general manager of the oma Central & Hudson Bay Railway, . Hussey, vice-president of the Board rade and G. W. Goodwin, crown at- ey.

r. Shipman in a statement recently is- declared that a local advisory board in process of formation, with Mayor son and other prominent men and ien of Sault Ste. Marie, Canada, with ew to obtaining cooperative action and best community thought in screening e Rapids" or any other pictures which it be produced locally afterwards.

aith Green, well known as a scenario er, who prepared the adaptions of the Ralph Conner novels, is now in Sault, gathering local color and picking up incidents that will help to make the picture even greater than the novel. Kenneth O'Hara, who is continuity director (the outliner of scenes to be photographed) for the Ralph Connor pictures and for the F. Marion Crawford pictures which are being produced in Italy for Mr. Shipman, will be placed in charge of the preparation of the continuity for "The Rapids." In four years working under Thomas H. Ince, the noted American producer Mr. O'Hara, gained the distinction of being perhaps the best in the matter of putting the direction of a story on paper. Both the adaptation and the scenario will receive numerous O.K.'s before being finally adopted in order to guard against mistake, Mr. Shipman said.

Mr. Shipman arrived this week in New York in order to get the advance publicity campaign under way, and to assemble the cast and select the technical force for the production of the picture. The company will arrive in the Sault in the latter part of May or early in June, depending on weather conditions, and will spend from eight to twelve weeks working here. Mr. Shipman, who will have several pictures in course of production in various parts of the country this summer, will be in Canada for a part of the time while the filming of "The Rapids" is in progress.

Mr. Shipman said the intention was with local cooperation, to employ all factors that will give color to the makeup of the drama, such as lumber men, steel workers, paper workers, miners and so on, and to utilize local scenery, including the beautiful district of the Agawa canyon.

Pupils Are Taught History Via Theatre Screen

A novel but highly instructive innovation was introduced by R. F. Woodhull of the Baker theatre, Dover N. J., at his third Public Service theatre-school-room matinee on Friday, March 17th. Through the courtesy of Dr. Francis Holley, Director of the Bureau of Commercial Economics, Washington, D. C., a four-reel subject dealing with the Protectorate of Morocco, was secured. It depicted the organization of the tribes of Morocco after the war, before which they were hostile to one another and all spoke different languages. The titles and sub-titles are still in French.

Dr. Holley forwarded the films about two weeks before play date and the French teacher of the school translated the reading matter to English. On the afternoon of the affair, two young ladies of the High School, located on either side of the screen, read the titles to the children, much to their delight and edification. Over 1,100 pupils were present in charge of the Superintendent of the Dover Schools and teachers.

Bill Increasing Powers of Censor Board Is Passed by New York Legislature

OF the six bills introduced in the New York State Legislature this year, and directly relating to some phase of the motion picture industry, only one survived during the closing session last Friday. The Lusk-Clayton bill introduced and sponsored by Senator Clayton R. Lusk, majority leader in the Upper House, and by Assemblyman Walter F. Clayton, introducer a year ago of the motion picture censorship bill, passed both houses and is now in the hands of the Governor, where it will be signed within the next thirty days. This bill confers additional powers on the New York State Motion Picture Commission, enabling it to subpoena witnesses and require the production of books and records in court actions. It also clarifies to some extent the situation which has existed since August 1 relative to the licensing of educational films.

An effort on the part of Assemblyman Louis Cuvillier to bring from the rules committee the Walker-Cuvillier bill, calling for a repeal of the law creating the motion picture commission, failed during the closing hours. By a party vote it was decided in the Assembly that the bill should remain in committee, where it died an uneventful death Friday night of last week, along with hundreds of other bills.

The McKee operators' bill, introduced in the Senate by Senator Gibbs, and which at one time appeared to have a fair chance of passage despite opposition on the part of the motion picture theatre owners of New York State, died in Senate committee. The Yacenda bill, which was practically the same bill, introduced in the Assembly, and bearing the name of its introducer, failed to get further than an Assembly committee.

The bill introduced by C. T. Male of Schenectady, and which sought to prohibit any theatre owner from showing a picture of a political candidate on a screen without preceding it by an announcement that it was in the nature of a political advertisement, also passed away without comment in the Assembly.

The Hausner "Blue Sunday" bill, forbidding, as it did, the showing of motion pictures on Sunday throughout New York State, found little to recommend it to either Republican or Democratic members of the Legislature. Introduced in the Assembly, and referred to one of the committees, it was never reported out, nothing being heard of it during the closing of the session.

In signing the appropriation bill for next year, and which becomes effective July 1, the Motion Picture Commission is enabled to add to its staff by additional inspectors. None of these will be put on, however, before July. These positions will pay a salary of $2,500 a year, in addition to expenses.

Recent Incorporations in New York State

Including the Film Storage and Forwarding Corporation, capitalized at $50,000, nine companies incorporated in the motion picture business in New York State during the past week, the aggregate capitalization reaching $416,500. The incorporators of this company were all residents of New York City, and include J. B. Livingston, F. H. Gradt and I. S. Goodridge. Other companies filing papers in the secretary of state's office during the week, were:

Park Music Hall, Inc., $10,000, A. A. Fleischer, Juanita Lichtenburg, M. W. Minsky, New York; Ott Sales Company, $10,000, Katherine Ott, Rudolph Mieling, New York City; J. J. Bott, Jersey City; Star Serial Corporation, $20,000, H. G. Kosch, Mildred Gerst, Anna Thompson, New York; Ara-Bee Film Exchange, $5,000, Charles T. Reilly, Amelia Decker, New York; Adelaide French, Paterson, N. J.; Bramson Co., $5,000, N. M. and Paul Abramson, L. C. Schultz, New York; Simicoeve Corporation, $500, C. D. Coburn, S. K. Evans, J. B. Smiley, New York; Green-Bell Amusement Corporation, $20,000, A. J. Halprin, P. J. Rasser, Elsie Gabay, New York; The Glorious Adventure, $1,000. M. L. Malevinsky, A. R. Walsh, Edward C. Raftery, New York

Charles Rogers Resigns to Develop N. Y. District

CHARLES R. ROGERS has resigned as General Manager of Distribution of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation for the purpose of devoting his entire attention to the development of the R-C business in the Metropolitan District, which embraces Greater New York, Northern New Jersey, and New York State as far west as Utica. Mr. Rogers is financially interested in the development of this area for R-C Pictures Corporation, and he plans, according to his own statement, to make the R-C Exchanges in this district "positively the largest in the world for volume of business." Mr. Rogers' resignation followed the effecting of a special arrangement with the R-C Pictures Corporation with reference to the Metropolitan District franchise of that company. He shall continue to serve in an advisory capacity regarding the general sales policy of the R-C Distributing Corporation.

Exhibitor of Augusta, Ga., Dies in Theatre Fire

James A. Tant, aged sixty, who, for twenty-five years, has been an active member of the amusement circles of Augusta, Ga., with his wife, was burned to death in a fire which gutted the Grand theatre, March 18th, at 3 a. m. The victims lived on the third floor of the Grand and were suffocated before help could reach them.

Mr. Tant, for twenty-five years, was stage manager of the Grand Opera House, a landmark of Augusta. In 1919 the Grand was taken over by the Lynch Enterprises, of Atlanta, and operated by them for a year. Following the completion of the Imperial theatre, located at a more favorable spot, the Grand was closed, and Mr. Tant given charge of the Imperial, as house manager, under Frank Miller, director for Southern Enterprises in Augusta.

Mrs. Tant was forty-five, and both she and her husband were tremendously popular with all who knew them. They are survived by one son, Richard Tant, who is in the motion picture business, with interests both in Newark, N. J., and Brooklyn, N. Y.

Pen Sketches

Harry T. Dixon

SALESMAN, exhibitor, branch manager, actor. That's the span Harry T. Dixon has covered in the show business. Harry is perhaps the best known salesman in western New York. He is now looking after the city business for the Buffalo Vitagraph exchange. He started in the "show game" back in 1906, gracing the vaudeville stage for a period of seven years. He later opened the Dixon & Sinden vaudeville agency. He has been manager of several Buffalo theatres, including the Rivoli, Central Park and Star. A few years ago he was manager of a Buffalo state right exchange and is now hanging up new sales records at Vitagraph. He has booked "The Shiek's Wife," to about 500 houses to date. As evidence of his prosperity he drives about town in a big touring car. Of late he has spent so much time counting up the figures for the week's sales, that he has had to be equipped with spectacles.

E. R. Rushing, formerly of the local Famous Players-Lasky sales organization, has joined the staff of the Des Moines branch of Universal Film Exchanges, Inc. Mr. Rushing has a large number of warm friends in the southern half of Iowa and will no doubt meet with a hearty reception in his new field of endeavor. Mr. Rushing replaces Mr. W. A. Swain, resigned.

H. M. Berman, general manager of exchanges of the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., has instructed the local manager, Edgar B. Haines, to procuse an expert publicity manager to assist Universal exhibitors in exploiting "Foolish Wives" and such other jewels and features as they may desire this service on. It is expected that Mr. Haines will be able to announce the name of this new staff member in the near future.

Mr. W. K. Lendon, traveling auditor of the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., has arrived at the local office for an indefinite visit. Mr. Lendon is a congenial chap, filled with modern ideas of efficient exchange management, and it is believed that his visit will be of great value to the local staff.

Mr. Haines, manager of the Des Moines branch of Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., has planned to leave the office this week for a visit to Iowa City, Waterloo, Fort Dodge and Boone, where he will screen Universal's latest Jewel productions, including "Wild Honey," featuring Priscilla Dean, and "Man to Man," featuring Harry Carey.

Cleveland

Charles E. Perry, local Select exchange manager, was appointed president of the newly formed F. I. L. M. of Cleveland at a meeting last Friday. W. J. Kimes, temporary president, was elected vice president. Other officers of the organization are Tom Colby, Universal manager, secretary; Percy Block, Paramount manager, treasurer; managers of the other national exchanges were named as members of the executive committee.

C. E. (Doc) Holah, manager of the Wid Gunning outfit here in Cleveland, was out in the territory making the rounds among the exhibitors this week. Holah reports that business is picking up. Exhibitors have expressed themselves to Holah that it is the general opinion that the industry has seen its worst days, and that as soon as Lent is over things will be on the road to normalcy again.

A. E. Ptak, manager of the Lyceum Theatre, Cleveland, is another optimistic exhibitor who says business is improving. "Our Sundays are as good as they ever were," Ptak said the other day. Of course, during the week we are not rushed. But the big point is that our Sundays are good, indicating that the public is NOT tired of motion pictures, as many have said. They are still true to the silent drama. They come once a week even though they haven't the money to come several times a week as they used to do. "However, so long as the movies are still close to the hearts of the public, there is no immediate cause for the members of the industry to worry."

Maurice Lebensberger, manager of the Standard Film Service, Cleveland, announced, with a great deal of satisfaction, that Federated Films have purchased "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight" for Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky and Western Pennsylvania. Federated releases through the Standard Film, so that's the whyfore of the smile that Lebensburger wears.

Frank L. Greenwald and George W. Wilson, both well known film men throughout the state, have taken over the distribution of the National Exchange releases for northern Ohio. The exchange will be known as the Buckeye National Exchange, Inc., located at 514 Cleveland Film Exchange Bldg. Greenwald has been an independent exchange manager in Cleveland for many years. Wilson, who has been in the film business for ten years, came to Cleveland a little over a year ago as district manager for Reelcraft Pictures, Inc.

Plans have been completed for a $60,000 motion picture theatre in Madisonville, O. The house, which is to be started at once, will be on the site of the present Colonial Theatre, 6001 Madison road.

The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitor's League held its monthly meeting last Tuesday and centered its discussion on the subject and method of joining forces with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association of Ohio.

The two alternatives were presented to the members of the local. One was to join the M. P. T. O. A. as a body. The other was to join the state organization individually. The opinion of those present was divided. The discussion was finally brought to a close by the motion of one of the members that a committee of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitor's League be appointed to meet a committee of the M. P. T. O. A., of Ohio, for the purpose of devising satisfactory means of an amalgamation. Following the passage of this motion, local president Henry H. Lustig appointed M. P. Brown, M. B. Horwitz, Ben Levine, W. J. Slim with himself as member ex officio, to meet the M. P. T. O. A. committee.

The Cleveland F. I. L. M. Club has invited all local exchange managers to join their organization. This includes managers of independent exchanges, as well as those belonging to a chain system of exchanges. It is the intention of the local F. I. L. M. to give the distributors all films equal representation in the organization and a voice in its operation.

Buffalo

TWO exchanges have been added to Buffalo's Film Row. E. A. Kuper, secretary of the Great Lakes Film Corporation, has arrived in town. He has his temporary quarters in the Pioneer building, 145 Franklin street. Mr. Kuper has already closed "Sherlock Holmes" with Shea's Hippodrome and "The Wakefield Case" with the new Lafayette Square. A number of subsequent runs have also been closed. The other exchange is the American Releasing Company, of which Paul J. Richrath will be local manager. Mr. Richrath is temporarily located in the W. W. Hodkinson office, 145 Franklin street.

There will be a general shifting of exchanges in Buffalo between April 1 and May 1. The new exchange building in North Pearl street is almost ready for occupancy. First National is expected to move in April 1. Nu-Art Pictures and Pathe will soon follow as well as many others. The Grand & Warner building will be ready May 1. It will be at 265 Franklin. To date Grand & Warner and United Artists have engaged space in this structure. Merit will soon be looking for new quarters, as Paramount wants to use the entire building. Realart recently vacated the second floor, which had been shared by N. I. Filkins and his office staff.

Walter Price has resigned as general sales manager for Niagara Pictures Corporation. Mr. Price was formerly with A. P. and Metro. T. J. Leonard has also left Niagara to accept a position with the Buffalo Merit exchange. A. J. Roth, formerly with Select in Cleveland, is a new member of the Niagara sales force. Mr. Price's successor has not as yet been named. Niagara is now distributing the Second National product in western New York.

Manager C. W. Anthony, of Vitagraph, has added two new men to the sales staff. They are L. B. Rozelle, formerly with Metro in Detroit, who is covering Rochester, and A. L. Ehrzott, who hails from New York and who is taking care of the Syracuse district. The well-known film man, Harry Dixon, is looking after the Buffalo city business.

W. L. Merrill, formerly with Select in Dallas and Omaha and who was division manager for Frank Hall on the Pacific coast, has arrived in Buffalo to take charge of the Wid Gunning, Inc., exchange in the Grand & Warner building, Pearl street. He succeeds George A. Faulkner, who resigned several weeks ago. Mr. Merrill is familiar with the Buffalo territory, having been connected with Paramount here several years ago.

Fred M. Zimmerman, president and general manager of Nu-Art Pictures Corporation, has closed "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" for presentation in the Proctor theatres in Troy, Schenectady and Amsterdam. Many exhibitors have been dropping in on John Kimberly, new executive manager of Nu-Art, to congratulate him on his new venture.

Thomas W. Brady, local W. A. Hodkinson sales manager, was a busy man last week, acting as publicity promoter for Mrs. Irene Castle, who was appearing in person at Shea's Hippodrome in connection with Hodkinson's "French Heels." Ward Crane, who has the leading male role in the picture, visited Buffalo also. Mr. Brady has closed "French Heels" with the Strand, Ithaca, Mrs. Castle's home town, and the Star, Rochester.

E. A. Eschman, general sales manager of Pathe, visited Branch Manager W. A. V. Mack last week and was very much pleased with the fine sales record being made by the Buffalo "wrecking crew." Mr. Mack put over a 100 per cent booking at the Gayety, which has added pictures to its policy. The feature, comedy and news were all Pathe products.

John Iris, district sales manager for Educational, was in Buffalo recently to confer with E. G. Dodds, who is in charge of the local office in the Nu-Art building, 221 Franklin street. Educational is doing a thriving business in the Queen City of the Lakes.

Clayton P. Sheehan, district manager for Fox, has returned from Gotham.

Allan S. Moritz, Paramount manager, "soup and fish" equal journeyed to New York to attend the dinner given in the Hotel Astor in honor of Will Hays, new high commissioner of the motion picture industry. Reports from New York say that Allan was one of the best looking men at the dinner, bar none. While Mr. Moritz was in New York the salesmen filled his desk with contracts on "The Mistress of the World."

C. W. Anthony, manager of the Vitagraph office, has closed "The Sheik's Wife" for first run in Buffalo at the new Lafayette Square commencing Monday, March 7. Mr. Anthony was in Syracuse last week to get acquainted with "the boys."

Sam E. Morris has written Leo Fox, local Select manager, of his appreciation of the fine co-operation given by the Buffalo staff. Word has arrived in town that Jack Woody has been appointed to succeed Mr. Morris as sales manager. Mr. Woody is well known in Buffalo, having visited here many times when with Realart.

Henry W. Kahn, Metro manager, visited officials at the home office in New York last week-end.

routes and California climate in certain cities of the North, South, East and West, where the soon-to-be tourists reside.

One of the things that pleased the judges in connection with the event was that no particular section of the country has a preponderance of honors. Another was that they were able to agree on the first ballot in making the awards in each class of theatres in which the contest had been divided.

Eddie Hyman over at the Brooklyn Mark Strand has stepped out of the First National fold for the time being and is playing "Foolish Wives" this week.

In connection with the event the first co-operative newspaper display campaign for the City across the Bridge has been put over. The selling work was done by Marc Lachman of Universal's new exploitation force assisted by the Strand publicity staff.

Howard E. Jameyson who has been selling patrons of Sam Harding's Liberty and Doric theatres, Kansas City with clever newspaper displays, quite some time, is pioneering a bit in his profession.

There comes to our desk a book called "The Idea" and captioned as a book of advertising aids prepared by an exhibitor for an exhibitor, of which Mr. Jameyson is the author.

"The Idea" is not a treatise on advertising but on the contrary bothers not at all with theory.

There are samples of ads, catch lines, cut-illustrations, selling talk and a lot of other practical material which the man who has to write copy week in and week out, can use when his own think tank runs dry and a catchy line or phrase is needed.

"The Idea" embodies most of the practical points of something that has been in our minds for a couple of years, but which has never reached the stage of actuality. Only we were going to borrow from that which the leading advertisers in the motion pictures of the country turn out, rather than try being original.

At a time when the newspapers are only appealed to—and this mostly by such men as W. J. Bryan, W. J. Anderson and others to stop their unrestrained jibes at prohibition, the Ohio Board of Censors lays down the following laws—unappeasable—for the picture-going population of that state:

To wit: there will be eliminated from all films:

Any drinking songs.
Any statement that beer is enjoyable.
Any suggestion that there are polite speakeasies.

Again, at a time when the enterprising citizen is borrowing money to pay his income tax and at the same time watching the spectacle of the United States Congress grinding out a bonus bill, the Board of Censors of Ohio declares that the motion picture in that state may not express:

Any suggestion that political appointments anywhere are not based on merit.
Any implied statement that politicians would support a candidate whom they did not think admirable.
Any reflection on the intelligence of an imaginary candidate for mayor.

Another elimination: any criticisms of modern manners and ideas.

Outstanding Features of This Week's Section

A nice "Peacock Alley" prologue is explained by the cut appearing at the top of page 1934 showing the number put on by the Daffin theatre, Tallahasse, Fla.

The exhibitors who will play "Wild Honey" will do well to cop the beehive idea used by A. J. Cobe as explained by the cut and story appearing on page 1936.

Tieing in with the local merchants is always worth while. The story on page 1937 explains the stunt which Roy Smart of the Noble theatre, Anniston, Ala., put over recently.

For a lobby display idea in connection with "The Silent Call" that which the Cambria theatre, Johnstown, Pa., used as told by cut and story on page 1938, is worth inspection.

"Saturday Night" is certainly an exploitation picture. Manager A. C. Cowles pulled some good lobby stunts on this feature. Read the story and look over the picture on page 1938 for details.

The Palace theatre, Dallas, Texas, used "Peacock Alley" as a fashion show attraction. A cut of lobby display and prologue are found on page 1939.

Kashin Stages Atmospheric Prologue on "Sailor-Made Man"

Alfred Rosenzweig, manager of the Elsmere Theater, the Bronx, arranged an interesting contest during the run there of "A Sailor-Made Man." He offered a prize of $10 to the contestant who should give the best impersonation of the popular comedian, and seven young women competed. They appeared at each showing of the picture and, dressed in sailor costumes and wearing horn-rimmed spectacles, sang and executed an appropriate horn-pipe dance. The prize award was determined by vote of the audience.

During the prologue the stage was arranged to represent the deck of an ocean steamship, with funnels, life-boats, life preservers, and the sea itself all in evidence. This realistic prologue was staged by Morris Kashin.

"Honor Your Mother" Party for "Mother o' Mine"

An "Honor Your Mother Party," costing less than ten dollars, was a most successful exploitation stunt which Capt. B. B. Osborn, manager of the New Liberty theatre, Cincinnati, put over during his engagement of "Mother o' Mine."

Announcement was also made that all mothers over seventy years old would be admitted free to any performance and Capt. Osborn reserved special seats for his guests of honor.

The principal of one of the local schools has a considerable reputation as a reader, so Mr. Osborn induced him to appear at the special performance and read Kipling's "Mother o' Mine."

Hares in Lobby Sell "March Hare" to Durham Fans

FOUR sets of Belgian hares, with from three to five rabbits in each litter, placed in the lobby of the Savoy theatre, Durham, N. C., went a long way in aiding Manager H. R. Kistler to put "The March Hare" over to a successful engagement.

These rabbits were in wire cages which were arranged in a most unusual manner in the lobby. On the cages were several "catchy" signs. For example one read, "These March hares are tame. You will see a wild one inside."

The title of this picture certainly tied up well with the month and the year, and there was no expense to this display as the rabbits were borrowed locally. Mr. Kistler claims that any thing alive in his lobby tends to attract the attention of the passers-by and usually brings them into the theatre.

Colorful "Peacock Alley" Prologue Presented by the Daffin

AS is illustrated by the accompanying cut, the Daffin theatre, Tallahasse, Fla., is responsible for a most elaborate atmospheric prologue number on "Peacock Alley."

The stage was set in purple velvet draperies with two panels, four by eight, containing oil paintings of a peacock done by the Art Department, Florida State College, on each side. In the center of the stage were two live peacocks of especially brilliant hue.

The front velvet curtains were tabbed, a spot light was thrown on the peacocks and a color wheel used. The stage was also illuminated with diffused lights during the picture presentation.

Special Showing to Newsies Part of "Thunderclap" Campaign

With the co-operation of a local newspaper, Managers McMahan and Jackson of the Lyric theatre, Cincinnati, successfully conducted a newsboys' special showing in connection with the exploitation of "Thunderclap."

Stories were carried in the news columns of the Times-Star for several days in advance of the Saturday morning special showing and gave implicit instructions to the news venders on how and where to receive their tickets. In the stories much publicity was devoted to the pictures and the theatre at which it was to be presented.

On the morning of the newsboys showing all who were entitled to see the picture free of charge assembled at the Newsboys' Club in the Times-Star Building and marched in a body to the theatre, carrying large banners telling of their destination. The boys marched in military formation, and the procession was the center of much curiosity as it wended its way through the principal thoroughfares of Cincinnati.

Tailors Help Snell Sell "Sailor Made Man"

Manager A. L. Snell made good use of a sign used by the tailors of Gadsden which read, "We turn out tailor made men." He arranged with the tailors that during the showing of "A Sailor Made Man" at the Ir[illegible] that they allow him to change these signs to read "We Turn Out Sailor Made Men. He also secured co-operative windows for displays with these tailors.

It certainly pays to have a friend who happens to be a recruiting officer of the navy and taking advantage of this friendship to get him to loan you an entire exhibit of photos, uniforms, and in fact everything that pertains to the navy which a local recruiting office could have on hand. A very attractive lobby display was made from this material, representing a warship and with the aid of government posters enhanced the value of this display considerably. The doorman and usherettes were dressed in the sailor outfits and paraded in front of the theatre during the showing of this picture.

On the second day of the showing one of the heaviest rain storms seen in some time in Gadsden and at 7:30 p. m., the time when people were naturally starting to the theatre the rain poured in torrents. This did not discourage Manager Snell, but he got busy with the telephone, calling his patrons and offering to run them to the theatre by autos if necessary.

Two splendid tie-ups were secured from local stores, advertising sailor hats. The first fifty children wearing sailor hats to the theatre were admitted free. Mr. Snell had the Boy Scouts of Gadsden dressed in sailor uniforms, who stood on the corners and did some wig-wag signal stunts, thus attracting the attention of all who passed by.

Lobby Decorations Feature "Hail the Woman" Run

A SPECIAL lobby display was one of the exploitation mediums used by Manager D. J. Shepherd of the Branford theatre, Newark, in connection with his engagement of "Hail the Woman."

For the marquee display cut-outs from the twenty-four sheets were used, one facing Broad Street and the other facing the opposite direction. Across the top above the outstretched hands of the figure of the woman in the layout were the words "Hail the Woman" in lights which were connected to a flasher, at the base of which two reflectors were used which made it stand out conspicuously at night.

ue Mouse Decorates Lobby for "Shame"

he lobby of the Blue Mouse was orately decorated with Chinese trimmings l specially designed Chinese lanterns. Sev- l of the lanterns were held in place by nboo sticks, and pieces of multi-colored silks re strewn about the lobby over Oriental icles including chairs, cushions, etc.

Billboards were used extensively in publiciz- the production, and an extensive newspaper npaign both preceded the engagement and ntinued during the run.

Nearly every downtown window in Seattle rried a large placard announcing the picture d the theatre at which it was shown.

triking Window Display Arranged for "Golden Snare"

Snow from sunny Dixie jazzed up the exitation on "The Golden Snare" when the cture played the Ellen Theatre, Bozeman, ont., and offered a striking illustration of at can be done in the way of artistic win- w tie ups. The snow scenes from the picre were reproduced by cotton snow that mes from below the Mason Dixon line. By e insertion of tiny trees, a log cabin, a dog m and a drop showing the snow covered ins and distant mountains a realistic north- n scene was portrayed.

planatory to the "Connecticut Yankee" llyhoo stunt put over by the Tremont Temple eatre, Boston, as explained by the accompanying story

Here Is a Brand New One with a Kick In It

ONE of the cleverest stunts put over for any picture is that which Manager Ogg of the Imperial theatre, South Pittsburg, Tenn., originated for his showing of "The Wild Goose."

After an advance campaign of more than one week, through heralds and slides run on the screen, Manager Ogg got his paint brush and a little white paint and proceeded to paint on the sidewalk in front of all the restaurants and eating places in town, "Don't miss the Wild Goose Today—It's Fine!" When the hungry crowds came in for dinner, the first thing that caught their eye was WILD GOOSE—today. This was tempting and caused most of the patrons of the restaurants to ask for "some of that WILD GOOSE."—The proprietor had been put wise to the ad and told the people that they could find "The Wild Goose" at the Imperial theatre.

Familiar "Connecticut Yankee" Ballyhoo Improved

An original and clever device was recently conceived by the management of the Tremont Temple, Boston, in conjunction with street exploitation of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court." It was a motor-sled which carried four "knights" through the streets and which was sufficiently odd in itself to be classed as a curiosity, and accordingly an attraction getter.

By taking the front wheel off a motorcycle and erecting a four runner sled around it, the sled body being attached to the vehicle by means of a rear wheel support (as shown in the accompanying cut) the unusual affair was ready for its publicity mission.

A "knight of the Court of King Arthur" acted as chauffeur and four other "knights" sat on the sled on a triumphant tour through Boston's thoroughfares. Each rider carried a canvas shield bearing the name of the picture and of the theatre.

Four other "knights" also were dispatched on motorcycles, which were decorated with unique boxes over the rear wheel. Signs on the boxes advanced various inducements to the reader to see the feature.

Advertises "Four Horsemen" from Aeroplane

Heralding "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" from the air, and idea conceived and carried out by Archie Miller, manager of the Grand theatre, Devils Lake, N. D., proved recently one of the most effective exploitation effects ever put forth in that part of the country.

Mr. Miller contracted for an aeroplane, and, with the pilot of the machine, circled his district, covering every town and settlement within a radius of fifty miles of Devil's Lake. Over each place the flier performed aerial acrobatics to attract attention from the ground, and then Mr. Miller, as the ship swooped lower over the roofs, dropped hundreds of heralds announcing the advent of "The Four Horsemen" to his theatre. A tremendous business was the consequence.

Walnut Theatre, Louisville, Uses Ballyhoo for "Silent Call"

For the exploitation on "The Silent Call," the Walnut theatre, Louisville, Ky., used a street ballyhoo of dogs. They may not have been huskies but the Artic atmosphere, supported by a man dressed in a fur coat was a novelty for sunbaked Louisville and it got a lot of attention by being a novelty for the city.

At the same time the theatre ran a drawing contest, making awards for the best sketches sent in by boys under 14 of Strongheart, the star of the picture. A panel of some of the contributions, which were reproduced by newspapers and attracted a lot of interest.

Kite Flying Contest as "Peck's Bad Boy" Exploitation

Manager Cowles of the Aex theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., never forgets the children. Several weeks ago he arranged a most interesting contest for "Peck's Bad Boy," giving away cash prizes.

Today we find him entertaining the "kiddies" again with what this department considers a most apropos contest.

March is here, and with it the March wind. Evidently Manager Cowles did not forget that he was once a boy and like all boys loved to fly kites. So a very unique kite-flying contest was arranged by Manager Cowles, with the assistance of the Kiwanis Club and held under the auspices of the boys' department of the Y. M. C. A. The kite-flying contest was held the day before the children's matinee at the Rex. Every boy or girl who entered held the afternoon before the picture went on at the theatre, was given a card. This card, when presented the next day by the boy or the girl bringing their kites with them, was admitted free to the children's matinee. The winner of the kite-flying contest was announced at the children's matinee. So much interest was aroused by this contest that Manager Cowles found a record attendance awaiting him the next morning when he opened the theatre.

It pays to keep up with the seasons of the year and the customs of boys and girls.

Bee Hives on Broadway Attract Great Attention

GETTING a window for a display advertising a motion picture, in the Times Square district, New York is not so easy but this is just what Manager A. J. Cobe of the Central theatre, has done in connection with his current attraction, "Wild Honey."

The window contained two bee-hives which are not clearly shown in the picture and the whole scene attracted a great crowd at all times.

Chambers Has New Angle to Home Talent Idea

Stanley Chambers, managing director of the Palace theatre, Wichita, Kansas, has adapted the home talent idea from a new angle.

Mr. Chambers by diplomacy and tact induced five local male pianists, including Mr. Flath of the Palace, and all heads of musical institutions, to appear on the Palace stage in a piano number.

The musicians selected a composition, rehearsed it together, and with five pianos on the stage played a quintet number.

The event was a great success, both from an artistic viewpoint and also in the exploitation value it possessed.

Oil Derricks Feature of "Fo's Paradise" Display

In constructing a lobby display on "Fool's Paradise," Richman Dorman, manager of the Plaza theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., erected two oil derricks, one on each side of the entrance to the theatre.

To make the display more realistic, a pumping station was constructed at the base of the derricks. The pumping station consisted of two wheels and a motor loaned by a local electric company, along with some salvaged lumber. The pumps were made to operate, in so doing they formed a cylindrical piece of metal up and down, thus it gave the effect of a real piston. Lights were placed on the derricks which added to their realism.

Directly behind the derricks was a picture similar to the one on the twenty-four sheet. This served as a background. A large sign read

"FOOL'S PARADISE OIL COMPANY

A local fire insurance company stimulated interest in the display by circulating the report and by signs, that they had written a policy insuring the equipment against loss by either fire or storm.

A man, supposedly a stock salesman, stood at the display and announced that he was selling shares in the new oil company and that they could be bought from him at 35 cents to 50 cents a share. Adding that shareholders would be given free admission to see "FOOL'S PARADISE."

Unusual Lobby Decorations iginated at Milwaukee Merrill

Manager Ralph A. Wettstein of Ascher's rrill theatre, Milwaukee, gave "Come On r," shown during the week in which falls St. arick's Day, one of the most unusual lobby plays in the history of that theatre and one t got the Irish and all other nationalities rested in the film.

Mr. Wettstein got a tie-up with a Milwau- Victrola shop which nearly cleaned it out Irish records. At one side of the window a phonograph with green ribbons leading m it to the Irish records displayed on the r of the show-window. Two-thirds of the dow space was occupied by a large sign, ked on either side by upright frames, each taining six "Come On Over" stills, one ve the other and an announcement sign. derneath the sign was a tall Irish hat with long-stemmed clay pipes crossed.

Here's a Great Small Town Stunt

ONE of the recent exploitation stunts put over by Roy Smart of the Noble theatre, Anniston, Ala., was a successful campaign to get the merchants to pay $2.50 for the privilege of giving away 200 tickets each, good any time during a local Trades Day.

In addition to the increased receipts for the day, there was other benefits equally as valuable received from this tie-up. It helped get certain people into the theatre which had never gone to the theatre before.

A tie-up was secured with the local telephone company who called up all of the rural subscribers, inviting them to town to the Noble theatre as guests of the telephone company. Also other firms advertised the fact that they would give their customers tickets to the Noble theatre on Trades Day.

Rialto of Columbus Builds Fine Lobby Display on "Peacock Alley

The Rialto theatre, Columbus, Ga., again stimulated business through a thorough campaign, which culminated in one of the most attractive lobby displays seen at the Rialto theatre, in some time.

Manager G. M. Phillips built a shadow box out of beaver board. In this box he placed a cut out of Mae Murray. A combination of striking colors only added to the optical drawing power of this front. Beautiful satin curtains, of a purple hue, were draped in front of this cut-out. Overhead were hung cut-out letters which read "Mae Murray in 'Peacock Alley." At the beginning and end of this title was a cut-out of Mae Murray, taken from the accessory twenty-four sheet.

Teaser slides were run a week in advance. 3,000 heralds were distributed in the homes of the residential sections of Columbus and in spite of the downpour of rain, during both the first and second day, this picture went over big.

Weld's Five Spot Lobby Decorations for First Nat'l Week

Paper, paper everywhere, but not a piece too much, aptly describes the lobby of the Strand theatre at Waterloo, Ia., during celebration of First National Week. Credit is due Manager Arthur E. Weld for fashioning a beautiful display that attracted wide attention out of material that cost less than a $5 bill.

Free accessories were furnished during the seven-day period by the First National exchange. A 24-sheet, a pair of scissors, some old compo board and a paste pot yielded a great display of First National stars who were placed in every nook and corner in the lobby. Free streamers showing the faces of the stars were glued to twine and festooned about the ceiling and walls. And there was enough left over to create dresses and caps for the quartet of usherettes.

Mr. Weld was playing Norma Talmadge in "Love's Redemption," and believed Norma was popular enough to hold her own without much attention to lobby. Therefore efforts were concentrated in letting the public know something about the other First National luminaries. Only a couple of paper palms from the prop room were used to add the southern atmosphere found in "Love's Redemption." The rest of the display was paper only.

TAKING the castle scenes in the picture as his cue, Manager Kennimer of the Imperial theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., in exploiting his showing of "Little Lord Fauntleroy," got his local artist busy and reproduced one of these scenes almost as real as the ancient castle itself. A large cut-out was placed on one side of this front, featuring Mary Pickford, as the little Lord—on the other side was a large cutout of the Dog.

A special performance was given to the children of the Orphans Home. This created a good feeling among the town people.

"Silent Call" Lobby Front Finds Favor with Johnstown Fans

There has been another flood in Johnstown, Pa., but this time it has a pleasanter tinge than the tragic catastrophe of nearly two decades ago. The 1922 flood was a flood of shekels at the box office of the Cambria Theatre when the house played "The Silent Call" due to the special attention given the lobby front, presentation and display advertising which proved a profitable investment.

The campaign hinged around Strongheart, the dog in the leading role.

Taking a cue from the story, Manager Bittner, decorated his lobby a week in advance of the opening in true north woods fashion. The exteriors of a log cabin were reproduced for the walls of the lobby and a huge fir tree was stationed as the guardian of the entrance. Frosted window panes and a snow background bore out the general impression.

For the stage setting a similar idea was reproduced except that the solitary figure of a timber wolf, perched upon a rocky ledge, howling for his mate, added a picturesque bit of realism.

The campaign around the theatre was supported by an unusually striking billboard display. The figure of a wolf dog running along at a lope constituted the only bit of printing on the poster with the exception of the title of the picture, "The Silent Call," in big letters underneath. Boldness of display and centralization upon one idea were the fundamentals that put this campaign over successfully.

Cowles Builds Miniature Coney as "Saturday Night" Display

The accompanying cut will show the miniature Coney Island which Manager A. C. Cowles of the Rex theatre, Spartanburg, S. C. recently devised as a lobby front on "Saturday Night."

The Ferris Wheel and "The Trip to the Clouds" were practicable, being operated by current from dry cell batteries, stored inside the small cloth tent which formed the background of the display.

Small electric lights were borrowed locally. The "Erecto" outfit from which the Coney Island contraptions were made were also borrowed from a local department store in exchange for a slide service the two days the picture was booked.

A black cloth was used in the rear of the entire display in order to provide a contrast and also to protect the small bulbs from the stronger glow of the regular lobby lights.

Strozier Pulls Some Stun on His New Job

FRANK STROZIER, who was f merly assistant to Manager e Sales Harrison of the Howard th tre, Atlanta, has recently taken charg of the Odeon theatre, Savannah, Ga.

One of his first stunts in his new b was a ballyhoo on "Dream Street" d a lobby display in keeping with the st y of the picture. He used Japanese l terns and furnishings throughout the t tire display. Oriental colors preva d throughout.

Another Chariot Used Fo "Queen of Sheba"

"Queen of Sheba" was the subject unique bit of exploitation during its run : th Regent theatre, Wichita, Kan. This in ldi tion to elaborate newspaper advertising, u o an extensive mailing list, and a chariot lly hoo for the street.

The chariot was constructed somewhat lif ferently from most chariots which have ee utilized in "Queen of Sheba" exploitatio It was made with the front wheels and t gon of an ordinary wagon as its foundatio un was painted in brilliant colors.

Then came the unique piece of the cam gn On a specially built platform in the lobl o the theatre was constructed a miniature a na resembling the mammoth arena in the pr uc tion. The whole thing was made of pe mache and wooden blocks, while the ch ots and their drivers were toy horses and lls Surrounding the arena loomed compara ely large mountains of white. The miniatur at tracted big crowds.

Check Stunt Used to Explo "Back Pay"

The familiar check stunt for "Back y has been used by Manager B. H. Green o Broadway theatre, Chelsea, Mass.

Mr. Green sent out a mimeographed let with a check for one cent inclosed with th nouncement that the picture would be p on certain dates and stating that the ch was either at the bank on which it was d or at the box office. The letter also ca some selling talk on the picture.

Palace's "Peacock Alley" Fashion Show

Elaborate Presentation Number Featured by Manager Willie of Dallas

WHEN the Palace theatre, Dallas' million dollar playhouse, presented "Peacock Alley," the management arranged with leading department store to present a spring shion promenade in connection with the fea- re showing.

The merchants took to the proposition with thusiasm and provided ten models in the test word in milady's toggery, and together exceptional prologue and display was worked , to the mutual advantage of both parties. runway was constructed through the center the theatre, extending from the stage about rty feet toward the rear of the house and the tire stage was decorated appropriately to give fitting background to the garments to be own.

Manager Raymond Willie had constructed a ecial back drop showing two conventional pea- cks in bright colors on a circular design of ight rainbow colors. Models came onto the age from both sides, mounted the runway om the left, waltzed their way to the end the turn and retraced their steps, exiting the right, as a new model came upon the age to hold the interest. Spotlights placed various parts of the theatre played upon e models from the moment they came upon the stage until they made their exit, and musical director Don Albert wrote a special musical score for the event, using various popular selections as his main theme.

The fashion show took forty minutes at each de luxe performance, and proved such a big success that it was extended until Friday night.

The local store sent out about twenty thousand announcements of the show, with invoices and also mentioned the event in its regular advertising. The theatre used modest space in advertising the event in the newspapers, but the promenade was its own best advertisement and after the first day was the talk of the town.

Miss Murray herself became interested in the promenade at the Palace and sent the original costume worn by her in the Parisiene dance scenes to add to the local display. The management advertised for special models to wear the garment, and after some difficulty obtained the services of a girl who not only was Miss Murray's exact counterpart, but who had considerable experience as a dancer, and made a decided hit by her manner of displaying the star's costume.

At the conclusion of the final promenade Friday evening, Miss Murray sent an order to a local florist which provided each with a large bouquet with the compliments of the actress.

One of the most attractive and artistic lobbies ever seen in Dallas was prepared for this presentation and a special eight sheet cut-out, prepared by Mr. John P. Bounds of the Palace art department, placed before the box office on the sidewalk edge proved one of the most productive pieces of lobby work the theatre has used.

"Molly O" National Tie-ups Helps Calgary Showing

The national tie ups arranged for "Molly O" were reflected in the extensive exploitation campaign conducted in connection with the showing of the picture at Allen's Palace theatre, Calgary, Alta.

"Molly O" silk crepe; "Molly O" records; "Molly O" tam o' shanters and "Molly O" shows filled the windows of the leading retail merchants before and during the picture's run.

The front of the Palace theatre was dressed up with a cutout of Mabel in her part of "Molly O," squatted under an umbrella with the dinner pail in her hand.

Schaefer Stages Big Campaign for Serial

"With Stanley in Africa" Exploitation Interests Brooklyn Fans

DAVID SCHAEFER, manager of the Parthenon theatre, Brooklyn, neglected no exploitation bets in selling the first episode of "With Stanley in Africa" to his patrons.

He built a lobby display—effected a tie-up with the schools and pulled stunts. His lobby display consisted of a jungle scene, made up of stuffed animals and birds he obtained from a near-by taxidermist, and which included a leopard, a tiger and an ostrich. Moss-like streamers hanging from the ceiling added to the jungle effect. A local ex-service man donned his O. D. trousers, shirt and leggings, together with a cork helmet obtained from a costumer, and made a very creditable representation of the explorer, Henry M. Stanley.

After arousing the enthusiasm of the local school authorities concerning the Stanley serial, Schaefer arranged for an essay contest, limited to the pupils of the grades capable of reading and appreciating the Stanley expedition. The competitors were instructed to write a 500-word essay on how Stanley found Dr. Livingstone, and turn it in to the Ridgewood Times, a local newspaper, by a date shortly after the completion of the run of the serial.

Schaefer then made an additional tie-up with the newspaper by which he formed a Ridgewood Times-Parthenon Theatre Serial Club. A membership coupon of this club was printed in the newspaper a few days before the first showing of the serial. It also was announced that the first 100 children to bring coupons to the Times office on the morning of the first showing would be admitted free. All of the children who appeared at the newspaper office received a "Stanley" map game, an exploitation stunt made available to exhibitors through the press sheet.

The children were organized into a parade which wound its way through Ridgewood and finally to the Parthenon theatre, and the serial was first formally presented to the Ridgewood public. As word had gone out that those boys in line with drums, bugles and other noise making devices would be admitted free, the parade attracted plenty of attention to itself.

All in all, the Parthenon exploitation campaign was the most revolutionary one ever put over in that section of Brooklyn on behalf of a serial. Weingarten admits it cost considerable money. "But," he explains, "when you figure it cost only a small amount per episode, it doesn't seem so much after all."

Explaining by illustration the accompanying story relative to the "Saturday Night" exploitation stunt put over by the Coliseum theatre, Philadelphia

Girls in Bathing Suits Advertise "Saturday Night"

THE bathtub stunt in connection with the showing of "Saturday Night" was given a new twist by Manager William J. Lane of the Coliseum theatre, Philadelphia, one of the Nixon-Nirdlinger string.

Mr. Lane placed a bathtub as shown by the accompanying cut, in front of the theatre and then offered a dollar a minute for ten minutes to girls who appeared in bathing suits and took a dip.

That he got some girls to take up his offer is shown by the cut and that the stunt was a wonderful advertisement is stated in a recent letter from Mr. Lane informing us concerning his exploitation idea.

Turns Lobby Into Prize Ring for Fight Picture

As exploitation for the Dempsey-Carpentier fight picture Manager C. D. Cooley of the Grand theatre, Tampa, Fla., turned his lobby in a prize fight ring. From the six sheet accessory a large cut-out of Dempsey and Carpentier was retained, each cut-out being placed in its respective corner of the boxing ring. Carpentier's corner was draped with French flags, while the Stars and Stripes adorned Dempsey's corner. A gong sounded at intervals, which helped things along considerably.

On the whole, the display made one of the best flashes ever seen in Tampa, Fla. This display attracted so much attention that several exhibitors from neighboring towns wanted to know it, for their showing of the picture.

Ballyhoo on "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" used by Manager Harmon Perry of the Ogden theatre, Ogden, Utah

riental Lobby Front Used on "Fool's Paradise"

UY KENNIMER, manager of the Imperial theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., built an attractive lobby display for s engagement of "Fool's Paradise," the ea being to represent a building in Siam. ıe front was made of beaver board and inted gold with a border of blue and ld. The gold was the glittering kind d naturally caught the eye. Extra ight lights were used in the marquise d an illuminated banner hung across e sidewalk.

tmospheric Lobby Display elps Business at the Howard

e week prior to the showing of "Moran ıe Lady Letty" at the Howard theatre, ıger De Sales Harrison arranged a very ive foyer display to attract the attention ıe people as they left the theatre. The ay was of a maritime setting with a mini- light-house. Through the windows of ight-house, lights flashed on and off, which tended to add to its realism. Several ıts of Valentino and Dalton were ar- d on the display and added to the at- veness of the entire setting.

e week the picture played at the theatre, foyer display was placed in front of heatre, together with blue draperies and flood lights. A large 15 foot light-house lights arranged inside to shine through vindows, these lights to flash on and off, placed in front of the theatre on the side- This light-house was built of beaver s and painted to represent grey stones. nd the base were banked stones, as near- keeping with the painted stones of which ght-house was constructed, as possible.

"Saturday Night" Used for Spring Fashion Show Feature

In presenting "Saturday Night" at the Palace theatre, Maryville, Tenn., Manager J. H. Everett staged a fashion show.

Seven of Maryville's most popular young ladies were engaged by the theatre to display Spring fashions. The gowns belonged to the Ellis-Proffit Department Store. In order to make this fashion show more effective and bring results to both parties, the department store mailed out announcements of their opening, telling of the fashion show in connection with the picture. Their newspaper ads also carried a copy relative to the picture and to the fashion show.

Ernest Stages Interlude on "Ten Nights"

IN presenting "Ten Nights in a Barroom" Charles H. Ernest, manager of the Palm theatre, Pueblo, Colo., used a child of seven years to sing the old time "Father, Dear Father, Come Home With Me Now" at a suitable place in the picture, with excellent audience results.

The exploitation was largely confined to the newspapers, good space being used one week in advance of the opening.

Novel Lobby Display Part of McKeesport "Theodora" Campaign

The manager of the Capitol theatre, McKeesport, Pa., gave "Theodora" one of its most striking lobby displays by calling in the staff artist and using stills, enlargements and paintings freely.

Over the middle entrance from the sidewalk to the lobby was a cardboard arch with the title of the picture in letters two feet high. Above the title was the injunction, "See the world's greatest screen production."

A box-like arrangement was constructed over the doors, opening outward. At each end of the arch and on the compo board used to conceal the doors the artist painted the figure of the Empress Theodora, of the Empress and her lover, and one of the lions.

Midway between these two box displays was a large circle, with the head of the Empress painted in the center. The outer edge was encircled by electric lights, making a most effective night display.

In the lobby itself were "Theodora" posters, framed paintings, stills and enlargements. The whole display cost but little, yet was a distinct business booster.

This is the way the Cozy theatre, Topeka, Kansas, decorated for its recent showing of "The Old Oaken Bucket"

Roosevelt's New One on "Come on Over"

Ascher Brothers' House, Chicago, Uses Telephones to Sell Picture

THE telephone was put to good use in exploiting "Come On Over" during its week's engagement at Ascher Bros. Roosevelt theatre, Chicago.

In carrying through the telephone stunt, the exploitation department of Ascher Brothers first made arrangements with the Chicago Telephone Co. traffic department for prompt service from the theatre and general offices, and the engagement of six bright Irish telephone girls to call up people with Irish names and tell them about "Come On Over" at the Roosevelt.

Each one delivered a prepared talk and kept a record of the reply, whether it was favorable, non-committal or negative. An indication of how well the matter was handled is that the great majority of the replies were favorable and in very few instances did those called cut off the conversation before the operator completed her talk, which ran as follows:

"Hello, Mr. ———, I am Miss O'Brien. You don't know me, but I am working in the interest of Miss Colleen Moore—and perhaps you know of her. Miss Moore is the little Irish girl who is playing the leading role in "Come On Over" at the Roosevelt theatre this week. And I'll tell you just why you are being called at this time, Mr. ———.'

Then followed some propaganda about the picture. The end of the message was like this: "And would you mind writing my name on the paper, too? Then Ill get credit for having interested you. My name is O'Brien, Lillian O'Brien. That's it. Thank you very much. Goodbye."

From remarks dropped in the lobby after the show, we found that a good many were attracted to the theatre by this method of solicitation. The total cost of the campaign for the week was $87.50. The telephone girls did their work at night, Saturday afternoon and Sunday.

In addition to the regular advertising in Chicago dailies, "Come On Over" was advertised in the Irish and Catholic papers.

Drumbar Stages Prologue on "Way Down East"

WITH no stage whatsoever to work with Manager W. E. Drumbar of the Riviera theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., was still able to present an atmospheric prologue on "Way Down East."

To the right and left of the photoplayer were scenes of forests and in the center was an old fashioned stone wall, with a gate for an entrance. A sun-set effect was obtained by shading the regular stage lights, thus giving a soft effect to the entire display.

A young lady was secured, who dressed in a costume nearly like the one worn by Lillian Gish in this picture. The young lady was a singer of some talent and made a decided hit with the patrons of the Strand theatre.

Simple Lobby Front Attracts Brooklyn Fans

A simple but effective lobby front can attract attention even in a sophisticated big city. As a further demonstration of this argument there comes out of the mail bag the photograph of the front of the Prospect theatre, Brooklyn, during the presentation of "The Silent Call." Rough pine logs formed the mainstay for the wilderness front that was put on the house, while under the "window" a photograph of the picture's star, the dog Strongheart, was prominently featured.

While such a display might have had a negligible effect in the pines of Oregon it was a different matter in the city of hard pavements and worn shoe leather.

Splendid picture, appealing especially to women and girls; did good business for week. (Middle West.)

VITAGRAPH

Flower of the North—
Good showing. Went over very nicely. (East.)

WID GUNNING

Our Mutual Friend—
Story faithfully told. Business excellent. Presentation marked with one of the biggest exploitation campaigns ever known in the city. (Middle West.)

STATE RIGHTS

Burn 'Em Up Barnes—
Snappy comedy drama, full of thrills and fun. Played to big houses for one week. (Middle West.)

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Fool's Paradise—
Wide divergence of opinion among patrons. Some like it immensely. Others thought it rot. Anyhow, it did enough business to hold it over a second week. (Middle West.)

Had lockout on second week. Good advertising brought results. (Middle West.)

Held up fair the second week. Mighty good picture. (Middle West.)

Better than "Affairs of Anatol" and did bigger business for two weeks. (Middle West.)

Very elaborate. Good business on a two week's run. (Middle West.)

Fairly good entertainment with fair business. (West.)

Her Husband's Trademark—
Appealed to women. Story interesting. Business fair. (Middle West.)

Picture was pretty well liked. Elaborate prologue helped to put over the show. (Middle West.)

Audience like it. Fair attendance. (Middle West.)

Fair with fair receipts. (East.)

Very popular with the audience. (Middle West.)

Moran of the Lady Letty—
A good drawing card that met with the approval of patrons and drew a large weekly attendance. (Middle West.)

Picture did not do very good business. Somehow didn't draw and comedy, "Oh, Promise Me," won more comment. (Middle West.)

Good entertainment and good business. (West.)

The World's Champion—
Wally Reid popular with our crowds and "The World's Champion" went over great. Did big business. (Middle West.)

Fair picture. Business good. (East.)

Three Live Ghosts—
Very good picture and business good. (East.)

Her Own Money—
Nice interesting story well told with star at her best. Patrons well pleased. Played to wonderful business. (Middle West.)

One Glorious Day—
Although played as an added feature, it is good enough to stand on its own feet. Unusual and pleasing. (Middle West.)

Under the Lash—
Good picture, which pleased and drew well. (Middle West.)

Saturday Night—
Up to DeMille's high standard of production. Well acted and interesting. Played to good business. (Middle West.)

Mistress of the World—
Interesting. Business started off fair and kept improving daily.

Back Pay—
The recent controversy over the amount of money necessary to provide clothing for a girl made a good exploitation feature for this one, which did a good business for a week. (Middle West.)

The Lane That Had No Turning—
The title of this one brought them out, the picture doing a splendid week's business. (Middle West.)

Behold My Wife—
Did pretty fair business on second run. Public seemed anxious to see Elliott Dexter again. (Middle West.)

Midnight—
Good production with better business than usual. (West.)

Enchantment—
Fair picture with mediocre business. (West.)

Travelin' On—
A typical Hart picture. Attendance normal. (Middle West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

The Barnstormer—
Charles Ray is always certain of good support here. This production is a real money maker, having done a lively week's run. (Middle West.)

Very good picture. Had a very nice run. (East.)

The Seventh Day—
Story not new and at times impossible. Business fair. Patrons not very favorable to picture. (Middle West.)

Good picture which brought good business. (West.)

Home Talent—
House in a continuous uproar. Excellent business during run. (Middle West.)

A Question of Honor—
Just fair feature. Played to average business. (Middle West.)

Hail the Woman—
One of the big pictures of the year, though it held out good for only one week. (Middle West.)

My Boy—
This certainly packed in youthful America and grown-ups as well. (Middle West.)

The Beautiful Liar—
Star has done far better work. Title has exploitation possibilities. Attendance not up to expectations. (Middle West.)

The Sign on the Door—
Shows Norma Talmadge at her best. My audience liked it very much. Nice crowds all week. (Middle West.)

REALART

Nancy From Nowhere—
Pleased patrons and showed to good attendance. (Middle West.)

A Game Chicken—
Star appeals here and this went over nicely. (East.)

Too Much Wife—
Good characterization, well directed, pleasingly presented. (Middle West.)

The Luck of the Irish—
Especially timely for St. Patrick's Day and did fair business on second run. (Middle West.)

GOLDWYN

Come On Over—
Good, light feature which admirers of Colleen Moore enjoyed. Played to good business with Episode 3 of "Leather Pushers" as an added attraction. (Middle West.)

A very appealing picture, which gets over without being suggestive. (Middle West.)

Grand Larceny—
Very pleasing picture but not a strong box office attraction. (East.)

Fair production both in entertainment and box office value. (West.)

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BE

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE.

The Chin Chin Club is rapidly becoming a gathering place for Chicago motion picture men, and at noontime particularly it is crowded with exchange men and exhibitors lunching, shooting a friendly game of billiards, or enjoying a "chin chin" while seated in the big leather chairs, with which the quarters are comfortably provided. The new club draws its membership from all lines of the amusement business in Chicago, and has elaborately and luxuriously furnished rooms in the Adams theatre building, 20 East Adams street. The officers, a majority of whom are film men, include President H. W. Peters, Secretary Jules Edwards, Treasurer Ray Florine and Directors Ralph Kettering, George Moore, Harry Beaumont and Oscar Florine. President Peters states that if the present rapid growth of the club continues, it is their intention to take over two additional floors in the building as soon as existing leases expire, and turn them into a gymnasium. This feature would undoubtedly be greatly appreciated by members. The club fills a real need in Chicago amusement circles and undoubtedly will be very popular.

H. D. Charness, who has been working for Unity Photoplays, has joined the local Goldwyn forces and will cover Illinois territory.

The Crown theatre at Crown Point, Indiana, has changed hands, the new owners being S. J. Gregory.

The Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners are co-operating with Charles H. Snyder, of the Lincoln theatre, Fulton, Illinois, in his fight on the threat of Sunday closing in his city. In addition to advising him as to the steps he should take to combat the danger, he has been supplied with slides to run in his theatre, and some splendid material for use in newspaper articles and circulars.

Ralph Kettering and John J. Jones made a flying trip to New York this week to welcome home Aaron Jones when he landed from the Steamship Olympic, of the Red Star Line, on his return from Europe, where he has been since the first of the year. The party is scheduled to return to Chicago immediately.

Manager Eddie Silverman, of Select exchange, has put E. W. Johnson on the sales staff payroll. Mr. Johnson will divide his time between the city and country territory. He has recently been connected with the Hodkinson exchange.

Sam Marks now is connected with the Hodkinson Chicago branch, and will cover Western Illinois territory, having resigned from United Artists to accept the new position.

Cress Smith, manager of United Artists Chicago exchange, has added two live wire salesmen to his staff. They are Lee Woodyatt, formerly connected with Select, who will cover Eastern Illinois and Northern Indiana; and George Levey, formerly a Unity representative, who will cover the southside of Chicago.

Will Hays, accompanied by his six-year-old son, Bill, Jr., was in Chicago last week for a visit with Mrs. Hays, who has been ill at St. Luke's Hospital, for several weeks. Mr. Hays took his family to his home in Sullivan, Indiana, and from there will return to New York. While in Chicago, he declared his belief that the new Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America was sure to have the co-operation of the public in maintaining high standards, and that the organization would be able to do much of practical benefit for the industry.

Arnold Shack, of the Keystone theatre, has purchased the Panorama, located on Sheridan Road near Broadway, from Evans & Turner. It is understood the latter are figuring on opening a house in Morton Grove.

W. H. Tracy, who has been covering central Illinois territory for Vitagraph, has been assigned to the city staff, and is now working the north side for Manager Brimmer.

Manager Harry Miller, of the Windsor theatre, whose recent severe injury to his eye, was reported in these columns, made his first appearance since the accident, on film row Monday. His friends were glad to know that there is hope of restoring the sight of the injured optic, and that the other eye is unaffected.

Manager Condon, of the Star theatre, of De Kalb, Illinois, was visiting along film row last week, and among other things, reported that "Winners of the West," Universal's popular chapter play, is doing a great deal to bring his business back to normal, and gave high praise to the enterprise of Universal in getting out this type of serial.

Steve Berris, proprietor of the Lincoln theatre, Lincoln, Illinois, was a Chicago visitor this week, and reports that his work of providing Lincoln with a theatre that will be the civic pride of the town, is progressing well. Manager Petrie, of the Lyric theatre, East Moline, was also seen on exchange row and states that business is looking up in his vicinity.

Charles S. Rieman, who is organizing the motion picture section of The Pageant of Progress, is negotiating with several of the largest producers in the United States to put in exhibits at the Pageant, which will illustrate every detail of motion picture making. He has also gotten in touch with Will H. Hays, in an endeavor to secure his co-operation in getting a good comprehensive exhibit for the big exposition, which will be held again this year on the Municipal Pier.

Recent additions to the sales staff of Vitagraph's Chicago exchange include C. H. Callahan, formerly connected with Fitzpatrick & McElroy, who will cover northern Indiana; F. M. Ford, recently with Dempsey-Willard Pictures, and previous to that, a salesman for First National, working out of Little Rock, Arkansas, who will cover southern Indiana; and Milton Stern, who formerly was with Universal and will work the southern Illinois territory. T. H. Gibbs has recently been assigned to the Wisconsin territory and E. A. Phelps to country territory.

Claude Plough, one of the pioneers of the film industry in this territory, has accepted the position of Chicago manager for Robertson-Cole, and assumed his new duties. Mr. Plough, it will be remembered, organized the Anti-Trust Film Company back in the early days, which later was taken over by Universal, Mr. Plough going to the latter company, with which he remained for many years. He is one of the partners in Plough-Koffman & Connors, owners of a chain of movie houses, and will retain his interest in this exhibitor concern. Mr. Plough has been kept busy all week receiving the good wishes and congratulations of his many friends in the industry, on his return to the exchange end of the business. A. J. Gallas, who has been manager of the local Robertson-Cole exchange, for some time past, will remain as sales manager.

Cecil Maberry, who recently went to New York to accept an important executive position with the Goldwyn organization, spent several days in Chicago last week. He had intended continuing his trip so as to include a visit to the coast studios of the Goldwyn organization, but was unexpectedly called back to New York. It was surmised on film row that his change in plans was brought about by the rumored merger of First National and Goldwyn.

Brunhild & Young celebrate the third anniversary of the formation of their firm on March 17th, with a luncheon at Kuntz-Remmler's Restaurant with Managing Director Julius Lamm, acting as toastmaster. Among those present were Harry Brunhild, Leo Brunhild, Nicholas Young, Managers Lieberthal of the Emmett theatre; Rafelski of the New Era and Roger's theatres; and H. D. Watts of the Shakespeare. A spirit of optimism marked the occasion, and it was predicted that before this enterprising firm celebrates its fourth anniversary, several more theatres will have been added to its chain. Confidence was also expressed in the early revival of business, and that the Fall will see the industry moving forward "full speed ahead."

That independent pictures are coming into their own, is evidenced by the record being made this week by Joe Friedman's Celebrated Players Corporation, which is "School Days," the Wesley Barry picture, showing at the Chicago; "Charge It," starring Clara Kimball Young, at the Castle; "What Is My Wandering Boy Tonight" at the Randolph; "Good Night Wife" at the Pastime, and "When Girls Leave Home" at the Bandbox, a very unusual loop record for any exchange to make. Abe Warner, who returned from a booking trip to Kansas City and St. Louis in time for the opening of "School Days" at the Chicago, was greatly pleased over the reception given this picture, and that the huge house was full despite the bad weather in Chicago on the opening night.

A more optimistic spirit was in evidence along film row this week, owing to the decided improvement in business and reports coming in from both Chicago loop and out of town theatres, that attendance was picking up.

Dr. Shallenberger, of Arrow Film Corporation, was in Chicago this week in the interest of his picture, "Ten Nights in a Bar Room."

Maurice Fleckels, of Favorite Players, is making a prolonged stay in Chicago, looking after his film and other interests, but expects to return to New York at an early date. Messrs. Van Ronkel and Fleckels are among the exchange men who see better times at hand and believe that the continued improvement in general business conditions will be reflected more and more in theatre attendance as the Spring season progresses.

" The Farmer and the Ostrich "

(Aesop's Fables-Pathe)

IT is no easy task to keep these modern twists of old man Aesop up-to-date. But Paul Terry proves that his talent in this direction is no flash in the pan. Here he draws upon the moral that "Hospitality is a virtue which should be exercised wisely." And the comedy finds expression through the antics of the animals. The cat opens the scene. He is on location near the inevitable ash-can. While he may have digestive powers which invite envy from a dyspeptic, yet he suffers an inferiority complex to see the billy goat devour unsavory dishes without tasting the contents. Such things as old cans, shoes, bottles, etc., are like so many anchovies to him—just little appetizers.

The cat indulges in hero-worship until the ostrich is called from the dressing room. And what that bally bird cannot eat and digest doesn't grow! Anchovies? Antipastos? Poof! He drinks up the home brew and doesn't stop until the still, coil et al are safely by his esophagus. There isn't enough left on the farm when he gets through to feed a mosquito. Watching these animals and the big bird devour the lil' ol' feed bag is a good appetizer in itself. You will feel like ordering the side of a cow for dinner. The laughs are there in abundance. It is quite the funniest of the Terry cartoons.—Lenth 2/3 reel.—LAURENCE REID.

" The Trail of the Wolf "

(Western Drama-Universal)

MAKE way for the Northwest Mounted formula in this Universal western drama. " The Trail of the Wolf " is typical of its class. The hero is in the uniform and the girl is the daughter of the proprietor of the trading post. You might guess that the villain is a French Canadian outlaw whose crime is fur smuggling. The picture carries on with the customary vitality characteristic of such pieces. There is the usual conflict which presents some acceptable riding and Percy Pembroke deserves mention for his horsemanship.

There is no great suspense because the plot follows the regulation pattern too closely. The climax develops when the bad man is traced through a note which he wrote the girl in order to entice her away from home. The inevitable pursuit follows. The picture is exciting enough if you haven't been fed up with the Northwest Mounted idea. It should prove acceptable with the average audience.—Length 2 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

" Hot Off the Press "

(Hal Roach Comedy-Pathe)

SNUB POLLARD turns to the newspaper plant for his latest comedy wheeze. The star plays the role of the janitor and his duties are washing the windows, oiling the presses and seeing that everything is in tip-top shape. The thread of the plot finds him in an argument with the managing editor and a tiff or two with the foreman. The latter's white coat is wrinkled and Snub offers to iron the jacket by running it through the presses. The coat comes out flat. In fact, it is a good job except for the forms which are printed on the back. The story next introduces the comedian on the track of some missing jewels. The gags are fairly novel and the offering closes when Snub puts over a scoop for the paper. "Hot Off the Press" will be enjoyed.—Length 1 reel. —LAURENCE REID.

" Friday, the Thirteenth "

(Star Comedy-Universal)

AS the title indicates, this comedy has a great deal to do with superstition. An absent-minded husband finds himself involved in much trouble on the previous day. First he misses his umbrella, which has been taken by a woman. He follows her through the park in an attempt to regain it without causing any embarrassment. It is almost in his clutches when the lover of the fair lady puts in an appearance. When the hero explains the situation to his wife she informs him that matters are not so bad since it is only Thursday, the twelfth. So he goes to bed leaving orders not to be disturbed until the fourteenth. The comedy presents a fair example of comedy gags. Eddie Boland and Gertrude Olmstead appear as the married couple. —Length 2 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

" A One Horse Town "

(Century Comedy-Universal)

THIS comedy starts off with a trick scene showing a close-up of an intimate card game. Two gentlemen are sitting back pretty with the pasteboards and smoking the customary perfectos. Then when the camera is placed at a medium distance you discover that they are only tramps seated on the open end of a box-car. This is a snappy beginning of a comedy which carries a fine sample of humor. The knights of the road are interrupted in their little pastime by the brakeman. They arrive in a small town and decide to put on a one night bill and engage Harry Sweet to put up the posters.

There is some nifty comedy released when the star attempts to paste the bills on the town fences. The boards are loose and one by one the fences tumble to the ground. Harry puts the show on the bum that evening by acting as scene shifter and property man. He even saves the town's savings from the two hamfats and as a reward wins the consent of the girl and her father. "A One Horse Town" will get the laughs. Book it and see for yourself.—Length 2 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"Vendetta"

Howell Sales Co., Inc.—Commonwealth—Six Reels, About 5800 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles Street)

MUCH of the adverse criticism of "Vendetta" is to be charged to propaganda. A goodly portion of the remainder is warranted. Yet the picture is not entirely without merit. It boasts an interesting theme, containing several highly pleasing moments, and the photography is excellent in a few instances. Here we meet a different Pola Negri. Gone is the dancing imp of a thousand loves and the ultra-conventional Countess portrayed here is not nearly so attractive. She gets no chance to play even one of her artful talents and were it not that the plot, scenes and other characters fill the void we hesitate to say how disappointing our experience.

As a thriller, with shooting and stabbing and love and hate intermingled to the exclusion of fun, the picture produces the goods. A young Corsican's mode of furnishing visiting Englishmen with snappy moments is not what his sister, the Countess, suggested. The resulting duel brings out pistols instead of swords as the weapons and the brother dies with the gun of "E. A." an unnamed Britisher, in his possession. The Countess' vow for revenge, coupled with her pledge to marry her guardian, make trailing of the S.S. Victory imperative. The mate of "E. A.'s" duelling pistol, it develops, belongs to the man the Countess ultimately marries. For scenic convenience alone Monte Carlo is where the unraveling is done, but no pretentious scenes are introduced. Then back to Corsica for the climax, which atones in part for much that is lacking beforehand.

While the plot stresses the white hot passion of the Corsicans the direction falls short in using this point to bring out the natural ability of Pola Negri. Flowery titles mislead at the start and one realizes with a jolt that the actress is in a different role. Other shortcomings in direction force effects that spectators fail to realize properly.

The Cast

Countess Marianna Paoli.....Pola Negri
Gladwin Irving, a lieutenant.
Baron Danelli, the guardian
Edward Alcott, the lieutenant and hero
Antonia, brother of the Countess
Tomasso, servant of Antonia and co-plotter with the Baron
Ruth Alcott, sister of Edward Alcott and fiancee of Gladwin Irving.

By George Jacoby and Leo Lasko. Titles and editing by James A. Creelman.

The Story—At his sister's bidding Antonia picks a quarrel, which results in a duel, with visiting Englishmen. He is killed, retainng a grip on the pistol. The Countess seeks revenge, promising to marry her guardian if he helps her. At Alexandra quarantine grips them as they trail the Englishmen's ship, the Countess nursing and falling in love with a man whose name she doesn't ask because she is engaged. Learning he is a brother of the sister engaged to a friend, she accepts his attentions and arouses jealousy of her guardian. The guardian, with Tomasso, plots revenge by releasing the Countess for the marriage at Corsica, where the heroine learns her husband fought her brother. Declining suicide she faints as Tomasso stabs the guardian in mistake for the husband and awakens in the husband's arms.

Classification: Romance and adventure centering on an Englishman's taunt about the even course of life at Corsica. Also melodramatic intrigue.

Production Highlights: The challenge. Duelling scene. Farewell to visitors at Corsica. Servant's theft of companion's duelling pistol. Countess seeking consolation in prayer. Love-making scenes of Countess and Lieutenant. Native marriage train. Servants jumping into bridal suite through window. Pola Negri about to stab herself. Stabbing of guardian. Pola Negri regaining consciousness in husband's arms.

Exploitation Angles: Ride of servant. The duel. Ride of Countess to duelling grounds. Countess swearing vengeance. Her nursing lieutenant. Guardian and servant plotting. Countess' refusal to kill self. Star's popularity.

Drawing Power: Better in houses in which Pola Negri has not been surcharged with stardom. Good for most any but the elite.

"Bucking the Tiger"

Selznick—5533 Feet

(Reviewed by Eugene Carlton)

FORTIFIED with an abundance of suspense, built around a unique plot, "Bucking the Tiger" is just different enough from the average story of romance to be classed as a good prospect for a drawing card. The usual methods employed in obtaining suspense are missing, which adds greatly to the merit of the picture. With the locale laid in the Northwest, there are various stages of the picture which are a trifle hackneyed, portraying too much of the time worn "rush for gold" element, of which the public has grown weary. Conway Tearle also could advantageously cast aside some of his "heroic" poses. However, his work is good and he is to be commended

The fact that a life insurance policy, which means financial aid for four men and death for a fifth, a pretty girl who loves the unfortunate fifth, and a timely "strike" of gold, constitutes the basis of the theme, stamps the production as "different." It is splendidly acted by the entire cast and the spirit of adventure will appeal strongly to audiences, as the real "kick" is saved for a grand finale. Conway Tearle fits into his role in a capable manner and does justice to the character of a "game sport."

Gold strike is discovered, but one of the four demands that hero keep promise and die. Hero is about to keep word, but the inevitable enters the scene and happiness reigns.

Classification—Romance of the Northwest, dealing with hardships of the Klondike. Also contains a love story and human interest.

Production Highlights—The thwarting of the girl's attempt to commit suicide, the release of the hero from his binding promise to end life, excellent photography, especially on interiors.

Exploitation Angles—Opportunity for good catch lines, based on the fact that a man was to live in comfort for a year and then d h life for the benefit of four others A atmospheric lobby display of the Klonc e.

Drawing Power—Should appeal mo y neighborhood houses in large or small itie Not a good "bet" for the big houses. ee liberal advertising.

"The Girl From Nowhere"

Selznick—5000 Feet

(Reviewed by Eugene Carlton)

CAST aside your opposition to im; bba bilities and "The Girl From Now re," relying principally upon the praisew thy work of Elaine Hammerstein, will ta its place among the successful crook elo dramas. The swift action and thrilling ses of the story very cleverly cover up th ele ments which smack of unreality. Yet, th im probable factors in the story are not g ing ones, merely the type which the av age audience realizes as being untrue to life but still interesting. To be more explicit, th un usual fear which the principal female lea has for her crook suitor is unwarranted, a is an example of several weak technicaliti in the theme.

However, the smooth running action o the story, some good directing and the m mendable acting of Elaine Hammerstein ore than overshadow minor criticisms. Huma interest is certain to be aroused when a p tty girl represents herself as the wife of a ir tually strange man in order to hide her al name, which has become linked with th of a crook suitor in a jewel robbery. Of co se the true character of her disreputable s or is discovered by her in time to prevent ir marriage, after an elopement, which m es her association with the "strange man" all the more interesting.

The Story—Heroine elopes with man discovers is a crook, refuses to marry him takes refuge in deserted lodge. Her name linked with that of crook suitor's in jewel ry and she represents herself as wife owner of lodge, who has been jilted by cro sister. Owner of lodge proposes to heroine is accepted. Crook suitor, in another attemp robbery, threatens heroine, but she rema true to her husband, justifying the confide which husband has placed in her.

Classification—Crook melodrama, ming with love story and a few touches of humor.

Production Highlights—No outstanding si ations, but plenty of swift action. Heroin representation of herself as wife of lod owner makes bid for humor. Several splen interiors, as well as good exteriors.

Exploitation Angles—Elaine Hammerstei name can be capitalized to good advanta Catch line, "She unconsciously selected h future name," and lobby display, portrayi scenes in lodge room, should go well.

" The Fire Bride "

Wid Gunning, Inc.—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Matthew A. Taylor)

UE lagoons and coral reefs and all the other things that go with the twang of kelele, form the background for this ance-seasoned melodrama, which makes od entertainment for the average. We are that this is the first South Sea picture e actually filmed in that land of shredded at and dusky maidens. Certainly it paid producer to transport his company from lywood to Tahiti to get these exteriors. y will convince a lot of people that the th Sea Islands have not been over press- nted after all.

s for the story it provides opportunity for action and a heroic finish and a piquant touches that the audience will l. Combining Robert Louis Stevenson Jack London it is a treasure hunt with illainous old sea dog as the heavy. The t mate of his little schooner is the hero; daughter of the treasure-seeker the oine.

well staged tropical storm and a crowd South Eea Islanders, presumably savage, p the plot along and bring about the down- of the villain. These natives make fine ras. They stage some barbaric dances ich look real enough to find a place in South Sea scenic. Executed by a large mber who keep perfect time, they form interesting part of the picture. The ship d storm scenes have all been well directed d the wreck of the little ship makes a nvincing picture.

With the exception of two minor roles the t is entirely American. Edward Hearn es a virile performance as the hero and th Reneck is a pretty heroine. We were ittle saddened by never learning what the easure-box contained. It caused all the uble in the first place, but the scenarist ver bothers to explain. Anyway it is re- rned to its rightful owner.

"The Fire Bride" can be given a presentation that can be relied upon to put it over en with a doubtful audience. Most diences will find it a colorful adventure ture and like it no matter what presentation is afforded.

" False Brands "

Pacific Prod. Co.-State Rights

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

ALL things considered this western drama released upon the state rights market is up to average. It contains the customary ingredients which are fairly well developed even though there is no mark of originality about th eplot. At times the action is allowed to proceed in rather draggy fashion but this is compensated for in the characterization, amply taken care of by Joe Moore and Eileen Sedgwick. Many will not be reconciled to the fact that the first mentioned is able to get away with a cow-puncher portrayal. They will naturally associate him with his brothers who have appeared in almost everything except westerns. He makes the role entirely likable. The rest of the cast are adequate.

If the director has faltered it is in his climax which arrives too slowly to carry much suspense. The plot, a familiar one, deals with cattle rustling. The bad man attempts to frame the hero with a murder charge, thus bringing about the disillusionment of the heroine. The action opens at a co-ed college with the hero unable to collect an education because of his talent for fighting. So his father sends him to his ranch under the stipulation that the boy hide his identity in order that the cattle rustler may be captured.

The conflict develops when he arouses the enmity of the ranch foreman and the hero finds himself involved as the sheriff proceeds to carry out the law. The young man escapes and eventually triumphs over the villain. He is also successful at romance. The concluding scenes are punctuated with good punch scenes which reveal much exciting gun-play. The technical side of the offering is up to average, there being appropriate atmosphere and first rate photography. A little editing here and there, dispensing with some close-ups of Miss Sedgwick, will make the action more compact.

The Cast

Joe Sullivan ..... Joe Moore
Eileen Morgan ..... Eileen Sedgwick
Sam Morgan ..... C. W. Williams
Max Shultz ..... Robert Kentman

By William J. Craft. Scenario by Harry Chandlee and William B. Laub. Directed by William J. Craft. Produced by Pacific Prod. Co.

The Story—Western, with youth expelled from college and sent to father's ranch with the object of capturing the cattle rustler. Meets girl of his college days, who is daughter of superintendent, and they become partners in the venture. The youth is involved with the law but escapes from the sheriff. After a series of gun plays he triumphs in his mission and also in romance.

Classification—Western adventure story detailing exploits of reckless youth capturing cattle rustler. Familiar plot though satisfying with romance and western incident.

Production Highlights—Sympathetic characterization well interpreted by Joe Moore and Eileen Sedgwick. Typical western incident. Good suspense toward finish. Snappy action for the most part.

Exploitation Angles—The usual opportunity to present your patrons with western entertainment. The title is a good one for the story and it is well acted. Joe Moore is brother of Tom, Owen and Matt. Play him up. Also Eileen Sedgwick who is well known to steady patrons. Has been playing in Universal westerns. Don't use too many superlatives here.

Drawing Power—Where exhibitors feature daily change of program this one will get over. It is average entertainment of the western order and will go best in neighborhood houses and those in factory districts where they enjoy the westerns. Billed with the stars featured is likely to draw.

" Bobbed Hair "

Realart-Paramount—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

HERE is a timely little story taking up the burden of that much discussed specie of the feminine sex—the flapper. As the title indicates it permits Wanda Hawley to appear in an ideal role for her personality. There is no tax put upon her emotional capabilities. All she has to do is run true to form. And she succeeds in making the role a colorful one indeed. "Bobbed Hair" is crammed with delicate humor which borders at times upon burlesque. It pokes gentle fun at Greenwich Village, futuristic poets and poetesses, and frolics about in a romantic vein which is sure to delight the young impressionables.

Miss Hawley longs for the unconventional ideas of existence. She is betrothed to a prosaic product of Wall Street who is blind and also deaf to the romantic scheme of things. The girl's aunt is determined that she will marry this hard-headed youth. But she rebels and runs away to the village to live with a former classmate—a young woman who has taken up the flapper cause with a vengeance. Sandals, bobbed hair, the togo and all that sort of thing. It doesn't take the irrepressible Polly long to adopt the same ideas.

This of course starts a pretty romantic conflict, for the youth of the ticker follows to straighten out the complications. The girl hides from him and naturally he is disconsolate. She even finds a communion of soul or expression with a married poet. His wife threatens divorce and the flapper even thinks of suicide. But it all ends according to Hoyle and the children of Adam. The offering is well mounted and certain of its appeal to the young romancers. There is abundant humor and some good sound philosophy concerning the modern flapper. Miss Hawley is assisted by competent players in William Boyd, Leigh Wyant, William P. Carleton and Adele Farirngton.

The Cast

Polly Heath ..... Wanda Hawley
Dick Barton ..... William Boyd
Aunt Emily ..... Adele Farrington
Zoe Dean ..... Leigh Wyant
Evelyn ..... Jane Starr
Daisy ..... Margaret Viltmore
Paul Lamont ..... William P. Carleton
Mrs. Lamont ..... Ethel Wales
The Lamont Children ..... Junior Coghlan, Robert Kelly

By Hector Turnbull. Scenario by Harvey Thew. Directed by Thomas Heffron. Photographed by William E. Collins. Produced by Realart.

The Story—Girl is equipped with modern tendencies of flapper. Is engaged to unromantic youth of Wall Street and when her aunt is determined that she will marry him, she runs away to Greenwich Village to join her school chum, a true product of the futuristic scheme of existence. The heroine bobs her hair and becomes the typical Villager. The hero follows and a reconciliation is effected when she finds him more genuine than the ultra modern types with whom she has lately associated.

Classification—Romantic comedy visualizing the modern flapper. Carries plenty of good incident and some typical scenes.

Production Highlights—Up-to-date quality of theme which makes rattling good light comedy. The careful taste in dressing the picture. The work of the star and her principal assistants. Scene when the flapper takes up the cause with a vengeance.

Exploitation Angles—This presents ample opportunities for exhibitor to capitalize on the discussion of the much abused flapper. The title is a winner. A prologue is easily suggested from the story. The romance. The fact that Miss Hawley has ideal role and has the support of William P. Carleton and William Boyd. Should make a good teaser campaign.

Drawing Power—This will go well in select neighborhoods, especially with the younger set or the matinee crowd. Will be enjoyed by the flappers especially. Title will attract them. Besides Wanda Hawley has a following. Good on the daily change of program.

"His Back Against the Wall"

Goldwyn—5000 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles B. Larkin)

HAS the millenium arrived? Here's a picture with a "different" story. "His Back Against the Wall" is a distinct novelty. It's a western comedy-drama with a hero who has to be held on his horse, who shakes all over when a gun goes off and who cringes with fear when the cat's eyes shine forth in the dark. As Jeremy Dice, the youth who leaps from a tailor's bench in an East Side sweatshop to the land of cactus, two-gun men and bold bandits—from a spineless coward to an Honest-to-Gawd hero—Raymond Hatton contributes to the screen one of the most delightful bits of character work seen in many moons.

John Frederick wrote the story which has supplied Director Rowland V. Lee with enough material to keep things moving from the first scene to the inevitable clinch. The picture opens in a New York tailor shop where some good comedy moments enter, then switches to the grand ball of The Steppers' Club, where Jeremy Dice and his "goil," portrayed by Shannon Day, shake some wicked steps and win the $65 triple-plated cup and winds up in the great open places of the west.

The picture is notable for its fine settings, especially the western backgrounds many of which are scenic gems. Max Fabian has done some good camera work, the photography being artistic throughout.

There are several praiseworthy scenes. The first comes when a bully takes Jeremy's girl away from him at the ball and the poor fellow, coward that he is, literally crawls from the hall. The next one is the fight between Dice and an angry brakeman atop a freight which ends in Jeremy being cast into the atmosphere. Then we have a scene in a deserted cabin in the desert, where two bandits stage a gun battle over a recent haul. Jeremy is hiding in the attic. The fight is taking ten years from his life. One of the holdup men spies the "hero" and is about to pump him full of lead when he is killed by the other yegg who is also mortally wounded. Jeremy, crawling from his hiding place, soons finds himself facing the sheriff's posse. He is given credit for killing the two bad men and rides into the little western town—a hero.

The big punch comes when Jeremy and "Bronc" Lewis, cousin of one of the slain men, meet in the town square. "Bronc" has sworn to "get" Jeremy, who, however, unexpectedly turns the tables in a scene that should bring patrons to the edge of the seats.

Produced by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Directed by Rowland V. Lee. Story by John Frederick. Continuity by Julien Josephson.

Photographed by Max Fabian.

The Story—Jeremy Dice, a timid, cowardly tailor's assistant is kicked out of a Gotham East Side shop because he did not have spunk enough to stand up to a bully who stole his girl. The coward goes West. Kicked off a freight in an Arizona desert, he happens upon the meeting place of two bank bandits who murdered each other in a quarrel over the division of the "receipts." Jeremy is scared speechless and is unable to deny that heroically and single-handed he killed the bandits when the sheriff finds him with a gun in his shaking hands. He is made a hero and falls in love with the daughter of the wealthy ranchman whose son one of the bandits had shot. Under the stimulus of unselfish love, Jeremy develops the courage he had never had.

Production Highlights—The novelty and appeal of the story. Excellent portrayal of the leading role by Raymond Hatton, the star. Western ranch scenes and fights. A big battle between Jeremy Dice and "Bronc" Lewis in the village square. A realistic East Side dance hall scene.

Classification—A comedy-drama bordering on the melodramatic in spots.

Exploitation Angles—Dance hall contests, tailor shop tie-ups, the star. Newspaper essay contest on "How to Conquer Fear."

Drawing Power—Suitable for all classes of theatres whose patrons appreciate something "off the beaten path."

"Island Wives"

Vitagraph—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS picture is a variation of the South Sea formula and as such it doesn't offer much in the way of novelty. As a matter of frankness it fails to carry any suspense for the steady patron who has seen the pattern used since the beginning of the multiple reel feature. The author has peopled his story with conventional figures who are piloted through a number of scenes of arbitrary design—some of which strain credulity. It is difficult to accept the attitude of the discontented wife who, when she is rescued by a wealthy yachtsman, consents to marry him under the belief that her husband has perished in a storm. Her peculiar conduct is manifested in her absolute refusal to encourage the advances of her new spouse. Since he doesn't show his true colors until the fourth reel one will be excused for failing to offer her any sympathy.

She accepts his proffers of money and clothes but doesn't pretend to compensate with gratitude in any way. He takes her back to civilization—to San Francisco to be exact. But they no sooner step on American soil before she succeeds in having him take her back to Tahiti. There they are confronted by her husband who places a wrong solution on the situation. He compels the philanderer to seek safety in the shark-infested waters and his death is indicated. The picture releases very little dramatic punch. Bigamy doesn't enter once it is explained that the skipper contracted the marriage within the three mile limit instead of upon the high seas. The early scenes disclose a bit of brutality between a vicious renegate of the Islands and the husband. The wife runs away to avoid the brute and her rescue is effected.

The producers have given the story a colorful production. The Florida coast lends a fine suggestion of the South Seas, and Miss Griffith portrays her part with sincere feeling. She also finds occasion to wear a variety of costumes. There are some atmospheric shots which disclose her bathing in one of nature's pools. The storm scene is highly effective, it being charged with first rate suspense and high class in a technical way. Most of the action transpires upon the yacht. Rockcliffe Fellows, after seasons spent interpreting heroic roles, plays the part of the heavy here and succeeds in giving an adequate portrayal. Edna Hibbard makes a picturesque figure as a native Tahitian. The titles are written in an impressionistic style and as far as advancing the plot is concerned they fail in the task. But the production is high class. The pictorial appeal, the star and the title—well the picture should not lack in patronage because of their magnetic qualities.

Williams plays the part of a bashful lover whose duty is a difficult one because of the overwhelming obstacles. He succeeds in making the character wholesome and human. Perhaps its outstanding high light is the exceptional horsemanship displayed by the star. His support consists of Molly Malone as the heroine and Ed Burns and Edward Borman as the "heavies." The atmosphere is first rate, the backgrounds being entirely consistent with the plot.

By Bruce Boteler. Directed by W. Hughes Curran. Photographed by John Stumar. Produced by Frederick Herbst Productions.

The Story—Western treating of a neighborhood dispute between property owners. An elderly rancher's life is in jeopardy and his neighbor schemes with the old man's foreman to obtain title by fair means or foul. They are frustrated in their plans by the cowboy hero, who rides to the rescue in daring fashion. A romance finishes the story.

Classification—Western melodrama punctuated with hard riding and quick shooting and plenty of fights. Usual romance.

Production Highlights—The work of Guinn Williams who shows evidence that he is rapidly becoming a first rate actor. The horsemanship displayed by the star. The plentiful fights. The support of Molly Malone.

Exploitation Angles—There is no doubt that this will succeed with most audiences. There is opportunity to capitalize the title in various ways. Also the star is forging ahead. His newest picture, outclasses his previous releases Attention should be paid to exploiting his personality.

Drawing Power—Wherever westerns are enjoyed this picture will get over. Not a good bet for the select house but a sure winner in the program house downtown. Williams' personality is getting over. Title should help some in drawing patronage.

"The Cradle"

Paramount—Five Reels

EVEN after you have catalogued this feature as belonging to formula number 9, and sit back with a knowledge that it will develop according to tradition, you are certain to be entertained because of the appealing note of heart interest which marks this domestic conflict. "The Cradle" is an interesting little study of "a little child shall lead them" pattern. It demands of the tiny juvenile, Mary Jane Irving, a great deal of expression. In fact she is in almost every scene and displays a sound grasp of emotional expression not marked by any directorial coaching, so natural is her performance.

Monsieur Brieux has not solved any problem here. He simply brings forth that a house cannot stand divided once a child has blessed it with his presence. A struggling physician is discontented over his economic situation. Into his life enters a gay adventuress who proceeds to rupture the sweet domesticity. The wife, not content in being left alone, takes up with an admirer of her maiden days. And so two separate menages are maintained after the divorce, the child passing six months with the mother and the remaining months with the father. The director or possibly the author has used a deal of subtlety in certain situations. One thing in the picture's favor is the total lack of sentiment of a false character. It could have been easily arranged for the mother to be humanized in a sympathetic light. Instead you pass your sympathy upon the child who is too young and innocent to appreciate the problem which has entered her life and the pathos is genuine.

The youngster is merely tolerated by the fathers' second wife. In fact she is mistreated. The second husband of the mother is equally unresponsive. This is the only artificial note noticeable, for it is not reasonable that two people could be so hard-hearted toward a lovable child. They might be inspired by jealousy but their conduct would not drive them to such inhuman attitudes. The little girl is stricken with illness, which means that a reconciliation will occur between the now thoroughly disillusioned parents. The picture is well arranged as to continuity although an anti-climax intrudes at the concluding scenes. "The Cradle" is handsomely mounted and is definite in its appeal. It will conquer every spectator blessed with a spark of sympathy and sentiment. It teaches a lesson in a subtle way. There is no question of its correct interpretation. Ethel Clayton sees to that. Hers is a form of expression which scores with such a theme and characterization.

The Cast

Margaret Harvey	Ethel Clayton
Dr. Robert Harvey	Charles Meredith
Doris Harvey	Mary Jane Irving
Lola Forbes	Anna Lehr
Courtney Webster	Walter McGrail
Mrs. Mason	Adele Farrington

By Eugene Brieux. Scenario by Olga Printzlau. Directed by Paul Powell. Photographed by Hal Rosson. Produced by Famous Players-Lasky

The Story—Struggling physician burdened with economic situation seeks happiness with an adventuress. His deception is eventually discovered by his wife. And a divorce is arranged, the husband marrying his new-found sweetheart, the wife entering into marriage with a former admirer. The child is permitted to spend six months of the year with each parent. It develops that she is tolerated by her step-father and step-mother and when stricken with illness, results in a reconciliation of her parents.

Classification—Domestic heart interest drama with a definite juvenile appeal. Has strong dramatic moments and considerable pathos.

Production Highlights—Fine continuity and careful production. Work of Ethel Clayton and Mary Jane Irving. Scene when child brings about reconciliation of parents. Scene when father refuses to applaud his child's piano solo. The scene when child is stricken with illness.

Exploitation Angles—This picture is a sure-fire box-office bet because of its heart appeal, its sentiment and sympathy and conflict. The title is a winner. Will be talked about by patrons. Should enlist attention of all parents. Making a play for parents matinee or evening would be a good angle.

Drawing Power—This will draw everywhere regardless of locality. Once seen is bound to interest those who have spark of humanity. Is big enough to go in for the week. Star will draw. Also the child actress. Should be exploited for heart appeal.

"Elope If You Must"

Fox—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS feature looks decidedly better than the majority which have come from the Fox lots starring Eileen Percy. While it boasts too much sparkle at the beginning to keep such a dizzy pace it manages to finish with a fair burst of speed. The trouble is it starts off with a typical farce tempo and the high jinks give way to a zippy chase of the slapstick brand. There is hardly enough substance to extend through five or six reels. Condensed into a polite three reeler it would carry a spontaneity and compactness largely absent in this edition.

The padding is noticeable in the manner in which scenes are held until every ounce of vital matter has been squeezed from them. But the beginning carries a kick. You look upon an actress and her sweetheart, also a member of the profession, attempting to beat their way on a train. They are rescued from this trying situation by a benefactor who consents to pay their fare on condition that they aid him in marrying his daughter to the man of his choice and forget the hand-picked specimen chosen by his wife. That's about all there is to "Elope If You Must."

The interest slackens when incidental byplay is introduced to keep it going. It's a helter-skelter line of action which taxes the spectator because there is no single thread to keep him at attention. It ends according to the scheme of the benefactor. Mother's choice and the daughter decide to elope and the heroine has a tough assignment on her hands obeying the instructions of the father. The picture becomes slapstick comedy at the beginning of the third reel. At that it manages to please after a fashion.

The Cast

Nancy Moore.....Eileen Percy
Jazz Hennessy.....Edward Sutherland
Willie Weems.....Joseph Bennett
Elizabeth Magruder.....Mildred Davenport
Mrs. Magruder.....Mary Huntress
Warren Holt.....Larry Steers
Mr. Magruder.....Harvey Clarke

By E. J. Rath. Scenario by Joseph Franklin Poland. Directed by C. R. Wallace. Produced by Fox. Photographed by Otto Brauntigan.

The Story—Treats of a stranded actress and her sweetheart who are saved the embarrassment of being put off the train for non-payment of fares by the generosity of a fellow passenger who consents to pay their fare on condition that they help him in frustrating his daughter's marriage to a man he dislikes. After many complications the young couple succeed in their task.

Classification—Farce-comedy which develops a note of slapstick. Concerns the frustration of a marital intrigue. Develops romance.

Production Highlights — The introductory reel which discloses first rate comedy adventure. The breezy acting of players. Satisfactory production in a technical way.

Exploitation Angles—This is a farce-comedy which will need a deal of exploitation to put it over. Far better than the previous Eileen Percy releases. The title can be advertised in a teaser campaign.

Drawing Power—Best for the small houses which have a daily change of program. Best

"The Green Temptation"

Paramount—6165 Feet

(Reviewed by J. S. Dickerson)

FOR about the first half of this picture, nothing of recent release can eclipse it in atmosphere, incident, action or acting. Afterward there is a slump that brings the average down to just a good picture that gives Betty Compson wonderful acting opportunities and Theodore Kosloff a fine role as an international crook.

The principal fault of the tag of the story seems to be that its perfect continuity of the first three reels becomes episodic and involved. You see the heroine, an Apache thief, join the Red Cross in France to escape arrest and then you are told that her experiences have purified her soul. So far excellent. Then come detached sequences that have to be explained by titles in which all the principal characters are brought together again in America by a dint of much dovetailing and with considerable melodrama in connection with the theft of a certain emerald that has first figured in the story when the locale was in Paris.

Miss Compson is the dominant figure of the first part of the story and never has she appeared to better advantage and never has her particular type of beauty been so appealing. There has been a most painstaking attempt to make a really big picture. Nothing in the way of sets, costuming, atmosphere has been stinted. There is a fine cast of types playing even the bits. The camera work and lightings are exceptional. The direction, William D. Taylor's last work, is above reproach.

Among the players who are entitled to equal credit with the star are Mahlon Hamilton who makes a part possessing few possibilities interesting; Neely Edwards as a Parisian Apache and Mr. Kosloff previously mentioned.

The Cast

Geneile, Coralyn, Joan Parker.....Betty Compson
John Allenby.....Mahlon Hamilton
Gaspard.....Theodore Kosloff
Pitou.....Neely Edwards
Hugh Duyker.....Edward Burns
Duchesse de Chazarin.....Lynore Lynnard
Dolly Dunton.....Mary Thurman
M. Jounet.....M. Von Hardenberg
Mrs. Weedon Duyker.....Betty Brice
Mr. Weedon Duyker.....Arthur Hull

Story by Constance Lindsay Skinner under the title of "The Noose." Directed by William D. Taylor. Scenario by Monte M. Katterjohn and Julia Crawford Ivers.

The Story—A Parisian dancer, member of a band of Apaches, joins the Red Cross to escape arrest. Her experiences purify her soul and she comes to America to begin life anew. At a house party she encounters one of her former companions posing as a Belgian diplomat but whose real purpose in America is to steal an emerald owned by their hostess. To frustrate his plans the girl removes the emerald from the woman's neck and secretes it on the person of her lover. The crook learns of the trick and attempts to steal the gem but is shot by a detective who has been watching him.

Classification—Romantic melodrama of the Parisian underworld with the star appearing in a role that calls for considerable versatility.

Production Highlights—Acting of the whole cast, Apache atmosphere, fine attention to detail and suspense and incident of the early reels.

"The Man Who Paid"

Apfel Productions—4950 Feet

(Reviewed by J. S. Dickerson)

AS a drama of the great out-doors where nothing that is particularly new in plot can be expected, "The Man Who Paid" is to be rated as a better than average production, in which fine scenic shots, physical action and romance are divided equally.

The story is just another "the villain still pursued her" concoction in which a French-Canuck desiring the wife of the factor at the trading post, conspires to kill the husband and when foiled from time as the action progresses, only renews his efforts, but the individual sequences have considerable originality and no end of action. There is some good detail concerning life at a trading post, and an occasional bit of comedy relief.

Wilfred Lytell is presented as the hero but much better acting opportunities are given Norma Shearer as the factor's wife, all of which she embraces with a poise and skill that stamps this new-comer to the screen as an actress of promise. The girl has beauty and screen personality and she can act. Even in the wild melodrama that many parts of the picture exhibit, she is able to make her work hold attention and her role seem real.

The Cast

Oliver Thornton.....Wilfred Lytell
Jeanne, his wife.....Norma Shearer
Little Jeanne, their child.....Florence Rogan
Louis Duclos, a trapper.....Fred C. Jones
Anton Barbier, his partner.....Bernard Siegle
McNeill, Oliver's storekeeper.....David Hennessy
Guy Thornton, Oliver's brother.....Charles Beyer
Lizette, nurse girl at Thornton's.....Erminie Gagnon
Songo, an Indian guide.....Frank Montgomery

Produced by Apfel Productions, Inc. Directed by Oscar Apfel. Story and scenario by Marion Brooks. Cameraman, Alfred Gondolfin.

The Story—An unscrupulous trapper desiring the wife of the young factor at the trading post, conspires to kill the husband but is thwarted in his purpose and is finally killed by an Indian whom he has double crossed. The factor has been unjustly accused of a crime, same being the reason for his coming to the post. His innocence is finally proven when the real culprit confesses. The factor and his brother also discover a silver mine which makes everyone rich as well happy.

Classification—Action melodrama of life in the North woods with carefully selected backgrounds and considerable atmospheric detail.

Production Highlights — Beautiful scenic shots, acting of Norma Shearer as the heroine, several good fights, commendable detail in some of the trading post scenes.

Equity Sells More Rights

R. D. Lewis and Fred Martin Latest Buyers of "Wandering Boy"

L. T. PELLERIN, President of the R. D. Lewis Film Company, has negotiated a deal with Equity which gives the Lewis Company, the Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas rights on the B. F. Ziedman production, "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" The picture which has proven one of the most smashing successes the independent field has known, is said to be the most expensive picture to go in that territory for some time and the Lewis Film Company is planning big things for it.

A campaign to advertise the picture is now being conducted by the purchasers who maintained their principal office in Dallas, Texas, with branch offices at Oklahoma City, Okla., and Little Rock Ark. All the facilities at the disposal of this important releasing company have been put into full swing for the reception of "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" which they expect to release on or about April 1.

Before the release date, pre-reviews will be held in the principal cities of that territory for the benefit of the exhibitors. These reviews will be put on in elaborate style and will give the exhibitors invaluable hints as to how the picture should be put on in their theatres.

North and South Carolina territory rights to "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" have been bought by Fred Martin, Manager of Continental Pictures Corporation, situated at No. 10 Graham Street, Charlotte, N. C. This is the first big picture Mr. Martin has bought for distribution in his own organization and he states that he is going to put the picture over in an unusual way. Plans are now being rushed through for a show that is going to be built around the production and this in connection with the picture will form a road show that will travel through that territory.

Graphic Exchanges Formed

Abramson Forms Partnerships for Distribution of Graphic Product

IVAN ABRAMSON, president of Graphic Film Corporation, returned to New York this week with news of a new plan for the distribution of Graphic product. Mr. Abramson has arranged to take into partnership twenty-one independent exchanges, and has laid plans for the addition of six more territorial distributing interests, all of whom will be known as Graphic Exchanges and will exclusively handle Graphic output.

Such an act of consolidation, it was stated at the Graphic office, long planned and personally worked out by Abramson on his eight weeks' trip to every large center in the United States represents a saving hand and a revival of activity for both himself and the total of twenty-seven exchanges who are lettering the new Graphic Exchange trade mark on their doors. Individual corporations, it was admitted, have been formed by Abramson with the exchange in each case giving the latter practically a fifty per cent interest in all Graphic product for a period of five years. The exchange in turn agrees to handle all Abramson pictures during that period. What such an arrangement means, stated the president of Graphic, is the life of the independent and as the first real answer to larger interests for a right to that life, will soon be readily apparent in the new organization which will make more real big pictures than was ever possible, heretofore.

Said Mr. Abramson "The guarantee of my new national distribution under terms that make for a regulated circulation of Graphic pictures has relieved me in the first place of the worry and uncertainty of selling Graphic pictures. Every Graphic picture made from now on will be accorded the opportunities of sales exploitation and one-hundred per cent distribution that only the big companies heretofore have been in a position to give their product. In the second place further financial security that has accrued through my contracts will make possible the making of that much advertised but seldom realized thing, the big independent production. In the third place our consolidation has pulled together twenty-eight different elements of the industry, twenty-eight seperate units affected and harassed by the threatened monoply into a determined, efficient and exceedingly strong organization for the purpose of turning out regularly a type of picture that is certainly going to give the independent exhibitor something to look forward to."

Brandt to Distribute Eddie Polo Serial

JOE BRANDT, well known in the independent distributing field and active in the management of the affairs of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, was elected this week to the presidency of the Star Serial Corporation, a motion picture company organized under the laws of the State of New York to produce and market serials.

Simultaneously it was announced that the first official act of the new company was the acquisition in its entirety of the Eddie Polo Serial Corporation, producers of Polo's widely-heralded initial chapter-play, "Cap'n Kidd," and which company, it is said, holds a contract with Polo covering the production of a series of independently produced serials.

Charles Schwerin Joins Arrow Film Corp.

W. Ray Johnston, vice-president and sales manager of the Arrow Film Corporation, announces the addition of Charles Schwerin as special representative attached to the sales department. Mr. Schwerin is well known in the industry, having long been identified with the motion picture business. He joined Arrow this week, immediately left on a trip, first stopping point being Washington, D. C., from whence he will go to Alanta, Ga.

Eddie Polo Back with Florida Exteriors

Eddie Polo, celebrated serial star, returned this week from a four-weeks' sojourn in the Florida Everglades, where, together with his company of players, he filmed the necessary exteriors for "Cap'n Kidd," his first independently produced serial production in which he will be featured and which will be distributed on the state rights market by the Star Serial Corporation.

Polo and his company of players moved into the Peerless Studio in Fort Lee this week and found a force of carpenters busy at work erecting "sets," many of which were in their final stages of completion. The "shooting" of many important scenes will be begun just as soon as the important "sets" now being erected are completed.

Armstrong Series Coming

Pacific Film to Distribute Comedy Series Now in Production

JNO. J. HAYES, President of the Pacific Film Company of Culver City, California, announces a new series of two-reel comedies starring Billy Armstrong.

Financed largely by a group of former associates on the Mack Sennett "lot," "Billy" Armstrong, well known for his comedy work under the banners of Fox, Keystone, Century and Sennett, is now being starred by the Reaguer Productions, Inc., a new producing concern that will make a series of 18 two-reel fun films for state rights release through the Pacific Film Company of Culver City.

Work on Armstrong's first comedy, "Slow and Easy," is now under way at the former Bronx Studios in Edendale, Cal., which have undergone improvements estimated at $20,000. New dressing room units and a dark stage have been constructed for Armstrong. The interior of the offices and laboratory have also been changed.

Rea Hunt is directing Armstrong from a 'script prepared by Charles Diltz. The latter is also general manager of the Reaguer firm. Armstrong's support is headed by Patricia McGill and Hap H. Ward, Robert Smith also from the Sennett forces is camerman.

Mrs. Singer reports great progress in the sales of the feature pictures that the Pacific are state-righting.

They are Henry B. Walthall in "The Able Minded Lady," Ora Carew in "The Girl From Rocky Point" and "The Forest King," written by L. V. Jefferson.

Territories Sold on Billy West Comedies

Some of the biggest territories in the country sold, and several others pending, before a bit of production work has been begun, is the record with which the new series of Billy West Comedies was started. This is the series which is now being made for distribution through the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation.

The first release on the series has now been practically completed and will soon be shipped to the New York offices of C. B. C. for release through the States Right Market. It has been titled "You'd Be Surprised."

The first sale was that of the New York territory to Myriad Pictures Corp., which purchased right to the New York and Northern New Jersey territory. The Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey territory has been sold to Masterpiece Film Attractions of Philadelphia. Celebrated Players Corporation of Chicago has bought the series for Northern Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. Another sale definitely completed is that of Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia and Virginia to Federated Film Exchange of Baltimore.

"Yankee Doodle" Release

Burnside to Send Out Picture as Road-Show in Ten Big Cities

SINCE the publication of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS review of "Yankee Doodle, Jr.," M. J. Burnside's independent production, his offices have been deluged with inquiries as to the method of distribution that will be employed to bring this picture before the public.

In response to all inquiries that have been addressed to him Mr. Burnside has issued a general statement for the benefit of the trade which covers every angle of the distribution scheme that will be used. In explaining his ideas for the sale and exploitation of "Yankee Doodle, Jr.," Mr. Burnside said: "After reading the splendid reviews that have been written on 'Yankee Doodle, Jr.,' I have decided to send this film out as a road show. I naturally am aware of the fact that this picture has more genuine exploitation possibilities than any other independent production on the market today. My statement has been verified by every trade journal reviewer who has looked at the film.

"In addition to telling the state right buyers and theatre owners of the country that 'Yankee Doodle, Jr.,' is a real hit, the gentlemen of the press have helped me considerably with ideas for publicity.

"My long years of experience in the legitimate branch of the theatrical business, as well as the many years that I have been engaged in the sale and distribution of motion pictures, has prompted me to send out 'Yankee Doodle, Jr.,' as a road show. I can assure every exhibitor and showman in the country that this show will receive the most gigantic and far reaching publicity campaign ever accorded to any film play. This, I know, has been a stock phrase, employed by the producers for years. Generally, when an independent production of any worth is offered to the state right buyers an elaborate press book is prepared and here the co-operation stops. This will be the point where my publicity campaign will begin.

"As further proof that I intend to exploit 'Yankee Doodle, Jr.,' along mammoth lines, I have engaged Paul Gray as general press representative.

Eddie Polo, star and co-produc of "Cap'n Kidd," first of a seri of independently produced seria which he will produce for distrib tion on the state rights market, a nounces this week the appointme of A. L. Feinman to the post Publicity and Exploitation Direct of the star serial corporation.

Contents of Latest Official Movie Chat

THE next issue of the "Official Urban Movie Chats of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America" strikes as its opening keynote a thought in the interest of the entire industry when it says:

"The Motion Picture visualizes all, comprehends all, brings everything to you, teaches through the universal language of the eye and is the world's greatest constructive force."

Then it leaps to a section of informative entertainment, showing some of the activities of people in other lands, particularly the residents of the Spree Wald in Germany. A glimpse into industry is given in a visit to an engraving plant, where the processes of electrotyping are explained.

"Curious Hobbies" are devoted to a man who spends his life raising prize fowls on a Georgia farm. The scientific section is built on a demonstration of the chemistry of combustion. For the womenfolks there is another "Household Hint," this one devoted to a new kind of milk bottle which automatically separates the cream from the milk. The Public Welfare department is taken from the activities of the Reedham Orphanage in Purley, England.

Closing the reel is the Public Forum.

Old Testament Film Is Well Received

The decision of Louis Weiss, executive of Artclass Pictures Corporation, to distribute "After Six Days," the tentative title of the film production of the Old Testament, via the state right exchanges, has elecited hearty approval from the leading independent distributors of the United States and Canada. Weiss has been in receipt of numerous letters during the past six weeks, all voicing the opinion that this production will be one of the most distinctive and important which the state right man has ever had the opportunity to handle.

Anchor Film to Have New Series

William LaPlante, who produced Metro's "Fightin' Mad," has secured the film rights to six books, from the pen of an American author, whose name Mr. LaPlante will announce when production on the first of this series commences. According to Mr. LaPlante, the picturizations of this series will be released through Anchor Film Distributors, Inc.

Johnny Hines Features

C. C. Burr Takes Glendale Studio; Will Also Produce Comedy Series

IN view of the exhibitor demand for further features starring Johnny Hines, whose first six reel starring vehicle "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" was acclaimed everywhere, and in line with his general policy of expansion, C. C. Burr announced that he had taken over the Glendale studios in Long Island, where all of the Burr attractions will hereafter be made. The old Mastodon studio on 54th street, where Johnny Hines has been making the "Torchy" comedies for the past year and a half, proved inadequate for increased production, and Mr. Burr, realizing the possibilities of the Long Island studio, immediately contracted to take it over for all his productions.

This property covers sixty acres of land and affords excellent opportunities for both interior and exterior work. Two stages, one 135 by 200 and the other 100 by 165, make the studio ideal for the preparation and shooting of large interior sets, so necessary to feature production work. In addition to the large number of dressing rooms and offices in the main building, the small hotel, standing next to the main studio, will be utilized for dressing room purposes.

Important to exhibitors and exchangemen is the fact that in view of the greater facilities for production, Mr. Burr intends to produce a new brand of comedies shortly that will be known as the Burr comedies. This will in no way affect the "Torchy" comedies that Johnny Hines is making for Burr, but will rather be in line with C. C. Burr's policy to increase the cutput of his organization.

Production on "Go Get 'Em Gallagher," Johnny Hines' newest starring vehicle, will mark the first work at the new Burr studio in Glendale, as soon as Hines completes "Torchy's Hold-Up," now being filmed at C. C. Burr's Mastodon studios in New York City.

Pyramid Starts Production

Martha Mansfield Has Big Role in "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge"

ACTUAL filming of "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge," the second production of Pyramid Pictures, Inc., has been started at the Pyramid Astoria studio on Long Island, under the direction of Ray C. Smallwood.

Martha Mansfield has been cast in the principal role of "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge." Miss Mansfield was the final selection from a large field of leading women, all of stellar calibre. A particularly strong cast has been selected to surround Miss Mansfield, prominent in which is Henry Harmon, one of the most capable character actors in pictures, who attained lasting faame by his work in "'Ception Shoals." with Nazimova.

Others who are already at work in the picture are Fred Jones, who plays a light heavy role; Tom Blake, who appears as an apache leader, and Mario Carillo, cast as a French dancing master.

"The Queen of the Moulin Rouge" contains a story suggested by Paul M. Potter's play of the same name which enjoyed a run in New York and throughout the country several years ago. A realistic French atmosphere is assured the production when it is considered that the art director is Ben Carre, a Frenchman, with a long experience in stage and picture work both in this country and his native land.

Trade Greets "Blaze Away"

First Di Lorenzo Picture Given Big Reception by Independents

THE offices of Di Lorenzo, Inc., distributors of the new "Big Boy" (Guinn) Williams series produced by the Frederick Herbst Productions, and directed by W. Hughes Curran, have been in receipt of many congratulatory messages on the trade showing of "Blaze Away," "Big Boy" Williams' latest westerner, which also received praiseworthy comment in the columns of the various trade papers. Almost immediately after the showing, Di Lorenzo, Inc., reported that the foreign rights to "Blaze Away" had been sold along with the close of important territory to prominent states-right exchanges in the south and middle west. Pending negotiations on other territories according to Di Lorenzo, should make for a rapid turnover on "Blaze Away."

Commenting on this, the first of the "Big Boy" Williams pictures for his organization, Mr. Di Lorenzo said: "Our organization was formed primarily for the distribution of worthwhile features for the independent market, and after a great deal of negotiations for a star whose personality and ability could be built up to become a by-word in the motion picture industry, we were gratified to obtain the services of 'Big Boy' (Quinn) Williams.

"School Days" Runs Six Weeks in Toronto

FOR six weeks the Grand Opera House, Toronto, played the Warner Brothers' production, Gus Edwards' "School Days," featuring Wesley Barry, to phenomenal business, according to report. This run is said to be the longest that has thus far been accorded the picture.

The Stephenson Attractions, Ltd., Toronto, controlling the Canadian rights to the feature, cooperated with the management of the Grand Opera House in putting over street ballyhoos, newspaper advertisements and publicity, and an elaborate presentation of a "School Days Revue" with a number of local talented youngsters.

Dot Farley to Play in Cruelywed Comedy

Word was received by the Arrow Film Corporation this week from S. H. Horzig, producer of the Arrow Cruelywed Comedies that Dot Farley has been secured to play the part of Mrs, Cruelywed opposite Paul Weigel, and that the first comedy in which she will appear would be, "Husband and Strife," directed by Mr. Horzig.

Miss Farley is one of the best known screen comedians in the business, having been identified with such companies as Essanay, Keystone, Universal, Fox Sunshine Comedies, Century Comedies, and having had wide experience on the stage in drama and musical comedy.

"Felix," in Toy Form, to Be Sold to Public

Through an arrangement entered into this week between Pat Sullivan, producer of the "Felix" cartoon comics the series of which are distributed on the state rights market by Miss M. J. Winkler, and a well-known toy manufacturer, a novelty toy cat to be likened in appearance to "Felix" will be introduced to the public and sold to department stores, toy shops, mail order houses and concessionaires throughout the world. The cat will be known and marketed under the name of "Felix."

Brandt-Davis Sale

"Life's Greatest Question," the Geo. H. Davis-Joe Brandt feature in which Roy Stewart is featured with Louise Lovely and Dorothy Valegra, has been sold to the R. D. Lewis Company of Dallas. The Lewis company will handle the feature in the Texas, Arkansas, and Oklahoma territory.

D. and W. Will Produce Holman Day Series

From the office of D. & W. Productions comes the announcement of a series of Holman Day Special Stories, to be produced by that organization for the State right market. This series will be written particularly for the screen by Holman Day. Also of interest is the return to the megaphone of C. Edward Davenport.

The cast of "The 49th Talesman," the initial production of the Holman Day series, has been carefully selected by Mr. Davenport from Broadway talent.

60 Per Cent of "Felix" Territory Sold

The success which has attended the sale of the "Felix" cartoon comics, the series of which are controlled for independent distribution by Miss M. J. Winkler, is declared to be unprecedented in state rights marketing, it is asserted. In less than five weeks—for it is little more than a fortnight that Miss Winkler closed for the "Felix" product, fully 60 per cent of the state rights territory has been satisfactorily disposed of, and, according to a current announcement, additional sales covering a greater percentage of territory are now in their final stages of completion.

Joe Weil on Sales Trip for Selig Serial

Joe Weil, who has been handling the campaign on "The Jungle Goddess," for the Export & Import Film Company, has been appointed special sales representative on the serial and has left on an extended tour of the exchanges to close up the contracts which have been pending on Selig's completion of the chapter picture.

Chapin and Diamond to Assist Hugo Ballin

James Chapin, assistant director of the Warner Brothers productions, "Why Girls Leave Home," "School Days," and "Your Best Friend," and James Diamond, who photographed the latter attraction, will shortly leave for the west coast to assist Hugo Ballin in the production of "Other Women's Clothes," featuring Mabel Ballin.

Shallenberger on Trip to Mid-West

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, is away on a trip, having left on the Twentieth Century last Thursday for Chicago. From Chicago Dr. Shallenberger will go to Kansas City, where he expects to spend a few days, then will return to Chicago, and thence back to the home office. Dr. Shallenberger is expected back to the home office the early part of next week. Thomas A. Curran, Arrow special representative, accompanied Dr. Shallenberger as far as Chicago.

Chatkin Buys Hallrooms

Forthcoming Series Sold Outright for State Right Distribution

ONE of the most important deals in many months is that of the next series of Percy and Ferdie Hallroom Comedies, which has been sold outright for the United States and Canada by the producers, to the Coast Film Sales Company, headed by D. J. Chatkin.

Mr. Chatkin, who is now in New York, said this week that he considers the acquisition of these comedies a tremendously important one. The sale applies to the 1922-23 series of twenty-six two-reelers which are to be produced upon the completion of the present series now being distributed through Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc. The present Federated series is still some releases from completion and the sale is an unusual one in that, with the series for Chatkin not even begun, it offers an evidence of the great popularity these comedies have achieved.

The deal was consummated before Mr. Chatkin left for the East, between him and Harry Cohn, the producer—and he will now spend some time in the East going over with the New York officials of the Hallroom Boys Photoplays, Inc., distribution plans for the new series.

"The new series will be distributed on the State Right plan," Mr. Chatkin announces, and plans are already under way to insure the highest class, funniest two-reelers possible to release. More time and more money will be spent on the making of each comedy than has ever before been spent on two-reel comedy releases. All distribution will be handled from the Los Angeles office of the Coast Film Sales Company, at No. 1670 Sunset Boulevard."

D. J. Chatkin, who heads the Coast Film Sales Corporation, is well known in the film industry, being one of the pioneers in distribution and sales of short reel subjects. He was one of the organizers of Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc.; also a member of the Board of Directors, as well as Secretary and Treasurer of Federated Film Distributors, Inc., of California, operating two short reel exchanges on the Coast.

"Your Best Friend Opens"

Warner Bros. Feature is Shown to Notable Gathering in Philadelphia

THE premiere presentation of Warner Brothers production, "Your Best Friend," starring Vera Gordon, was given at the Stanton theatre, Phila., on March 19, under the auspices of Lou Berman, of the Independent Film Company of that city, to a large and enthusiastic gathering of prominent Pennsylvania exhibitors.

The Stanton is one of the Stanley houses, and long before the doors were thrown open a huge throng of picture people gathered about the theatre. The picture was preceded by a simple and effective prologue, as suggested by a portion of the picture. A young woman dressed as Miss Gordon is dressed in the film sang a mother tune, and as she sang she lit a half dozen candles. Following the last line of the song, the lights went out and the picture was screened. Shortly before the end of the film, the singer repeated her song and this time the screen revealed Miss Gordon lighting the candles. Altogether it was impressive, and the response of the audience as the last reel was unfolded was a hearty tribute to the occasion.

"Your Best Friend," produced by Harry Rapf, is a delightfully human story with a rich vein of laughter and pathos. It serves to reveal anew the ability of Miss Gordon as an emotional actress.

In the cast were Belle Bennett, as the misguided daughter, Beth Mason, as the society crazed mother, Harry Benham, in the role of the faithful son, Stanley Price, as the black sheep, and Dore Davidson, portraying the role of a kindly old bookkeeper.

Among those present at the showing were Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Mastbaum, Harry M. Warner, Mr. Rapf, Frank Buehler, A. Einstein, William Metzler, Joseph Kohn, Tim Leahy, of the Exhibitors Herald, Roger Ferri, of the M. P. World, Mr. Jenkins of the Trade Review, Mr. and Mrs. George Gould, of Motion Picture News, Mr. Gordon, husband of Vera Gordon, Blythe Sherwood, Eddie Bonns and Louis Marangella, of the Warner publicity department.

"The photography is uniformly splendid, even in the half lights and the atmosphere, while lengthy, is more veracious than that of The Sheik, the tents smacking less of a corner in the charity bazaar."—

Art Brand to Revive Gish-Reid Feature

The Art Brand Productions, Inc., headed by Jol Brandt and Bert Adler, announce this week the revival of a feature entitled "The Fatal Marriage," based upon the photoplay "Enoch Arden," which was made under the supervision of D. W. Griffith and has as its stars Lillian Gish and Wallace Reid.

It is stated that "The Fatal Marriage" in its present form is practically ready for showing, and is now in process of final editing.

Arthur Smallwood Made Amer. Releasing Officer

Walter E. Greene, president, and Fred B. Warren, vice-president of the American Releasing Corporation, announce the election of Arthur N. Smallwood as secretary and treasurer of that organization.

Mr. Smallwood has been absent from active picture circles since 1915. Prior to that year he was prominent in the production of short length pictures and educational features.

"Should Husbands Know" New Pyramid Title

Pyramid Pictures, Inc., announces that the title of its third production has been changed from "The Mayor's Wife" to "Should Husbands Know?" This is the picture adapted from the story by Anna Katherine Green in which Betty Blythe has the principal role and which is now nearing completion under the direction of Kenneth Webb at the Pyramid studio.

Prohibition Officers to See "Bootleggers"

A special showing of "The Bootleggers," one of the Entertainment Series distributed by the Gunning Organization, is being arranged for local prohibition officers, according to word from the Gunning home-office. Many of the incidents in "The Bootleggers" have been taken from U. S. Prohibition Enforcement records, some of which were seen under special permission from Government agents.

"Beauty's Worth" at Rivoli, March 26

Cosmopolitan Productions announces that Marion Davies in "Beauty's Worth" will be seen on Broadway at the Rivoli theatre on March 26th instead of the Rialto on April 2nd, as previously arranged. "Beauty's Worth" will be Miss Davies's third picture on Broadway since November, the other two having been "Enchantment" and "The Bride's Play."

The story was written by Sophie Kerr and adapted by Luther Reed. Robert G. Vignola directed the picture, and the lavish settings were created by Joseph Urban. Forrest Stanley is the leading man. "Beauty's Worth" is a Paramount release.

N. Y. Hippodrome Shows Christie Comedy

"A BARNYARD CAVALIER," made by Christie for Educational release, began on Monday, March 20, an indefinite run at the New York Hippodrome, the world's largest playhouse.

Fifty of the regular one sheets prepared by Educational for use in connection with this subject were bought by the Hippodrome management, and have been placed in various parts of the city. Exceptional exploitation along other lines also has been given to this two-reel fun film, and the picture is given a fine presentation.

Other big first run bookings for Educational Pictures in the New York Metropolitan district include "The Man Who Always Sat Down," a Robert C. Bruce Scenic Beautiful, at the Cameo Theater, New York, where it began an indefinite run on Sunday, March 19; "And Women Must Weep," a Robert C. Bruce Wilderness Tale, at the Branford, Newark, beginning Saturday March 18; and "No Parking," a Christie Comedy, featuring Neal Burns, with Helen Darling, Jane Hart and "Laddie," at the Paramount, Newark, beginning Saturday, March 18.

"Yellow Men and Gold" for Early Release

Goldwyn's production of Gouverneur Morris' melodrama, "Yellow Men and Gold," is scheduled for early release, announces Goldwyn.

A complete exhibitors' service book is being prepared by the publicity and advertising departments.

"Its settings and atmosphere probably would satisfy The Sheik himself."

Twelve Films Recently Finished Will Be Released in Near Future

TWELVE productions were completed recently in the studios of the independent producing companies whose product is released through the First National exchanges. Norma Talmadge completed work on her screen adaptation of Honore Balzac's romantic drama "The Duchess of Langeais." The picture was directed by Frank Lloyd, and the supporting cast includes Conway Tearle, Adolphe Jean Manjoy, Rosemary Theby, Kate Lester, Irving Cummings, Otis Harlan and Thomas Ricketts. The scenario was written by Frances Marion.

Katherine MacDonald's newest starring vehicle "Heroes and Husbands" has also been completed. Supporting Miss MacDonald are Nigel Barrie, Charles Gerard, Charles Clary, Nona Kingsley and Ethel Kay. Directed by Chet Withey.

Much of the action in "The Soul Seeker," in which Dorothy Phillips stars under the direction of Allen Holubar, takes place at sea. This big sea drama was filmed in San Francisco and off the coast of Southern California. The cast includes Robert Ellis, Gertrude Astor, Wallace Beery, Jack Donovan, James O. Barrows, Frances Raymond, and William "Fat" Fong.

Another picture just finished is John M. Stahl's "One Clear Call," the story of which is laid in an Alabama town and involves a clan of night riders. The all-star cast includes Henry B. Walthal, Claire Windsor, Milton Sills, Irene Rich, Joseph Dowling, Shannon Day, Fred Kelsey, Annette De Foe, Doris Pawn, Donald MacDonald and Albert Mac Quarrie. Directed by John M. Stahl. Adapted by Bess Meredyth from Francis Nimmo Green's famous story.

Constance Talmadge appears in "Her Primitive Lover." In the cast with Constance Talmadge are Harrison Ford, Kenneth Harlan. Directed by Sidney Franklin, from an original story by Edgar Selwyn. Continuity by Frances Marion.

Other First National subjects just completed include: Marshall Neilan's "Fools First," the cast of which presents Claire Windsor, Richard Dix, Claude Gillingwater, Ray Griffith, George W. Seigman, George Dromgold, Helen Lynch, Hazel Keener, Shannon Day and Leo White; Thomas H. Ince's "Jim," an original screen story by Bradley King, featuring Marguerite De La Motte, Milton Sills and John Bowers; Maurice Tourneur's "Lorna Doone," the featured players of which are Madge Bellamy, Frank Keenan, John Bowers and Donald MacDonald; Thomas H. Ince's "The Hottentot" with Douglas Maclean; J. Parker Read's "Pawned," directed by Irvin Willat; Thomas H. Ince's "Skin Deep," directed by Lambert Hillyer; and J. L. Frothingham's "The Man Who Smiled," directed by Edward Sloman.

Praise "Prisoner of Zenda"

Rex Ingram's Greatest Since "Four Horsemen," Asserts Metro Officials

"THE Prisoner of Zenda" is Rex Ingram's greatest production since he made for Metro "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

This is the unanimous opinion of officials of the home-office of Metro Pictures Corporation, in New York, after inspection in the company's projection rooms of the first print to arrive from the Hollywood studios. This print was sent last week by Mr. Ingram by special messenger from the West Coast.

Commenting upon his impression of the new $1,000,000 photoplay of Anthony Hope's novel, as dramatized by Edward Rose, William E. Atkinson, vice-president and general manager of Metro, said:

"It is the biggest box-office bet we have ever handled. In saying that I realize it is a superlative statement, but 'The Prisoner of Zenda' is a picture of superlatives: its story, its handling by Ingram, the action of the cast, the tremendous settings—they're superlative, the last word in their fields, and the combined effect is in concordance with these elements.

"Nothing has been done to approach the power of 'The Prisoner of Zenda' since 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse.' They are two of the greatest pictures ever made. They are essentially different. The later one is sheer romance. The earlier story, that of Ibanez's novel, is the bearer of a theme of tremendous import to humanity.

"And unlimited as the box-office strength of 'The Four Horsemen' appears to be, I believe that 'The Prisoner of Zenda' will surpass it. The production is as big, and even more colorful. Mr. Ingram's direction was never better, the cast is about as nearly perfect as one could find—and the story alone is enough to appeal to everyone who has read a book in the last twenty years.

"A Sailor Made Man" Sets Two Records

DURING its recent engagement at the Symphony theatre, Los Angeles, Harold Lloyd's "A Sailor Made Man" set two records, according to word from Dr. Brockwedel, received at the home-office of Associated Exhibitors. Approximately 150,000 persons are reported to have witnessed the showing of the comedy at the Symphony.

"In addition to being the longest run on record for any comedy," Dr. Brockwedel is quoted as saying, "this run set new attendance figures far surpassing those established by Harold Lloyd in 'Never Weaken,' when it ran at the Symphony. 'A Sailor Made Man' enjoyed a run of fifty days and was featured at 369 performances, as against forty-four for 'Never Weaken.'"

The picture closed its last week with business as good as during the first seven days, declared Dr. Brockwedel.

Film Based on Kipling Ballad Due April 2

Pathe announces for release on April 2nd a screen adaptation of Rudyard Kipling's "Ballad of Fisher's Boarding House." The atmosphere and action described in the Kipling ballad are said to be faithfully reproduced in the Pathe release. The story has for its climax the regeneration of a woman of the slums, Anne of Austria, by the discovery of a crucifix on the body of the Danish sailor, Hans, who has been slain by the woman's jealous lover, Salem Hardicker. The action is laid in a sailor's boarding house. Especial care was taken in the selection of the sailor types referred to in the verse. The trenchant lines of the ballad are said to serve admirably as titles for the picture.

"Holds the interest well all the way through. The atmosphere is also realistic."

—Harrison's Reports on "The Sheik's Wife."

Andree Peyre, French aviatrix, engaged for the next Pathe serial with Ruth Roland

Aviatrix to Appear in Ruth Roland Serials

Andree Peyre, the 22-year-old "stunt" aviatrix and screen beauty, has been engaged by Pathe for the company supporting Ruth Roland in serials. Miss Peyre left New York for the Pacific Coast last week.

Miss Peyre has had three years' experience in pictures, first with Pathe in France and in the last eighteen months with other organizations in this country. She entered pictures abroad as a consequence of her love and her expertness in aviation. She is fair and slender, and of a type more dainty and girlish than those of any of her competitors in airplane feats. She is an accomplished pilot, holding pilot's licenses here and abroad.

Wide Demand for "Turn to the Right"

The Metro home-office in announcing unusually heavy bookings for its new Rex Ingram special production, "Turn to the Right," estimates that within the first week of its release to the exhibitors of the country "Turn to the Right" will be seen on the screen more than 443 times, which is the record made by the stage version in its number of performances on Broadway. The bookings are coming in so fast, according to the Metro office that no complete compilation can be made. Every section of the country is said to be represented in the bookings. The theatres already signed up are principally in the key-cities of the country.

Current Paramount Issues

Marion Davies Feature and Fourth UFA Chapter Set for March 26th

Paramount releases scheduled for release March 26 are the Cosmopolitant production, "Beauty's Worth," and "Saved by Wireless," the fourth and concluding picture of the UFA series, "The Mistress of the World."

"Beauty's Worth" is a Saturday Evening Post story by Sophier Kerr, contributor of fiction to many of the best known magazines. Luther Reed, who adapted "Behind the Door," "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" and "Enchantment," wrote the scenario and Robert G. Vignola directed. Joseph Urban designed the settings.

Forrest Stanley, who appeared opposite Miss Davies in "Enchantment," is again her leading man in this picture. Other well-known people in the cast are Hallam Cooley, June Elvidge, Truly Shattuck, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Antrim Short, Thomas Jefferson and Martha Mattox; and in the charade scenes, in which Miss Davies appears as a dancer, Gordon and Johnny Dooley.

"Saved by Wireless," which presents the denounement of the intersting plot which runs through the entire series of "The Mistress of the World," is perhaps the most exciting of all the four pictures. In this picture the pinnacle of realism is said to be reached in an earthquake scene.

In this picture, the heroine, Helen Neilsen, portrayed by Mia May, is rescued from the city of Ophir by a giant airplane which is sent out by a European newspaper in response to a wireless message sent by her fellow prisoner, Karpen. This huge air machine, a model of luxuriousness and mechanical genius, wings its way to Europe where the final scenes of the drama are enacted.

Subject Chosen for Carey

"The Battle" to Be the First of Harry Carey's Vehicles for R-C

R-C PICTURES announces that Harry Carey will be starred in "The Battle," an original screen story written especially for Mr. Carey. Elliott Clawson will write the adaptation.

In a statement issued this week from the R-C headquarters, Mr. Carey's career in the portrayal of Western roles is traced from his first venture on the stage in the leading role of "Montana," which Carey himself had written, down to his present affiliation with the R-C Pictures. "Montana" was presented all over the country with considerable success, and with the end of its run Carey again appeared as leading man in "The Heart of Alaska," which he had also written.

Upon the suggestion of Henry Walthall, Carey visited the old Biograph Studio where Griffith gave him a part. From that time forward, Carey stuck to the screen. Among his best productions are "Overland Red," "Riders of Vengeance," "Roped," "Desperate Trails," "The Fox," "Marked Men," "Outcasts of Poker Flat," "The Man Who Wouldn't Shoot" and "Man to Man."

Under his present contract, Mr. Carey is starring for R-C Pictures under the personal management of P. A. Powers, the well-known producer, who recently became affiliated with the R-C Pictures Corporation. Under his new contract, Mr. Carey will be presented in productions that will give him every opportunity for the display of those talents which have made him popular on the screen.

The supporting cast for "The Battle" is now being assembled. The director is said to have been practically decided upon but his identity has not as yet been disclosed.

Wm. Farnum to Star in Bernstein Play

William Fox announces that William Farnum's next picture will be "Shackles of Gold," an adaptation of Henri Bernstein's drama, "Samson."

The direction of the picture is in the hands of Herbert Brenon. The star will be supported by Myrta Bonillas as leading woman. Marie Shotwell, the well known stage player who has appeared in many Broadway successes, also is in the cast.

"Prosperity Ahead" Is Hodkinson Report

"CONDITIONS in some sections of the country are reported to be sixty and seventy per cent better than at this time a year ago. . . . One of the most hopeful indications, it is said, is the tendency on the part of the smaller exhibitors to contract for future dates far in advance of their usual policy."

This is the opinion expressed in a statement received this week from the Hodkinson home-office, following the receipt of reports from its sales foces in the field which are now engaged in the annual Hodkinson Spring Drive. The campaign, which started on March 19, will close April 16. The drive is being characterized by a spirit of keen rivalry between the various Hodkinson exchanges.

The field reports state that exhibitors are looking forward to a good summer business and the return of normal conditions by early fall.

Mae Murray's Next to Be "Broadway Rose"

Mae Murray's next motion picture production, to follow her presentation by Robert Z. Leonard in "Fascination," a forthcoming Metro release, will be a photoplay entitled either "Broadway Rose" or "The Broadway Bubble." Work on it has already begun.

In her new picture the star appears as a dancing girl of the New York stage, and in it the terpsichorean touch will be as pronounced as in her previous productions. Edmund Goulding is the author of the new photoplay. It will be presented and directed by Robert Z. Leonard.

"Four Horsemen" to Be Shown in Spain

Rex Ingram's production for Metro of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," based on the famous novel by Vincente Blasco Ibanez, will be seen in Madrid, Spain, in April.

Elaborate preparations are being made for the Spanish presentation, according to Roy Chandler, the representative of Chipman, Limited, which controls the rights to the Metro production in Spain, Portugal, Italy, Jugoslavia, Greece, Rumania, Turkey and Bulgaria.

"A foreign picture that takes rank with the best that have been imported into this country, from the standpoint of excellence of production, photography, faithfulness to detail and action, while the continuity is rather an improvement on many that have been shown here. It is really an excellent piece of work, certainly the best French film that has been shown here. The true atmosphere of the Levant, which so many film makers have sought to transfer to the screen, is presented in a manner that has the unmistakable mark of fidelity to fact."—New York Mail on "The Sheik's Wife."

Seven Century Comedies Are Honored

THE National Committee for Better Films has selected three out of the four Century Comedies made in January as especially good pictures and equally suitable for children. The two reelers in question were "Horse Sense," with Harry Sweet and Sally, the trained mare; "Little Miss Mischief," starring Baby Peggy; and "Mutts," starring Brownie, the Wonder Dog, supported by an all-dog cast.

For the month of February the National Committee put on its index all four Century Comedies submitted to it, and marked three of them as particularly good for juveniles. The pictures were "Two of a Kind," with Harry Sweet; "Peggy Behave," starring Baby Peggy; "Cheerful Credit," starring Brownie; and "The Dark Horse," with Sally, the trained horse.

Florence Vidor's New Subject Under Way

Production work on "The Real Adventure," starring Florence Vidor, is progressing satisfactorily according to word from the Associated Exhibitors' home-office. King Vidor is directing this feature, and Clyde Fillmore plays opposite the star.

This picture will tell the story of a woman who, to win her husband's admiration and comradeship, as well as love, leaves home and enters upon a professional career. She succeeds so notably in her venture that the husband, in spite of himself, is converted to her way of thinking and accepts her as a real pal and help-mate as well as wife.

Wilson Associate Editor for Goldwyn

Carey Wilson has been made associate editor of the Goldwyn scenario department, according to announcement by Vice President Abraham Lehr. Mr. Wilson will work with Paul Bern, scenario editor, and two other associates, Ralph Block and Clayton Hamilton.

"Chief among the outstanding qualities of 'The Sheik's Wife' is the fact that it doesn't follow along the familiar, beaten path of screen melodrama. Its atmosphere is unique.

"The picture is beautifully photographed, well directed and gives every indication of winning widespread popularity."

Pathe Releases for April 2

Adaptation of Kipling Ballad and Special Review Reel Head Schedule

THE announcement comes with Pathe Exchange, Inc., that its collection of short-subject features and the one serial episode, scheduled for release the week of April 2nd, will be augmented by Rudyard Kipling's "Ballard of Fisher's Boarding House," and a special anniversary issue of the Pathe Review.

"The Opossum" is the latest offering of the series of "Adventures of Bill and Bob," showing the woodland exploits of the youthful hunters and trappers. "Beat It" is the title of the current reissued one-reel comedy starring Harold Lloyd. The three star combination—that of Harold Lloyd, Bebe Daniels and "Snub" Pollard, makes the offering move at a fast and furious rate of speed, piling up laughable situations without number.

"The Anvil Chorus" is the latest Hal Roach comedy featuring "Snub" Pollard. Pollard is assisted in the offering by Marie Mosquini, Noah Young, the Hal Roach comedy staff and a remarkable equine actor—a new addition to the Roach Zoo. The comedy deals with the difficulties experienced by Pollard when he returns from his wedding trip to his bride's home and meets her husky brothers.

"The Mark of Cain" is the new Pathe Playlet scheduled for current release. Irene Castle is starred in the offering with Antonio Moreno featured in the cast. Others playing important roles are J. H. Gilmore, John Sainpolis and Olive Stokes. The short subject feature is a thrilling story of mystery and romance, adapted by Philip Bartholomae from the book of Carolyn Wells. George Fitzmaurice directed the production.

"The Pivoted Rock" is the fourteenth episode of the new Pathe serial, "White Eagle," starring Roland. "The Lion and the Mouse" is the next animated cartoon of the series of "Aesop's Film Fables."

Assembling Cast for "The Christian"

As announced in last week's issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Maurice Tourneur has been engaged by Goldwyn to direct a screen version of Hall Caine's novel, "The Christian." The company is to go abroad in April to film the exteriors of story in its original locales. The members of the cast are now being selected at Culver City by Casting Director Robert B. McIntyre and Vice-President in Charge of Production Abraham Lehr. Work has also been started at the studios on the interior sets as it is now the intention to photograph most of the interiors at the Culver City studio.

Ass'd Exhibs Names Release

"Sunshine Harbor" Due April 2nd Offered as "Springtime Picture"

ASSOCIATED Exhibitors announce for release on April 2nd "Sunshine Harbor," a Playgoers Pictures attraction, which is hailed by Associated Exhibitors' officials as a particularly appropriate springtime release. Emphasis is placed on the title itself as perfectly in keeping with the spirit of the season, while the atmosphere in which many of the scenes are placed and the optimistic note and good cheer weaved into the fabric of the story are also represented as making the production a real first-rate springtime picture.

Prominent in the cast is Margaret Beecher, whose relationship to national celebrities already has won for her a vast amount of effective publicity, it is stated. Miss Beecher is a girl of beauty and of attractive screen personality, whose refinement and remarkable poise are said to enhance greatly a finely-developed sense of dramatic values.

The cast for this production was carefully selected, containing such well known screen figures as Howard Hall, Ralph Harold, Coit Albertson, Dan Jarrett and Myra Brooks. The story was by Jerome N. Wilson and the picture was produced and directed by Edward Hemmer. It is declared that the photographer took full advantage of the opportunities offered in the selection of attractive sets.

"Sunshine Harbor," it should be explained, is a charming little apartment occupied by the southern girl after her removal to New York, and the name was chosen because of the radiant cheerfulness which never deserted her, even when she has been temporarily blinded while "covering" a fire for a newspaper. It is not out of place, perhaps, to repeat that exhibitors will do well to place special emphasis on the fact of the picture's release just as spring is appearing, for in the story it unfolds, the spirit of helpfulness and sacrifice is revealed.

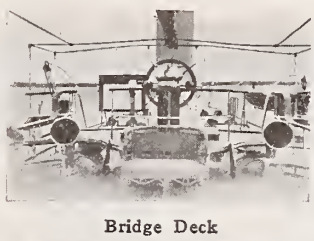
Steam Yacht at a Bargain

HAVING just completed a hunting and fishing yacht for one of our wealthiest sportsmen, he instructed me to dispose of his steam yacht at once—quoting a figure that makes her the best buy ever offered in a yacht—that he might have the services of his captain for the new boat.



Bridge Deck

Quarter Deck

The Consolidated Shiphuilding Co. (Seahury's) huilt her from Gardner's designs. No craft can hoast a finer pedigree. Her boiler is practically new and the engine room will delight a man with mechanical pride.

In the forward end of her mahogany deckhouse, is a large dining-room finished in oak. Next, the pantry. Aft of the engine space, comes the owner's deck stateroom—something few yachts can hoast—with deck toilet. The aft end of deckhouse is one large living, or music room. Below, in the steel hull are six large staterooms, two having brass heds and one twin herths. Two tiled haths, linen and gun lockers are provided.

Although moderate in size, and the most economical steam yacht afloat to operate—running expenses less than that of a 100 foot gasoline yacht—she is large enough to take twelve in owner's party in comfort to the South Seas, the Alaska Inside passage or the West Indies cruise. She is considered the handsomest yacht of her type, either here or in English waters.

Fox's Big Specials Scoring

Home-Office Reports Testimonials of Their Success Here and Abroad

THE home-office of the Fox Film Corporation reports that a stream of voluntary testimonials are being received daily from showmen throughout America, Europe, and even Asiatic centers, attesting to the "spectacular success" of its nine special productions. Exhibitor reports in national and regional publications are also presented as evidence of the satisfactory business being done by these Fox productions.

The nine specials include "Over the Hill," "Queen of Sheba." "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," "Shame," "Perjury," "Thunderclap," "A Virgin Paradise," "Footfalls," and "The Last Trail." Warm tributes to "Over the Hill," "Queen of Sheba," and "A Connecticut Yankee" are reported to be especially notable. Statistical reports compiled by Fox have been accompanied by the assertion that more than 80,000,000 persons will have seen "Over the Hill" before June of this year. And it was the first screen production that ever built up one solid year of profitable Broadway exhibition, declares the Fox Film home-office.

Typical of the commendatory reports on these productions are submitted the following extracts:

"Shame"—Excellent picture, best Saturday business in months—Moore's Rialto, Washington, D. C.

"Shame"—Excellent, played to capacity houses—Blue Mouse theatre, Seattle, Wash.

"Thunderclap"—another crackerjack you can book to the limit. Every one goes out pleased and tells you so; that's what we want.—E. J. O'Neil, Broadway theatre, St. George, N. B.

"Thunderclap"—An exceptionally pleasing picture, audience enthused.—Middle West.

"Perjury"—It stands in a class by itself. A masterpiece. Farnum is great.—Luna theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"A Virgin Paradise"—This is a good one. Appeals to young and old alike. Good attendance.—Middle West (M. P. News.)

"Footfalls" — Night attendance excellent despite unusually cold weather. Found the house packed. —Liberty, St. Louis.

"The Last Trail"—Excellent. An exceptional picture which pleased capacity business for an entire week.—Wm. Noble, Rialto, Oklahoma City.

"Shame"—Good in every particular, story, action, direction and photography. The best balanced picture by Fox in some time. Good attendance.—W. H. Pike, Las Vegas, Nev., Majestic theatre.

"Glorious Fool" Premiere

Goldwyn Picture Opens at Capitol and Wins Press Critics' Praise

THE new comedy romance by Mary Roberts Rinehart, "The Glorious Fool," produced by Goldwyn under the direction of E. Mason Hopper, received its first New York showing at the Capitol theatre this week. Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix are the featured players.

The feature won many favorable comments from the New York critics. The New York Herald said: "Laughable film of hospital romance. Helene Chadwick charming in role of nurse. Comedy treatment of hospital is an original vein that almost lifts the comedy off the screen."

American: "Pretty young spring-like film story, full of humor, with a compelling romance, and so happily played and directed as to win one's affection immediately."

Times: "A good tale of the humor which Mary Roberts Rinehart has been able to extract from hospital situations gives life and a good reason for going to 'The Glorious Fool'."

Tribune: "E. Mason Hopper directed the picture and he has preserved the atmosphere admirably. The characters appear as though they had stepped from the pages of Mrs. Rinehart."

Telegraph: "As a production it is always adequate with several touches of delightful humor and real comedy. Thoroughly clean and wholesome without being dull."

Albany, N. Y. Holds a Wid Gunning Week

LAST week was celebrated as Wid Gunning Week in Albany, N. Y. The local office of Wid Gunning, Inc., planned out the campaign to put over the idea of Gunning pictures—not in sales, but in a concentration of Gunning pictures to be shown in Albany during the week.

As a result of their efforts, three of the Gunning releases, "Our Mutual Friend," the picturization of Charles Dickens' last complete novel; "The Old Oaken Bucket," the May Tully production, and "The Girl from God's Country," the Nell Shipman feature, were shown. The first two appeared at the Clinton Square Theatre, the last at the Albany.

The daily newspapers of Albany gave considerable free space to the pictures, commenting on the fact that they were all on the Gunning program.

Gevaert Opens Branch in Hollywood, Cal.

A branch office and warehouse have been opened in Hollywood, Cal., by the Gevaert Company of America. At the newly opened establishment, negative and positive raw film stock will be available for immediate delivery, according to the announcement just issued.

This branch office of the Gevaert Company of America has succeeded the Inter-Ocean Film Accessories Corporation, which was the West Coast representatives of the Gevaert Company. E. H. Kaufmann, formerly president of the Inter-Ocean Film Accessories Corporation, has been engaged as the general manager in charge. Mr. Kaufmann has been for the past nine years connected with the different lines of activities of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation of New York, and is well known in his local field of activity and in the trade.

"A Sailor-Made Man" Breaks Record

The Associated Exhibitors-Harold Lloyd feature, "A Sailor-Made Man," has broken another attendance record, this one in the Washington theatre, Chester, Pa. The picture showed at this house during the week of February 27-March 4, and, according to R. Myers, the manager, the business done outdistanced the highest mark ever reached by any previous production. A notable feature was the fact that the gatherings were uniformly large, the theatre being packed on every day of the run.

Keith Circuit to Play Leah Baird Feature

The Keith vaudeville circuit has booked the Associated Exhibitors attraction, "Don't Doubt Your Wife," with Leah Baird, for its string of twelve theaters in New York City. On two days March 20 and 21, this film appeared simultaneously in eight houses.

Future Universal Pictures

Announcement is Made of Mayo and Gladys Walton Productions

FOUR forthcoming pictures starring Frank Mayo are announced this week by Universal, as well as several new Gladys Walton productions. Frank Mayo will next appear in a story by the late John Fleming Wilson, temporarily titled "The Way Back." Stuart Paton directed and the star is supported by a cast including Sylvia Breamer, Francis MacDonald, Joseph Gerard, Howard Crampton and Marie Crisp. It is a sea story.

Mayo has also just started on "Out of the Silent North," a novel of the north woods by Harry Sinclair Drago and Joseph Noel. William Worthington will direct. Following this will come "Afraid to Fight," the scenario of which has been prepared. The fourth production will be "The Altar Stairs," a South Sea story by G. B. Lancaster.

Gladys Walton has just started production on "The Trouper." This picture will be released after "Second Hand Rose," the story of wihch was suggested by the popular story by that name. A special edition of the song is to be issued.

Universal has also purchased the Henry W. Savage stage version of Anne Caldwell's popular stage play, "Top o' the Morning." Following this Universal will make an elaborate version of Bret Harte's "M'Liss," the scenario for which is being prepared by George Hull.

Ray Starts New Production

Work Begun on "Tailor-Made Man" First Release for United Artists

CHARLES RAY has begun work on "The Tailor-Made Man," his first production for release by United Artists. The first scenes were filmed Wednesday, March 15th, which also marked Mr. Ray's birthday and the anniversary of the organization of the Charles Ray Productions, Inc.

In the supporting cast assembled for "Tailor-Made Man" are Stantion Heck, Douglas Gerrard, Victor Potel, Frank Butler, Kate Lester, Jacqueline Logan, Nellie Saunders, and Eddie Gribbon. The part of Tanya has not yet been decided upon. Albert Ray is said to have done an exceptionall- strong piece of work in the scenario and continuity which was mapped out under the supervision of the star and his new director Mr. DeGrasse. "The Tailor-Made Man" is hailed by United Artists as the first and indisputable evidence of Mr. Ray's announced policy of "fewer, bigger, and better pictures." "The Tailor-Made Man" is to be an adaptation of the well-known stage comedy drama which had a highly successful run on Broadway with Grant Mitchell as the star.

A birthday celebration also featured Mr. Ray's first day of studio work on his release for United Artists. The first thing of the day was a huge birthday cake for Mr. Ray. Before shooting the first scene in "The Tailor-Made Man" the star cut the cake, which had been presented to him and Mrs. Ray by his father, mother and sister. After the cake had been cut, Mr. Ray led a procession consisting of the studio and lot working force, the players in the cast of "The Tailor-Made Man," and the management, to the room where the birthday cake had been placed, and where everybody participated in the festivities.

After the cake had been disposed of, Mr. Ray made a little speech in which he feelingly thanked everybody present for his or her share in the working organization. He also spoke appreciatively of United Artists Corporation, comprising Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith, and Hiram Abrams, president, and expressed his pleasure and satisfaction at being associated with that organization.

"Primitive Lover" New Talmadge Picture

"The Primitive Lover" is the title which has been decided upon for the next Constance Talmadge comedy, First National announces. It has been produced under the working title of "The Divorcee" from an original story by Edgar Selwyn. Sidney Franklin directed it, and Frances Marion wrote the continuity.

"Atmosphere is Real"—Says Globe

"The atmosphere is real with its ancient city gate and its caravans and its vistas of palm trees. Even the camels humped themselves over their native sands as they never did over the studio lots. The French director understands his material and gets the full dramatic value from its lights and shadows."—

French Critic in High Tribute to Chaplin

ELIS FAURE, the French critic, in a recent issue of "The Freeman," published by B. W. Husbach, pays a glowing tribute to the work of Charlie Chaplin on the screen. The critic points to Chaplin as the only man who knows how to use the art of the screen "as if it were a keyboard, where all the elements of sense and feeling that determine the attitude and form merge and convey, in one cineographic expression, the complex revelation of their inner life and quality. . . ."

In another paragraph, M. Faure continues:

"I have said elsewhere that Chaplin makes me think of Shakespere—though he is of a less imposing complexity, he has that same bewildering and yet lucid lyricism that Shakespere had. In the fertility and creativeness of his heart, Chaplin has the same limitless fancy which unites in a single gesture an ingenuous delight in the magnificence of life, and a smiling heroic consciousness of its fruitlessness. . . . Before Chaplin came, we knew that beneath all drama there is farce, and beneath all farce there is drama, but what do we not know now? This man appears, and by his revelation he has taught us to recognize all that we knew dimly before. His are the simple methods that belong to greatness."

Ruth Roland to Start New Serials Shortly

Plans have been completed for the making of two Ruth Roland serials at the United Studios. Miss Roland and her company will start work on the first of these very shortly, her much heralded "Timber Queen" being practically finished.

The Roland serial to follow "The Timber Queen," work upon which is about to begin, has the temporary title of "The Riddle of the Range." It has an original story specially written for Miss Roland by John Grey, who has also written the continuity.

First National Stars Cordially Greeted

The personal appearance tours of Hope Hampton and Wesley Barry, both First National stars, are proving highly successful in stimulating business wherever the stars have been scheduled to appear before motion-picture audiences.

Miss Hampton appeared at Saxe's Grand in Milwaukee on March 6, 7 and 8 in conjunction with the showing of her picture, "Star Dust." She was enthusiastically greeted by the audiences at the Strand, and several effective tie-ups with local shops and newspapers were arranged.

Wesley Barry duplicated in Milwaukee the success he experienced in Chicago. He appeared in person at the Strand while "Penrod,"

Gloria Swanson Stars in "Gilded Cage"

"The Gilded Cage," Elmer Harris's picturization of the play by Anna Nichols in which Gloria Swanson will star for Paramount, is now under way at the Lasky studio.

Miss Swanson appears as Susanne Ornoff, while the role of her invalid sister is played by Anne Cornwall, former Universal star. Charles A. Stevenson appears as the shabby genteel, proud but poverty-stricken boulevardier of Paris. David Powell plays Arnold Pell, the leading male role. Walter Hiers is the press agent-impresario who conceives the great scheme of turning the little artist's model into a famous star, and his handling of the role will be quite as striking as his usual characterizations.

One other role remains to be filled in this Sam Wood production which will be produced with great detail and many novel scenic effects.

"Woman, Wake Up" for Loew N. Y. Circuit

Associated Exhibitors' release, "Woman, Wake Up," starring Florence Vidor has been booked for the Marcus Loew theatres located in Greater New York. This arrangement will take the pictures over the entire metropolitan circuit of twleve houses, beginning March 20. During the week of March 20, this attraction was also the feature of the program of the new Loew State Theatre in Boston. The first-run bookings for this production are reported by Associated Exhibitors to be unusually heavy and to include important centers throughout the country.

Goldwyn to Make Old-Fashioned Thriller

Goldwyn has acquired the screen rights to the stage melodrama, "The Great Metropolis" that flourished in New York and other cities about a quarter of a century ago. The story is frankly a thriller and will be treated as such in Goldwyn's picturization of it. The melodrama was originally staged by Klaw and Erlanger and it was one of the big successes of its day.

"Foolish Wives" Plays to Capacity Houses

The Universal home office advises that a veritable flood of bookings is being realized for its special production, "Foolish Wives." The exchange covering the New York district, it is stated, has already booked more than seventy-five theatres for week-runs or longer. Other exchanges, many of them representing districts where the picture has not had its key run as yet, are reported to be doing unprecedented business with this picture. The Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, played to almost four times the capacity of the house on the opening day, according to word from the Universal home office, and other reports of record business done by houses in big cities are cited in the Universal statement, including the Aldine Theatre in Philadelphia and Nathan Asher's Roosevelt in Chicago.

Rex Ingram and Wife Leave on Honeymoon

Rex Ingram and his wife, who is known on the screen as Alice Terry, have left Hollywood on their much belated honeymoon. The couple were married several months ago during the filming of Ingram's latest special for Metro release which is an adaptation of Anthony Hope's famous romance, "The Prisoner of Zenda." The honeymoon was postponed until the completion of this subject, in which Miss Terry plays the role of Princess Flavis. Mr. Ingram completed work on "The Prisoner of Zenda" a few days ago.

Within a week, or two at the most, Mr. and Mrs. Ingram expect to return to their home in Hollywood. No details as to their destination or their next picture for Metro were given out by Director Ingram previous to their departure from Hollywood.

Meighan Selection Due to Popular Demand

The selection of Thomas Meighan to play the chief male role in Cecil B. DeMille's forthcoming production of "Manslaughter" recently announced by Paramount, was the result of a wide-spread popular request, according to the producer.

When it was announced that Cecil B. DeMille had secured the screen rights to "Manslaughter," critics and fans throughout the country are said to have showered both DeMille and Meighan with letters in which the writers pointed out the particular fitness of Meighan for the part.

The scenario is now being written by Jeanie Maspherson from Alice Duer Miller's novel of Saturday Evening Post fame. Leatrice Joy will play the leading female role.

Carew to Direct New Pyramid Picture

Arthur Edmund Carew has been engaged by Pyramid Pictures for "Her Other Husband," a big special to be released by American Releasing. In "Her Other Husband" Carew also plays the title role. The script is by Dorothy Farnum from the novel, "The Mayor's Wife," by Anna Katherine Greene.

Agnes Ayres and Jack Holt in a scene from the Paramount picture, "Bought and Paid For"

Selznick Stars Under New Directors

A change of directors of forthcoming Selznick productions is announced this week by that organization. George Archainbaud will return to the directorial staff of Selznick pictures to direct Elaine Hammerstein in "Evidence," which is now in production. With the production of the feature temporarily titled "John Smith," Eugene O'Brien comes under the direction of Victor Heerman. Mr. Heerman has been assisting Henry Lehrman in the direction of "Reported Missing."

Pathe Review to Have Anniversary Feature

THE third anniversary of Pathe Review, marked by the issue of No. 149, April 2nd, will be characterized by a widening of the scope in selection, with an especial emphasis on the unusual, the entertaining and the instructive, declares a statement from the Pathe home-office. Pathe Exchange announces that in the first of the new series is offered an exceptionally appealing array of features.

The two outstanding features of No. 149 are an unique series of elephant pictures, embodied under the caption, "The four-footed derrick;" and the newest achievement of the motion picture, "Camera Caricatures," in which the campaign orator comes in for good natured and laughable distortion.

Other subjects are: "Sixty Million Boarders," views taken at feeding time at the New Jersey State fish hatchery; "The Sky Paintings," said to be photographic gems; and "The Roses of Romance," a flower fantasy in Pathe color.

"Impresses us as a film well out of the ordinary and one which should especially appeal to the better class of theatregoers.

"All there was in 'Kismet' and then some is to be found in 'The Sheik's Wife.' A feature is some of the finest photography ever revealed. A hundred long shots are marvels in what the camera has caught with cameolike detail.

"The acting in all the principal roles is first class, and meets every American requirement.

"'The Sheik's Wife' is a picture that could not have been produced in America, if at all, for a fabulous sum.

"The plot is exceptional, but it is typical and furnishes some excellent action scenes." — Motion Picture News on "The Sheik's Wife."

Educational's Rise A Spectacular Chapter

By William McCormick

A FEW generations hence some historian may produce an unbiased and comprehensive chronicle of the motion picture industry.

This man will be far removed from the present day and its influences, will be totally unbiased, because he will be dealing with events of the past, with which he has had no intimate personal association; and his story will not only be interesting reading, but it will, in addition, undoubtedly appeal to his auditors as one of the most romantic pages of the industrial history of the world. Possibly no other commercial activity contains as mnay of the kaleidoscopic changes as does our industry, and surely no other contains, even in a small measure, its vast amount of commercial romance.

One of the most spectacular commercial successes of the many in our industry has been the development of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. The writer, in portraying the meteoric career of this concern, has tried to be as impersonal as possible in confining himself exclusively to chronological facts, keeping free from all taint of personal publicity; yet, the career of this concern is so closely interwoven with one man's personality that the tale would be incomplete without mention of his name.

Educational owes its entire existence to the broad gauge business vision of E. W. Hammons, its founder and president, and to his indomitable determination, to carry through to a successful conclusion, his conception of what Educational is today, in spite of the almost insurmountable business prejudices, with which he was surrounded when he started seven years ago. He visualized the taking of what others regarded as dross, and making of it a force, a compelling force, in one of the largest industries of the world. He realized that to do this he had to combat all the prejudices, the customs and the fears which surrounded his ideas, and, in addition, the indifference of the men in whose field he had chosen his life work. He assigned himself to the task of changing not only the opinion of the buyers in his industry, but the public as well; of converting all to his conception of the value he saw, where others saw nothing—or next to nothing. He said: "I shall make the short subject that is today just a filler, a piece of program footage, that is run simply because it comes in the can with the feature, as important as the feature itself, yes,—in instances, the feature."

There were some in the industry who doubted at times Mr. Hammons' sanity. His friends very aptly pointed out to him that short subjects were of such minor importance in the exhibitor mind that no adequate rental could be secured for anything but feature-length pictures; that inability to secure adequate rentals would make it impossible for him to attract to his venture producers who were capable of making a very high-class product. Various producers were approached, and many of them (while they sympathized with Mr. Hammons, and what they regarded as his youthful enthusiasm), remained unconvinced as to his ability to create a real, vital interest in short subjects of character, because of the great handicap of indifference and prejudice which stood before him like a blank wall. It then became a problem of finance and distribution. Mr. Hammons realized that before he could attack his market he must first have an assured source of exceptionally high quality short subjects, made by producers whose very business integrity would guarantee a consistently sustained high quality, and that he must in turn so mould a distributing organization that these products, upon delivery, could go immediately into general use—otherwise his whole structure would be easily swamped. The only buoyancy in the whole situation was in his unbounded enthusiasm and his absolute faith in the exhibitors of the country. In spite of what his friends said to him he still believed that the exhibitors of this continent were acute business men, who would support his ideas, once he was able to convince them that he, or any other man, could supply them with better short subjects and regularity of release of these quality productions. Several months were consumed in convincing various gentlemen, who are now associated with Educational Film Exchanges, and who were able to advance the financial assistance necessary to acquire quality productions, and then contracts were made with various producers. The first picture released by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., on their first official schedule, under date of June 20, 1920, bore a little which could very aptly describe the entire career of the concern. It was a Robert C. Bruce Scenic Beautiful, titled "Hope of Adventure," and opened officially the releasing schedule of the corporation. Since that date twenty-three releases have been issued by Educational by this producer, under the title of Scenics Beautiful; and his new series titled Wilderness Tales now commands a prominent position among pictures of a scenic character.

Following the first release in rapid succession came Christie Comedies, produced under the general supervision of Al Christie, and featuring such artists of ability as Bobby Vernon, Neal Burns, Helen Darling, Dorothy Devore, Viola Daniel and others. Mr. William S. Campbell, supervising director for Snooky, the Humanzee, produced during 1920-21 thirteen comedies for Educational, all built around the well known Chimpanzee; and then devoted his entire energies to producing the Educational-Campbell Comedies, which are today being released by the corporation. Mr. C. C. Burr, having acquired the rights to the famous "Torchy" stories, by Sewell Ford (which have appeared serially in large magazines, such as "Saturday Evening Post" and newspapers throughout the United States and Canada), almost at the beginning of Educational's history began releasing the "Torchy" Comedies, based upon Ford's writings, and featuring Johnny Hines in the stellar role. In 1920-1921, the Mermaid Comedies—a brand named, owned and patented by Educational—came into existence. Twenty-three of these comedies, all made under the general supervision of Jack White, have been released, and the success that these comedies made during their first year influenced Educational to make a long-term contract with both Mr. White, supervising director, and Mr. Lloyd Hamilton, the leading star, to produce Mermaid Comedies. Lloyd Hamilton, the featured player in these comedies, occupies today a position in the foremost ranks of the screen's comedians. Mr. James W. Dean, writing recently of his latest picture, titled "The Rainmaker," placed him in the highest niche, among contributors to screen fun, and stated most emphatically that Chaplin, Keaton and Lloyd must move aside to make room for Lloyd Hamilton. Several Mermaid Comedies, featuring this star, have been brought back for extended runs at houses where they were originally shown. Lloyd Hamilton has enjoyed more first-run showings on Broadway, New York, in 1921-22 than any one single screen comedian now before the American public.

In January of 1921 Educational took over the release of First National Kinograms, after "Kinograms" had consolidated within itself other news-reels then upon the market, such as Gaumont's news-reel, and others. Since that day "Kinograms," has grown in strength, editorial appeal and today ranks among the leading news weeklies of the continent. From time to time Educational has released various short-reel special pictures, which have been accorded exceptional bookings, such pictures as "Modern Centaurs," a one-reel picture, which has played Broadway seven times in one year; "The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes," made by the National Geographic Society; two pictures in standard and analytical slow motion camera analysis, featuring Annette Kellermann in all of her famous dives. Babe Ruth, the king of baseball, was portrayed in slow motion, under the title of "How He Hits His Home Runs." Educational's first two-reel special, "The Race of the Age," according to the New York Times, "marked an epoch in film history." This picture was made at Kenilworth Track, Canada, and portrayed one of the greatest events in sportsmanship—the race between Man o' War and Sir Barton—for the greatest purse in the history of racing, a $5,000 cup, and a cash prize of $75,000. Lyman H. Howe's short-reel feature, titled "A Ride on a Runaway Train," opened originally at the Capitol theatre on Broadway, and was twice brought back to the Capitol, by popular demand, and once to another Broadway first-run house. This picture has created a sensation wherever shown, and is today the talk of the European continent. Early in 1922, Educational brought out a more ambitious special, in three reels, titled, "The Battle of Jutland." This picture is the screen visualization of history's greatest sea fight, which, undoubtedly, marked the turning point of the World War, when the British high-seas fleet, under Admirals Jellicoe and Beatty, met in a death struggle in the North Sea the German fleet, under the command of Admirals von Scheer and Hipper. "The Battle of Jutland" is an authentic screen visualization of this naval engagement, and was prepared upon data furnished after an exhaustive study of over two years, conducted by Major General Sir George Aston, K. C. B., of the British Royal Marines, one of the world's leading naval authorities. Major General Aston chartered the movements of every vessel of both fleets during the entire action. He made an exhaustive study of the logs of the gunnery officers of every boat engaged, and it was upon this data that Educational's super-special was built. Models of all the ships of both navies were constructed, and the filming began. Over a year was consumed in photographing the picture, and some 50,000 feet of negative were used. This picture has recently been played in some of the biggest first-run houses in the country, notably the Granada at San Francisco, and the Symphony at Los Angeles, at both of these houses playing indefinite runs; the Rialto on Broadway, New York; the New Grand Central theatre, and West End Lyric, St. Louis; the Regent in Rochester; Des Moines theatre, Des Moines; the Finkelstein & Rubin first-run houses in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth, and other prominent first-run theatres throughout the country. Among other short subjects of note released by Educational are "Sketchografs," by Julian Ollendorff, one of the foremost of the screen's cartoonists; and the latest short special, titled "How to Grow Thin." This one-reel special combines within its length both humor and information. It tells in a simple and enjoyable manner how one may easily reduce weight by a home method, and it is a picture that lends itself easily to all sorts of novel exhibitor exploitation.

The remarkable rapidity with which Educational organized, coordinated, and put into operation its distributing system, in order to be of the greatest possible service to the exhibitors, is a matter of frequent favorable comment from the trade. The first exchange, the New York Branch, was opened in May of 1920, and, by the middle of May of that year, branches were operating in Minneapolis, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh and Cleveland. With the above mentioned branches as a structure upon which to build, Educational continued opening offices, until by the end of 1920 they had organized and were operating thirty-two branch offices in the United States and Canada. During the Spring of 1921, four additional offices, namely, Charlotte, Oklahoma City, Buffalo and Albany,

Eighteen Fast-Moving "Torchy" Comedies

TRUE rivals for the first place in the public's love are the "Torchy" of the widely read Sewell Ford stories and the "Torchy" of the screen. One of the most universally popular of the younger generation of screen comedians is Johnny Hines, who portrays in pictures the role of the mischief loving office boy with whom the public became so familiar through the stories printed in almost a hundred newspapers throughout the country and in such magazines as The Saturday Evening Post.

Eighteen of these clean, fast moving comedies are available for selections for Educational Pictures Week, all featuring Johnny Hines. Among the most recent successes of the series have been "Torchy a la Cart," in which "Torchy" runs a lunch cart during an enforced vacation from the office; "Torchy's Promotion," in which the office boy outwits the general manager and lands a big contract when he is sent on what looks like a "wild goose chase"; "Torchy Takes a Chance," which shows the mischievous youngster having a streak of good luck in winning an automobile on Ticket No. 13, although he has his full share of troubles before he gets the car, and "Battling Torchy," wherein Hines goes through a trying experience in a "tough" neighborhood and comes out a decided winner in the boxing ring. "Torchy and Orange Blossoms" also will be released before Educational Pictures Week.

"Battling Torchy" was such a laugh provoker that it moved the critics to unusual enthusiasm. "It is not only one of the most enjoyable of the 'Torchy' Comedies," said the Motion Picture News, "but it is a worthy competitor of any comedy on the market. C. C. Burr has continually offered consistent laugh-getters, but Johnny Hines was never seen to better advantage than in 'Battling Torchy'. Few prize fight scenes have been done more realistically or amusingly than that which occupies the latter half of the second reel of "Battling Torchy.' Don't let 'Battling Torchy, get by you without a battle."

"Consistent laugh-getters" have been the object of C. C. Burr, the producer, Johnny Hines, the star, and the entire staff producing Torchy Comedies for Educational release.

The Guiding Rule of Christie Comedies

"EVERY one a feature in itself," is the guiding rule in the production of two-reel comedies by Christie during 1922. The policy inaugurated with the beginning of Christie's second year of releasing through Educational Exchanges—that of restricting its product to two-reel comedies, into which the utmost in production is concentrated—is to continue during this year.

Believing that the day of the cheap two-reeler is gone for good, but that there is a great need for short comedies with high entertainment qualities, the entire Christie forces will devote every ounce of energy they possess to making each of the twenty-four two-reel subjects of the year truly a feature.

When the motion picture critic of Life recently spoke of a Christie Comedy as having "more entertainment value than the average five- reel feature film," he acknowledged the attainment by Christie of the ideal behind the making of each of his comedies.

Four popular comedy stars who have appeared in recent releases of this series are to be alternated in forthcoming pictures, with occasionally a special star introduced. The "regulars" among the Christie Comedy stars are Bobby Vernon, Neal Burns, Dorothy Devore and Viora Daniel. Several well known young men and women have recently been added to the Christie staff for prominent supporting roles, and before long Vera Steadman (Mrs. Jack Taylor), will be seen again in these fun films.

Some of the current or forthcoming pictures of the Christie Comedy series are: "A Rambling Romeo," presenting Neal Burns with Helen Darling in a story of a modern Romeo with too many Juliets; "Hokus Pokus," with Bobby Vernon as a rube drafted into the company of a traveling magician in a small town; "'Twas Ever Thus," featuring Viora Daniel. "Oh, Promise Me!" in which Neal Burns plays the part of an American Legion boy who marries his American sweetheart on the very day when his Parisian darling lands expecting to become his bride; "'Tis the Bull," with Bobby Vernon forced to fight the bull because he has thrown it too much; "Fair Enough," with Dorothy Devore doing the "jail bird" act, and "Cold Feet," in which Viora Daniel pokes a bit of fun at the thrilling melodramas of the snow-covered northwest.

were added, these offices being really territorial sub-divisions of other offices previously opened in 1920, and were added to expedite service to exhibitors in the territory they serve. This is the present distributing structure of Educational today; thirty-six branch offices, all in full operation. In addition, Educational operates from the Home Office of New York City its foreign department, which furnish service to exhibitors throughout the world. As a matter of historical record, the period from June to December, 1920, saw Educational's distributing system completely organized, and serving, approximately, 4,000 theatres on this continent alone. In the number of exhibitor customers the corporation has grown rapidly until today, Educational is serving 7,000 theatres every week of the year. During the first full year of their existence, 1921, Educational released and distributed over 23,000 prints, and it took this vast number of prints of their various releases to properly serve their exhibitor customers.

Educational is today employing over 150 sales managers, salesmen, bookers, alone, in their various distributing branches—not to mention the Home Office staffs, and other employes of branches. From a meager beginning in a little room on Madison avenue, where Mr. Hammons was located seven years ago, he has built his organization to one of the largest in the motion picture industry; and has demonstrated conclusively that his theories were correct; that the exhibitors of the world are keen business men, who will pay adequate rentals for quality motion pictures, no matter what their length; and that an international distributing organization can flourish, handling short subjects exclusively, if those short subjects are releases of merit, and of such character as to command the respect of the exhibitors.

In the middle of the year of 1921, as a further help to their exhibitor customers, Educational Film Exchanges, Incorporated, launched a national advertising campaign in large national magazines, such as the "Saturday Evening Post," and in newspapers in various parts of the country, in a direct-to-the-public appeal to patronize theatres using subjects released by the corporation, pointing out to the public that it was entitled to just as fine quality in short subjects as in pictures of feature length, and that it paid to patronize theatres showing short motion pictures of high entertainment value, such as released by the corporation.

Educational has developed one of the largest aggregations of specialists in short subjects who devote their entire energies to the short subject field exclusivelv. This is the policy upon which the corporation was founded, and the policy upon which it is proceeding, and the policy which the corporation believes will endure.

Gentlemen:

The patrons of our theatres have shown such a whole-hearted approval of the two Selig-Rork short dramas, especially "The Northern Trail", that we can not refrain from commending Educational on being the distributors of something "different". That being the aim of everyone in motion pictures, you certainly deserve credit.

These two-part dramas shown with feature comedies and given one-third to one-half of the regular publicity space are sure to send any exhibitor to his bank with a smile and a heavy pocket. Believe us,

"My Wild Irish Rose" Filming Complete

"My Wild Irish Rose," the big Vitagraph special, adapted from the stage success by Dion Boucicault of bygone days, has been completed at the West Coast studios at Hollywood, so far as the actual filming is concerned, and the prints are now on their way to the Brooklyn studios, where the cutting and editing will be rushed to completion.

This Irish photoplay is scheduled for release during the first part of May.

"My Wild Irish Rose" was directed by David Smith. The cast includes Pat O'Malley, Pauline Starke and little "Micky" Daniels.

Elaine Hammerstein Is Finishing "Evidence"

The last picture Elaine Hammerstein will produce at Selznick's studios in New York City previous to moving to Hollywood, to there continue Selznick production, is "Evidence," a play from the pen of Edward J. Montagne, which is now in its final stages of filming.

George Archainbaud is supervising the presentation of "Evidence." Niles Welch appears as Miss Hammerstein's leading man. The picture is scheduled to follow "Reckless Youth," the release dated up for March 30.

Paramount to Launch Drive in Canada

The Famous-Lasky Film Service, Limited, distributors throughout Canada of Paramount Pictures, announces the Second Annual Paramount Blue Ribbon Week, April 17 to 22, inclusive.

As the name implies, this annual celebration was devised in order to bring to the Canadian public immediately following the Lenten season the finest array of motion picture attractions that could possibly be programmed within a week, in each and every city and town of the Dominion containing a theatre. To this end the booking department of the Canadian corporation has been working night and day for the past month arranging these programs so as to include the greatest variety of Paramount productions and stars and ordering many additional copies of the films that have proved in most demand.

Production Resumed on "I Am the Law"

C. C. Burr, president of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., received word from the Coast this week that Eddie Carewe has recovered sufficiently from his recent attack of the "flu" and that production on the all-star Carewe feature, "I Am the Law," is rapidly nearing completion at the Fine Arts Studio. The whole company, including the principals, Alice Lake, Kenneth Harlan, Gaston Glass, Rosemary Theby, Noah Beery, Wallace Beery and Hector Sarno, returned from Truckee, in Northern California, where all the exteriors were shot, and proceeded immediately to finish the interiors at the Fine Arts Studio.

Serial Exploitation Prizes

Laemmle Offers Awards to Exploiters of "Robinson Crusoe"

THE latest step to be taken by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, in his campaign to make the chapter-picture a feature production, is a wide-spread plan to stimulate the exploitation of serials. He has just announced that he, personally, will give $50 to each of the four exhibitors each week during the next four months, who put over the most effective and original exploitatiion for the new Universal chapter-picture, "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe."

Mr. Laemmle's offer also contemplates gifts of $450, $300 and $200 each month to the best three out of the 16 exhibitors who have merited the $50 gifts for that month. The film magnate's offer, for the entire four month period, embraces amount totaling $7,000, and will effect sixty-four exhibitors.

"I would like to convince many exhibitors that serial exploitation is worth every cent they put into it," says Mr. Laemmle. "When one considers that the bulk of serial exploitation should come before the first episode, and that its effect runs over the entire showing, or eighteen weeks, the cost per episode of such exploitation really is not large."

Mr. Laemmle's offer is unlimited, it is explained by Universal. Any exhibitor booking "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe" may receive one of the cash gifts. All he has to do is to send his name to the Contest Manager, Serial Department, Universal Manufacturing Company, and when he has put his exploitation over, he must send in a description of it, with a photograph of himself and also of the exploitation, if possible.

The various exploitation results submitted will be judged by a committee of exploitation experts at the Universal home office, and the results announced in the Moving Picture Weekly.

Praise for "Gypsy Passion"

Chicago Photoplay Critic Lauds Film; B'way Premiere This Sunday

WHILE next Sunday's showing of the Vitagraph special, "Gypsy Passion," at the Strand Theatre, Broadway, New York, will mark the first public screening of this picture, it has had a couple of private screenings.

Robert Reel, motion picture critic of the Chicago Evening American, after viewing the picture, is quoted by the Vitagraph home office as follows:

"There are moments when a motion picture reviewer is the last person on earth fit to criticize a picture. He sees so many of them in the course of a week that many times they bore him before 'Finis' is written, and he's likely to blame it on the film!

"However, there is one production that the most blasé critic—or reviewer—could never criticize. "'Gypsy Passion!'

"Here is a play that proves Shakespeare's words, 'The play's the thing.' Here is a cast that proves the power of proper selection. Here are scenes that are truly beautiful — genuinely picturesque. 'Gypsy Passion!'

"It is taken from the story of Jean Richepin, 'Miarka, the Child of the Bear.'

"Madame Rejane as Romany Kate handles her part with conscientious care—a truly excellent actress! Jean Richepin himself appears as the dignified old count. Desdemona Mazza as Miarka is charming and very lovely. Ivor Novello, already famous in another field (for he wrote 'Keep the Home Fires Burning'), plays the juvenile lead."

The critic of the New York Times was equally as enthusiastic about this production when it was shown at Town Hall last year, and in his resume of the best pictures of the year published in the New York Times early in January, 1922, he described this production as being "among the leaders."

Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Strand Theatre on Broadway, New York, is confident that "Gypsy Passion" will set a box office record for his theatre.

St. Louis Branch Opened by National Exchanges

National Exchanges, Inc., has just opened the fourth distributing office directly controlled by the parent organization within a space of three weeks from the time of opening the first of its own branches, according to the statement just issued by Walter L. Johnson, president of National Exchanges, Inc.

The new exchange is St. Louis National Exchanges, Inc., located at 3435 Olive street, St. Louis, Mo. Floyd Lewis is manager of the exchange; Roy Dickson is associated with Mr. Lewis. Mr. Lewis is president of the F. I. L. M. Club, and he and Mr. Dickson are both very well known film men in the St. Louis district.

The other exchanges are in New York, Chicago and Cleveland.

"This is something different in the way of a story about the desert . . . with its unconventional ending. 'The Sheik's Wife' has much to recommend it."

Seven Companies Busy at Lasky Studio

SEVEN companies at work on the big Lasky studio stages, and with one other company on a nearby location, production activity seems quite normal at Hollywood nowadays.

One hundred and sixty-five persons, principals and extras, were distributed in the sets at the studio and more than a hundred were with "The Dictator" company on location. Wallace Reid is star of this picture, which James Cruze is directing.

The companies working inside are:

George Melford's production, "The Woman Who Walked Alone," with Dorothy Dalton; Sam Wood's production, "The Gilded Cage," starring Gloria Swanson; Penrhyn Stanlaws' production, "Over the Border," with Betty Compson and Tom Moore; "The Ordeal" (temporary title), starring Agnes Ayres and directed by Paul Powell; "North of the Rio Grande," starring Jack Holt and Bebe Daniels, directed by Rollin Sturgeon; "Blood and Sand," with Rodolph Valentino starred, directed by Fred Niblo, and "Our Leading Citizen," starring Thomas Meighan, directed by Alfred Green.

Paramount's New York Exchange Sets Record

The New York Paramount Exchange, under the supervision of H. H. Buxbaum, district manager, and Harry Danto, sales manager, during the week ending March 11, served 589 theatres with 1,551 individual film deliveries.

These figures, in the opinion of F. V. Chamberlin, Paramount's general service manager, represent probably the greatest amount of business transacted in a single week by one film exchange in the history of the industry.

"Furthermore," said Mr. Chamberlin, "in performing this service and delivering these results, the booking and shipping departments of the exchange made a record in which they may well take pride, in that there was not one miss-out and not one requirement for the switching of bookings due to absence of prints, late deliveries or other causes."

Century Wonder Dog in "Sic 'Em Brownie!"

In "Sic 'Em Brownie!" the Century Wonder Dog shows how inefficient humans are unless they have a bright dog to help them out of their difficulties. This picture whose title was changed from "Three of a Kind" is directed by Fred Hibbard and has an able cast composed of little Jackie Morgan, Alberta Vaughn, Brownie, and Tom Murray.

Big Booking Record for Anita Stewart Film

As an instance of a picture which has experienced a big demand in second and third-run houses in the larger cities of the country, following its first-run bookings, First National submits the following list of subsequent runs credited to the "Playthings of Destiny," in which Anita Stewart is starred.

"Exclusive of first runs, and because of the success of the picture at the first-run houses, there have been 161 subsequent runs in Chicago; more than 100 in New York; fifty in Cleveland; nearly forty in Philadelphia; thirty each in Baltimore, Detroit and Cincinnati; twenty in Los Angeles; twenty in Minneapolis; fifteen in New Orleans; eleven in St. Paul; twelve in Newark; eleven in Akron, O.; and ten in New Haven and Seattle."

First National Names New District Mgr.

Announcement that H. A. Bandy had been appointed district manager of the Central district, in accordance with the new sales policy inaugurated by Associated First National, was made this week by F. M. Brockell, supervisor of exchanges.

Mr. Bandy is the third of the managers to be selected thus far. Roy C. Seery, manager of the Chicago exchange, has been elevated to manager of the Mid-western district, and L. O. Lukan, manager of the Seattle branch, will have supervision over the Western district. Managers of the Eastern and Southern districts will be appointed within a short time, it is expected.

Lee Moran Plays Boob Fire-Chief Role

The trials of a small-town fire-chief are illustrated by Lee Moran in his latest comedy release of which he wrote the scenario. This time Fred Hibbard wields the megaphone for Moran instead of Alf Goulding. Bartine Burkett, the Century beauty, is the girl of the picture, and Jimmie Adams plays the heavy. "Sally," Century's trained horse, plays an important part.

Marked Success of "The Silent Call"

"The Silent Call," the remarkable dog story which has aroused country-wide enthusiasm because of its unusual nature, is winning the reputation of being one of the marked box office successes of the season, declares First National home office. The picture was directed by Laurence Trimble from the Saturday Evening Post story by Hal G. Evarts.

"The Silent Call" is now in its sixth week at the Miller theatre, Los Angeles, with the end of the showing not in sight as yet. When first booked such a run was not anticipated. Each week Roy Miller, the manager, delayed the other bookings and as the photoplay is still doing a smashing business.

Prizma Subject at Capitol

"The Glorious Adventure," Blackton Picture, is Booked for April

THE natural color feature drama, "The Glorious Adventure," with Lady Diana Manners in the leading role, has been booked to the Capitol Theatre in New York for its American premiere some time in April.

This picture, a six-part production, was made in England by J. Stuart Blackton, of early Vitagraph fame, by the newly improved natural color process of Prizma, Inc., of New York.

The presentation at the Capitol under Rothapfel auspices follows the first showing of the picture in London, where it played a sensationally successful run at the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden.

The commonly known and widely cursed fault of "fringing"—the blurring edge of color on fast moving objects, resulting from the imperfect registration of the component red and green images of the double printing process, has now been eliminated, states Prizma, by the use of camera devices which make the two color impressions simultaneously, instead of successively as before, hence insuring the perfect blending of the color element in the print and on the screen. This is effected by the new Prizma camera, it is averred.

The plan of distribution for the United States and Canada of "The Glorious Adventure" is yet to be determined. Negotiations in this connection are pending in the hands of M. L. Malevinsky, of O'Brien, Malevinsky & Driscoll, who represent Commodore Blackton, with Prizma a considerably interested party. There has been some discussion of the probability of a "road show" presentation through the major cities.

The picture, which arrived from London in seven reels, is undergoing editorial revision and titling at the hands of Katharine Hilliker and Captain Harry Caldwell.

Tearle Feature Is Released

"Love's Masquerade" is Issued by Select March 20th; Revival Series

IN an announcement issued during the week from the Selznick headquarters, "Love's Masquerade," starring Conway Tearle, was designated as the current release to be followed by the Ralph Ince production, "The Referee," also featuring Conway Tearle. It was also announced that during the next few months there will be distributed via the Select exchanges a series of Norma Talmadge and Constance Talmadge revivals.

March 20 marked the release of "Love's Masquerade" in which Conway Tearle is the star with Winifred Westover his leading woman. Next comes "The Referee," a story from the Red Book, originally titled "John McArdle, Referee." This production was personally staged by Ralph Ince at Fort Lee, N. J. Gladys Hulette appears

An important part of the product to be distributed through Select exchanges during the next few months will be revivals of the Norma and Constance Talmadge pictures. Coming revivals include "The Safety Curtain," starring Norma Talmadge, set for release April 10; "Experimental Marriage," with Constance Talmadge starring, April 30; and at later dates Constance in "Happiness a la Mode"; and Norma, in "The Forbidden City," "Her Own Way," and "The New Moon."

Gunning Tours Exchanges

Will Personally Acquaint Exhibitors With Partnership Plan

WID GUNNING, in a statement just issued, declares he intends making a long trip to important exchange centers, upon his return from Los Angeles shortly, to meet exhibitors face to face concerning his direct booking and profit-sharing plan.

Mr. Gunning states that he will visit the principal first-run cities throughout the country to get in personal touch with exhibitors who have flooded him with answers and inquiries relative to his plan of exhibitor-producer partnership in the making of better pictures by prominent directors. Thus far, Wid states, he has answered 2,100 exhibitor letters regarding the plan.

A big percentage wanted to buy into the plan when they sent in their inquiries, according to Wid Gunning's statement, but he refused, he said, to go ahead, preferring to explain the plan in such detail that there would be no shadow of misunderstanding about it.

"The old line film men don't understand me," said Wid in his statement. "They are used to the tricky, film hocus-pocus that has to be rushed through with a combination of ballyhoo and hypnotism.

"But in my direct booking and profit-sharing plan I have the eventual method of operation for this film business. The twelve productions I will make next year in partnership with exhibitors are the 'show me' productions; the profits I will make next year for my exhibitor partners are only the beginning. So, naturally, I am proceeding with care in the selection of my partners."

Lester Adler Engaged by Assoc. Exhibitors

Lester W. Adler has been appointed as branch sales manager of Associated Exhibitors' New York Exchange. Mr. Adler has been engaged in various capacities in the motion picture industry since 1911. His first work was a salesman of theatre supplies, and in 1913 he became an exhibitor. Later he conducted an extensive exploitation campaign which was followed by his engagement as a salesman at the Pittsburgh office of the World Film. He next came to the New York office of World Film, advancing in a short time to the post of assistant manager. From World Film, Mr. Adler went to the Select Pictures Corporation as assistant manager of the New York office, and finally was attached to the Realart Pictures Corporation as manager of the New York office of that company.

"Our Mutual Friend" in More F. and R. Houses

Finkelstein and Ruben, owners of a string of theatres in the Mid-West, have booked "Our Mutual Friend," the Wid Gunning production, for their principal houses in St. Paul and Duluth. This big booking, it is stated, resulted from the big success which "Our Mutual Friend" made at the Finkelstein and Ruben houses in Minneapolis.

A campaign similar to the Minneapolis drive will be used in St. Paul and Duluth. The principal features of this are tie-ups with all the teachers and churches and with one of the principal newspapers.

Big Campaign in South America for Famous

One of the greatest exploitation campaigns ever launched on behalf of Paramount Pictures in a foreign country has been undertaken by Max Glucksmann of Buenos Aires, Argentina, one of the leading South American distributors and exhibitors. Mr. Glucksmann recently signed a contract for the distribution of Paramount Pictures in Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru and Bolivia.

Mr. Glucksmann owns more than a score of motion picture theatres in Buenos Aires and in each of these theatres is conducting an active exploitation campaign on behalf of Paramount Pictures, using his screens, large banners across the fronts of his theatres and nearby billboard space to announce the early appearance of Paramount Pictures under the Max Glucksmann program.

Stanlaws Will Direct Constance Binney

Jesse L. Lasky has announced that Penrhyn Stanlaws' next production for Paramount following "Over the Border" will be Cynthia Stockley's "Pink Gods and Blue Demons." Constance Binney will be the featured player and Anna Q. Nilsson will be a prominent member of the cast.

Billy West, featured in a new series of 26 two-reel comedies for release by C. B. C. Film Sales

Clune's Theatre Books "White Hands"

"White Hands," the San Francisco-made prodnction starring Hobart Bosworth, and released on the Wid Gunning schedule, has been booked for a first-run showing at Clune's Theatre in Los Angeles. The picture, with its spectacular fight and desert scenes, has made an enviable record of bookings for itself, playing at the Granada, San Francisco; the Broadway, New York, and the United Booking Offices circuit.

Goldwyn Signs Antonio Moreno to Play Lead

Goldwyn announces the engagement of Antonio Moreno, one of the screen's foremost leading men, to play the principal male role in its picturization of the new Rupert Hughes' film, "The Bitterness of Sweets." Colleen Moore had been previously engaged to act the leading feminine role—making the third Rupert Hughes picture in which she will have appeared for Goldwyn.

Mr. Moreno and Miss Moore will be jointly featured in the production.

Pleased by Comedy, He Treats Men to Show

According to word from the Educational Films home-office, "Robinson Crusoe, Ltd.," won an unusual compliment during its showing at the Dixie Theatre, Cushing, Okla., recently. The manager of a large oil refining plant, located in a small town a considerable distance from Cushing, saw the picture at the Dixie, and according to the account of Educational's branch-manager at Oklahoma City, the oil manager was so well pleased with the comedy that he furnished transportation to Cushing next day to sixty of his employes to view the picture.

"YourBestFriend"Campaign Is Launched

A big exploitation and publicity campaign was launched last week by the publicity department of Warner Brothers on their Vera Gordon picture, "Your Best Friend." The first broadside of the campaign now under way is the billing of the entire country with twenty-four sheet teasers reading, "Who Is Your Best Friend?" These will be followed by the regular billing matter.

Another attention arrester is said to be a series of teaser newspaper and trade paper ads, to be followed by an unusual amount of advertising and publicity.

William DeMille Will Film "Clarence"

"Clarence," Booth Tarkington's comedy, had been purchased by Famous Players-Lasky for production in the near future by William DeMille, who has just finished "Bought and Paid For" and who returned to Hollywood this week to begin work on "Nice People," the Rachel Crothers' play which ran all last season on Broadway. Clara Beranger will do the scenario for "Clarence."

Pyramid Now Producing "The Mayor's Wife"

The third production of Pyramid Pictures, Inc., "The Mayor's Wife," with Betty Blythe, has been started under the direction of Kenneth Webb. This adaptation of Anna Katherine Green's popular story will follow on the heels of "My Old Kentucky Home" and "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge."

The picture is insured a good production under the directorial guidance of Mr. Webb, a man who has been responsible for some of the biggest successes of the past year. Betty Blythe, one of the most popular screen actresses in the country today, is playing the title role in the production. Her two most recent pictures, "The Queen of Sheba" and "The Rose of Sicily," have brought her to actual stardom, and it is thought that her varied talents will receive full play in this her latest role. Supporting her appear Huntley Gordeon in the opposite part, that of the hero, while the heavy role of the production has been awarded to Arthur Carew.

Seven Buyers Purchase "Your Best Friend"

SEVEN state right exchanges have purchased exclusive territorial rights of the latest Warner Brothers' production, "Your Best Friend," starring Vera Gordon, according to an announcement.

Specialty Film Company, Dallas, has taken over the rights for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas; Skirboll Brothers, Cleveland, have purchased the state of Ohio; Warner's Exchange of Detroit, has acquired the state of Michigan; Independent Film Company, Philadelphia, secured Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and District of Columbia; Warner's Exchange of Los Angeles, controls the rights for Arizona, California and Nevada, and Warner's Exchange of New York, purchased Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

"Your Best Friend" was produced by Harry Rapf, and it was written and directed by Will Nigh. Prominent members of the cast supporting Miss Gordon are Belle Bennett and Harry Benham.

Doris May to Star in "Twin Brides"

R-C Pictures announces that Doris May will start work in the near future on "Twin Brides" at the R-C studio. The picture will be based on an original screen story by Ethel M. Hadden and will be directed by William A. Seiter. The story is said to be full of complications and subtle twists, and will serve Miss May as a vehicle with a popular appeal. The supporting cast is now being assembled.

Further Sales on Two Warner Features

The exclusive territorial rights for two Warner Brothers productions, "Ashamed of Parents" and "Parted Curtains," featuring Henry B. Walthall and May Alden, were purchased last week by Skirboll Brothers, of Cleveland, secured the state of Ohio for both attractions, and Associated First National Pictures, of Pittsburgh, bought the exclusive rights for West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania.

Pacific Branch Offices in Two Cities

That the Pacific Film Company, producers and distributors, with main offices at Culver City, Cal., will open two new branch offices within a few weeks was made known this week when President John J. Hayes of Pacific instructed his New York manager, Julius Singer, to visit Chicago and St. Louis with a view of establishing photoplay selling agencies in those cities.

According to Mr. Hayes, the selling branches will in no sense be exchanges to operate in competition with state rights offices, but will be headquarters for the Pacific field force, which is being enlarged. A permanent staff will be assigned to each branch office to assist in selling and exploiting Pacific-released photoplays. The personnel attached to each office will work in conjunction and harmony with the exchanges within a specific radius of the branch.

THE PRODIGAL JUDGE—Vitagraph

IT'S a curious fact that the most satisfying photoplays are seldom the ones involving vast expenditures and grave warnings about leaving the children at home. "The Prodigal Judge" demonstrates again that the public wants—and really enjoys—a clean story with a good plot and even (whisper it!) a moral.

Maclyn Arbuckle has given many fine performances in his long stage and screen career. But he has never done anything more splendidly convincing than the character of Judge Slocum Price.

MINNEAPOLIS

North Dakota is the latest state to be heard from in this territory in the fight against Sunday closing. Exhibitors have started an organized fight against the regulations and are circulating petitions asking for the repeal of the Blue Sky laws which prohibit the operation of a theatre at any time on Sunday. The petitions ask for a new law which would allow the houses to operate after 1:00 p. m. on Sunday. Fargo is said to be the headquarters for the movement which is declared to be one of the best organized campaigns ever made by North Dakota exhibitors.

In a sermon delivered February 26 entitled, "Is the Motion Picture a Menace?", Dr. A. J. Northrup, of the First Methodist Church, Red Wing, Minn., went on record as in favor of a strong and active censorship of pictures in that city. While the motion picture is one of the chief educational mediums in the country it is without proper and adequate moral direction, according to the pastor.

In part, Dr. Northrup stated, "The four greatest educational factors are the home, school, church and 'movie.' In the first three, the motive is sacrificial, but in the 'movie' the end is wholly the financial one."

Exhibitors in the Minneapolis territory are keenly interested in the outcome of the suit instituted against W. A. Steffes, proprietor of the Northern theatre, Minneapolis, by Irving Berlin, music publisher. The suit charges the defendant with unauthorized performance for profit of music, the copyright for which is controlled by the plaintiff. The suit is filed for $250.

ST. LOUIS

Friends of Joseph Mogler, president of the St. Louis Exhibitors' League and vice-president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri, are urging him to consider becoming a candidate for the Republican nomination for City Collector of St. Louis at the primary election next August.

Mogler, who owns the Bremen and Mogler theatres in North St. Louis, is very well liked in all sections of the city and would make a very strong candidate. Edmond Koelin, former joint owner of the New Grand Central, is the present collector. He will seek re-election.

J. Van Tilzer, sales manager for the Russell Clark Syndicate, was in St. Louis Sunday, March 19.

Wesley (Freckles) Barry was given a royal reception when he appeared in St. Louis Wednesday, March 15, to fill a week's engagement at the New Grand Central and West End Lyric theatres in conjunction with the showing of "The Lotus Eater." The feature opened its run on March 18.

On his every public appearance Freckles was greeted by hundreds of spectators. He was also called upon to appear at several luncheons of business organizations.

The Rainbow theatre, 107 North Broadway, was damaged by smoke and water early Monday, March 13, when fire broke out in the adjoining building. The flames were discovered before they had gained much headway. The theatre was damaged about $500. There was no interruption in the shows.

The New Palace theatre, 1312 Franklin avenue, was entered by burglars on the morning of Tuesday, March 14. The intruders escaped with $250, secured by breaking open a cash register.

James McGinnis, well known Nevada, Mo., theatre manager has gone to Des Moines, Ia., to assume the management of Riverview Park, leading summer amusement park. Omer J. Kenyon, former manager of the Des Moines resort, left last week for Los Angeles, Cal., where he will manage a park. McGinnis is well known to Des Moines. He formerly managed the Empress theatre there.

WESTERN NEW YORK

John Lowell, the star, and S. H. Bunce, the owner of the state rights, were in Buffalo, for the presentation at the Strand of "Ten Nights in a Barroom." Mr. Lowell appeared at both afternoon and evening performances during the week.

The Gayety, Buffalo leading burlesque house has added motion pictures to its program. The opening program was 100 per cent. Pathe.

The Lang Manufacturing Works has been organized in Olean, N. Y., to make motion-picture machinery. Carl Lang, W. H. Williamson and W. Mandeville Troy are the incorporating members. A rewinding machine, a kinetoscope shutter, a carbon holder for electric lights and a friction bearing for rewinding machines will be some of the products.

Joseph A. Schuchert has disposed of his interests in the new Strand theatre in Niagara Falls to a group of prominent business men in the Cataract City. The new house will be opened soon. Mr. Schuchert is also interested in a number of Buffalo houses.

Sascha Jacobsen, violin virtuoso, was the big attraction at Shea's Hippodrome the week of March 19, when the feature was "School Days."

OKLAHOMA CITY

The R. D. Lewis Film Co., Inc., of Dallas, Texas, has secured the right for Equity's "Where Is My Wandering Boy?" for the states of Oklahoma, Texas and Arkansas. The pictures will be ready for release about April 1.

Frederick Hansen, cashier for the Specialty Film Co., is back in this country and again on his job at Dallas, Texas. Mr. Hansen has spent the past two months visiting relatives and friends in Denmark.

The upper court has rendered decision that Sunday shows in Shawnee, Okla., are illegal, following the passing of a city ordinance prohibiting theatres from showing in Shawnee on Sunday.

The showmen have announced that they will appeal the case.

Two arrests have been made at Henryetta, Okla., for alleged violation of the Oklahoma child labor law, one being the manager of the Morgan theatre and the other the manager of the Isle of Roses Company, for permitting, it is charged, a five-year child to perform on the stage. The men will be given a trial by a jury.

The theatres of Tulsa, Okla., recently inspected by H. E. Kopp, building inspector, were found in first-class shape and with few minor exceptions not in need of repairs as far as safety is concerned.

Mrs. A. H. Sessions, one of the best known film executives in the country, has been appointed manager of the W. W. Hodkinson branch in New Orleans, La. She is well known throughout the Southwest, and in both New Orleans and Atlanta territories.

Fire of unknown origin destroyed the main building of the W. M. Smith motion picture studio at Tulsa, Okla., with loss estimated at $24,000.

CLEVELAND

Our old friend Bill Shakespeare was all wrong when he asked, "What's in a name?" There's a great deal in a name, if it's the right name. Ask Sam Kasse of the Empress theatre, Akron, O. Kasse has just closed a week's run on "Frivolous Wives," starring Rudolf Valentino. Kasse says there's everything in a name, 'cause Valentino's name brought him a week's full business, something quite rare these days.

Lillian and Dorothy Gish went down to say "Howdy" to the folks in Canton last week. And everybody turned out to say "howdy" to the famous Gish sisters. Incidentally, they paid admission to the Grand Opera House, where "Orphans of the Storm" was playing, in order to pass greetings over the footlights. The personal appearance of the Gish girls boosted business about 100 per cent, so 'tis said on good authority.

"Ruhe" Jackter, special representative for Fox News, arrived here this week for a stay of some weeks. Jackter is looking over the territory with an eye to its news possibilities.

J. L. Snyder, formerly with the Fox Film Corporation, has just joined the Robertson-Cole sales organization, covering the Toledo territory.

Fred Schramm, of the Goldwyn exchange, one of the best known film men in the state, surprised his friends recently by announcing his marriage to Miss Marie Pearsall, of Canton. Canton was formerly Schramm's home. Mr. and Mrs. Schramm are making their home in Cleveland at the present time.

A. P. Botzum, owner of the Orpheum and Dreamland theatre in Akron, has just returned from a three weeks' trip to Florida, where his family is remaining until spring is an assured fact.

Herbert Ochs, manager of Cleveland's Hodkinson exchange, has added Bert (Shorty) Stern to his selling force. Stern is visiting the exhibitors in Akron, Canton, Youngstown and the intervening territory.

C. E. (Doc) Holah, manager of Wid Gunning's office in these parts, has just returned from a whirlwind tour of the state and reports that sixty per cent of the exhibitors in the territory have signed up for Wid Gunning Entertainment series of ten special features. Holah says the exhibitors out here are taking to the Wid Gunning idea like wildfire.

Ernest Shipman, who has established his Canadian headquarters at Ottawa, Ontario, has organized another moving picture producing company in the Dominion, this being the Sault Ste. Marie Films, Limited, the head office of which is at Sault Ste Marie, Ontario. This is entirely apart from the Ottawa Film Productions, Limited, which he has launched at Ottawa for the production of "The Man From Glengarry" and "Glengarry School Days."

Sault Ste. Marie Films, Limited, has been established as a company under the Ontario statutes to make Allan Sullivan's book, "The Rapids," the locale of which is in the Northern Ontario district. Directors of the "Soo" company include the following: President, W. C. Franz, president of the Algoma Steel Corp.; Major P. B. Wilson, vice-president of the Spanish River Pulp and Paper Co.; George A. Montgomery, president of the Algoma Central and Hudson's Bay Railway Co.; George W. Goodwin, of Goodwin and Carmichael, lawyers; James Lyons, president of the Sault Ste Marie Board of Trade; John Hussey, general manager of Hussey, Ferrier Co., Ltd., all of Sault Ste Marie, and Ernest Shipman.

A question by J. A. Pinard, representing East Ottawa in the Ontario Legislature, brought out the information that theatre fans of Ottawa paid $56,635.86 in Amusement Tax to the Ontario Government during 1921 and, multiplying this tax total by 10, indicates that the 110,000 people in Canada expended about $560,000 in attending shows during the past year. This averages about $5 each for every man, woman and child in the city.

The grand total revenue derived by the Province of Ontario from the Amusement tax in all centres during the past fiscal year was $1,082,863.07, according to the official records. This indicates that approximately $10,828,000 was spent by the people of Ontario for theatre amusement during the past fiscal 12 months. The tax in Toronto, the Ontario capital, during the fiscal term, amounted to $624,-13.70, or well over half of the total for the whole province.

Three moving picture theatres of Montreal, Quebec, have been incorporated during the past few days. Two of these, the Alhambra and Lord Nelson theatres, have been registered as companies in Quebec by Nicolas A. Lazinas. The Theatre National Canadian has also been registered by J. E. Robichaud.

A highly important development has taken place in both Toronto and Montreal, as a result of which the only burlesque theatres in each of these Canadian cities has become a "combination house" with the unique plan of offering pictures, vaudeville and burlesque in continuous programmes each day from 1 p. m. to 10:45 p. m. The new policy at the Gayety theatre, Montreal, and the Empire theatre, Toronto, went into effect on Monday, March 30.

The arrangement calls for the presentation of pictures and vaudeville from 1 p. m. to 2:15 p. m., after which the burlesque show will hold the boards until 4:45 p. m. From this hour until 8:15, there will be pictures and vaudeville again. The day's performances run for 10 hours approximately and one ticket admits to any part of or the whole show—as long as a patron desires to stick.

It has become quite the regular procedure in moving picture theatre circles in Canada for employees of theatres to branch out as exhibitors on their own account, judging by developments during the past few days at both Calgary and Winnipeg.

The Biyou theatre at Calgary, Alberta, which had been dark for some time has been reopened under the joint control of W. E. Johnston, a former local theatre musician, and M. J. Burlick, a projectionist. They have leased the Bijou, a downtown house, holding the belief that a moving picture house can be operated without a large capital investment or heavy issue of stock. Mr. Johnston is the manager of the Bijou, while Mr. Burlick is looking after the projection end of the undertaking. They have engaged a three-piece orchestra, comprising Miss Beatrice Watson, piano; J. J. Doherty, trombone; and Henry de Boeck, violin. This orchestra is to be augmented for special occasions. Messrs. Johnston and Burlick expect to provide a good living wage for themselves through the presentation of selected pictures at popular prices. Their early offerings include "The Woman God Changed," "Too Wise Wives" and "Lady Rose's Daughter." They have adopted the policy of changing programmes twice weekly.

A scene from "The Isle of Zorda," a Pathe special production. Produced by Louis Malpas from Jules Verne's novel "Mathia Sandorf"

At Winnipeg, Manitoba, Harry Roper, former chief projectionist at the Rialto theatre, a large and modern downtown theatre, has taken over the lease of the Star theatre, a neat suburban theatre in the north end of the city. With the theatre, he has also acquired possession of an adjacent store and poolroom. Mr. Roper has adopted the personal policy of close attention to all details in connection with the management of the theatre and of strict courtesy to patrons. He considers the projection feature to be one of the most important detail in theatre management and looks upon an experienced projection machine operator as the logical man to control a whole theatre enterprise.

ST. LOUIS

Capitol Enterprise, the new $1,000,000 Kansas City, Mo., theatre owning and film booking combination may enter the St. Louis field. This was admitted by Phil L. Ryan, district manager for W. W. Hodkinson, who is also vice-president of the Capitol Company.

For the second time in less than four months safe-crackers looted the Universal Film Exchange, 2116 Locust street, Sunday night, escaping with $1,000. The last time they got $1,500. They jimmied a rear window to get in.

The Paramount bowling team is leading the Palace Handicap League, one of the classiest organizations in the city.

The St. Louis premier of "The Unfoldment," featuring Miss Florence Lawrence, will take place March 18. The picture will show day and date for one week at the Empress and West End Lyric theatres. The Producers Film Corporation, which produced this film is owned by St. Louis capital.

Samuel Werner of United Film Service who has returned from the Federated convention at New York, has secured the Royal theatre on Sixth street for the first run showing of "Good-Bad Wife," the Federated special.

OMAHA

Harry Lorch, manager of Goldwyn in Omaha left for Chicago last week to assume the management of the Goldwyn office in that city. Ben Reingold, former salesman for Goldwyn in the Chicago territory, succeeds Mr. Lorch.

United Artists' opened an office in Omaha at 214 South Thirteenth street with B. Vorzimer in charge.

Hal Horne, exploitation representative for Famous Players-Lasky, arrived in Omaha to succeed R. C. Gary who was transferred to Milwaukee.

Work on the new World theatre at Fifteenth and Douglas streets in Omaha, is nearing completion. The World Realty Company which operates the Sun, Moon and Muse theatres, expects to open the theatre before April 1.

Snub Pollard in "Call the Witness," a Pathe comedy

SAN DIEGO

The Grand theatre in San Diego, Cal., which has been operated as a motion picture house for several years by Mr. and Mrs. John C. McVey, is to be torn down to give way for a modern business structure. The Grand was one of the oldest amusement houses in the city.

Robert E. Hicks, owner and manager of the Cabrillo theatre in San Diego, Cal., has signed up a contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Company for its entire output of 104 pictures a year as soon as each one is released. The Cabrillo will not change its present policy of one show a week, but an arrangement has been made with Dwight Hill, manager of the Pickwick theatre, to run those pictures not used by the Cabrillo.

DES MOINES

The Famous-Players Exchange in Des Moines has a new exploitation manager in John Friedel, of Sioux City, who was there interested in the Hostetler Amusement Company, which until recently held a string of 70 theatres. Mr. Friedel takes the place of John Ingram, who has been here about four weeks and who returned to New York.

A. E. Dixon, salesman for Paramount in Des Moines for the past six or seven months, was transferred to the office at Denver last week.

Practically every theatre in Des oines has a cement floor, but none are constructed entirely of cement. The Strand and the Des Moines and another as yet uncompleted nor definitely named are constructed partly of cement and brick—two brick walls with cement in between, etc. Some dfficulty in securing pictures, but will forward as soon as possible.

"And Women Must Weep" Wins High Tribute

The first of Robert Bruce's scenic series of "Wilderness Tales," which is titled "And Women Must Weep," has been listed by the National Board of Review in its periodical, "Exceptional Photoplays," for the January-February release period. This is considered an unusual tribute by the officials of Educational Films, which is releasing the Bruce series, as "And Women Must Weep" is a single-reeler, while heretofore the motion-pictures thus honored by insertion in "Exceptional Photoplays" have been productions of feature length.

"And Women Must Weep" wins further tribute by being discussed as one of two pictures under the heading "Two Pictures Approaching Innovation." "Far superior to the average story-scenic" is the opinion expressed by "Exceptional Photoplays" in connection with "And Women Must Weep."

Rotogravure Booklets with Sacred Films

For a readier understanding of the Biblical narratives, the Sacred Films, Incorporated, have published a handsome and understandable booklet illustrated in rotogravure which accompanies each individual episode.

These booklets are being written by the theological authority back of the productions and are interspersed with the knowledge proffered by Dr. Edgar J. Banks, research director of the organization.

These booklets are sold at cost to the exhibitor, who in turn sells them to his patrons.

FEATURE RELEASE CHART

Productions are Listed Alphabetically and by Months in which Released in order that the Exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need. Short subject and comedy releases, as well as information on pictures that are coming will be found on succeeding pages. (S. R. indicates State Right release.)

Society of Motion Picture Engineers

What is it?
Why is it?
What has it accomplished?
What can it do for the industry?

EVERYONE connected in any way with the motion picture industry should be familiar with its recognized engineering society. The following, written by L. C. Porter, President of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, explains the functions and activities of this society:

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers is an organization of technical men from the research, manufacturing and producing ends of the industry, both domestic and foreign. The commercial end is also represented in the Society through Associate membership. Its membership includes practically all of the highest authorities in the various branches of motion picture work, and representatives from practically all of the large and progressive manufacturers in any way connected with the industry. The requirements for membership are stiff, and exceedingly careful consideration is given to each application before it is acted on. The membership requirements are as follows:

ACTIVE MEMBER—An active member shall not be less than 25 years of age and shall be:

(a) A motion picture engineer by profession. He shall have been in the practice of his profession for a period of at least three years and shall have taken responsibility for design, installation or operation of systems or apparatus pertaining to the motion picture industry.

(b) A person regularly employed in motion picture or closely allied work, who by his invention or proficiency in motion picture science or as an executive of a motion picture enterprise of large scope has attained a recognized standing in the motion picture art. In the case of such an executive, the applicant must be qualified to take full charge of the broader features of motion picture engineering involved in the work under his direction.

ASSOCIATE MEMBER—An Associate member shall not be less than 21 years of age and shall be:

A person who is interested in or connected with the study of motion picture technical problems or the application of same.

Membership in the Society stands for unselfish service to the industry.

The objects of the Society, as set forth in its By-Laws, are: "The advancement in the theory and practice of motion picture engineering and the allied arts and sciences, the standardization of the mechanisms and practices employed therein, and the maintenance of a high professional standing among its members."

Any industry, to grow to a great size and last, must sooner or later standardize. Suppose, for example, that each manufacturer of incandescent lamp sockets used a different thread, and that each manufacturer of lamps used a different base. Where would the electric light industry be to-day? It is standardization that makes it possible to purchase a lamp in any part of the country and use it in any socket, regardless of whether that socket was manufactured North, East, West or South, and no matter who made it, the lamp will fit!

Suppose each railroad in the country used a different gauge track, or every make of automobile a different style of tire, what a mess our transportation would be in!

Standardization can only be brought about through co-operation of those engaged in similar related lines of work, and by careful forethought and planning for future development. Such work can best be accomplished through a strong uncommercial and neutral engineering organization. Such an organization offers place and opportunity for its members and others interested in its work to get together and find out what each is doing and planning; they put their problems before committees of the best experts in the country. Co-operation for standardization alone is sufficient reason for the existence of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

Our Society is young. The industry has had a phenomenal growth. Moving pictures appealed to the imagination of the public, and the public demanded pictures and more pictures. Naturally, the first efforts were bent toward supplying this demand for commercial reasons. Selling the people what they wanted when they wanted it.

It is said that seven-eighths of our knowledge comes through mental pictures of one form or another, and here lies, I believe, the greatest field for the industry—education. It is no idle dream to prophesy that the time is coming when each and every home will have moving pictures of great events in the world as they

View from the stage of Miami's latest half-million dollar house, the Fairfax

Miami's Latest Theatre, the Fairfax, Has Many Commendable Features

Half Million Dollar House Now Open to Winter Visitors

The beautiful Fairfax Theatre, Miami's half-million dollar picture palace, opened recently and presented to the sunshine city and its crowds of winter visitors a triumph of perfection and elegance. This house is operated by the Bradford Amusement Company, of which J. H. Bradford is president, formerly a wealthy furniture manufacturer in Nashville, Tenn., and owner of the Strand Theatre in that city. J. H. Adams is active manager, and Carson Bradford is managing director, both of Nashville. While exceeded in capacity by a few picture theatres in the south, it could hardly be surpassed in beauty, refinement and comfort, which features were secured by the employment of some of the country's most successful designers and artists.

Its seating capacity of 1,600 is divided, so that 923 are on the main floor, 479 are in the galleries and the rest in the loges and boxes. The entrance faces Miami's Royal Palm Park and one graceful cocoanut palm was preserved at the door, the big marquee being built around it.

The lobby is long, opening into a broad corridor. Side stairs ascend to the mezzanine and promenade, which are richly decorated and furnished, and provided with a men's smoking room and ornate ladies' rest rooms. The Classic Adams style of decorating was chosen for the theatre and the general color scheme is Café au lait, with accessory colors of wedgewood green, ivory and gold. Delicate figure plaques are used on the panels of the loges and boxes surmounted by gold staff work. Artistic grille arches set off the boxes, and grille work is used again around the big dome. Some fine plastering effects were accomplished in the latter.

Every detail for the comfort of patrons has been carried out fully. The seats in the orchestra are all air cushioned, with wicker seats for the boxes and loges.

The stage is 42 feet wide by 30 feet deep, amply able to handle big road productions which will be booked occasionally; dressing rooms all with outside windows, and modern conveniences, are provided. Space is provided below the stage for a music library and paint shop. The theatre is equipped with an especially built Robert Morton organ costing $25,000, operated by Frank H. Dean, of Detroit, organist.

Almost beyond doubt, the most remarkable feature of this theatre is its electrical equipment. The theatre exterior presents the largest electrical sign board in the entire south. It is 42 feet wide with 12-inch letters and is surmounted by a 26-foot board with 10-inch lette at the ends of which are tall torches of alte nating lights. There are 420 lights under t marquee, which makes this exterior illuminat with a total of 700 lights.

The ventilation is one of the most commen able features of this house. The system i stalled by the Monsoon Fan Company emplo six enormous suction and force fans, four them 12 feet in diameter and two of them feet in diameter, housed in a specially arrang room above the main ceiling and operated such a way as to keep fresh air in consta circulation.

The lighting system is in a class by itsel Not a fixture shows in the entire house. Fra tically all the lights are concealed in 800 fe of trough behind the cornices. These with thr different colors of bulbs used according to th mood of the performance, are particularly effec tive in the dome and the barrel ceiling. The are seventeen clusters of 30 or 18 bulbs eac screened by exquisite champagne silk shade create a very favorable impression on the aud The changing of the lights behind these shade create a very favorable impression on the aud ience. In the aisles a light is placed under ever eighth seat on alternating sides, so that th passageway is always clear throughout the en tire performance.

The projection room is modern, roomy an fireproof, equipped with 2 Powers 6 B, Type projectors, Hertner transverters, stereoptican steel film safes. A 20 horsepower motor gen erator set provides direct current for the opera-are taking place; not only see, but hear them through radio broadcasting. Then will the peoples of the earth be united as never before, and the motion picture industry will expand far beyond its present greatness.

As the motion picture develops, the public becomes educated and more critical; better pictures are demanded and also better conditions of presentation, etc. To accomplish this, th best minds in the country must co-operate o their problems. The automobile industry ha its Society of Automotive Engineers, the elec trical industry the American Institute of Elec trical Engineers, the lighting men functio through the Illuminating Engineering Society civil engineers through the American Societ of Civil Engineers, and so on. Each of th many great industries developed along the abov lines have been brought to the successes the now enjoy by developments guided by the engi neering society representing the industry an applied by capital.

Three unit motor generator set consisting of two 150 K. W. 115 Volt S. y. compound wound Westinghouse D. C. generators which are the main supply of electrical power for the Famous Players-Lasky studios

Famous Players-Lasky Extensive Users of Electrical Apparatus

The Lasky Corporation is one of the foremost film producing companies in the use of electricity. In all departments of production, electricity plays an important part in the making of Paramount Pictures. All machinery in the carpenter shops and laboratory is propelled by electric motors, using the individual drive system.

The main power plant consists of a 300 KW 3 unit motor generator set consisting of 2-150 KW 115 Volt Type SK compound wound Westinghouse DC Generators, directly connected to and mounted on a common base with a Westinghouse 440 HP. 3-phase 50 cycle 2,200 V Synchronous Motor together with complete starting equipment and control panels for the DC Generators. This unit supplies the DC power to the high intensity Arcs used in making Paramount Pictures.

The acceptance test made by the Lasky Corporation on the above apparatus gave the following results. 1—5400 Amp D. C. Pull out. 2—One Volt variation from zero load to 4000 Amp load, taken in steps of 100 Amp. 3—Perfect commutation. 4—No excessive heating. This test was made under the supervision of Mr. C. F. Mills, Chief Electrician, and Mr. Wm. Chase, Chief Operator, of the Lasky Corporation.

There has been constructed, under Mr. Mills' supervision, an 18-panel distributing board, which distributes both AC and DC power to all parts of the studio grounds. This distributing board is one of the finest pieces of work that can be found in any studio in the country.

The Wilshire Studio of the Lasky Corporation is also fully equipped with electrical apparatus. In this studio there are 9 Westinghouse Motors totalling 30 HP. in the carpenter shop 32 Westinghouse Motors in the laboratory, also a Westinghouse 55 Amp. 75 Volt Motion Picture M.G. set used for projection. This set is automatically contioned and operates 2—30 Amp. Arcs continuously. The set may be started from either projection room, but cannot be stopped by one operator while the second operator is using the set. The incoming line switchboard of this studio was designed by Mr. H. F. O'Brien, Chief Electrician, who will have complete supervision of electrical apparatus and installation work of the new laboratory which is to be built by this company on their Hollywood grounds.

exists to perform a similar function for the motion picture industry, now the fifth largest in the country.

While the Society is yet in its infancy, it has accomplished a great deal. Through its various committees data has been collected, analyzed and made available to all by publication in the Society's Transactions on many phases of the industry. A hasty review of the Transactions to date shows papers by the leading experts and authorities on a wide variety of subjects of vital interest to the industry, such, for example, as the following:

Other Activities

In addition to the wealth of information contained in the above papers, the various committee reports have brought together much fundamental data. In a number of cases the Society has taken action of vital importance to the industry. It has, for example, adopted an official nomenclature list, and also standardized numerous things, such as the dimensions and location of film perforations; dimensions of lantern slide mat opening, film picture aperture, markings for projection lenses, dimensions for film reels, etc., etc. Such standardization makes for uniformity and interchangeability, thus saving the industry much expense and trouble.

The Society has brought together factions having radically different viewpoints. While it has not always succeeded in getting them into agreement, the discussions in open and committee meetings have generally, at least, brought forth the advantages and disadvantages on each side of the controversy.

Future Possibilities

The future offers almost limitless possibilities for the Society. There are things that to-day stand in crying need of standardization, and which, if standardized, would save the industry a large amount of money. For example: there is not at present any standard film density, nor is there any standard of screen illumination intensity. Films are made at great expense by high priced artists, etc., and inspected in the laboratory under high screen intensities, then shown in theatres at much lower values of illumination. The results are not the same. Often they are unsatisfactory, and new prints are made, either darker or lighter, to suit the theatre condition, and that costs money.

There is not even a standard unit screen surface for comparing one screen with another.

There is no standard exposure for various light intensities, or any standard light intensity for various conditions in the studio. This often causes expensive retakes—experimental work on something that should be a matter of predetermination with scientific precision.

It would be desirable to have standardized

National Anti-Misframe League Forum

Dear Editor:

In the issue of March 11th Mr. Joseph Stull suggests the changing of the name N. A. M. F. L. into National Association for Improvement of Projection. Leave out the two words "for the" and make the name of this association N. A. I. O. P. which is more distinguished than the N. A. M. F. L. and will be for the improvement of the film as well as the improvement of projection. Let this be considered by all of the members and have each and every one of them consider thoroughly and act upon the matter. Also have the new button made with the new name N. A. I. O. P.

I remain to each and every member for the improvement of projection,

GEORGE E. BOARDWAY,
Member No. 1237,
181 East 6th St., Oswego, N. Y.

Dear Editor:

While reading over the Forum last week, I saw Brother Anderson's query as to how to reach the aerial image when the shutter shaft is too short.

I have here a drawing which I cut out of one of the trade journals, which explains fully how to make this extension. It was made by a man named Severson, so all credit is due Mr. Severson.

Enclosed find the drawing and hope it will be of help to Brother Anderson and all others.

Very truly yours,
DAVID HUNTER,

Membership Buttons

The new membership buttons which the brothers have been continuously requesting are now ready for distribution. Send 25c. which covers all charges. These buttons are a great improvement over the old celluloid type and every member is urged to get one. Also don't forget that we now have a supply of labels on hand.

Dear Editor:

Inclosed find a small portion of the end of one reel. For over three feet was punched like the inclosed. The feature being a Universal feature from New Haven, Conn., name "Luring Lips." The feature itself played Saturday, March 4, 1922, was in very good shape. Punch holes were all through the film.

I am now working at the Palace theatre, S. Norwalk, Conn. There are two operators in our booth. Will send you a photograph of our two Simplex machines and Motor Generator Set.

Our projection is 100%.

I am, FRED BRITTON,
Member No. 1320,
218 East Ave., E. Norwalk, Conn.

Dear Sir:

I have been reading the N. A. M. L. and I think this is a fine thing, so I am sending application for my helper and myself. We are both anxious to become members of the league.

Yours truly,
WALTER COLMARE.

Dear Sir:

Am enclosing blank for membership. I rea think you have a good idea. I also think th every operator who has the heart for his wo should pledge himself to the things mentione

I have been operating for the past 12 yea now and believe me, I have seen some territ films.

Hoping you may enroll me as a member, a hoping to hear from you soon, I am

M. E. BUSKETT,

Dear Editor:

I have been a projectionist for four years a would like to join your league.

I have always done the best that I could removing all misframes so as to help the oth fellow.

If all socalled projectionists would learn ho to make a patch there would be few misframe

I think your league is the greatest thing earth to improve the service.

NATIONAL ANTI-MISFRAME LEAGUE PLEDGE

AS a motion picture projectionist who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the projection-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in reasonably good condition, according to conditions of film when received. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother projectionists and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

film given a standard exposure or exposures under predetermined lighting intensities and actinicities. Then definitely indicated printing exposures for various parts of the negative and standardized screen intensities for projecting such standard positives. That does not necessarily mean a fixed density throughout the entire roll of film, but the variations that do and should occur will be definitely known amounts, and corresponding definite and known changes in the negative printing and projecting illuminant made to secure the very best results from all parts of the positive reel at all times.

Research Needed

To-day, not over five per cent. of the total light generated for projecting a motion picture reaches the screen. Here alone is a great field for cooperative research, and the Society of Motion Picture Engineers offers the channels for guiding such work.

There is not yet a satisfactory means for removing the heat from a beam of light, so that any film may be stopped for any desired length of time to examine individual pictures.

Nobody knows exactly how much the reflecting qualities of various screens deteriorate with age, the accumulation of dust, etc. There undoubtedly is some point where it would be more economical to renew the screen, but where is it?

Authentic Information Needed

Numerous books and articles have been written, but to-day there is not available a very thorough and up-to-the-minute educational course covering motion picture work.

Something like $600,000.00 worth of thin celluloid film is being run over steel toothed sprockets each day in the year, yet little data is available on the wear and tear of such film by the shape, size, etc., of sprocket teeth.

Most projectionists know that some lenses will have better definition than others, yet so far there are no means of measuring that definition in concrete units, so that one lens may be exactly compared with another.

In the immediate future the Society of Motion Picture Engineers offers a clearing house for research work along the above suggested lines, and many others. Possibly as the organization grows it can support some research work of its own. Certainly it can offer facilities to the industry and public for finding out what has been done and what is the best practice.

Such work will not only benefit the industry, but the general public also, by working constantly for better pictures and better conditions of presentation; not for the settlement of controversies between competing interests, or the promulgation of recommendations tending toward class distinction, but for the advancement of the theory, art and practice of making and showing pictures.

Music and the Picture

Viennese Opera Merely Superficial

Interesting Information Concerning Europe's Most Influential Musical Center

A CORRESPONDENT of The Musical Times from Vienna says that the Staatsoper, formerly the Imperial Opera, now under the direction of Richard Strauss and Franz Schalk, is gradually assuming the character of a place of merely superficial amusement for the wealthy, and for those "nouveaux riches" whose taste is all too often heeded by the management. The once perfect ensemble of the opera is disorganized, owing to a strong preference by the directors for "guest singers" whose mission is sensationalism, while some of the finest artists of the theatre are enjoying involuntary leisure. The consequent enormous outlay constantly increases the deficit, which now amounts to over 100,000,000 kroners annually. This deficit is covered by the state and has to be made up by taxation. Thus is witnessed the grotesque spectacle of a bankrupt government that, unable to supply its population with necessary food, is lavishly supporting what purports to be a national institution, but is in fact a luxurious resort for a privileged class or casual visitors from abroad. The expense of maintenance falls upon a majority of the state's best citizens, whose lot it is to be excluded from the performances on account of the exorbitant prices of admission, which are increased from time to time, as the deficit grows.

Practically all of Germany's great conductors, players and singers are frequent visitors to Vienna. Concerts are so numerous as to have required the opening of three new concert halls this season, two of which are in the beautiful old interior of what was once the "Burg." Managers have had to start morning musicals, noon concerts, afternoon recitals besides the usual evening ones. These concerts are attended by a public that has very little in common with the old Viennese audiences of highly cultured taste. It is composed mostly of profiteers during the war and post-war periods. Their eagerness for musical education is considered praiseworthy, but all too frequently artists and managers cater to their tastes instead of insisting on a higher standard. These people alone are able to afford the high prices for tickets. The impoverished intellectual classes that built up the city's culture are barred from the concert halls as well as from the opera houses.

Dubuque Organist Invents New Chair

E. R. Howard, organist at the Strand theatre, Dubuque, Iowa, is not only a very capable musician, but an inventor as well. Playing is a tiresome occupation at times, so Mr. Howard has invented a chair that has won him the approbation of organists all over the state.

The first chair was made last May and its success was so great that Mr. Howard told a few of his friends about it. Now, he is receiving orders from all over the country, among them being one from the Kimball Organ Company and the Wurlitzer Organ Company, both of Chicago. His latest order is from Mr. Jesse J. Crawford, the organist at the New Chicago theatre, which was recently opened. Mr. Crawford's chair is being done in red and gold upholstering, to harmonize with the decorations of the theatre.

The most remarkable thing about the chair is the adjustable back rest which can be raised or lowered to the extent of six inches, thus adapting itself to any player. A pair of feet extend under the pedals of the organ. A curved standard, mounted perpendicularly on the feet, extends upward and overhangs the pedals, near the center of the pedal board. A divided seat mounted upon the standard rotates every way.

Madrigal Period Compilation Published in England

Canon E. H. Fellowes, the editor of the complete edition of the English madrigal composer's works and of the lutenist song writers' songs that are now appearing in England, has published a book on "The English Madrigal Composers," at the Clarendon Press, Oxford. Here is contained the summing up of his researches into the music of the madrigal period in England, which contains not a little hitherto unknown information about some of the composers.

Briel Wrote First Picture Score

Famous Players "Queen Elizabeth" Initial Picture for Which Music Was Synchronized

THE celebration of the tenth anniversary of the birth of the modern feature picture and of the founding of Famous Players, the keystone of the present Paramount organization, has brought to light another interesting anniversary. The first Famous Players picture, at its premiere, was shown to the accompaniment of the first original synchronized musical score, the work of Joseph Carl Breil.

According to Mr. Breil, Adolph Zukor was the first film man to realize the full value of proper musical interpretation of screen productions. "I first saw 'Queen Elizabeth' in a tiny projection room—I cannot remember where—but I think it was either in Twenty-third Street, or Fourteenth Street, in company with Mr. Zukor, Mr. Lichtman and Mr. Schulberg," said the composer.

"It was a very small place, scarcely more than twelve or fifteen feet long. The screen was a miniature one, perhaps 3 x 5, and this being the first time I was ever in a projection room, I made all my notes in my own devised shorthand, looking at my watch now and then for time. There was no light for me to work with except the reflection from the screen, and you may rest assured I had a difficult time next morning trying to figure out what I had written.

"When I finally drafted the music according to my notes, I got another showing of the picture to confirm my timing. This time I had the advantage of a little electric bulb at my side, so that I could at least read my own notes. By this showing I confirmed the synchrony of the score, went home and worked it out, finished the job for an orchestra of sixteen men, handed it to a printer and two weeks later it had its first presentation at the Powers theatre in Chicago—the first original and perfectly synchronized score for any movie."

Mr. Breil followed his work on "Queen Elizabeth" with scores for ten succeeding Famous Players productions, starting with "The Prisoner of Zenda." He then wrote the score for "Cabiria" and "The Birth of a Nation," the prestige of which later landed his grand opera, "The Legend," in the repertoire of the Metropolitan Opera House.

Organist Arranges Unique Score for "The Sheik"

An interesting change in movie circles is the engagement of Roy Thompson, organist, by the Quilna theatre, Lima, Ohio. Mr. Thompson has been accompanying pictures for the last ten years and has carefully developed the musical score.

Most of the time he has presided over an American Photoplayer, first using Style 40 and later changing to Style 50. His manipulation of the latter instrument has been the constant amazement of the patrons.

During the recent run of "The Sheik," Mr. Thompson arranged a convenient score with the following exotic selections:

"The Garden of Allah"	Keiser
"Reverie from Suite Algerienne"	Saint Saens
"Stars of the Orient"	Zamecnik
"Boaodil Ballet"	Moszkowski
Robbers' March ("Chu Chin Chow")	Morton
Dance Orientale	Cady
"Caravan"	Crist
"At Sunrise" (Desert Suite)	Grunn
Indian Love Song	Grunn
"Queen of Sheba," Act 1	Goldmark
Orientale	Cui
Bedouin Love Song	Pinsuti
"An Arabian Episode"	Kay
Overture—"L'Africane"	Myerbeer
Indian Love Lyrics	Finden
"An Arabian Night"	Mildenberg
Pas Des Cymbales	Chaminade
"Algeria"	Herbert

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

Bears the words "EASTMAN" "KODAK" —in black letters in the transparent film margin, as a means of positive identification, exactly as you see them in the section of film reproduced above.

If you see these same words in white on a black strip you have incontrovertible proof that they were so printed by the finisher to mislead, not stenciled by the manufacturer to identify, and that the stock is not Eastman.

JESSE L. LASKY PRESENTS

Gloria Swanson

IN ELINOR GLYN'S

"BEYOND THE ROCKS"

WITH RODOLPH VALENTINO

GLORIA SWANSON and Elinor Glyn!

The combination that made "The Great Moment." Made by the same director—Sam Wood!

And when you add Rodolph Valentino, stirring hero of George Melford's "The Sheik," as leading man—well, draw your own conclusions!

It's an enthralling procession of stirring incidents, marvellous gowns and startling settings. A drama with a one hundred per cent punch.

A wonder picture. More lavishly gowned than any photoplay ever made. Playing upon the emotions with the fire and vigor of a gypsy love song.

They'll fight to get in, and you know it!

A Sam Wood Production.
Scenario by Jack Cunningham.

A Paramount Picture

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION

THE play was first presented ten years ago, and was a sensation.

Now it has been revived, and is doing record business again.

It's one of the strongest melodramas ever written!

From the Play by George Broadhurst.

WILLIAM DEMILLE, Jack Holt and Agnes Ayres!

There's a three-star combination that will get people in!

"Bought and Paid For" is one of the biggest box-office winners Paramount has ever released.

Compliments of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to Exhibitors everywhere who book

You Get the Benefits!

Paramount's obligation doesn't end when the contract with the exhibitor is signed. It just begins!

BACK of the picture and the contract and the booking, Paramount puts its own money, in huge amounts, to make that picture and that contract and that booking successful for the exhibitor. Paramount's money pours back into the stream that carries the exhibitor to golden success. Exploitation, publicity, advertising on a gigantic scale and paid for by Paramount, are the exhibitor's constant assistance in the running of his theatre when he books a Paramount Picture.

Thousands of exhibitors throughout the country booked Paramount Pictures solid for the month of March.

Why did they do it?

Are these exhibitors fools or philanthropists?

Or—

Do Paramount Pictures make money for them?

You know the answer and so does every exhibitor—yes, and every producer, every exchange man, every individual in the business.

They book Paramount because Paramount makes money for them.

Ask the exhibitors who booked that solid month. Ask the public who are on the lookout for Paramount Pictures.

And Paramount Pictures make money for the exhibitor not only because they are the best and most popular pictures on the market but because Paramount spends money to help the exhibitor put them over.

Look at the opposite page! One hundred and forty-one thousand dollars spent for the exhibitor in one month!

And, in addition, Paramount inaugurated the "Go to Movies" month all over the country on an enormous scale for the exhibitor.

Just as long as Paramount Pictures hold to their own high standards—

Just as long as millions of dollars' worth of advertising sends the public looking for Paramount Pictures—

Just as long as square dealing wins—

Just as long as that, exhibitors will continue to show Paramount Pictures.

So if anyone asks you—as thousands of exhibitors have been asked—"How are other companies to maintain big payrolls and big production units if you show Paramount Pictures?"—

When anyone asks you that, tell them the answer:

Make pictures as good as Paramount!

Give the exhibitor the same kind of substantial help in bringing the public to his box-office—

And the company that does that is entitled to the business!

Pathé Review

A film magazine of a new and better kind

IN celebration of the Third Anniversary of Pathe Review special features of the highest interest have been added.

For instance, here are the contents of just two of the early numbers, appearing in April:

No. 150

Winter Reflections; superb photographic masterpieces showing the beauty of snowy landscapes.

The First Flash of Life; a marvelous camera study which shows the actual start of life in a fish egg.

Pathecolor; a beautiful dream city in Northern Africa, in natural colors.

"They Say;" a camera caricature, revealing something absolutely new in motion pictures; very funny.

Ivory Hunters; exciting and very unusual scenes disclosing the pursuit and actual taking of a giant bull elephant in Africa.

No. 151

Fair, Frail Palaces; a hauntingly beautiful scenic.

The Original Bonehead; the recreation of a creature that walked the earth forty million years ago.

The Sky Jumpers; the Slow Motion camera catches the ski jumpers in the air.

Salmon of Alaska; the camera shows how the creeks are jammed with them; catches them as they jump the falls.

Pathecolor: Florida homes; no wonder Florida is popular!

NURSE IS MOVIE POEM IN RINEHART PICTURE

By McELLIOTT.

There's nothing on earth so becoming to a woman as a nurse's uniform, is there? And there is no place in the world, perhaps, so rife with romance as a hospital (paradoxical though this may be). Mary Roberts Rinehart, knowing the ways of doctors, nurses and patients .....knowing that a love story with that setting, and a heroine in that garb, are practically irresistible, does wonders with "The Glorious Fool."

Helene Chadwick

Helene Chadwick in cap and apron is poetry.....movie poetry, but lyrical as Tennyson. She stands correctly, walks correctly, and looks like the white linen nurse of Eleanor Hallowell Abbott's imagination, and of your dreams. Probably no one ever had a nurse like Helene....but that's no matter.

She gulps and sobs a bit too much over her patient, and you have a sneaking notion no real probationer, however soft-hearted, would do this. (Maybe the director likes the way she gulps.) Richard Dix, who brings his comic talents to the role of the Glorious Fool, doesn't seem to mind. He appears to rather enjoy the phenomenon of feminine tears.

"The Glorious Fool" is quite simply a love story. It doesn't pretend to be anything else.....not melodrama, or mystery, or a speetacle. Love, pure and simple (you may take that literally), is the theme. And after all these complicated foreign films with plots made up mostly of extras and scenery, what a relief this is!

Mr. Dix is a good comedian. Miss Chadwick, as I have intimated, is a sight to rest the eye and soothe the esthetic sense. All the young ladies will be taking to the long, hard novitiate of nursing now, I think!

TITLE OF FILM: "The Glorious Fool."

TYPE: Romance.

DIRECTION: Rarely good.

PHOTOGRAPHY: Choice.

PLOT: Reasonable.

Sure-Fire Hit

There are a few tears, a good many smiles, a lot of pleased chuckles and not a few downright hearty laughs  The picture as a whole is a sure-fire hit.

HOW THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY'S STRONG RIGHT ARM CAN SMITE ITS ENEMIES AND STOP THE FALSEHOOD CAMPAIGNS

Nail the Liars Right on Your Screens Whether They Be Politicians or Preachers; Men or Women. Make Them Face Your Audiences on Your Screens Five Shows a Day, Seven Days a Week and Make Them Apologize Right on Your Screens and Hear Your Audiences Cheer Your Courage.

BY WALTER E. GREENE AND F. B. WARREN
[The Basis of a Campaign Suggested by American Releasing Corporation]

Now that the clamor and hysteria have died down with the waning of interest in the Taylor case at Los Angeles, now that three juries have been ineffective in the always-inconclusive cases against Mr Arbuckle, we are going to draw upon our experience of twenty-five years or longer to propose to the men and women of the motion picture industry how to protect and safeguard their industry against attack; against all the hostile influences that line up against it on such short notice and for a multitude of absurd and ignorant reasons.

Mr Hays at his banquet did not get to the point, even though he intends to reach it later.

Mr Hearst, rightly insisting that all criticism, fair or unfair, is beneficial, did not get to the point.

Mr. Brisbane, most far-reaching of all our editors, with his recommendation that censors be defied, left unsaid the thing that could have been said with greater force by so powerful an editor

* * * *

We now intend to propose the kind of effort that will whip the enemies of the motion picture industry.

This calls for Organization.

Not an organization that has officers and committees, before whom and before which all good ideas are choked to death. Not an organization that calls for dues and assessments, not an organization that calls for expenses or for expense funds, not one that sends lobbying parties whose members do not agree with each other on trips to State capitals to talk with legislators.

Nothing of the sort, but in its stead—

An organization that never sleeps, never tires, never backs away from a fight. An organization never passive, never neutral, never fearing—

An Organization of Brains.

If the New York Daily Continent or the Fort Wayne Star-Telegram or the San Francisco Globe print lying, hysterical statements about the motion picture or its people;

If the Rev John Roach Stratton lets a lie about the motion picture industry or its people come through his holy collar

If Canon Chase of Brooklyn makes a mis-statement before a legislative committee about the industry and its various elements or personal factors;

If some woman caught picking pockets in a store or some woman arrested in a raid on an immoral resort tells the police she is a motion picture actress and she isn't;

Answer them on the screen in your theatre to your public, not with pictures but with words.

Answer them in this way

To the People of San Francisco:

Today's Morning Globe says the stars of the motion picture industry are morally rotten.

This is a falsehood.

The average cleanliness and honor of the industry is equal to and in excess of that in the major portion of the country's industries. The morals of the movies will stand the light of investigation in comparison with the morals of the San Francisco Globe and its owner.

To the People of Brooklyn:

Alderman J Quincy Quinn of the Third District, in his speech before the Board of Aldermen yesterday, seeking to enlarge the powers of the local censors, said that theatre owners preferred to run sex plays that appeal to the worst elements of the public.

This is a falsehood.

You will find address blanks in your seat if you care to sign them and help us organize to throw Alderman Quinn out of office.

To the People of Galveston:

Rev Dr Andrew Jackson Jones, with the peculiar license that is often assumed by preachers, says from his pulpit that the motion pictures are an evil influence and he uses the name of a dear little girl in connection with a crime.

His sermon was filled with falsehoods.

There is no more excuse for a minister of the gospel lying than there is for a racetrack gambler lying—not as much. Will you write to this Man of God and demand that he curb his speech?

Nail the lies and nail the liars, and nail them hard. Use the King's English in nailing them. Nail them the day they lie. Nail them the hour they lie. As soon as the lie is uttered, use your screens to smite them, and be merciless about it. Don't let clerical vestments protect them. Don't let any fear of local politicians stop you. Nine hundred and ninety-nine politicians out of every thousand—senators, assemblymen, governors, judges, ward heelers, puppets, place-men are yellow-afraid of being nailed to the cross by public opinion.

In communities where motion picture cameras are available send your man out and get pictures of the people who poison public opinion against your business and the people out of whose abilities you make your living and right straight into their eyes tell Reverend This and Politician That that you will brand them for what they are on every screen in every house in your city five shows a day and six or seven days a week until they apologize in print over their own signatures and on your screens.

When you do this and obtain the written apology of some yellow mongrel, some sensation-seeker, some man who has hidden behind the safety of his calling, your audience will get up in its chairs and cheer your aggressiveness in protecting the motion pictures against unfair assault.

When you have whipped a cowardly assailant by this vigorous use of the weapon that is in your hands, do not take his surrender too calmly or quietly. Talk to your audience this way:

To the People of Memphis:

We are glad to present to you herewith the public signed apology of Mayor Samuel Gregory, who has been slandering the motion picture industry.

Cut in here reproduction of his apology with his signature and wind up with this paragraph:

We will call to strict account every public man or woman in a place of authority making unfair or false statements about this business.

Mr Hays's acceptance of the challenge to give battle to the foes of the motion picture industry is as one drop of water in an ocean when compared to the power of the motion picture screens of the United States of America—17,000 screens that heartened a nation in war time, 17,000 screens that moved the Liberty Loans faster; 17,000 screens that nailed the enemy propaganda; 17,000 screens that carried the thrill of marching feet thundering in the brains of 100 million people.

Kill the enemies of your business on the screens within your walls. Crush them by organizing public opinion. Crush them by the organized brains of the industry. Annihilate them with a weapon that they fear—pictorial publicity Choke back down their throats the words they have uttered falsely.

Kill them by organization. Kill them not with sermons and platitudes. Kill them not with the stock, pat phrases of an industry that can fight but has not yet learned how to fight. Choke them not with speeches from Hays or Brady or any one else, but choke them off with facts. You do not have to be a writer to write a fact in this kind of a battle. You do not have to know how to write advertisements or smooth announcements. Take ten or twenty words to repeat what your enemy said, just as he said it, and in the same frame on the screen at the same moment say This man (or this woman) is lying and we will prove it. And then prove it. Your audiences will enjoy this as much as they enjoy your show

In the film zones of the country are men of power, equipped to organize such a service for their fellow exhibitors of those zones, men equipped to handle, route and distribute to each other for 100 per cent. presentation in their zones in the form of trailers or slides steady, unbroken, vigorous campaigns of this kind—men like these, for example:

ATLANTA: Steven Lynch, Frank Freeman, Willard Patterson, Sig Samuels.

WASHINGTON: Harry Crandall and Tom Moore Harry Bernstein in Richmond.

Here you have the outlines of the kind of an organization to build; an organization with an insignia of a strong right arm with an elbow at waist-level; forearm raised and a tightly clenched fist.

And use the fist when necessary

That's the way to end lying about the motion picture and its people.

Dear Mr. Herman:-

One would think that "Penrod" would have only an appeal to children, but the engagement at the Mark Strand here dispelled that idea, as the grown-ups laughed just as heartily, and enjoyed the many escapades of "Penrod" and his friends, even more so than the children.

If there is a picture that takes one back to childhood days Marshall Neilan's "Penrod" is the one.

It is a great business getter and pictures like this will please everyone, and be a credit to the theatres that play them.

With kindest regards.

"This Is One of The Big Ones"

That's what the Film Daily says, but read them all.

WILL GET A LOT OF MONEY FOR BOX OFFICE

"It is one of the 'big ones'—the best picture Norma Talmadge has ever made for First National. That should be enough to get a lot of money in the box office for you. Get this and clean up. Tell them what a fine picture it is and use the star's name to the limit. The crowds will rave about her in this. The splendid production, the magnificence of the photography, the general ensemble is there—it should pack them in and make them all the better and happier for seeing it. It is the sort that will do a lot for pictures generally, not only please them, but make them want to come back again."—The Film Daily.

NORMA TALMADGE IS AT HER BEST

"This is the most ambitious production yet made for this popular star and fully justifies all of the many things said of it. Miss Talmadge is at her best. This is certain to prove one of the best pictures of the season."—Exhibitor's Herald.

IT MEANS MONEY FOR THE EXHIBITOR

"Norma Talmadge provides the exhibitors with a box office success that is rarely beautiful. It's a personal triumph for the star. To the exhibitors it means money. Will have an unusually wide appeal."—Moving Picture World.

THIS IS AN EXCEPTIONAL FILM PRODUCTION

"Miss Talmadge's finest emotional work. It takes hold of the spectator in unmistakable fashion. It is an exceptional picture and the best Norma has ever made."—Exhibitors Trade Review.

Motion Picture News

Hitch Up The Horse!

ONE of the new efficiencies to be inaugurated this year—and there will be several within the business—is the matter of trade paper advertising.

It is a highly important matter.

Highly important because it is—or rather it should be—a large and definite force in distribution.

And distribution—as we all well know—is not as efficient as it should be. It has not developed, as production has developed. It needs for one thing, the help that trade paper advertising can give it.

And the exhibitor is greatly interested in this problem.

Trade paper advertising has not advanced as the trade paper has advanced editorially.

In a way it has; in the elements of typography, art work and copy it is probably ahead of advertising in any other trade field.

But in policy—in the objective sought—it hasn't changed greatly since the days when the release date of a picture was the main thing advertised.

Today we are not selling release dates. We are selling—mostly—feature pictures, regardless, we might add, of length and character.

The public shops for this entertainment—shops carefully. And so the exhibitor competes sharply in selling it. And so he demands and must have selling ideas and materials—service in other words.

Editorially, the trade paper has striven to give this service. That has been its forward development. It gives all it can. But that cannot be enough. The advertising pages can give this service, give enough of it. But they don't—at all. They could be made useful to the exhibitor, valuable every inch of them. But, in purpose, they remain just about where they were in the beginning. They sell at the exhibitor: but they don't sell through the exhibitor, to the public. They don't give him—as they should and can, the ideas and material with which he can put over his show.

In the newness of any business the first effort is simply to sell between the producer and retailer (in our trade the exhibitor is, of course, the retailer).

But today, in this business, we are far beyond that early trade era. We are selling to the public today.

The exhibitors of this country today are spending annually somewhere between five and eight millions of dollars in newspaper advertising. It is a large total; it probably compares very favorably with any large retail advertising total. In our opinion it will grow, as more exhibitors become advertisers. We believe that pictures are destined to be the most widely advertised of all commodities. Exploitation is the big economical factor in this business.

It is the function—first and foremost—of the trade paper advertising page—to feed ideas and usable material to the great advertising outlay—to sell pictures for the exhibitor, not at him—and to all the extent that a good picture deserves.

A trade paper is a merchandizing medium. If it isn't that it isn't a business paper.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS has but one desire so far as its advertising pages are concerned and that is, to make them pay the man who uses them. That means the reader as well as the advertiser.

EVIDENTLY the Governor of Virginia did the best he could do with the obnoxious censorship bill passed by the Legislature of the State. He appointed two intelligent censors, to judge from their first official statements to the trade press. We refer these utterances to the censors of other States.

Report of N.A.M.P.I. Shows Successful Year

Annual Statement Recounts Accomplishments Showing Benefits to Entire Industry

THE activities and accomplishments of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry are described in seventy-seven pages of reading matter comprising the Fifth Annual Report of the organization, just off the press.

The twelve months' period covered by the report is asserted to have been the most active and successful since the inception of the association in June, 1916—evidenced not only by a more active spirit of cooperation by the company members on matters affecting the industry, but in the defeat of a vast amount of hostile legislation and the inauguration of a great volume of constructive work.

The membership of the association is sub-divided as follows: Thirty-five producers, seventy exhibitors, eleven supply and equipment members, eleven distributors, fifty-three individuals, five publications and nine exporters.

The association's protest against the proposed 30% ad valorem tariff on foreign motion picture films, its successful campaign to relieve the industry of the burdensome 5% film rental tax, the adoption of production standards promulgated by the Committee of Fifteen and now used in every studio of its company members, the successful conduct of the Hoover Drive whereby the industry was responsible for raising a sum in excess of $2,750,000 for European relief, its defense work through publicity and other channels and the fostering of active cooperation with exchange managers' associations throughout the country, are among the high spots in the list of the year's accomplishments enumerated in the report.

The work of the association's Americanization Committee is also reviewed, together with a full report of the exchange housing situation which, with the cooperation of the Eastman Kodak Company, has resulted in many improvements in exchange buildings during the year—notably the completion of two-story exchange buildings in fourteen key centers, and the adoption of two-story unit building exchange plans in eight additional distribution centers.

In the fifth annual report of Frederick H. Elliott, Executive Secretary of the association, the activities of the various committees, as well as the administrative department of the association, are described in detail and several practical recommendations are made—among them one for the creation of a permanent Committee of Public Relations to foster closer cooperation between the industry and the various women's organizations, such as the Parent-Teachers' Associations, Mothers' Congress and the several organizations of Photoplay Indorsers.

Secretary Elliott also recommended the appointment of an Advisory Council, composed of the chairman of each division and each national committee of the industry—each member of this council being thoroughly conversant with the various subjects that arise in their specialized field and would naturally be in a position to give expert advice at a moment's notice to the directing head of the association.

The censorship situation throughout the country is described in a report by Gabriel L. Hess, chairman of the association's Censorship Committee. In thirty-seven states legislation for screen control was introduced during the year—nearly 100 measures in all. In thirty-four of these the legislation failed of passage, largely through the efforts of the association, acting in cooperation with exhibitors and other local interests.

The Blue Law situation is embodied in the report by Charles C. Pettijohn, chairman of the Legislative Committee.

The work of the Film Theft Committee is described in a report by H. Minot Pitman, its chairman.

Major Tom Evans, chairman of the Laboratory Section, in a brief report states that the industry was practically free from labor disturbances during the year.

In his report, Secretary Elliott commends the efficient conduct of the Washington Bureau during a year of unusual activity.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

WE like Fred Warren's vigorous suggestion of a way to end the lies about pictures, about picture people and about the picture industry.

Nail them, he says.

Nail them at once; don't wait for the other fellow to do it.

Nail them on the screen.

And he tells the exhibitor how to do it—in the American Screen, Volume 1, Number 2, published on an advertising page in this issue.

We have often wondered how a man of the church, like Canon Chase or Doctor Krafts, could lie so glibly about the picture and the industry. We have had to listen to these bare-faced prevarications—in legislative hearings for instance—till, knowing the truth as anyone within the industry would, we have found it difficult to use self-control.

Do they lie consciously or unconsciously?

Let us say "unconsciously." In the heat of battle and as a devotee of a cause, you don't at the moment care how unfairly you whack the other fellow. It's war. Still you can't help wondering why a minister of the Gospel doesn't earnestly seek the available truth before he sponsors a statement.

But—that's beside the point. Lies are lies, anyway.

And lies deserve death—nothing less.

And the screen can kill them—overnight!

The industry, which proved so well during the war period, its willingness to render invaluable aid in any needy cause, has again come forward to the aid of Jewish War Sufferers.

B. S. Moss, in charge of the theatrical committee conducting the New York campaign, has gratefully acknowledged the contribution of $2,503.50 from the F. I. L. M. club.

HERFORD TYNES COWLING, in a letter to the Senate Finance Committee now sitting on the proposed 30 per cent ad valorem tariff on film importations, takes up the cause of the educational picture made abroad by the American cameraman. His argument is briefly this: The travel cinematographer is a reporter telling his story with motion pictures. Instead of taking notes in the compilation of his story he exposes a negative film to register scenes or action photographically. The negative, when the subject is completed, represents 40 per cent waste; only a little over half of the footage exposed in "writing" his story reaches the screen. The cost value of this negative is about 20 cents a foot—four cents for the American-manufactured raw stock of which his negative is composed, and 16 cents for traveling expenses. The completed negative on reaching this country must be fitted for the market. This means more expense, and the market value approximates 50 cents per foot. Now, under the proposed tariff, as at present written, the duty based on cost value, would reach seven cents per foot; the tariff, based on market value, would be 17 cents per foot. And here's where Mr. Cowling drives home his argument: "Thus, a measure designed as a protective tariff becomes a prohibitive tax in favor of the foreign producer on this particular class of material." Why? Because the few individuals now engaged in educational cinematographic work abroad will be economically forced out of this line of endeavor. And who will suffer? queries Mr. Cowling. Educational institutions which are finding ever-increasing use for this type of picture and which under this new tariff will find their supply, already far too meagre, entirely eliminated. A duty of 1 per cent per linear foot or not more than 5 per cent of the cost value for this type of picture is Mr. Cowling's recommendation if educational pictures, made abroad by Americans, are to be made available for American institutions. And cold figures prove the logic of his contention.

A New York theatrical manager says that the road show business is not merely bad; it is "deader than a door-nail." He excepts, of course, the stars like David Warfield. It is the day, he decides, of low-priced entertainment—pictures, burlesque, vaudeville (low priced vaudeville)—or mixed entertainment of pictures, burlesque, pictures and vaudeville, with continuous performances from 11 A. M. on. The so-called two-dollar picture is over with; nothing but a novelty, as the "Birth of a Nation" was a novelty, can bring it back. Keep your prices down, he advises.

IF we were to suggest a slide for exhibitors to use as the forerunner of a great screen campaign to tell the public the truth about censorship, it would be the very words ordered out of a film by the Ohio Censor Board:

"Movies are the democratic amusement of a democratic people. These people are the best judges of what is good for them. They exercise natural censorship by patronage of good pictures and boycott for bad ones. Any additional censorship is superfluous."

As a matter of fact, cannot such a slide be run legally on the Ohio screens; or, say, a newspaper clipping of the statement reproduced on the slide? Can a newspaper clipping, which isn't censorable, be censored because it is reproduced in stereopticon fashion?

Referring but briefly to the recent utterances of Mrs. Evelyn Snow, chairman of the Board of Ohio Censors, if these statements are not prima facie evidence of the utter futility and the basic wrong of censorship, then we have no faith left in the democratic future of the people of the United States.

THERE is a battle royal on out in Colorado. Ole M. Nelson, Manager of the Majestic theatre, and William Bell, Manager of the Crystal theatre, Grand Junction, Colorado, were arrested February 1, charged with keeping open on Sunday in violation of Section 4000, Colorado statutes, known as the Colorado Blue Law. Trial opens first week in April.

Section 4000 was enacted in 1861, before Colorado was a State and before motion picture shows were contemplated. If the law is declared valid every theatre, of course, in Colorado can be closed on Sunday. The reformers, backed by a considerable sum of money, have engaged the services of an ex-Supreme Court Judge and another prominent attorney. The exhibitors have engaged two of the best attorneys in the State and are assured that they have better than an even chance to win. Harry T. Nolan has sent out a call broadcast for financial help. Mr. Nolan is acting as trustee in the matter. All funds not used for the trial will be turned over to the new exhibitor organization now forming in Colorado.

That was an unusual tribute paid to "Disraeli" by the Plaza theatre of San Diego, Cal.

After the engagement was finished the Plaza took liberal space for a finely-worded appreciation of the picture. It is about as high praise as has ever been given any picture. And now since Distinctive Pictures has been so highly complimented we take occasion to congratulate the man who wrote this advertisement and the management wise and forward enough to maintain such relations with its clientele. One would always expect the best possible attractions in that theatre.

ATTENDED by practically every member of Filmdom's "Who's Who" on the Eastern seaboard, The Naked Truth dinner of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, held at the Biltmore Hotel the night of March 25, will be remembered as one of the most pretentious affairs sponsored by the Advertisers.

A recapitulation of those present would be practically naming everyone who is anyone in the industry who was in New York at the time. Will Hays, it might be mentioned, was present throughout the dinner.

The radio talks, the showing of the old time News Reel, and the projection of an early Biograph picture were generously applauded. The entertainment, "Returned Checks," likewise pleased, as did the film made by the Advertisers.

C. L. Yearsley, who, we understand, worked day and night to bring the affairs off smoothly, the members of the various committees who likewise gave much of their time, and the organization as a whole received warm congratulations on the success attending the dinner.

CECIL M. HEPWORTH, who was recently in this country studying closely American production methods and facilities, announces that Hepworth Picture Plays, Ltd., the pioneer British producing concern, will build six new studios and treble its present output of pictures. A prospectus, asking for stock subscriptions was, according to the Bioscope, favorably received by the financial editors of the London newspapers.

In a recent speech Mr. Hepworth referred to our pictures as "Americanizing the World," an enormous power, however, he said, of which we do not realize the importance. It is a pity and a shame, he insisted, that American pictures do not give a true impression of American life.

MAE TINEE, the Chicago Tribune critic, utilizes a review of "Conceit" to fling the moral of the picture back upon the motion picture star. "Conceit," she says, "is responsible for the recent troubles of the Hollywood folk. They forgot that it was the characters they portrayed, not themselves, that won the impressionable public. They forgot the swift demise of those who in the past failed to live as the public expects its idols to live. When the money and mash-notes came flooding upon them they, in fact, forgot everything sensible and exclaimed:

"Well look who's here! I must be a great feller. Never knew it before—but I knock 'em dead!"

Mae Tinee says the public wants its idols to come back.

"Go to it, Hollywood," she entreats, "Come back."

W. S. Butterfield, head of the Bijou Theatrical Enterprise Circuit of Battle Creek, Michigan, announces for this summer his first stock company, opening at Battle Creek and playing two bills a week. The season for vaudeville over the Butterfield Circuit is finished for the season. "Conditions in Michigan," says Mr. Butterfield, "Show a slight tendency to improve but not enough to create any hopes for a continuous summer policy for the number of theatres now existing in the state."

The Butterfield Circuit comprises twenty pictures, one-night stand and vaudeville theatres. Mr. Butterfield will be in New York April 3rd.

J. STUART BLACKTON, writing from London, gives us the following interesting bit of film history:

"I think it was about 1895 that Thomas Edison, the inventor of the kinetoscope, was quoted as saying that there was no great future ahead for the device, that it w a bit of a novelty that would soon r out its life. There was perhaps so justification for that notion—but—the is always a but—along came the pr jected picture on the screen.

"I remember that rather well for was a reporter and artist on the Ne York World then and I was assigned go to Koster & Bials music hall in Twe ty-third Street and do an illustrat article on the 'living pictures.' Thom Armat was there operating his projecto the first commercially successful one believe.

"Projection was the salvation of t struggling motion picture then.

"A few years went by and there w something of a lull in the business. The along came the Spanish American W and gave the motion picture a gre chance to satisfy patriotic demands wit pictures of troops and transports an battles. Business picked up again.

"Then for some time the business co tinued, growing slowly but rather at dead level for a long time. The picture seemed to have take its permanent position as a part of the vaudeville shows, th and nothing more.

"But, in, I think, 1907 there was a general financial stri gency and business depression. Suddenly the motion pictur took an upturn. The conditions that killed the road shows wit their high admissions and costly troupes gave the then newbor 'store-shows' of the motion picture their opportunity. Swiftl business got so good that we had to end our patent wars an litigations by the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Com pany so we could go to work, and make both pictures an profits.

"Then came the great era of program service to the theatre the days when picture makers sold footage and exhibito measured the merits of their shows by the loudness of the po ters. This business rapidly approached a maximum and a other picture depression was waiting around the corner a coupl of years away, when before it could overtake us the dramati feature was brought forth, the modern screen drama. The m tion picture took on a new burst of life and the vast develo ments that reach down to today. The screen is now in the late days of that remarkable film epoch. The feature picture kille the program concerns and they went down from positions dominant greatness to entire oblivion. Such once imposin names as the General Film Company and the Mutual Film Co poration are as dead as Pharaoh now in a mere handful years. The new thing and the new policy survived and th motion picture prospered with the new idea.

"It is now nearly ten years since the present period begar That is long enough for any dynasty in the film business Something new has to come and it is coming."

"Cheer up," says Commodore Blackton, "there is alway a new idea that saves the motion picture." He cites, of course his production, "The Glorious Adventure," his Prizma natura colors, soon to appear here at the Capitol theatre, as an instanc of the new idea. J. D. Williams says it will be the big pictur that will save and remodel the whole industry this year. Wh else has a cheer up thought?

Universal Makes Offer of Reauced Rentals at Kansas Convention

Exchanges Agree to Stop Service to Churches; Record Number Present

THE secret is out. The company which was scheduled to spring a sensation at the semi-annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas is Universal. The Universal proposition provides for reduced film rentals to exhibitor members of the organization, to help them over the period of poor business and further states that if it becomes necessary Universal will furnish theatre owner members of the organization film service free of charge. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, addressed a personal telegram to the members of the convention. Coupled with this arrangement was the appointment by Morton Van Praag, president of the M. P. T. O. of Kansas, of an Adjustment Committee, which shall pass upon the individual cases of exhibitor members applying for reduced rentals. The committee comprises Roy Burford of Arkansas City, J. P. Everett of Paola, R. G. Liggett of Kansas City, and H. L. Gees of Mulberry. Other exchanges assured co-operation also, and arrangements were effected whereby exchange managers will sit with the committee and deliberate upon the action to be pursued.

Besides the announcement of the Universal proposition the disposal of the question of film service to churches and schools formed another feature of the convention. A special committee of exhibitors met with the exchange managers on Monday evening and secured a signed agreement that film service to schools and churches would be discontinued by the exchanges. The United Artists exchange refused to become party to this agreement, and a communication from the convention was addressed to the United Artists home office asking for a definite expression of policy with regard to this matter of film service to churches and schools. The music tax also came in for considerable discussion, and a resolution was adopted pledging the members not to pay the tax.

Morton Van Praag was re-elected president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas by acclamation. The other officers elected are: Vice presidents, Messrs. Liggett, Holmes and Gees; treasurer, William Meyn of Kansas City; secretary, Clarence Smith of Kansas City; sergeant-at-arms, Frank Davidson of Great Bend. All these officers were re-elected except Mr. Smith, who succeeded H. H. Woody of Lincoln, and the sergeant-at-arms.

The convention opened at Wichita, Kan., on Monday of this week, March 27th, at 11 a. m., following a meeting of the Executive Committee at 10 o'clock. A record number of exhibitors attended the sessions which continued throughout Monday and also Tuesday. The business of the meetings was transacted with an enthusiasm that betokened serious and thorough consideration from the start. Mayor Wallace C. Kemp of Wichita welcomed the exhibitors, and Samuel Handy, attorney for the exhibitors' organization, made a brilliant address in responding to the Mayor's speech. Telegrams were read from Sidney Cohen, president of M. P. T. O. of A., and Attorney General Hopkins, counsel for the exhibitors, who expressed his regret at being unable to attend. The absence of the Attorney General was a particular disappointment, as he was to have been one of the principal speakers at the banquet, and was expected to announce his candidacy for the position of Justice of the Supreme Court.

Following the reading of the telegrams, President Van Praag made his annual report, which took up thirty-five minutes. In sounding the keynote of the convention, Mr. Van Praag demanded lower film rentals and told the assembly of the offer of a certain large distributor to reduce film rentals. He also touched upon the music tax, saying: "We have been accused of bumping our heads against a stone wall in fighting the music tax after legal talent has said we could not win, as the copyright law gave them monopoly on the music. We are not denying them the right to collect the tax, but we do say they are of the most brazen and illegal combination in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act that has ever been known, and we are going to have them declare the trust and dissolve and put some of those members of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers behind the same stone walls that we have been accused of trying to bump our heads against. Mr. Van Praag's speech was hailed with great applause. Following his address, the meeting adjourned until 2 p. m. to convene behind closed doors. Promptly at 2 p. m. President Van Praag reopened the convention. Attorney Samuel Handy, who was engaged in the music tax case for the exhibitors, addressed the convention. He urged no one to pay, and pledged his every effort to go clear to the finish. Mr. Handy received a great round of applause, and a resolution was adopted approving of his engagement, tendering him every help and affirming that no member would pay this tax.

Harvey Motter, chairman of the Republican State Committee and Collector of Internal Revenue in Kansas, next addressed the exhibitors on revenue questions. The matter of renting films to schools and churches came up next for discussion and was attended by considerable display of oratorical fireworks. Mr. Roy Burford of Arkansas City took the floor and severely denounced exchanges for rendering film service to churches in his city. He declared that some of the churches were equipped with the latest types of projection machines, gold fibre screens, etc., and charged admissions. After a lengthy discussion, a committee was appointed to meet with the exchange managers Monday evening and deliver an ultimatum on this question. The committee was instructed to report back to the convention on Tuesday morning.

The convention banquet held Monday evening at 11 o'clock proved a great success. Among the principal speakers were Attorney General Samuel Handy and Representative C. B. Griffith. The first business of the Tuesday morning session was the report of the special committee appointed to meet with the exchange managers on Monday evening in connection with the furnishing of film service to non-theatrical institutions. The committee reported that a signed agreement to refrain from supplying film to churches and schools had been received from all the exchanges except that of United Artists. A wire was immediately addressed to the United Artists home office asking for a definite statement of policy regarding the supply of film service to non-theatrical institutions. A resolution condemning the stand of the United Artists exchange on this question was drawn up but was withheld from publication pending the arrival of a reply from the United Artists headquarters in response to the convention's telegram of inquiry.

Among the resolutions adopted by the convention were resolutions against foreign films and the Obenchain picture; one endorsing Movie Chats; a recommendation for reduced film rentals; and a resolution authorizing the president of the state body to appoint a business manager. As a result of the prompt payment of dues a substantial sum is reported to have been raised for the carrying on of the work of the state organization.

The Executive Committee elected includes: A. F. Baker of Kansas City, H. McClure of Emporia, Stanley Chambers of Wichita, R. G. Liggett of Kansas City, and J. I. Saunders of Cheney.

Wm. Landau Elected President of T. O. C. C.

By a vote of 70 to 64, William Landau defeated William Brandt for the presidency of the Theatre Owners Chambers of Commerce at a meeting held on Tuesday of this week, March 28th, at the Astor Hotel, New York City.

The other officers elected are as follows: Charles Steiner, first vice-president; J. Alton Bradbury, second vice-president; S. A. Moross, secretary; and Hyman Rachmil, treasurer. The executive committee comprises: Loe Brecker and David Weinstock for the Borough of Manhattan; Rudolph Sanders and Samuel Sonin for Brooklyn; Charles Moses for Richmond; Bernard Edelhertz for the Bronx; Hy Gainsboro for Queens; and David Keizerstein for New Jersey. The finance committee consists of Max Barr, Samuel Peyser and Samuel Sonin.

Kent Announces Changes in Paramount Sales Force

S. R. Kent, General Manager of Distribution for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has announced the following changes in the Paramount sales organization, effective immediately.

R. C. LiBeau is appointed Branch Manager at Kansas City, succeeding R. J. McManus. R. J. McManus is appointed Branch Manager at St. Louis, succeeding R. D. Thomson. R. D. Thomson is appointed Branch Manager at Omaha, succeeding H. I. Krause. H. I. Krause is appointed Branch Manager at Washington, D. C., succeeding C. C. Wallace.

C. C. Wallace is appointed Branch Manager at Chicago, succeeding H. W. Given, who will devote his entire time hereafter to his duties as District Manager in charge of District No. 5, which includes the territories of the Chicago and Milwaukee exchanges.

First National Directors Form Association

The directors of photoplays released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. have formed an association which in the articles of incorporation is called "The First National Directors Union." The association will work hand in hand with the Independent Screen Artists' Guild, which is composed of forty of the most prominent producers and stars in motion pictures. The following are members of the union:

Marshall Neilan, R. A. Walsh, Allen Holubar, Maurice Tourneur, John M. Stahl, Frank Lloyd, Sidney Franklin, Chet Withey, Edward Carewe, Del Andrews, James Young, F. Richard Jones, J. A. Barry, Clarence F. Brown, Fred Niblo, John Griffith Wray, Bill Watson, Edward Sloman, Wallace Worseley, James W. Horne, Roy del Ruth, Henry King, Tom Forman Lambert Hillyer, Jerome Storm, Victor Fleming, Irvin Willat, William Seiter.

Four Exhibitor Conventions Scheduled for April

Much interest centers in the coming annual conventions of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, which will be held next month. The Western Pennsylvania meeting will be held at Fort Pitt Hotel, Pittsburgh, on Monday, April 10, and will be attended by a large number of exhibitors.

A number of very interesting subjects will be brought before the theatre owners at the Pittsburgh convention, many of which will have an important bearing on the coming National Convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in Washington in May.

The West Virginia convention will be held on Tuesday, April 11th, at the Chancellor Hotel in Parkersburg. This convention will also deal with subjects of special importance to theatre owners, having local reference to the affairs of the organization in West Virginia.

At both conventions constructive programs have been prepared. President Sydney S. Cohen, of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, will be one of the principal speakers at both conventions.

The convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri has been called for April 5th and 6th at the Statler Hotel, St. Louis. It is expected that the coming convention will be the greatest in the history of this association.

The annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Minnesota will be held at the Radison Hotel, Minneapolis, April 10th to 12th. The committee in charge of the convention has been working very hard to make it a great success.

Goldwyn Directors Elect New Officers

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, Thursday, March 23, Edward Bowes, who is managing director of the Capitol Theatre, was elected a vice-president of the company. Moritz Hilder and Abraham Lehr were re-elected vice-presidents. Mr. Lehr is in charge of production at the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, Calif. Philip W. Haberman was re-elected treasurer and Gabriel L. Hess, secretary.

The Board of Directors, last week elected Frank J. Godsol, president, and Francis A. Gudger, a vice-president. Yesterday's elections complete the executive administration of the Goldwyn company.

Association Members Will Receive Foreign Data

At the request of the Department of Commerce, Frederick H. Elliott, Executive Secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has forwarded to R. A. Lundquist, Chief of the Specialties Division, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, a list of the association's members so they may be included in a list of firms eligible to receive important confidential information concerning the motion picture industry abroad.

The Department of Commerce is constantly receiving such motion picture trade data from its foreign representatives, but these reports cannot be published in the Commerce Reports by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. Hereafter this information concerning film conditions in foreign countries will be conveyed both through the National Association and by a direct service to the companies themselves.

In a letter to Secretary Elliott requesting the names of the company members of the National Association, Lundquist expresses his appreciation of the cooperation that has been extended heretofore by the National Association to the Department of Commerce.

Rothacker to Establish Film Laboratory at Toronto

Announcement has been made at Toronto, Ontario, of the decision to establish a film laboratory at Toronto by Watterson H. Rothacker of Chicago, founder of the Rothacker Film Mfg. Co. A representative of the company has been making an official visit to Toronto to secure a site for a Canadian plant to cost, with equipment, upwards of $250,000.

The Canadian company is to print for Canada, the British Dominions throughout the world and for Oriental countries it is declared. Another plant is to be established in England, according to announcement.

Canadian war veterans are to be employed in the Canadian laboratory and enterprise will operate under a profit-sharing scheme. Rothacker laboratories are already in operation at Chicago and Hollywood, Cal.

New Virginia Censors at Sea on Duties

Members as Yet Uncertain Just How Work Is to Be Done; Early Conference Planned

WITH censorship of motion pictures in Virginia an established fact and the appointments of the Board completed, the views of the new commissioners are of interest. To ascertain just how the appointees regard the task to which they have been assigned, the Richmond representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS has interviewed two of the three members of the Board and has been acquainted with their opinions.

"To tell you the truth," said Evan R. Chesterman, former widely-known dramatic critic and the first to be appointed by Governor Trinkle, "I have not entirely gotten my bearings as yet. The appointment came upon me so suddenly and my correspondence, as a result of it, has increased to such formidable proportions that I have been fairly swamped with the purely personal side of it. As a matter of fact, the appointees find themselves in a very peculiar position. We have not even, as yet, had a conference, but I had a letter from Mr. Moncure, who lives in Falmouth, saying that he would come to Richmond next week, when we will get down to a more analytical basis than has been possible so far. We have our appointments, we are referred to as the Board of Censors, yet we are without authority to transact any business, or even to order proper stationery with letter heads."

Asked if the statement was true that no funds had been provided by the legislature for offices, a studio, picture machines, etc., Mr. Chesterman said: "It is quite true, and not only that but we are in the position of holding office, of carrying on such business as comes to hand every day, while it is not entirely clear as to when our duties formally begin. I have only read the bill twice, and I shall have to give it careful study, but there are many passages that seem obscure, and I am very sure that before we begin active work we shall need legal advice and a construction of many provisions of the bill by the Attorney General." Mr. Chesterman stated that in his opinion the idea of censorship was an unpopular one, and that without exception everybody that he had heard express an opinion was against it. "So you see," he said, "our position is a very delicate one. So far as I can see, we shall have to begin at the bottom and build a completely new thing, and I have no doubt we will make some mistakes, but while I do not indulge much in didactics, it is my intention, as well as that of my associates, to do the best we can in the somewhat chaotic conditions."

Asked what, in his opinion, was the solution of the problem dwelt upon at such length by the proponents of the censorship bill, of making all pictures suitable for the entertainment of children, Mr. Chesterman unhesitatingly replied that its only solution lay with the parents. "It would be impossible to have all pictures shown in the state suitable for the entertainment of children. Of course, in the case of the very young child, its innocence prevents comprehension of the subtleties of suggestion, but in the case of the boy and girl of from 16 to 22 parental control is the only effective remedy. No parent can relegate the proper supervision of what his child should see to any delegated authority outside the home. But I believe, on the whole, that the pictures are getting better, though I have never been a close student of them, and the necessary eliminations will undoubtedly become fewer all the time. It seems to me, however, that any statement from me is somewhat presumptuous, in view of the fact that we are appointed, but are not yet organized for work."

Mrs. Emma Speed Sampson was equally indefinite as to how the work of the board should be undertaken. "It is all so new to me," she said, "and we have had no conference, but I am delighted to be associated with Mr. Chesterman in the work, and I am sure we will work in perfect accord. I have not met Mr. Moncure as yet." Asked if she went to the moving pictures, she replied: "Well, I am not a 'fan' at all, but I do like the movies and go frequently with my children. One thing, I have no patience with those who think the moving picture is an inferior form of entertainment. I think, of course, that there have been things in the pictures that were unfortunate, and still are, for that matter, but I believe they are growing better all the time, and I do not believe their possibilities have been sensed in the slightest degree. The matter of censoring pictures is a very delicate one, and, I am sure, will offer many difficulties, but I shall just do my best as I see it. The great trouble is rather one of taste than of morality. The indecent or obscene thing is easy of elimination, but in question of taste one is immediately involved in difficulties, because what is offensive to you might not be at all so to another. There must be a broad policy in such things. Then there is the question of suggestion, which offers tremendous difficulties, because it is so intangible a thing. I haven't any idea how we could handle these questions. It is all so new and so sudden that I have no definite ideas on the subject as yet, but I am going to study the pictures very seriously before we begin work so that by that time I will have probably more definitely defined ideas on many of the questions."

Patronage and Projection

PICTURES have improved—very noticeably so. On every hand you hear the public remark—"What's happened to the movies? They're much better—They're really worth while. Is it Will Hays' influence so soon?"

No, it's not Will Hays so quick—it's just the pictures and the realization that to entertain the public a motion picture has got to be something besides "film yardage."

But, and here's one joker, the projection!

I sat in a nice, neat, small house the other night in a small town and saw one of the best pictures produced this year. It jumped all over the screen. It flickered. In fact, the patrons spent most of their time watching the "booth port holes" rather than the screen.

I stayed afterwards, being interested and knowing the manager I wanted to know what was going on. I found out. The old worn out projectors rebuilt—said to be "good enough" to put in a new house to project a first class picture. They must have come from a junk heap, that was where they belonged.

This is an illustration of conditions in many places.

The Public buys the picture on the screen. If the picture is not properly put on then the public does not buy again—patronage falls off.

The Projector is the heart of any house—no matter how good the picture if the machine that projects it is not right then the show might as well be closed down.

Check up on your projection apparatus to-day.

Ohio Censorship Eliminations Not Reported

The latest development in the motion picture censorship fight that has been at fever heat in Ohio for the past two weeks is the announcement that henceforth the State Division of Censorship will not send to newspapers its bulletins of eliminations in motion picture films.

Mrs. Evelyn Frances Snow, head of the division of censorship, is reported as stating that this action was taken at the order of Vernon Reigel, Director of the Department of Education, under which the censor board comes. In accordance with the order issued last week, Mrs. Snow indicated that any explanation of the action would have to come from Riegel. Last week's order from headquarters affected Mrs. Snow in that she was requested to refrain from giving out interviews which had not been passed by the Director of Education.

This action on the part of the censor board does not keep the newspapers from getting a list of eliminations if they want them. The motion picture exchanges are only too glad to furnish the desired information.

Reprinted From MOTION PICTURE NEWS of April 1

The following paragraphs, written for the "Pictures and People" page of last week, were, through a mechanical error, so widely separated as to entirely lose their entity as consecutive comments on the one subject. We believe their timeliness warrants their being reprinted as they should have appeared:

At a time when the newspapers are only appealed to—and this mostly by such men as W. J. Bryan, W. J. Anderson and others to stop their unrestrained gibes at prohibition, the Ohio Board of Censors lays down the following laws—unappealable—for the picture-going population of that state:

To wit: there will be eliminated from all films:

Any drinking songs.

Any statement that beer is enjoyable.

Any suggestion that there are polite speakeasies.

Again, at a time when the enterprising citizen is borrowing money to pay his income tax and at the same time watching the spectacle of the United States Congress grinding out a bonus bill, the Board of Censors of Ohio declares that the motion picture in that state may not express:

Any suggestion that political appointments anywhere are not based on merit.

Any implied statement that politicians would support a candidate whom they did not think admirable.

Any reflection on the intelligence of an imaginary candidate for mayor.

Another elimination: any criticisms of modern manners and ideas.

And we are told that the law that creates and gives such power to rule to such a Board of Censors is not opposed to the Constitution of these United States!

We have but one consoling thought to offer to the supposedly free citizen of Ohio: Read Wells' "Outline of History" and note that the human race even survived the great glacial periods of the world's history.

Southern Exhibitors Approve Hays and Organization

Much thought has been given as to how exhibitors in the South will feel in regard to Will H. Hays and the organization which he heads, but after a thorough survey of the Southeast there can be no doubt but what the exhibitors are strongly in favor of him.

Y. F. Freeman of Southern Exterprises, Albert Sotille of Charleston, S. C., A. F. Sams of Winston-Salem, N. C., A. S. Guckenheimer, Savanah, Ga., L. T. Lester, Columbia, S. C., and many other representative exhibitors have expressed themselves as being heartily in favor of Hays' national organization.

Paramount Adv. and Publicity Dept. Reorganized

REORGANIZATION of the publicity and advertising department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was announced this week by S. R. Kent.

Jerome Beatty, who has been director of publicity and advertising, hereafter will do special work for the sales department in connection with production in the Lasky studio. Mr. Beatty is now in Hollywood on a special mission for the sales department.

The publicity and advertising departments, which heretofore have been under one head, have been separated. A. M. Botsford, who has been advertising manager, will continue in this position, handling his department as a separate unit in the organization. Charles E. McCarthy will continue as publicity manager, and will be in sole charge of all publicity, including the staff at the Lasky studio.

The department of lithographs and theatre and lobby accessories will be taken over by Claud Saunders, exploitation manager. This work has been formerly done by Albert Thorn under the supervision of Mr. Beatty.

Sales Council Formed for Hodkinson Corporation

In order to establish a more comprehensive plan of directing the sales organization of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, F. C. Munroe, Vice President and General Manager of the Hodkinson Corporation, announces this week that a Sales Council has been established to superintend the general sales policies of the company.

In order to carry out this new arrangement Mr. A. W. Smith, Jr., formerly Sales Manager, has been appointed Assistant to the General Manager. Mr. Smith will also serve on the new Sales Council, the members of which are Raymond Pawley, Vice President and Treasurer; A. W. Smith, Jr., Assistant to the General Manager; Foster Gilroy, Advertising Manager; L. W. Kniskern, Manager of the Contract Bureau, and F. C. Munroe, Vice President and General Manager.

Under this plan the future sales policy of the Hodkinson organization will be under the personal supervision of the General Manager, and all general instructions to the field force will be broadcasted under his signature. Division and Sales Managers will report directly to him. The Sales Council will hold regular meetings to decide all sales policies, and from time to time Division and Branch Managers will be called into the home office.

Special Features Planned for M.P.T.O. Convention

A number of features calculated t effect great changes in some elements o the motion picture industry will charac terize the big National Convention of th Motion Picture Theatre Owners o America, which will be held at the Ne Willard Hotel at Washington, D. C., th week of Monday, May 8th to 12th inclusive.

One of these will be the presence of a number of distinguished newspaper editor from different parts of the country, wh will appear as fraternal delegates i bringing to the Motion Picture Theatr Owners the message of a union of th newspaper and the screen as the combine American press. Theatre owners no recognize in the element of public servic rendered by their theatres this publicity utility, resident in the screens, and th fact is becoming more apparent daily t the people generally. Hence the forma union of the newspaper and the scree press of America at the Washington con vention is considered most appropriate and a distinct progressive step.

Another feature will be the presenta tion of a complete public service progran by the National Public Service Commit tee. They will be coupled with the pres ence of distinguished public men of th nation and different states. The coming Washington convention will, from every indication, be one of the largest numer ically, and most important—in a busines way—yet held by any division of the motion picture industry.

The accessory exhibit in the Coliseum on Pennsylvania avenue, Washington, wil be large, and entirely representative o most divisions of construction and opera tion associated with the motion picture theatre.

The railroad companies have provide fare and one-half from all points to Wash ington and return, and certificates entitling theatre owners and their friends to this courtesy have been forwarded from the national office of the Motion Picture The atre Owners of America.

Jake Wells Lowers Prices in Richmond Theatres

Jake Wells has announced a reductio in the admission price of all of his Rich mond (Va.) theatres. Lower overhea and reduction in the buying of feature pro ductions is said to have made this possible The Bijou will continue to show the bes pictures obtainable at any price. A sliding scale will be followed and admissions wil be based on the overhead cost.

Believing there was a demand for pic tures that could be shown for ten cents the Isis was converted into a popular priced house. The Oldeon is showing repeat pictures mostly with an occasiona production showing first run at popula prices. Other Wells theatres, it is said will give their patrons the benefit of sav ings in purchasing features.

First National's Dollar-a-Week Men Are Chosen

Judges Select Exhibitors Who Will Make Pleasure Trip to Coast

HERE are the nine Dollar-a-Week men who will go to California as a result of the exploitation competition conducted by Associated First National during First National Week, February 18th to 25th.

(Note: Mr. Steffy's theatre rightly falls in the Class 2 theatres, but in view of the fact that he was part of the mammoth "Go to Theatre Week" carnival staged in Seattle during First National Week, the carnival itself was considered a Class A stunt, the best man participating in it adjudged winner in this division. Mr. Steffy was that man.)

Class 2 (Theatres Seating 1,000 to 2,499)—A. G. Stolte, Des Moines theatre, Des Moines, Iowa. Willard C. Patterson, Metropolitan theatre, Atlanta, Ga. O. K. Mason, Regent, Wichita, Kas.

Class 3 (Theatres Seating 1,000 and less)—John Paxton, Musselman theatre interests, Paris, Texas. Alfred I. Gottesman, Strand theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. Joe Burton, Star theatre, Toccoa, Ga.

Out of a mass of material submitted by more than one hundred exhibitors desiring to make the trip, these nine were selected by a board of judges which included Epes W. Sargent, Moving Picture World; John S. Spargo, Exhibitors' Herald; J. S. Dickerson, Motion Picture News; Charles Simpson, Exhibitors' Trade Review; R. W. Baremore, New York Morning Telegraph.

Mr. Spargo acted for W. R. Weaver and Mr. Simpson for Howard McLellan, judges who were unable to be in New York when the decisions were made.

This contest was one of the most successful that has ever been held by a distributing organization. Conceived originally to encourage exhibitors in exploiting First National Week and the pictures played during the period, it developed into a remarkable demonstration of showmanship on the part of theatre men all over the country.

For instance, John Paxton, who, though falling in the third class of theatres, would have been declared the grand sweep stakes winner if there had been such a prize offered. The Musselman theatre interests control the Grand, Parisian and Cozy theatres in Paris, Texas; the Grand in Corsicana and the Travis theatre in Sherman, Texas.

Mr. Paxton's campaign is one of the most remarkable in the history of motion picture exploitation. Briefly, here are some of the things he did in Paris alone:

Secured the entire front of the Paris, Texas, daily paper for the opening of his campaign, managing to have one-half of it donated by the newspaper because he sold First National Week to the editor. He used 236 inches of display advertising during the campaign. He secured 75 inches of display free. Secured 566 lines of reader free. He induced newspaper editor to carry free stories of First National Pictures during entire year of 1922.

He used five twenty-four sheets, forty one sheets and forty newspaper cuts and ten banners. Ran five different announcement slides and three trailers advertising the coming of First National Week.

Displays were built on all pictures. A decorated street car and forty-piece band were used during the week. Gave free boy scout matinee, showing to 500 boys.

His whole campaign in the three cities included:

Seven hundred and forty-three inches of advertising, 257 inches of free display advertising, 1,707 lines of reading notices free of charge.

Built eight different lobby displays, used an aeroplane decorated with First National banners, which flew to all parts of the country. Gave free aeroplane rides and books of tickets. Used street cars and interurban cars.

In the first class of theatres, Ed. Hyman put forth probably the most extensive campaign Brooklyn ever has known. He used large display advertising before and during First National Week; had Hope Hampton appear in person in connection with her picture, "Stardust;" used cards on the front of some 900 street cars in Brooklyn; had huge illuminated signs at the busiest points of the city; had art paintings on the entrance of the theatre; American flags and First National Week flags flown from the marquee; had lobby decorated with First National pennants; American flags, one sheets, portraits of Hope Hampton; distributed Hope Hampton heralds to thousands of Brooklyn homes; awarded prize passes; used huge First National Week banner carried by six men; mailed thousands of postcards in advance of week; ran a special First National Week trailer in advance; introduced First National trade mark in the special George Washington prologue.

The Circle theatre played "Penrod" during First National Week and concentrated on the picture more intensely than on the week itself. Their program of exploitation included: A tie-up with the Indianapolis Star, for freckle and carrier show, resulting in stories and pictures every day for ten days in advance of opening. Interviewed Booth Tarkington, author of the story. Used advanced stories and advance advertising and reviews.

Window displays in book stores and department stores which were made a feature of advertising by these stores. Window display in Stewart's bookstore had a miniature of the Circle stage, displaying scenes from "Penrod" on a drum operated by motor.

Parade of 2,500 freckle-faced kids and Indianapolis Star newspaper carriers. Posting of twenty four sheets advertising First National Week and "Penrod," 300 one sheets, 200 regular window cards, 50 special hand drawn window cards in down-town stores, 200 cards on front of city street cars.

Pre-views of "Penrod" for Booth Tarkington and friends, for newspaper men and for members of school commissions. Each showing resulting in special publicity for "Penrod" and First National Week. Slides used for one month in advance advertising "Penrod" and the week. Special posters in lobby advertising "Penrod" month in advance. Special show for the paraders mentioned above.

The most sensational event pulled off anywhere was the "Go to Theatre Week" in Seattle. Credit for this big enterprise, which became a civic carnival, must go to L. O. Lukan, manager of the Seattle branch office of First National. Twenty-three theatres in the city having been booked for First National Week, Lukan saw an opportunity of stimulating business not only for his own clients, but for theatres in general. He got the managers of vaudeville, grand opera, stock and picture houses to join in "Go to Theatre Week," which was in reality First National Week. A fund of $2,500 was raised to advertise it, and a huge theatre parade organized. Fourteen floats representing as many theatres appeared in this parade, which was led by a band of ninety pieces.

The "Penrod" float, built by Mr. Steffy of the Coliseum was the first in the line. Other First National floats were "Hail the Woman" (Strand theatre), "Polly of the Follies" (Liberty theatre), "Peck's Bad Boy" (Winter Garden), and the First National Exchange float.

Advance teasers on "Penrod" and a puzzle contest.

One week before the engagement he posted forty twenty-four sheets, twenty-five six sheets, forty three sheets and eighty one sheets, 300 window cards.

Advance trailers on First National Week showing scenes from "Penrod" and close-ups of First National stars.

Special window displays on "Penrod"

Publicity Director Analyzes Press Books

NAT L. ROYSTER, publicity director of the Knickerbocker theatre, Nashville, replies to William A. Johnston's editorial, "The Million Dollar Press Book," which appeared in the March 25th issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Mr. Royster designs the display advertising and writes the publicity stories of the Knickerbocker theatre, and handles all of the exploitation of the Empress Amusement Company, which controls the Knickerbocker. After establishing his qualifications, Mr. Royster continues:

"We will first take an expensive press book from one of the larger producing companies, and from which I am at this moment trying to cull something that I can use in advertising their picture which we are playing a whole week. We note in the first column this time-worn statement, 'The cast is one that will attract a great deal of attention, and the members named below have proven their entertainment ability by their past work on stage and screen.'

"Then comes the famous and well-known postcard stunt, showing what a wonderfully attractive postcard can be mailed out to your patrons, which will make them want to storm the doors for admission.

"Then comes the teaser mail stunt, which is new and up-to-date, as we are all aware of. Then, a very sweet, appealing letter which you are to mail out to your patrons and which, they state, will make them fight for seats. We find these well-known words also on one page, 'A fund of useful information is given on this page and the next one.'

"It seems that the boys who get up the press books do not figure on anything but cast, director, catch lines, questions and answers and the old bunk about advertising the name of the picture and the patrons will pack the house.

"We played a wonderful little picture in this city a few days ago and one that really appealed, but when I looked for material that would assist me in putting this one over, I failed miserably to unearth anything that even looked like exploitation or publicity ideas and stunts, so, of course, had to lose practically half a night trying to think of something original.

"We have seen but few press books that really give any definite information in regard to windows, street stunts, lobby, stage, music and a dozen other means of putting the picture across, and this is where the average man who compiles a press book falls down, according to my way of thinking.

"Let's turn to some of the heads used on the press stories clipped from several press books. Of course, they are all original and no one has ever used them before. We will give just a few:

"'Has Pulsating Story;' 'A Picture That Will Please Old and Young Alike;' 'Miss Hokum Has Great Role;' 'Well Known Stage Beauty in This Picture;' 'Theatre Life Shown in All Its Entirety in This Picture;' 'Risks Life to Film the Picture,' and so on through the entire original list.

"The big city man can and will use the press book, as will the smaller cities and towns, but they can never use them to success until the publicity departments of the various film companies give the matter some thought and get right down to brass tacks. Perhaps it is because these boys, or a part of them, have never had any practical experience from the end where they have to put them across, or it may be because they do not sit in the projection room and make the proper notes on a picture. This we do not know.

"It seems to us that the plan, or press book man should receive some excellent information in regard to the picture and its possibilities and exploitation advantages; did he go to the author, the director who made it, and the scenario editor, all of whom could give some excellent advice and pointers on the picture in question, thus getting away from the old press book ideas and stereotyped stuff that they often put out for the exhibitor to work with.

"Instead of making of the publicity men regular machines to turn out this publicity, why don't the larger producers give the publicity men more time, let them originate, let them get in actual touch with the exhibitor, and in this manner find out just what is necessary and best for them?

"Sure, let them make press books for the eighty percenters, let them produce something that the small town man can use to advantage in advertising his picture, and you can bet your last dollar that the big city man will find plenty of material in the press book also that he can use to advantage, with the aid of his own original ideas and increased advantages for putting over a publicity campaign.

"In the final analysis, there should be a real dyed-in-the-wool showman to supervise the press book, a man who can look at a picture a few times and immediately pick out the advertising possibilities which it contains."

Says Mr. Royster in conclusion: "So if the 'Big Houses don't use them and the small houses can't, why the million-dollar printing bill?'"

Cleveland Exchange Board Issues Trade Rules

The newly organized Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers of Cleveland has issued a set of Trade Rules to be observed by theatre owners. The Board also announces the formation of a Grievance Committee, before which exhibitors will have the right to appear in person for the purpose of presenting any complaints and adjusting differences. In issuing the following Trade Rules, the Board announces that on its side it will give special attention to the details of the exchange activities so that exhibitors will receive as nearly perfect service as possible. The Trade Rules follow:

"TRANSPORTATION CHARGES—All transportation charges to and from the exchanges must invariably be paid by the exhibitor.

"PAYMENTS—Remittance covering film and advertising charges must positively be in the office of the exchange prior to the time the film is to be shipped, otherwise film will be shipped C. O. D.

"CONTRACTS — Exhibitors must carry out all terms as specified in contracts made with the exchanges. No verbal agreements will be recognized. Exhibitors are cautioned to read carefully all terms of all contracts signed, as they will be expected to live up to the letter of their contract.

"CHANGES IN BOOKINGS—No change in booking will be granted unless the request is made fourteen days prior to the original play date, OR SERVICE IS TO BE PAID FOR AT THE TIME THE BOOKING IS CHANGED.

"HOLDING FILM—No film shall be held by the exhibitor beyond playing date as per contract. Any and all damages accruing to an exchange through disregard to this rule shall be borne by the exhibitor responsible."

"Nation Hell-Bound in Its Reform Laws"—Dixon

THOMAS DIXON, author and playwright, replying to a communication from Samuel L. Adams, of South Boston, Va., regarding the motion picture censorship bill recently passed in Virginia, expresses the belief that "the country is hell-bent and hell-bound in its futile reform legislation." He also expresses himself as "deeply grieved to see a Southern state follow the vicious example of the North in passing a censorship bill." Mr. Adams, who represented the county of Halifax in the house of delegates, was a schoolmate and is a life-long friend of Mr. Dixon.

The letter from Mr. Dixon to Mr. Adams reads, in full, as follows:

"Your letter with enclosure received. I am deeply grieved to see a Southern state follow the vicious example of the North in passing a censorship bill. The country is hell-bent and hell-bound in its futile reform legislation. A day of grim reaction is on the way. It may be a revolution in your day and mine. It may be put off until the next generation, but it's coming."

"Virginians rebelled against George III. and put Sic Semper Tyrannis in their crest for less than your bill has done to the authors of Virginia."

"Industry an Inverted Pyramid"—Hodkinson

Distributor Urges Exhibitors to Organize to Utilize Buying Power and Credit

THAT the motion picture theatre owners of the country organize to utilize their buying power and credit if they would escape "producer domination" was the recommendation made by W. W. Hodkinson, president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, in an address before the Northern California division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at a luncheon at the Hotel St. Francis, San Francisco. Referring to what he described as the "present faulty structure" of the motion picture industry, which he likened to an "inverted pyramid," Mr. Hodkinson, in the course of his statement, declared:

"In this illogical pyramid we see the producers in the upper third, the distributors in the middle, and the exhibitors in the lower third. Logically, the exhibitors, who are numerically greatest, should form the base of the pyramid — now right side up. The producers, who, by their very nature, are few and transient, should be at the peak. In the middle we should have a body of neutral distributors who will act as a buffer between the producers and the exhibitors, and who will make their slogan, 'Fair play to pictures and public alike.'

"My opinion is that the industry has gone as far as it can under the protection of an indulgent public. The people are no longer so willing to put up with poor pictures. When they go to the 'movies' now they go 'shopping'—they pick the best. The motion picture business is just as good today as it ever was—for quality pictures.

"Three alternatives are before the motion picture industry. First, it may become a trust. This is the present tendency, but I do not think it will continue. Second, the industry, like a great machine built without regard for the laws of mechanics, may burst and throw flywheels all over the 'lot.' This, again, is something which I do not think will take place. The third alternative, and the one which I believe will win out, will see the exhibitors of the industry properly organized and exerting their enormous buying power. When this comes about they, and not the producers, will dictate the rules of the game—and the public will have a better brand of pictures."

Mr. Hodkinson was introduced by C. C. Griffin, president of the Northern California division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, as the "most far-sighted man today in the picture industry." It was he, Mr. Griffin reminded his hearers, who in 1911 started the movement of ridding Market street of the nickelodeon type of motion picture theatres, and demonstrated to their managers that they would profit by following his advice and improving their productions.

At the close of his address Mr. Hodkinson was tendered a unanimous vote of thanks and good will by those present. He expects to leave here today for Hollywood, where his activities are centered at present. He is at the Hotel St. Francis.

Officials of the Northern California division, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who were present at the luncheon, in addition to President Griffin, were: Aaron Goldberg, vice president and member of the Executive Committee of the national organization; Allen E. King, chairman of the Executive Board; Thomas D. Van Osten, managing director, and John Di Stasio of Sacramento, second vice president.

In addition to Mr. Hodkinson, other guests at the luncheon were: Sol J. Vogel of Vogel & Meehan, Northern California distributors for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation; George A. Mann, manager Federated Film Exchange, Inc.; R. A. Walsh and George A. Mann, manager and assistant manager, respectively, of the Federated Film Exchange, Inc., and Timothy Healey, attorney.

San Francisco exhibitors and theatre owners present were: Sol Lesser, New Lyceum; Joseph Bauer, Wigwam; W. S. Godfrey and Harry Sack, Haight; Abe Karski, Royal; A. Nasser, Palace; R. A. McNeil, Panama (and New Broadway, Oakland); N. K. Herzog, Silver Palace; Frank McCaulley, Irving and E. Eschelbach.

Out-of-town exhibitors included Samuel Perlin, Strand, Oakland; John Peters, Oakland; H. Herond, Oakland; Samuel Levin, San Mateo; Sam Gordon, Napa; William Howell, Porterville; Mrs. C. W. Miller and R. A. Ford.

Capacity R-C Production Soon, States Powers

Effective, Though Economic, Production Keynote of New R-C Picture Regime

CAPACITY operation of the R-C studio on the coast within two weeks' time is the announcement of P. A. Bowers, who recently acquired a controlling interest in R-C Pictures Corporation. Mr. Powers has been on the coast for the past few weeks, and during that time has been active in effecting a reorganization of R-C production forces. A dollar's worth of results from every dollar invested will be the slogan at the R-C studio under the new production plan. "The 'bonanza' days of picture production are over," stated Mr. Powers, in announcing his plans and policies to the trade. "It will be the same in the industry as it was in the Klondike after the gold fever died. The gold itself remained, to be mined by saner methods and with law and order superseding recklessness and 'wild catting.'

"We've started with a clean slate. A new idea of operation will be inaugurated at the Robertson Cole studios. Actual co-operation is to be our modus operandi henceforth. This applies to both financial and technical phases of pitcure making. Our cash in actual dollars will be pooled with the cash value to us as producers, of an artist, a writer, a director. Our cash being actual hard coin of the realm, naturally we will not permit any inflated valuations to be placed on the brains or beauty to be pitted against that cash. In a word, no counterfeit, or 'wild cat' money is being invested, nor will counterfeit talent or exaggerated egos find a place on the roster of our institution.

"No established star of really stellar repute will suffer under this revised order of things, the first application of the cooperative theory in picture production. The time for the solidification and perpetuation of the motion picture industry is here, as I predicted it would be when the hysteria of much money forced top admission fees to two dollars and generally settled on the picture industry a burden of over-capitalization, with all its attendant wastefulness and warping of real values, the consequences of which are now so acutely apparent.

"We will be down to bedrock in thirty days," Mr. Powers concluded. "Effective, though economic, production will then begin at this plant, and the personnel of our staff and our various producing units will reflect the prudence and foresight of those present factors in the field who have at heart the future welfare of the industry."

Mr. Powers has been active in reorganizing since his arrival on the coast. The first big announcement of R-C pictures since Mr. Powers acquired control was the signing of a contract with Harry Carey, by which that star will produce for R-C release.

"Dollar-a-Week" Men Are Chosen

and "Penrod" ice cream. Had large ice cream manufacturer donate 3,500 special confections bearing the "Penrod" imprint on the wrappers.

Presentation: He opened the show with a special march dedicated to First National Week and played by forty-piece orchestra at each afternoon performance. Special prologue with "Penrod" and two little negro boys, Penrod singing song. The usheretts wore silk ribbons reading "Penrod and First National Week." This prologue was reproduced on the float Mr. Steffy entered in "Go to Theatre Week" parade.

Lobby: A beautiful shell was built for the front of the house, showing cut-outs of "Penrod" in elaborate colors which were brilliantly illuminated at night.

In Class 2 Arthur Stolte, managing director of the Des Moines theatre was held to have devised the best campaign. It had twelve distinct units. As follows:

Reproduction of First National Week banner in form of a sticker, eight inches long, which was placed on 40,000 newspapers, announcing First National Week. Special newspaper stories on First National Week and "Penrod" which was the attraction. Five different puzzle contests involving First National stars. Freckle contest. First National parade. Book displays on "Penrod." Twenty First National Week twenty-four sheets and twenty Penrod twenty-four sheets. Special illuminated twenty-four sheet with painted side panels announcing First National Week and "Penrod." Specially built lobby display on "Penrod." Extra newspaper advertising. First National one sheets displayed in store windows as part of window displays.

Willard C. Patterson of the Metropolitan theatre and Criterion theatre, one of the most active exploiters in the south or anywhere else, used "Hail the Woman" as the center of his campaign in Atlanta. His work was notable for the skillful manner in which he obtained newspaper cooperation.

He got columns of advance publicity on First National week and added to this when he took out a rain insurance policy in the Hartford Insurance Company, guaranteeing the Metropolitan against loss during the picture's engagement.

He gave a special show to 700 school teachers and a special show to the Better Film Committee.

Introduced a two for one ticket scheme, whereby a free admission was given for performances during First National Week with each paid adult admission. Sixty thousand of these were distributed by boys in all parts of the city and he also had them inserted in packages sent out by the city's largest department store during the week preceding First National Week.

He used a special First National Week banner, 50 feet long and 15 feet deep, stretched across the front of the Metropolitan above the marquee. Had 1,200 special car cards announcing First National Week and the picture in 600 street cars. Also hired a special street car for ballyhoo having First National banners along sides and ends.

Special show for Atlanta's Women's Club.

Used specially drawn newspaper ads.

Stanley Chambers, managing director of the Palace, Regent and Princess theatres in Wichita, Kansas, let O. K. Mason, manager of the Regent, have free rein during First National Week and the result is Mr. Mason was easily adjudged one of the winners in Class 2.

"My Boy" was the attraction at the Regent during the week and Mason not only put out smashing newspaper ads on the picture itself, but got a splendid two-page cooperative ad out with local merchants, in addition to huge reading space in the newspaper. One angle of this latter was the Jackie Coogan puzzle contest conducted by the Wichita Beacon in which approximately 500 persons participated.

In addition to his newspaper tie-ups he put over some bully window displays showing cut outs of little Jackie, First National banners, and scenes from the picture. He got these over in a big clothing store where Jackie Coogan clothes, hats and caps were sold. In a shoe store where Jackie Coogan shoes were shown. In a drug store, hardware store and other places.

The outdoor display included fifteen special sheets and 200 special one sheets.

Close on the heels of John Paxton, whose campaign was detailed above, came Alfred Gottesman, of the Strand theatre, Shenandoah, Pa., in the third class. Like Paxton, there was very little in the way of exploitation that could have been done that Gottesman did not do.

Three weeks before First National Week he started a teaser campaign in the newspapers which covered a radius of 50 miles.

Two weeks prior to February 18 he ran a trailer campaign and one week prior to the opening a series of small ads backed up by news copy announcing the coming of First National Week. The lobby of his theatre was decorated in advance with streamers, pennants, flags and pictures of First National stars, cut from a 24 sheet poster, smaller decorations were placed in front of the theatre while special lighting was provided to bring out prominent features.

On the opening day of First National Week he chartered a trolley car decorated with banners and flags, and had a band inside and ran it as a special for 30 miles on track operated by the trolley company. Stops were made at every town in the territory.

At 2 o'clock on the opening day, 1,000 toy balloons filled with gas were released in front of the theatre in the presence of an army of kids and grown-ups. Each balloon carried a First National pennant which acted as a pass to the theatre, while ten of the balloons contained promissory notes for one dollar. Sixty-two of the balloons were returned, some having traveled 28 miles. Newspapers of the region played up the First National air fleet, the dollar notes, etc.

"Serenade" was the attraction the first three days and he had a special flashlight picture of his capacity opening, a copy of which will be sent to the Independent Screen Artists' Guild. A special children's matinee was given.

"Sowing the Wind" was used the last three days and Gottesman had used up so much space in advertising that the newspaper limited him to one full page, denying him a double page spread.

In all his exploitation Gottesman made liberal use of the free accessories given by First National, distributing thousands of heralds, etc.

Joe Burton, of the Star theatre, Toccoa, Ga., winner of the third place in the third class, opened up his First National campaign on February 15, mailing 3,500 postal cards, announcing the coming of First National Week.

Following this he had Mrs. Burton call every number in the telephone directory (number not given, but Toccoa has a population of 3,500) announcing the opening of First National Week, but keeping her identity a secret.

Obtained permission from the city government to put First National banners across main prominent streets.

Had a boy, mounted on a Shetland pony, ride through town announcing the picture playing and also display First National Week posters.

On Sunday morning, February 19, Joe had his friend the Baptist Minister announce from his pulpit of the Baptist church that it was First National's birthday, and that he would show First National pictures exclusively for the week. The clergyman, in addition, recommended each and every one of them to be clean and good pictures. He also gave the titles of each day's program.

Painted First National Week slogans on sidewalks and center of town.

Posted five 24 sheets on the best spots in town with the slogan "First National Pictures will be shown at the Star theatre not only this week but every week as long as we are in the business because they are the best pictures."

Erected his lobby display one week in advance, having for the message, "First National Pictures are the best pictures because they are made by Independent stars in independent studios for independent exhibitors."

Posted one sheets in the most conspicuous places in the business section.

Had a man with megaphone announcing from the top of the theatre, opening day and the pictures to be shown during First National Week.

Ran First National Week slides and trailer for two weeks in advance. Used liberal posters of all pictures booked. Made special banners announcing First National Week and drove all over the country with a bass drum ballyhoo. Tied up with local order of Woodmen, using the drill team on the street in front of the theatre.

The inducement offered these and all other exhibitors who participated in the First National Week contest are trips to California with expenses paid and a salary of one dollar a week. During the trips the nine job winners will visit Los Angeles and note the products that are in the making for First National release.

Details of the trip have not been arranged but it is expected the exhibitors will go some time during the summer. Arrangements are already being made to entertain them on their arrival.

Famous Players - Lasky Elect Directors For Year

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was held at the corporation's office, Tuesday, March 28, and the following directors were re-elected: Jules E. Brulatour, Cecil B. DeMille, Daniel Frohman, Albert A. Kaufman, Sidney R. Kent.

The following were elected to the Finance Committee: Frederic G. Lee, Gayer B. Dominick, Maurice Wertheim, Theodore F. Whitmarsh, Adolph Zukor.

Indianapolis Organization to Promote Good Films

To "co-operate with and support the National Board of Review and to promote good pictures," the National Indorsers of Photoplays were incorporated at Indianapolis last week. The organization will attempt to nationalize the idea which has been developed by the Indiana Indorsers of Photoplays during the past two years, namely, that the way to get good pictures is not to censor bad ones but to indorse and patronize only the good ones.

Mrs. David Ross, head of the Indiana indorsers, was named head of the national body with other officers as follows:

Vice presidents, Dr. M. C. Pearson, Detroit; Mrs. Robbins Gilman, Minneapolis; Mrs. M. K. Merriman, New York; Mrs. M. E. Robbins, Mrs. S. E. Perkins, Indianapolis; Mrs. Grant C. Markle, Winchester, Ind.

Directors, Mrs. Fred Lucas, Greencastle; E. U. Graff, Indianapolis; Dr. Edna Hatfield Edmondson, Bloomington.

Select Again Handles Independent Product

An announcement of more than ordinary interest to the trade was made from the fourteenth floor of 729 Seventh Avenue a day or two ago when the immediate return of Select Pictures Corporation to active participation in the business of distributing independently made motion pictures was promised. A complete reorganization of the Select company, with newly elected officers has been effected and a new policy, more aggressive than any which has yet been followed by the organization, has been decided upon.

In the recent reorganization of Select the following officers have taken charge: President, Lewis J. Selznick; Treasurer, Morris Kohn and General Manager, John S. Woody.

It is made clear in the announcement of the new Select plans that Select Pictures Corporation and Selznick Pictures Corporation have been completely divorced, the one from the other, and that Selznick Pictures handled through Select will be handled in identically the same manner that the product of other producers is handled.

Wire Briefs from Coast

THE Los Angeles papers announce the merger of the Louis B. Mayer and B. P. Schulberg film interests. Reports of the merger remain unconfirmed by Mayer. B. P. Schulberg and Preferred Pictures Corporation will produce Katherine MacDonald and Louis J. Gasnier productions at the Mayer studio. These producing companies will move to the Mayer lot this week.

Benjamin B. Hampton has moved his headquarters and producing equipment to the Cosmosart studio where he will conduct his future producing activities.

Eliot Dexter will play opposite Clara Kimball Young in her new production titled "The Hands of Nara." The producing company has just returned from Truckee where snow-storm scenes were filmed.

Thos. Ince Berates "Pirates" of Film Industry

Warns Against "Leech Pictures" and Declares Public Confidence Will Wane if Proper Steps Not Taken

THE danger of a serious loss of public confidence in motion pictures and the motion picture theatre, and resultant damage to patronage, is pointed out by Thomas H. Ince in a statement issued in New York in which he warns against "leech pictures" and declares that the remedy rests with the industry itself.

"The motion picture industry, smarting under criticisms from without, is confronted with a serious peril from within, asserts Ince.

"It is not a new evil but it has assumed such proportions, its perpetrators have become so brazen and it has grown so offensive that it is a real menace to the whole industry.

"It is the 'leech-picture' the shabby imitique, the inferior importation and the cheaply produced imitation, put out in competition with and exploited on the success of, a legitimate production.

"The remedy rests with the industry, primarily with the exhibitor. It seems to me that the time has come for the honest exhibitor, the honest distributor and the honest producer to stop, for all time, this obnoxious practice and save the motion picture from another black eye.

"It is unfortunate that no effective means have been established at law to curb this practice and also that people within the industry will stoop to methods of this sort. I am amazed at the reports I receive of the manner in which the practice has been encouraged in some sections of the country.

"The subject was called forcefully to my attention again by news from London that an old picture which I produced under the title "D'Artigan" had been revived there as it was here, and was being presented in a big theatre with Douglas Fairbanks in an old release called 'The Americano' and the presentation advertised as 'DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS' in 'The Americano' and 'THE THREE MUSKETEERS.' Of course the words 'The Americano,' are so small in the lights and the advertising that a gullible public is led to believe that the show is Douglas Fairbanks in 'The Three Musketeers.'

"When the success of the Fairbanks picture was established by its New York premier, and a picture made some years ago by me for a distributing company and exploited in competition to the new release, I issued an immediate statement to the trade repudiating the old picture and setting forth the fact that it was antiquated and inferior to Fairbanks' new production.

"The producer who permits the issuance of old features for competition with new pictures, the distributor who encourages the practice and the exhibitor who plays such pictures all contribute to a most serious undermining of the very pillars of the industry, public confidence.

"The motion picture has grown into an institution. Millions of dollars have been invested in theatres and in productions and we can ill afford to permit the industry to besmirch its reputation with an obnoxious form of piracy.

"The practice has been stimulated by the production of increasingly finer motion pictures and the picturization of the classics of English literature. Many of the best stories in our libraries were written so long ago that copyrights have expired, and this itself is an encouragement to pirates. The resumption of production on a large scale in Europe has tended to encourage this form of exploitation because, either here or abroad, almost every famous story has been, in some fashion or another, made into a picture.

"I don't believe that any American producer of standing has any fear of legitimate competition from abroad, but when obviously inferior productions made abroad, pictures which could not hope for a play date in American theatres on their merits, are imported for the sole purpose of being exploited by title alone on the success of a big American picture, it is time that some barrier was raised.

"Existing copyright laws and existing regulations of the Federal Trade commission seem to offer no protection to the legitimate producer who undertakes, in a serious way, the presentation of a classic story and the motion picture industry nor the advertising profession seems to have developed no effective or universal means of combating such conditions.

"I believe, very firmly, that the great majority of the people in our industry are honest and conscientious, and it is most discouraging to know that, for a few easily gotten dollars, an infinitely small minority can keep alive such an obnoxious practice."

John E. Storey Is Back in Service with Pathe

PATHE has recalled John E. Storey to its service with the title and duties of General Representative. The call follows Mr. Storey's expiration of a year's leave of absence which he was granted in order that he might ally himself with Associated Exhibitors as sales-manager.

On taking active charge as the newly elected President of Association Exhibitors, Arthur S. Kane paid a warm tribute to Mr. Storey. "Under the sales direction of Mr. Storey," he said, "the company has in its first year made a most creditable showing. I believe it to have more potential possibilities than any other distributing organization. Mr. Storey and his men have established the company in the good graces of exhibitors by fair treatment and clean dealing."

Southern Conference Will Discuss Better Films

A SOUTHEASTERN Conference on Motion Pictures has been called by the Better Films Committee of Atlanta for April 28th, "to consider constructive means of bettering motion pictures through promotion of better films and co-operation with exhibitors." As delegates there will be more than two hundred representative men and women from Kentucky, Tennessee, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana and Mississippi.

On the conference program are several nationally known figures. Among them are: Burdette G. Lewis, Commissioner Institutions and Agencies of New Jersey, and former assistant to John Purroy Mitchell; Orrin G. Cocks, Secretary of the National Committee for Better Flms; Mrs. Fred Lucas, Chairman of the Motion Picture Committee of the National Congress of Mothers and Parent Teacher Associations; Mrs. W. S. Jennings, First Vice-President of the National Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. David Ross, President National Photoplay Indorsers; and others.

Delegates to the conference will represent Woman's Clubs, Parent Teacher Associations, Business and Professional Women's Clubs, ministers, civic organizations, such as Rotary, Kiwanis and Civitan Clubs.

All-Canadian Movie Week Inaugurated in Toronto

THE Allen Theatre of Toronto is inaugurating the first all-Canadian Motion Picture Week in Canadian Film history by presenting Ralph Connors' "Cameron of the Royal Mounted" and other Canadian features.

W. E. Drummond, late manager of First National Exchange conceived the idea and brought Ernest Shipman, producer of the picture, on from New York, as an added attraction. Mr. Shipman has been enthusing large audiences over possibilities of future Canadian film activities and has been tendered a proposition by Toronto capitalists, which may result in a one million dollar holding company, formed for the purpose of solidifying the various independent Canadian producing units under one management.

The only difficulty in reaching a settlement, is the American and Italian interests of Shipman. If a deal is consummated, Canadian laboratories, schools of film art and the reclaiming of Canadian talent now working for American producers in different parts of the states, will follow as a matter of course.

Activities of Exchange Managers, Exhibitors, Salesmen and Other

Canada

JIMMY FINCH, one of the best known film salesmen in Canada and for many months the assistant general manager of Canadian Universal, has been handling "Before the White Man Came" throughout Western Canada as a road attraction, having Chief White Elk, a principal in the cast of the picture, make personal appearances at theatres where the film is presented. After many bookings in the Canadian West, Finch has returned to Toronto to open the eastern run of the feature. Just before he left Winnipeg, Finch was unfortunate in having a trunk containing personal effects valued at $500 stolen from the back of a theatre.

Fred Crosbie of Winnipeg, Manitoba, a long experienced exchange man, has launched upon a new venture, having leased Mac's theatre, Winnipeg. Crosbie was with Stephenson Attractions, Limited, of Toronto, which handles independent releases.

Bud Lennon, formerly of Canadian Universal, is general sales manager of Stephenson Attractions, Limited, and Harry Decker, formerly with Regal Films, Limited, Montreal, has been appointed Montreal manager for Stephenson.

Basil Horsfall, formerly of Horsfall Productions, Montreal, has quit the film exchange business in order to conduct musical attractions at the St. Denis theatre, Montreal, and elsewhere.

The Canadian Theatre Supply Company has been organized at Toronto, Ontario, to handle the Canadian distribution of Simplex projection machines and other moving picture theatre equipment.

Len Roos of Toronto, a veteran cameraman, has joined the staff of the Trans-Canada Press Services, Limited, as a photographer. The head office of this new company is at Vancouver, B. C. Roos made a number of fine scenes for the Chester-Outing series in the recent past.

Charles N. J. Johnston

GENTLEMEN, meet Charles N. Johnston, who here for the first time in his long and varied career, finds his name spelled right in the public prints. Mr. Johnston, by the way, is the new manager of the Buffalo Fox exchange, a position to which he has been promoted by District Manager Clayton P. Sheehan following two record breaking years as city salesman. Mr. Johnston is a member of that well-known class called pioneers of the "fillum" industry. He left the position of treasurer of the Teck theatre, a post which he held for five years to accept a sales job with the old Mutual exchange when the Rt. Hon. Bill Mack was manager. This was way back in 1914. He remained at this post some four years when he resigned to accept the city salesmanship for Universal. He left Universal to join up with Fox. It is interesting to note that Mr. Johnston was also manager at one time of the old Bijou Dream on Main street, where he succeeded the famous George W. Erdmann. He also opened the Ellen Terry, which he managed for the Grant Theatre corporation. Mr. Johnston is known to every exhibitor in Buffalo and the wilds outside the city.

Harry Graham

EQUIPPED with several years of experience as an exhibitor, Harry Graham, manager of the Kansas City Pathe office, in less than a year has made a host of warm friends in the Kansas City territory. He not only has a thorough understanding of the distributing end of the industry, but possesses a keen insight to the trials and tribulations that confront the exhibitor. In no other exchange office in the Middle West is there more harmony and co-operation than in the Pathe office at Kansas City. If you desire to know who "the best fellow in the world" is, just ask any Pathe salesman out of Kansas City.

Mr. Graham started in the film business eleven years ago, handling "Roosevelt in Africa" for the states of Illinois and Indiana. Later he became house manager of the Atlas and Climax theatres in Milwaukee. Then he was made manager of the Butterfly theatre, Milwaukee, later building the Merrill theatre in that city. He started in the distribution end of the industry six years ago as a salesman for George Kleine, later being transferred to Dallas, Tex. Then he was made a special representative of Mr. Klein's, covering offices in Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Boston. Three years ago he was made branch manager of Pathe's Omaha office, being transferred to Kansas City last year.

ONE of the most hackneyed expressions in any industry today is that of "square deal." Yet, to find a man who adheres to that policy to such an extent that he "digs down into his own pocket" to make right something which unintentionally has gone wrong, is somewhat of a novelty. That is the principal upon which Johnny Waters, manager of the Kansas City office of Peacock Productions, Inc., has built a wide and enviable reputation in the Middle West territory.

THE RATING SYSTEM

A new Department planned to function as a real percentage table on both the entertainment and the box office value of pictures. A perfect Box Office Report Department.

IN 1917 MOTION PICTURE NEWS began publishing exhibitors' reports on pictures. The style was very much the same as that competitors are now featuring. Later the idea was somewhat amended and became a weekly service under the title of "Index to the Complete Plan Book and Exhibitors' Box Office Reports."

As time went on certain defects in the system became apparent. These defects were:

The refusal of the average representative exhibitor to make reports for publication.

The practise of some exhibitors to make reports in apparent contradiction to the facts. Viz.: Managers of some producer-controlled thatres reporting favorably on all pictures, no matter how poor they were. Others, quite evidently prejudiced, never reporting favorably on any feature, regardless of its merit.

The fact that for the most part, all reports available were from exhibitors in small towns and on pictures so old that few playing dates remained on them.

The "Index to the Complete Plan Book and Exhibitors' Box Office Reports" were discontinued some months ago after a system of covering the week run theatres of the key cities had been put into effect, and proven to be unbiased and reliable.

To this last named service, we now add what we have termed "Exhibitor Reports in Percentages," the result of inaugurating the most expensive to maintain, comprehensive and reliable method of determining through the experience of others, the box office and entertainment value of a picture. This idea has had months of study and taken weeks of preliminary effort. To a selected list of exhibitors, whom we know to be independent in both affiliation and views, blanks are sent with spaces for the classification of features played according to percentages equivalent to "poor," "fair," "average," "good" and "big." A poor picture is rated at 20, a fair picture at 40, an average feature at 50, a good production at 70 and a big picture at 100.

This rating is applied separately to the box office and entertainment value. To arrive at the rating of a picture, the number of reports at each individual rating are multiplied, the whole totaled and the sum obtained divided by the total number of reports received.

Thus the exhibitor gets the average opinion and the average box office result on an attraction, and it is the average rather than the individual report that is valuable.

The card index system inaugurated in order to begin this service at this time, disclosed the fact that 75 per cent of the reports on a picture agree. Twenty-five per cent vary from this general consensus, usually one or two "votes" to each classification.

We recommend that the exhibitor go to the slight trouble involved in proving to his own satisfaction that "figures do not lie." Once convinced of this fact the "Exhibitors' Reports in Percentages" will become the most useful department in MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

The circle of contributors to this service will be enlarged as rapidly as is possible and still preserve the reliability of the reports.

No picture which does not receive at least five reports will be included in the list, except on pictures just released. These new releases will be indicated by an asterisk following the title.

The service will run once each month only. The amount of clerical work involved in the matter of preparation of copy forbids a weekly service.

On the following pages will be found the first installment of "Exhibitor Reports in Percentages."

Ratings on Features Explained

Exhibitor Reports in Percentages is the result of giving figure ratings to word box office and entertainment value reports from exhibitors, and by arithmetic reducing the total number of reports to percentages.

The key ratings accepted for use are:

Poor	Fair	Average	Good	Big
20%	40%	50%	70%	100%

To arrive at the rating of a picture, the number of reports at each individual rating are multiplied by the key rating percentage, the whole is totaled and the sum obtained divided by the total number of reports received.

The rating is applied separately to the box office and entertainment value related by each report.

No picture will be included in the list which does not receive at least five reports except on features just released.

A New Service

Attention is directed to "Exhibitor Reports in Percentages," a new department and a carefully planned new service which appears in Motion Picture News this week, on pages 2060-2061.

The service is presented as the best system of reporting on pictures as yet devised and one which has stood all tests for fairness and reliability to which it has as yet been subjected.

Comment either pro or con is invited on these pages. We want to know what you think of the idea and whether it meets with your approval or disapproval.

Lobby decorations on "Peacock Alley" which the Strand theatre, Lexington, Ky., recently used to exploit this picture

Gypsy Wagon Exploits "Gypsy Blood" Nicely

Nonplussed because of his failure to find a good method for exploiting "Gypsy Blood," Manager Metzger, of the Strand Theatre, Creston, Ia., entered his six cylinder car and sped over the country roads. He came upon a road building crew, part of whose equipment consisted of a big covered wagon to carry tents and other necessities.

Presto—the idea was born!

The day before the picture started its run a large gypsy wagon toured the streets of Creston. It was conspicuous because of the ferocious looking, black bearded man who drove it, because of the gypsy woman with several ill clad, unkempt children inside it. On the side of the wagon was the sign: "We Answered the Call of GYPSY BLOOD."

Inasmuch as exploitation consists in doing the unusual to attract attention, the sight of such a queer caravan in a town of automobiles won interest. The newspaper notices had played up in advance, the coming arrival of these gypsy roamers and their actual presence created interest that insured the success of the picture's run.

"Sky Pilot" ballyhoo which Harry Schoupp, manager of the Mall theatre, Sidney, O., used recently

Spark's "Peacock Alley" Lobby Artistic and Pleasing

FROM S. B. Sparks enterprising publicity director of the Phoenix Amusement Company, Lexington, Ky., comes a photograph of another fine lobby display on "Peacock Alley," as shown by the accompanying cut. To enhance the setting purple lamps were used around the marquee and the box office, and small flashers of red lamps were dropped in front of the big cut outs. The rest of the lamps in front of the theatre and in the lobby were white, which gave a very pretty effect at night. All of the cut outs shown in the lobby were made from one, three, six and twenty-four sheets.

"Sailor Made Man" Lobby Intrigues Loop Passersby

Manager Barbee, of Barbee's Loop theatre, made his lobby "ship shape" during the run of "A Sailor Made Man," and attracted unusual attention.

The ticket booth was transformed into a wheel house of a liner, and above it was a ship's bridge, ventilators, searchlight, and other nautical equipment.

On this bridge a naval bugler was stationed and his calls helped attract attention to the house.

The ticket seller and ushers also were in navy uniform.

This attractive display helped put over "A Sailor Made Man" to big business for two weeks.

Effective Truck Ballyhoo for "Fool's Paradise"

A large board ten feet long and seven feet high mounted on an International truck was a simple and effective ballyhoo for the Richmond Theatre, Richmond, Ind., when Manager F. E. Mills played "Fool's Paradise."

The local International agency donated the truck figuring on the advertising that comes from getting their product on the street and making people look at it.

Libson Gets Cooperation from His Honor

Because he interested Mayor P. Carrol, of Cincinnati, O., in a "Homeless Boy" drive and gave his own time and co-operation to it, Manager Libson, of the Strand Theatre, obtained a lot of publicity for his showing of "My Boy." A special performance of the Jackie Coogan picture was given at the Boys' Opportunity Farm, a city institution for dependent boys and the newspapers played it up, establishing the connection with the showing of "My Boy" at the Strand Theatre in their stories.

In addition a tie up on Jackie Coogan hats and caps with the Mabley & Carew department store provided additional exploitation for the picture.

Ballyhoo Sells "Why Girls Leave Home"

As a ballyhoo for "Why Girls Leave Home," when this picture played the Lucas theatre, Savannah, Ga. Exploitation Director A. L. Selig hired a truck on which he mounted a uniphone. Then with two pretty girls and signs telling why girls leave home added, the truck was sent about the city.

This "Saturday Night" window display was secured by S. P. Cohn, manager of the Rialto theatre, Brooklyn, during the recent run of this picture

Drumbar's Stunts for "Peacock Alley"

Elaborate Lobby Display and Artistic Presentation Feature of Knoxville Run

ONE week in advance of the showing of "Peacock Alley" at the Riviera theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., Manager W. E. Drumbar considered himself very fortunate in securing a window tie-up with one of the largest jewelers of that city. The location of this jewelry store was in the heart of town and possibly the most coveted spot that any theatre manager could wish to obtain for a window display.

A miniature stage annunciator, which had been used at the Riviera theatre, was transformed into a beautiful and elaborate setting of this Mae Murray picture. With rich peacock colors of satin and silks for a background and a contrast of colors of an apricot hue for the side draperies, augmented by the lighting effect, this little stage dressed and embellished with diamonds, pearls and other trinkets made a wonderfully attractive window display. Miniature hand painted peacocks, swinging from diamond bracelets, added to the tone of the entire display.

Manager Drumbar tried to bring out the refined and rich effect with draperies, which he considered made the most elaborate front ever displayed by the Riviera theatre. Two large archways were covered with feathers, which encircled the entire front, together with a 4-foot cut-out of a peacock, carrying its natural feathers. This was backed by an eight-foot fan-shaped affair, of beautifully colored feathers, which covered the entire box office. A spot light was placed in such a position as to bring out the beautiful colors which are usually found in the feathers of a peacock. The entire effect of this lobby was one rich with colors and dazzling with its finery.

The city commissioners of Knoxville permitted Mr. Drumbar to make use of all the trash cans on the most prominent corners of the business section to advertise this attraction. These cans were painted in different colors, announcing Mae Murray in "Peacock Alley." A large peacock was also painted on each can.

As a result of this splendid campaign business was unusually good, despite the cold weather and rain, which continued throughout the engagement.

"Travelin' On" from Yonkers to New York

YONKERS, N. Y., is a big city but most of the working population catch the New York Central to and from New York twice a day.

Taking this into consideration, Manager Nicholas Christmas of the Hamilton Theater, got out a herald for Bill Hart's "Travelin' On," one side of which contained a complete schedule of the departure and arrivals of these commuters trains to and from the city. The other side printed the sales arguments which got everybody into the theatre. This was a herald that few people threw away.

Lobby Front Sells "Theodor" to Tampa Fans

FOR the showing of "Theodora" the Victory Theatre, Tampa, Flo ida, the exploitation was focuss upon the lobby which is a spacious or The main display was an illuminat mosque, or temple-like effect, gained l the use of compo board and mount figures from the one and six-sheets. the background was the figure of The dora, standing by her throne; in the for ground were three cut-out lions. Re chains ran from Theodora's hands to tl lions. The compo board was so arrang that the display looked like parted cu tains, or a small mosque with the Em press and the lion in the mosque. Th was illuminated so that it stood o sharply.

Posters, paintings, and framed phot were used freely in the rest of the lobb which was so attractive that it drew spe tators all day long, even when no show ing was on.

Dillon Adopts New Method n Exploiting "School Days"

An altogether different method of exploi g "School Days" was used by William Dil n, manager of the Strand Theatre, Ithaca, N. Y., and originator of the Dillon Memory System of Phonograph Records, a by-product of his s g writing days.

In this instance the Strand advertised e film with Tiny Tot Educator song records, d published the music sheet in the local dail s. The records were placed on sale in all the e and ten-cent stores and music shops, and the coupled with newspaper spreads and stu t ballyhoos laid the foundation for record-bre - ing business, it is said.

Another "Silent Call" Dra - ing Competition

All records were smashed in the drawing c - test engineered by Robert Worl, manager of e Rialto theatre, Boone, Ia., as an exploitat n stunt for "The Silent Call."

Mr. Worl went over the top by appealing o children in the countryside for miles arou d with the co-operation of the Boone Cou y Pioneer, which fell in line with the campai . When the smoke had blown over it was c - covered that 985 children had competed r the drawing prize.

Pickwick Theatre Designs Mechanical Lobby Front

Richard A. Addison, who handles the publicity for the Pickwick Theatre, San Diego, Cal., Dwight Hill, manager, has been putting over some novel lobby displays recently, one of which was in connection with the showing of "The Call of the North." For this feature Mr. Addison designed an aurora borealis, the mechanism having several concentric sets of flame-colored paper-board discs, the larger about five feet in diameter. Electrically operated, the device, as the discs revolved, gave an excellent representation of the aurora, and especially at night was the effect very pleasing and attractive. The device was declared by all who saw it to be a most appropriate lobby feature for the advertising of the week's picture. Another avenue of publicity used by the Pickwick for the Holt picture was a big issue of postal cards sent out, bearing announcement of the attraction.

Another publicity stunt recently used by Mr. Addison was a little four-page folder, bearing on the front the words "How to Become Famous." Inside appeared the names of various famous men, from Nero to Volstead, with a brief statement as to the source of their fame, and the third page carried announcement of "The Man Who—," with the statement that Bert Lytell is the "most famous of them all."

For the showing of "Exit—The Vamp!" the Pickwick used as a publicity getter a small dodger which was put under office and residence doors, carrying announcement of the film, with the statement that "We Are Tearing the Paper Off the Wall to Make Room for the Crowds Who Want to See Ethel Clayton." This idea was made more realistic by the use of wallpaper stock for the dodgers.

This cut illustrates the accompanying story concerning the mechanical lobby display on "The Call of the North" devised by the Pickwick theatre, San Diego, Cal.

Juvenile Home Talent Quartette Used for "Penrod"

WHEN the Saenger Amusement Company gave "PENROD" its all-southern premiere of New Orleans, at their Liberty Theater, Elmore Ryan, manager of the Liberty, introduced a juvenile quartette, singing the name-sake song, originally published by Frank Eagan of the Little Theater, Los Angeles.

The kids were used in a prologue, where "Penrod" was featured as the soloist. His pals were grouped about him in a pen-fire on a street-corner lot of the "den." It was the first time pickaninnies were used on a Southern stage since Frank Dazey's stage production of "OLD KENTUCKY."

Wes. Barry's prototype was a red-headed, freckled newsboy; Georgie was a sedate youngster from the Liberty's usher staff; and two negro boot-blacks from a nearby 'shine parlor, known as the 'singing midgets' let loose a quartette that nearly drew as much interest as the picture itself.

Maurice Barr, head of the Saenger theaters at New Orleans forwards the accompanying photograph of the quartette.

Jazz Carnival Number Serves as Prologue at Brooklyn Mark Strand

As a special exploitation factor in connection with the showing of Constance Talmadge in "Polly of the Follies," the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre put on a Jazz Band Carnival.

Mr. Eyman obtained a group of jazz instrumentalists and when the curtains lifted they were shown in a glittery cafe scenic set such as are seen often in "Polly of the Follies." They were in the midst of the jazzy melody. After they had played a group of jazz numbers, Grace Eastman and Paul Oscard, dancers, appeared in evening dress in a number of the new fast and furious ballroom figures. Miss Eastman was garbed and made up to imitate Miss Talmadge in her film role of "Poly."

Inasmuch as Mr. Hyman rarely introduces much of the simon-pure so-called jazz into his musical novelties, the idea hit the audiences with a bang and was given considerable applause at every performance.

Seattle Prologue Adapts Cut-In Film Idea

A decided innovation in the way of prologues was staged by Manager Leroy V. Johnson of the Liberty Theatre, Seattle, a few weeks ago for the showing of "Moran of the Lady Letty."

The prologue opened with a scene on the deck of a ship, with red, green and white marine lights displayed about the sides and top of the stage. A character representing Moran stood at a large wheel in the center of the stage. At one side sat a seaman coiling rope and on the other side stood a character representing Valentino as the mate.

Instead of regular scenery behind the characters, the curtain was raised and a length of film showing nothing but seething, raging water and waves was shown while the mate sang "The Song of the Restless Sea." The appearance was actually that of looking over the side of the ship onto the water beyond.

The film showed up perfectly, due to the absolute darkness of the stage. The characters were each lighted by a very dim baby spot, which merely set them off against the background of constantly moving water, and did not detract from the effect in any way.

A sympathetic organ accompaniment was furnished by Albert Hay Malotte. The prologue was very well received by the audiences and caused not a little lobby and outside comment.

Franklin's "School Days" Campaign

Buffalo Exploitation Makes Hit With Hippodrome Patrons

ONE of the biggest exploitation campaigns in the history of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, was put on by Harold B. Franklin when he presented "School Days."

In preparing for the campaign, Mr. Franklin placed one of the largest accessory orders ever recorded at a Buffalo exchange. Among other things he used 5,000 rubber tacks, 500 dunce caps and about 1,000 cut out slate novelties.

The slates were held by a cardboard figure of Wesley Barry. These cut outs were placed in all the principal downtown and neighborhood store windows. The cut out carried the Hippodrome ad pasted along the bottom, while the stores advertised their products on the slates.

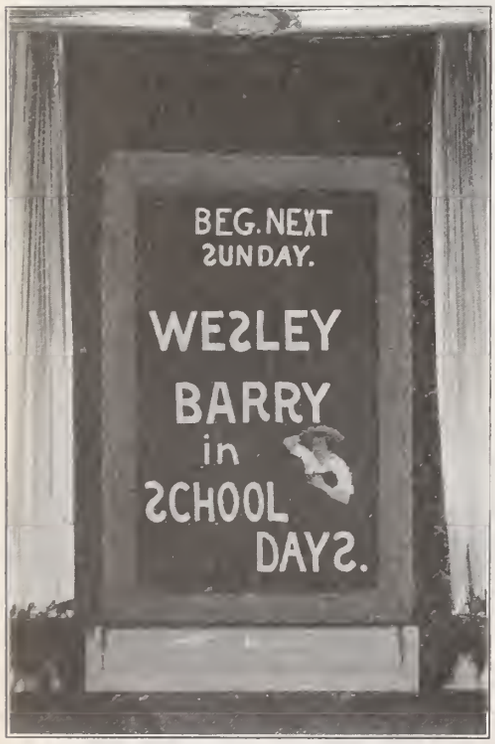
Merchants were glad to use these novel signs in their window, because they killed two birds with one stone. The store and the Hippodrome both benefitted.

A big feature of the campaign was the distribution of the rubber tacks, loly-pops in special "School Days" wrappers, and dunce caps among the children of the various schools.

Mr. Franklin also arranged with the Evening Times to run Dwig's "School Days" cartoons during the week. Under each cartoon a line was run announcing the showing of the feature at the Hippodrome and North Park.

A week in advance of the showing, Eldora Stanford, soprano soloist, was presented in a novel stage setting. A huge slate was erected in the center arch of the Hipp stage. The announcement of the coming of "School Days" was written in large letters on the slate. Through a hole in one corner of it, Miss Stanford, dressed in gingham gown and sun bonnet, stuck her head and sang the chorus of Gus Edwards' popular song.

The advertising on the picture was also eye-catching. The slate idea was carried out in all the newspaper ads. In the Hippodrome lobby Mr. Franklin had an illuminated shadow box frame, as well as the posters in the big mahogany frames. Miss Stanford put on a special "School Days" number and the Hippodrome symphony orchestra played Victor Herbert's "Babes in Toyland."



This cut shows a view of the stage setting for the prologue number for "School Days" which Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, recently presented

Novelty Stunt Used to Remind Fans of "Conquering Power" Showing

A PIECE of string, symbol of reminder, was used in an unusual and highly successful exploitation stunt by Toohey Brothers, managers of the Jewel Theatre, Sioux City, S. D., in selling "The Conquering Power" to their patrons. The string was enclosed in a letter, which the enterprising managers sent to their patrons, informing them of their booking the attraction.

Inclosed was a paragraph explaining that the bit of string was to remind the recipient of the letter of "The Conquering Power."

The Messrs. Toohey were not forgotten by their host of patrons when the picture began its run of a week. To build up their afternoon patronage, a photograph of Rudolph Valentino was given to each lady attending a matinee performance.

Maffioli Gets Local Cooperation on "Peacock Alley"

In exploiting "Peacock Alley" for the recent showing at the Strand theatre, Rockford, Ill., Manager Frank Maffioli grabbed off three attractive windows for co-operative displays.

One of the number, located in the best window of the leading drug store, is reproduced on this page. The center cutout was from a one sheet mounted on beaver board and colored ribbons were placed in the tail of the peacock and run to the articles in the window in the shape of a fan. The two side uprights are made of cardboard with 8 x 10 photos, as shown in the picture. The two large frames of Mae Murray are from the Metro Corp.

Another display was in a prominent dry goods store window, and a local jeweler co-operated by placing a 22 x 28 photo of Miss Murray, draped in gold and silver cloth, and with other artistic trimmings, in his display window.

Grading System Costs Nothing, Furnishes Exploitation

Starting with "Bob Hampton of Placer," and following with other productions, Manager Elmer Ramsay, of the Central theatre, Fairbury, Ill., has instituted a grading system which has not only won favor with his patrons, but has gained newspaper publicity for his house. Patrons are asked, on leaving the theatre, to place a grading (A, B or C) on the picture they have just seen and to specify productions that they would care to see on a return booking. The idea has worked well as a fad. After the craze has died down Manager Ramsay will devise another means of interesting his patrons in the Central.

Austin Autoists Get Passes to Crescent Theatre

The Crescent theatre at Austin, Texas, is inaugurating a profitable stunt by inserting in its daily paper advertisements an auto license number selected at random from among the cars parked along Congress Street, the main thoroughfare of the city. Owners recognizing their auto numbers in the ad are presented with two complimentary tickets to the Crescent theatre by calling at the newspaper office. The stunt has made hundreds of readers for the papers and new patrons for the theatre.

Chartot ballyhoo on "The Queen of Sheba" used by the Alhambra theatre, Toledo, O.

Chariot Ballyhoo Still Draws Them for "Sheba"

THE Alhambra Theatre, Toledo, O., utilized the old reliable street chariot method for the exploitation of a week's engagement of "Queen of Sheba."

The chariot was outfitted with an armored driver and three white horses. The outer steeds carried canvas signs naming the production and the theatre at which it was shown. The chariot was home-made and constructed at small expense.

This Stunt Drew Like the New York Subways

If the good Lord made you as high as Conrad Nagel or Dorothy Dalton you were among the blessed of the earth. Manager G. E. Maussert, of the Rialto Theatre, Jamaica, L. I., admitted any one the heights of these two stars free to see "Fool's Paradise."

On one wall of his lobby he installed two height registering machines. These were made of wood and consisted of an upright rising as high as one of the stars and a horizontal bar to top the head. There was a 5 by 4 machine for Dorothy Dalton and a 5 by 9 machine for Conrad Nagel.

All the patrons had to do was step under the horizontal bar. Either he or she did not register the same size as one of the two players.

The lobby was cleverly arranged following the world-famous scheme of the busy stations of the New York subway. Just above the box office were two signs asking "Gentlemen follow the red line," and "Ladies follow the green line." These two lines were indicated by colord ribbon stretched across the lobby each of which lead to the proper height registering machine.

Just above each machine were stills from the picture, an autographed photograph and an alleged telegram from one of the players to Mr. Maussert, complimenting him on showing "Fool's Paradise."

Strand Theatre, Syracuse, Decorates for "School Days"

A good old fashioned slate blackboard was used as a background for the announcement of "School Days" at the Strand Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y. At least it looked like a slate with figures, a teacher pointing to the crooked words on the blackboard, "Six reels of good clean comedy" and mispelled words an' everything. Over in the corner flamed a picture of the head of Wes Barry, done in scarlet chalk.

At each side was swung the grinning head of Barry in the same vivid sacrlet chalked on smaller blackboards, in the side panels.

The advertisements for the play carried out the same idea—with the display of a slate announcement of the play in a boy's handwriting and below listed the favorable comments from the New York papers.

Attractive Lobby Aids "Great White Trail" Showing

Manager E. J. Barnette of the Victory theatre at Waco, Texas, built an attractive lobby to advertise "The Great White Trail," which he played recently, securing a number of furs and hides from several local fur merchants and gaining their co-operation by placing small cards on the furs urging people to take advantage of unusually low prices during the hot months to prepare for the cold weather now.

White's "Don't Tell Everything" Campaign

Manager Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., uses kisses, a pretty girl and telephone booth to sell "DON'T TELL EVERYTHING." The kisses were only candy kisses. The pretty girl was his cashier and the telephone booths were loaned to him by the local Telephone Company and placed in his lobby, suggesting the idea of a telephone pay station. These three stunts went a long ways towards helping put over this picture in Sumter.

Two thousand small cards were printed reading, "Take a kiss, but DON'T TELL EVERYTHING." These cards were tied around the candy kisses by means of a rubber band and then distributed throughout the business section of town. Needless to say, no one turned the kisses down, also very few could resist the temptation of asking what "DON'T TELL EVERYTHING" meant.

The lobby display shows that Manager White did a good deal of work in getting it up. He had four telephone poles, miniature in size, erected in the lobby. These telephone poles carried the regular wiring and cross-beams at the top the same as the telephone poles erected by the Telephone Companies. In the center of the lobby were two desk phones sitting on tables, with chairs for people to sit in while they phoned. During the performance, these phones were kept busy by this young lady, calling patrons of the theatre, asking them what they thought of the picture.

Large signs extended across the front of the theatre with the title of the picture and the stars.

Electric Train Used in "Iron Trail" Lobby Display

MANAGER Warren Irwin of the Imperial theatre, Columbia, S. C., used a complete miniature electric train in the lobby as exploitation for his engagement of "The Iron Trail."

A small tunnel was built for the train to pass through and the entire display was covered with cotton and fake snow.

The electrical train was loaned to the Imperial by a local store and the cost of the whole display was very small.

Regent Theatre, Calgary, Exploits "School Days"

FULL page newspaper spreads and a word contest based on the "School Days Puzzle Cartoon" was a part of the exploitation campaign on "School Days" put over by the Regent theatre, Calgary, Canada.

This in addition to a generous billing on the boards of the city, heralds, etc., brought results far beyond expectations.

"Fool's Paradise" Cartoons Take Place of Display Ads

Bill Goldman of the Missouri theatre, St. Louis, said the public was tired of reading ads and wanted something new. So his artist got up a set of cartoons which filled Goldman's usual newspaper space.

One showed a man running into a hock shop calling for money on his watch, so he could see "Fool's Paradise" at the Missouri theatre.

Another showed a man repairing his flivver for "that trip to 'Fool's Paradise.'"

Those Missourians aren't the only folks who like to be shown. It'll work in your town, too.

Monster Clock Face Advertises "Midnight"

IN exploiting "Midnight" Manager Phil Gersdorf of the Capitol theatre, Macon, Ga., devised a unique still-photo frame that helped materially in putting over the picture.

From beaver board Manager Gersdorf constructed a large "clock face." Just under each numeral was a still showing scenes in the picture. The different scenes were selected so as to represent the various emotions of the human race—love, pathos, etc.—and each still was captioned to explain the idea.

The stunt went over in fine shape.

Builds Attractive Lobby for "Red Peacock"

For the small sum of $15.00 Phil Gersdorf, manager of the Rialto theatre, Macon, Ga., built a most attractive lobby display for "The Red Peacock," one of his recent attractions.

About ten miles from Macon, Ga., there are plenty of tropical palms, so Manager Gersdorf got busy and got together large numbers of these palms to carry out the tropical setting for his Hawaiian lobby. The entire entrance to the theatre was filled with palmettos. Then over all was stretched a beautiful painted picture of scenes from Hawaii. Directly in front of these paintings were miniature palm trees. The box office was completely surrounded with beaver-board, which was painted to represent an Hawaiian hut.

To complete the general effect, bunch lights covered with gelatine of a moonlight color, were concealed and arranged so as to illuminate the lobby. All the remainder of the lobby lights were extinguished. The color effect given by these lights was most attractive and although it was a departure from the usual plan of exploiting the feature picture, it was found very gratifying and profitable in this case.

Schade Uses Double for Buster Keaton

Melancholy War Veteran Poses in Sandusky Store Window as Exploitation for "The Boat"

GEORGE J. SCHADE, owner and manager of the Schade Theatre, Sandusky, O., had a wonderful idea on "The Wonderful Thing" but didn't know of any way in which he could exploit its running mate "The Boat." At the psychological moment, as the dramatists have it, there emerged a weary soled individual who announced himself as LaBell, a veteran of the Spanish-American and World wars who needed some funds to reach Pittsburgh where he was due to enter a hospital.

Mr. Schade looked at his forlorn face and said:

"Don't you ever smile?"

The man shook a forlorn negative and Schade, impelled by a newborn inspiration, grabbed him by the collar.

Two days later Sandusky street pedestrians were amazed to look in the window of Ralph C. Seitz' clothing store and see a stoical faced individual seated in the space with the sign before him:

"Make LaBell smile. If you do the Schade Theatre will give you two season tickets each good for one year. Ralph Seitz will give you a suit of clothes. Buster Keaton in 'The Boat' will give you laughitis. Norma Talmadge in 'The Wonderful Thing' will give you an hour and a half of genuine enjoyment. You can claim the last two prizes whether you make LaBell laugh or not."

Another card read: :

"Bet 'The Boat' with Buster Keaton would make LaBell laugh."

It took two policemen to handle the crowds that surged around the window the five days LaBell stayed there. Men, women and children talked, laughed, made faces and gibbered at an unbelievable rate trying to win the wager with the veteran, but all to no purpose.

At frequent intervals LaBell emerged from his cage.

"Like Buster Keaton in 'The Boat' I never smile," he would tell them and defy them to disprove his statement. Then he would saunter up and down the street, winding up in front of the Schade just before the time for the feature to go on. The crowd followed and a large percentage always found their way past the box office into the house.

The Sandusky Elks were holding a carnival at the time and their street ballyhoo artist, a Miss Cody, boosted the Schade's game by making frequent trips to the store window attempting to make LaBell smile. The two fed situations to each other that helped exploit both shows, created good will and attracted additional interest to the duel entertainment.

Fashion Show Serves as Prologue Number

MANAGER William Friese of the Rivoli Theater, La Crosse, Wis., got a prologue that not only enchanced his presentation prologue for 'Fool's Paradise" more attractive but acted as a definite business getter too. It didn't cost him a dime.

Muchow Brothers and Preuss, an important department store, gave a fashion show and assumed all the liability. Instead of hiring mannikins they allowed local society debutantes, matrons, and spinsters to serve as models. This brought a lot of free publicity and served to bring a retinue of friends and admirers of the participants into the theatre.

In The Film Centers

Siegel, city salesman, is working 24 hours a day signing contracts. Manager George A. Hickey continues his well-known plugging throughout the territory. The only way to get business is to go after it, is George's idea.

Fred Myers, Jr., has resigned as manager of the Fox exchange. He has been succeeded by Charles N. Johnston, former city salesman. Mr. Myers has not as yet announced his plans for the future.

John Kimberly, executive manager of Nu-Art Pictures Corporation, reports the signing of "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight," for showing at Fay's theatre, Rochester. Shea's Hippodrome will present Clara Kimball Young's "What No Man Knows," commencing Sunday, April 1. Art Young, booker, is getting to work at 7 A. M. these days to get them all in the books.

J. Lazarus, exploitation man at First National, put on a fine campaign in connection with "My Boy," at Shea's Hippodrome. He arranged a special showing with the Evening News for the orphans of the city, and put over a "My Boy" week at Kleinhans' clothing store, which included two big window displays.

Seattle

MARSHALL E. TAYLOR, formerly in charge of the Jensen and von Herberg circuit theatres in Bremerton, Washington, was recently promoted to the new theatres recently acquired by that circuit in Wenatchee.

The Liberty theatre, one of the newest and most attractive playhouses in that locality, was included in the deal, along with two lesser houses. Taylor will be in charge of all three houses.

Seattle was recently designated as the Western headquarters for Associated First National Pictures Corporation, according to Chicago reports.

L. O. Lukan, formerly manager of First National's Northwest exchange, has been appointed Western manager. G. G. Maxey, sales manager in the Northwest, succeeds Lukan as Northwest manager.

The Western district, as announced, includes Washington, Oregon, California, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Utah, Nevada, Colorado, Arizona and New Mexico. This is the first time Western headquarters for any large exchange have gone outside of California.

Kansas City

A LIVELY meeting of district sales managers of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation was held in Kansas City last week. Policies of Hodkinson were outlined at the meeting, which was presided over by Phil Ryan, Middle West district manager. Much enthusiasm was displayed over the recent Hodkinson release, "Cameron of the Royal Mounted." A prize, derived by a "collection" from the managers in attendance, will be awarded to the office showing the greatest increase in new business and collections for four weeks, beginning March 19. The cash prize will be divided among the sales force. The managers present were:

E. E. Reynolds, Minneapolis; G. L. Bradford, St. Louis; R. Elliott, St. Louis, and C. M. Parkhurst, Kansas City.

Truly B. Wildman, manager of the Enterprise Distributing Corporation, Kansas City, has offered a reward of $100 for the arrest and conviction of person or persons who are spreading a rumor in the Middle West territory that the Franklyn Farnum western series being distributed by Enterprise, are re-issues.

"I cannot understand why such damaging and false information is being circulated," said Mr. Wildman. "We will release six Franklyn Farnum pictures in this territory, but three of them still are in the process of manufacture."

Praise from the home office was heaped upon the worthy crown of Henry Taylor, Universal salesman out of the Kansas City office, last week. "Hennery" accomplished an enviable feat when he succeeded in lining up a solid Century week at the Regent, Mainstreet, Globe and Empress theatres in Kansas City. And, in addition, he closed with the Liberty theatre, Kansas City, for a week's run on "Peggy Behave" and "Mutts."

G. L. Stiles, formerly connected with Paramount, now is with the Kansas City office of R.-C. Pictures Corporation, covering Northern Kansas, where he has a wide acquaintance. Charles Rogers, general manager of distribution for R-C Pictures, incidentally "dropped into" the Kansas City office last week for a visit with Roy E. Churchill, branch manager.

"Rube" Melchor has been placed in charge of the Northern Kansas territory for Pathe, while Jack Springer, who has been covering Northern Kansas, has been transferred to Northern Missouri, succeeding Larry Dunn, who resigned.

The M. P. T. O. Missouri liberally has offered co-operation with the Missouri Sunday School Association in making a success of Sunday School Week next month. Various films, dealing with outdoor life and Sunday school organization, will be shown by exhibitors, in addition to several special films of the Sunday school organization.

Lawrence E. Goldman, counsel and secretary of the M. P. T. O. Missouri, has been appointed counsel of the Managers and Performers Consolidated Circuit, a large small time vaudeville circuit. This work will in no way interfere with the praiseworthy work he is doing for the Missouri exhibitors.

That business in the Kansas City territory is picking up more than at any time since the war was unanimously voiced at a meeting of Metro salesmen last week. Exhibitors are responding freely to Metro-Haldeman week, March 26, while Sid Haldeman, manager of the Kansas City Metro branch, returned Wednesday from Wichita with some mighty gratifying contracts.

Entering the film business in September, 1918, Mr. Waters first was employed by the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, who at that time controlled the Triangle Distributing Corporation. He was branch manager at Buffalo, N. Y., following a short stay in the same capacity at Boston, later being transferred as manager of the Triangle office at Kansas City. In Mr. Waters' own terms, he "left Triangle for greater responsibilities in a broader field." To an exhibitor in Missouri or Kansas, Mr. Waters' promise is as good as his signature.

SUPPLYING the theatres in the vicinity of Tampa, Fla., is the Florida Film Service. This company is operated by R. M. Busler and has been quite successful. They have no regular releases, but buy prints from time to time, as business warrants.

Speed is their middle name, and Oakley Busler, who has charge of the shipping department, says, "The Exhibitor just naturally seems to think that we deliver our films to the depot by Airplane, I guess. About 'steen minutes to five we will get a call on the 'phone for a show, with the instructions to "get it out on the evening train."

"But; says I, "It's a quarter to five now and the rattler rolls out at five twenty."

"Well, Gee!" comes back the answer. "Whatdaya want, you got thirty-five minutes to make it, ain't yer?"

"Of course we make it," says Oakley, "but I've just about worn off my eyebrows doin' it. However, that is what we are here for, to get 'em a show when they need it, and you will notice that our last and biggest name is Service."

First National Exchanges

Charles Ramage has been appointed temporary manager of the Associated First National exchange at St. John, N. B., succeeding J. A. Kraker, resigned. Mr. Ramage was transferred from the Toronto office, where he was a member of the sales force.

Lewis Carter, who has been unable to shake his boyhood nickname of "Nick," has joined the sales staff of the Associated First National exchange at Atlanta.

Salesman George W. Blackman has closed one of the biggest contracts on record at the Buffalo Associated First National Exchange. He has signed up 105 pictures for presentation in the new recreation hall opened by the Woolen Mills in Fulton, N. Y.

Eddie Brunner, shipping clerk of the Buffalo Associated First National exchange, jumped into the breach recently when a print failed to arrive at the Haven Theatre in Olean, N. Y., and volunteered to take another to that point in an automobile. He started out at ten o'clock in the morning and after shattering all speed records made Olean at two o'clock, just in time for the show.

"It's only a sample of the kind of service we render," was Eddie's only comment on his deed.

Baltimore

AFTER having managed the Leader for 10 years, Joseph B. Fields has broken away and now is handling Universal locally. Short subjects. Joe's talking 'em in his sleep.

"Affairs of the World" is being screened by the State censors preparatory to a run at C. E. Whitehurst's Century. The exhibitors here consider this a knockout.

Palmore and Homand, Inc., have purchased state rights on "Ten Nights in a Barroom," and are putting their several shoulders behind it. Negotiations are said to be under way for another big deal.

Booking, instead of operating, is what one finds Harry H. Bauer, now of the Clifton, doing. Harry says it's good to get away from the grind.

Maurive Lesnar, with Foster A. Downes and Samuel Tabor, is organizing a new film distribution service. Local newspaper men are to judge a contest started by the three men for a name for the concern. They offer $25 to the exhibitor sending in the winning name and all exhibitors in Maryland, Virginia, Delaware and the District are being asked by them to send suggestions to 228 North Gay street.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE.

Bob Funk, of Universal, who reeently broke his leg, is making unexpectedly rapid recovery and is expected to get back on the job by April 8th.

Publication in Chicago daily press that the Motion Pieture Operator's Union had granted the privilege of handling advertising service slides, used in motion picture theatres, to Big Tim Murphy, has aroused considerable indignation among exhibitors, who declare that they own their theatre screens and will not allow anyone, outside of themselves, to dictate what slides shall be run in their houses. It was also reported that Murphy has started a new union as rival to the Musician's Union of Chicago, and that Ralph O'Hara, recently ousted business agent of the Musician's Union, is president of the new union, which is known as The Chicago Musician's Club. Associated with Mr. Murphy in the enterprise, is Tommy Malloy, business agent of the Motion Picture Operator's Union. The activities of this new organization will be watched with considerable interest by theatre men, owing to the activity of Tom Malloy in its promotion.

Fred Bartholomae, of the Crown Point theatre, Crown Point, Indiana, accompanied by Mrs. Bartholomae, has left for a three month's visit to Europe, during which he will visit relatives and tour the principal continental countries.

C. John Predari is now proprietor of the Meridian theatre at Anderson, Indiana, having taken over the lease of that house from the Meyer Brothers Drug Company, of Fort Wayne, Indiana. The Meridian has been run for some time past, by Manager Heller of the Victory Theatre Company, of Kokomo, Indiana. It is the intention of Mr. Predari to reconstruct and redecorate the Meridian, including the installation of a well equipped stage, which will be used for presentations, prologues, etc. This house has a splendid location and with the improvements eontemplated should be one of the most popular theatres in that section of Indiana. Mr. Predari is well known and popular in Chicago territory, where for some time he was conneeted with Realart and other exchanges as a salesman.

Henry E. Wilkinson, personal representataive of Julius Stern, of Sunshine Comedies, is making his headquarters in Chicago for the present and will get in close touch with exhibitors and Universal exchanges throughout the eentral west, with the aim of stimulating interest in the Sunshine Comedies.

Manager Leserman, of Universal Chicago exchange, has added Billy Weiss, who, by the way, is a brother of Harry Weiss, of Superior Screen Service, to Universal's sales staff. Mr. Weiss will cover northern Illinois territory. J. E. Armgardt hereafter will make the key cities for Universal's Chicago exchange, specializing on feature pictures.

Collins Van Gelder is now traveling northern Indiana for the Wid Gunning organization and reports that business is on the up grade in that territory, and that rural districts are showing a special improvement.

Percy Barr, formerly connected with Goldwyn's Chicago exchange, is now covering city territory for Educational.

The Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners, at their last meeting at Peoria, appointed a committee to prepare a plan for the organization of the state into districts, and it is understood that the committee has been at work and will present a concrete plan at the convention to be held at the Sherman Hotel, Chicago, on April 4th and 5th. The election of a new board of directors for the ensuing year and of delegates to the national convention, whieh will be held in Washington, D. C., May 8-12th, are other important matters on the program. Attention also will be given to the movement to obtain uniform contracts, reductions of film rentals, and the combating of objectionable legislation.

Dan Roche, Paramount publicity director, has returned to Chicago after several days spent in Rock Island, where he helped put over "A Fool's Paradise" to record business at the Fort Armstrong theatre. Mr. Roche reports that theatre attendance in Rock Island, which has been one of the bad spots, owing to industrial conditions there, is looking up, and that the Fort Armstrong, which opened in January, 1921, did the biggest week's business in its history with "A Fool's Paradise" as its feature attraction.

March 20th was the anniversary of the start of Superior Sereen Service, Inc., of Chicago, and as its third year got under way, Manager Harry Weiss deelared that the way business has improved the last thirty days, he is encouraged to believe that things will soon be baek to normal and the film business in as prosperous a state as it ever was. Wallaee Mayer has been made manager of Superior's Chicago office and Mr. Weiss will, in the future, give all his time to the direction of sales. Mr. Mayer has been associated with Mr. Weiss for the last six years. Among the new plans of Superior are the release of a feature a week in the near future, and this concern now is in the market for a few western and society dramas.

Benny Edelman, who has been on the road for Goldwyn's Chicago exchange for some time, has been transferred to city territory and will travel the south side for this organization.

Among those circulating around film row this week were Special Representative Curran, of the Arrow Film Corporation of New York; G. H. Hines, formerly of South Bend, Indiana, but who has been in California for the past two years; J. A. Dauntler, of the Dreamland theatre, Prophetstown, Illinois; and G. H. Hornbeck, of the Lyric, La Fayette, Indiana.

W. H. Cadoret, who operates three houses in Kankakee, Illinois, is planning to go east for an indefinite visit and will put his theatres in charge of an assistant manager until his return.

R. Alberts, formerly connected with Goldwyn, has joined the Associated First National sales staff and will cover country territory, speeializing on comedies. Chicago Manager Harry Lorsch has appointed Joseph M. Hickey, Milwaukee representative for Goldwyn organization. Mr. Hickey has a long and successful record as a salesman in the Wisconsin territory and has a very wide acquaintance among exhibitors.

Several Paramount home office officials were in Chieago last week, including Fred Creswell, special representative, who presided at a sales conference during his stay; Charles G. Epperson, formerly Boston branch manager, who is now special sales representative in the interests of "The Mistress of the World"; and Joe Levee, special representative.

"Yellow Men and Gold," one of the important Goldwyn features, has been booked into the Roosevelt, where it will open for an indefinite run on April 16th. "Theodora," another of the big Goldwyn specials, will be released for the outlying runs in the Chicago territory on May 7th, and bookings are so heavy for this production that twenty prints will be used day and date for two weeks.

Joe Roderiek, Famous Players-Lasky salesman, has been transferred from Milwaukee to Chicago, where he will cover city territory.

The new Lorraine theatre, at Hoopeston, Ill., which opened its doors last week, is getting away to good business. The house has a seating capacity of one thousand and is a splendid example of an up-to-date, high-grade, small town motion picture palace. R. Boord is manager, and will pursue a policy of three changes a week. The opening feature was "The Great Moment," starring Gloria Swanson.

The Opera House at Hoopeston, which has been operated as a motion picture theatre, has been closed by Manager Smith, who has left for Munice, Indiana, to look after his hotel business. Film men regret to see Mr. Smith retire, even temporarily, from the business, as he has made himself very popular and they hope to see him again operating a theatre.

Burr's Novelty Review Approved in South

Raymond S. Harris, manager of Burr's Novelty Review, just returned from a trip to Atlanta and the south, where he placed the distribution of the Review with Federated Films of Atlanta at 146 Marietta street. The Review was screened for Enrico Leide, managing director of the beautiful Howard theatre there, and received his enthusiastie commendation.

In the course of his trip, Harris found that conditions in the south were gradually becoming bettter, especially in North Carolina, where the cotton mills have resumed work in full force.

Clark-Cornelius Offers New Single-Reeler

A NEW single reel subjeet is being put on the market by the Clark-Cornelius Corporation under the eaption of "The Laughograph." This pieture was originated by Don Meaney and is being edited by him.

In classifying this subjeet, the Clark-Cornelius Corporation elaims that they are at a loss to put it in its proper sphere as it has the elements of some of the big sueeessful things on the market already and at the same time has several new elements that establishes it as an absolute novelty in the single reel elass.

There will be twenty-six of these released during the year, one every other week. First runs and eircuits have been booked all over the eountry on this release, according to Mr. S. J. Rollo, general manager of the Clark-Cornelius Corporation.

King Baggott is preparing for the next all-star Jewel special, which, it is reported, will be an adaptation of Charles Dazey's "The Suburban."

"Buffalo Bill" will be completed within two weeks.

Twelve episodes of "Stanley in Africa" have been finished.

The sixth episode of "Robinson Crusoe" has been finished.

William Watson is filming "Easy to Cop," featuring Neely Edwards.

Tom Santschi is beginning "The Promise," under the direction of Robert Bradbury.

The following subjects are being cut: "The Storm," "Human Hearts," "That Lass o'Lowrie."

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Philip Rosen has been assigned to direct Betty Compson in an untitled original story by John Fleming Wilson. The continuity is by Joseph Levino. The cast includes John Bowers, Richard Dix, J. Farrell McDonald, Ethel Wales.

Beulah Marie Dix has written an original play which will be the next vehicle for Agnes Ayres, under the direction of Paul Powell.

The production of "The Man Unconquerable," by Hamilton Smith and Julien Josephson, has been started by Joseph Henaberry. Jack Holt is starred. In the cast are Sylvia Breamer, Clarence Burton, Ann Schaefer, Jean Debriac, Edwin Stevens and Willard Louis.

In production are "The Gilded Cage," starring Gloria Swanson, under the direction of Sam Woods; "Blood and Sand," starring Valentino, under the direction of Fred Niblo.

Alfred Green is completing "Our Leading Citizen."

FOX

"A Splendid Outcast," starring Jake Gilbert in a dual role, was put into production this week. Jerome Storm is directing. The story is by George Gibbs and the scenario by Joseph Franklin Poland.

"The Men of Zanzibar," starring William Russell, under the direction of Rowland Lee, from the Richard Harding Davis story, was put into production last week.

The Dustin Farnum company is at San Francisco making the exteriors for "Vows Made and Broken."

Lynn Reynolds has finished "High Stakes," starring Tom Mix.

Harry Beaumont has completed the Shirley Mason subject, "Very Truly Yours."

Jack Ford, who recently returned from a four months' tour of Europe, is making the riding scenes for "Nero," filmed in Italy by J. Gordon Edwards. Costumes were shipped from Italy.

INDEPENDENT

Jess Robins Productions, whose first subject, "Too Much Business," was bought by Vitagraph, has begun producing their second comedy feature, "The Ladder Jinx," suggested by a story by Edgar Franklin. The continuity is by David Kirkland and Jess Robins. The cast includes Edward Horton, Margaret Landis, Tully Marshall, Otis Harlan, Arthur Hoyt, Carl Stockdale and others.

Harry Cohen, of Wilnat Productions, announces that the Billy West comedies will be directed by Gilbert Pratt. Production has started.

On April first an all-star feature entitled "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned," will be put into production. Edward LeSaint will direct.

Doubleday Productions has leased space at the Fine Art Studio for the making of the next Lester Cuneo subject.

Exceptional big sets are being erected for Fairbanks' "Robin Hood." Production starts this week.

Mary Pickford is making preparations for the filming of "Tess of the Storm Country."

R-C PICTURES

A new Doris May picture was put into production this week. It is titled "The Unexpected Honeymoon," and is by Ethel Hayden, with scenario by Beautrice Van. William Seiter will direct. It is described as a French farce without bedroom scenes. The cast includes Wallace McDonald, Otis Harlan, Christeen Mayo, Adele Farrington and Arthur Hoyt.

"Determination" Has Big Force Hustling

Having just completed a very successful two weeks' run at B. S. Moss' Cameo theatre, Broadway and 42nd Street, New York City, "Determination," the super feature distributed by the Lee-Bradford Corporation through the independent market, now starts its engagement in the B. F. Keith theatres throughout New York, Brooklyn and the Bronx.

The Pittsburgh premiere took place at the Blackstone theatre on March 20th, for a six weeks' run, then follows week showings at the Arcadia theatre, Reading, Pa., Atlantic City, N. J., and many other cities in the eastern territory.

The Sales and Exploitation Departments are out in the field arranging presentations in the larger cities. F. G. Bradford is on the Pacific coast, Frank Whittle is taking care of the bookings in New York State, including the showings at the Proctor houses in Troy, Schenectady, Albany and Amsterdam. Clinton M. White is in the middle west covering Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Louis, Indianapolis and Cleveland. Sam Lee is out doing exploitation work in the various cities playing the picture, while Arthur Lee divides his time between the headquarters in New York and nearby eastern cities.

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

"Jungle Goddess" Is Purchased by Lesser

Louis Auerbach of the Export & Import Film Co., Inc., now offering Col. Selig's new serial, "The Jungle Goddess," on the independent market, has announced another sale on the big wild animal chapter picture this week.

Sol Lesser's company, All Star Feature Distributors, has purchased the rights for California, Arizona and Nevada. This organization plans an immediate release of the serial and will give it a widespread advance publicity campaign on the coast.

Auerbach declares that at the present time he holds on his desk bonafide offers on the serial from all but two small territories.

"Although North's New York Federated Exchange and Lesser's organization will release 'The Jungle Goddess' immediately," he said, "the majority of the companies who have bought or are buying it will release it about September 1st. Bob Lynch of Philadelphia plans an August 15th release.

"We have sold 'The Jungle Goddess' on its merits alone. We have insisted on showing prospective buyers at least ten episodes. That is the only way we can prove our contention that the serial grows stronger in each episode."

Hallroom Boys Comedies Plan New Series

Sid Smith, who is featured as Percy, and Jimmie Adams, who is Ferdie, in the two-reel Percy and Ferdie Hallroom Boys' Comedies, have just been placed under contract to continue in these characterizations in the series to follow the present one. The new series, for 1922-23 comprises twenty-six pictures and has been purchased by the Coast Film Sales Corporation, headed by D. J. Chatkin, for States Right distribution.

Harry Cohn, producer of the Hallroom Boys Comedies, and Chatkin announce the completion of several scenarios to form the basis of the first few releases on the new series. Noel Smith has been placed under contract to continue the direction of the hallroom boys comedies.

D. J. Chatkin, who is busy rounding out distribution plans for the comedies is making his headquarters while in New York, at the offices of Hallroom Boys Photoplays, Inc.

"Your Best Friend" Lauded

Trade Papers Unanimously Endorse Latest Vera Gordon Picture

"YOUR BEST FRIEND," the Warner Brothers production starring Vera Gordon, will be given its New York premiere at the Astor Hotel on April 3, according to an announcement. Harry Rapf, the producer, is arranging an elaborate prologue for the presentation. A dance will follow the showing, admission to which will be by invitation only.

Following the premiere presentation of the film at Stanley's Stanton theatre, Phila., on March 19, under the joint auspices of Warner Brothers and Lou Berman, of the Independent Film Company, the trade press has hailed the feature as another Warner box-office winner.

Moving Picture World said: "Score another box-office winner for the Warner Brothers-Harry Rapf combination, for in 'Your Best Friend' the independent market is offering state right exchanges and independent exhibitors in general a production that compares favorably with 'Why Girls Leave Home' and 'School Days.' 'Your Best Friend' is a human document and another achievement for Warner Brothers."

Exhibitors Trade Review said: "'Your Best Friend' is another great Vera Gordon mother picture! And it has all the pulls and heart-tugs and real human interest that have made her earlier pictures such favorites."

Motion Picture News said: "'Your Best Friend,' produced by Harry Rapf, is a delightfully human story with a rich vein of laughter and pathos. It serves to reveal anew the ability of Miss Gordon as an emotional actress. The response of the audience as the last reel was unfolded was a hearty tribute to the picture."

The cast in support of Miss Gordon includes Belle Bennett, as the misguided daughter-in-law; Beth Mason, as the society crazed mother; Harry Benham, in the role of the faithful son; Stanley Price, as the black sheep of the family, and Dore Davidson, portraying the role of a kindly old bookkeeper. The story was written and directed by Will Nigh, who was assisted by James Chapin.

"Worldly Madonna" Ready

Latest Clara Kimball Young Picture Is All Set for Bookings

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG'S latest production, "The Worldly Madonna," is now being booked by Equity franchise holders, announces Equity Pictures Corporation, which has distributed this series on the independent market. "The Worldly Madonna" is announced as a worthy successor of "Straight from Paris" and "What No Man Knows." As in her previous pictures, Miss Young is directed by Harry Garson, who has given this feature the lavish production for which he has become noted.

The star is afforded a dual role in "The Worldly Madonna," playing the part of a nun, serving her noviate in a convent, and her twin sister, a cabaret dancer and singer. While almost identical in appearance, the two sisters are entirely different in character, and the sacrifice of the first to save her worldly sister brings about a climax of unusual dramatic strength. The story develops rapidly and a well-made continuity keeps the suspense until the final fade out.

As in previous Clara Kimball Young pictures distributed by Equity, an effort has been made to surround the star with a thoroughly capable cast. William P. Carleton plays opposite Miss Young, taking the part of the politician who fell in love with the wrong sister, but realized his mistake in time to find happiness with the girl who had always loved him. Richard Tucker plays the "heavy" in the picture. His screen experience has been long and varied, and he will be especially remembered for his work in "The Old Nest." Others in the cast include George Hackathorne, who appeared with Miss Young in "What Do Men Want," Milla Davenport and William Marion.

"The Worldly Madonna," announces Equity, has been passed by the New York Motion Picture Commission. It is expected that many first run bookings on the picture will be announced in the near future.

Three Chapters Filmed in "Cap'n Kidd" Serial

In announcing the completion this week of the filming of the first three chapters of Eddie Polo's initial independently-produced serial, "Cap'n Kidd," in which Polo makes his debut as an independent star, Joe Brandt, president of the Star Serial Corporation, distributors of the Polo serial productions, waxes enthusiastic.

"If the first three chapters are any basis of judgment as to what may be expected in the forthcoming chapters then I have no hesitancy in saying that it will be a great serial," says Brandt.

Pacific Company Plans Intensive Campaign

The Pacific Film Company is all "set" for an intensive sales campaign of the "Billy" Armstrong two-reel comedies, which are now being produced for Pacific distribution by the Reaguer Productions, Inc., a new producing concern.

The first release prints of "Slow and Easy," Armstrong's maiden comedy of this series, will be ready for publication June first, but Pacific Film Company's sales force and the New York representative of Pacific, Julius Singer, will have copies for showing at least three weeks earlier, states John J. Hayes, president of Pacific.

A large number of inquiries on this series, which will be released one comedy every three weeks, have already been received, says Hayes.

"Billy" Armstrong will have excellent support, chief among the players who will assist him in his fun-making antics being Hap H. Hard, formerly with Gale Henry and the Chester Comedies and Patricia McGill, recently a vaudeville headliner. Rea Hunt is directing.

Ward Heads Support In Billy Armstrong Cast

Hap H. Ward, well known on stage and screen, formerly one of the principal supports of Gale Henry, but more recently with Chester comedies, heads the supporting cast of "Billy" Armstrong, who is being featured in a series of comedies, produced by Reaguer Productions, Inc., for release on the independent market by the Pacific Film Company of Culver City. The feminine contingent is headed by Patricia McGill.

Four Kineto Pictures Show World Tour

The entire motion picture program at the Travel Show Exposition this week at Grand Central Palace is being held under the direction of the Kineto Company of America. Four motion picture shows are in continuous operation; one being devoted to America, another to Europe, a third to Africa and a fourth to Asia. Thus one can take a trip around the world in an hour.

A daily program of more than eighty reels is being shown in the four theatres which have been erected and more than 3,000 persons a day are being accommodated at the shows. The theatres are at all times filled to capacity.

Many of the pictures that are being shown are from the Urban Popular Classics, produced and edited by Charles Urban, president of the Kineto Company of America. Others are made by the various exhibitors in the Travel Show; steamship lines, governmental agencies, and the like. All of them, however, are being shown under the auspices of Kineto.

In the Urban Popular Classics are to be found the greatest collection of travel motion pictures that have ever been collected and edited. Every country in the world, every community, the costumes and customs of all peoples are shown in the Urban series of reels on travel.

Interview with Judge Gary Figures on Screen

Several members of the Kineto Company's producing staff engaged on the "Official Urban Movie Chats of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America" paid a call this week to the offices of Judge Elbert H. Gary at 71 Broadway, New York, where the United States Steel Corporation has its executive quarters and they secured some interesting scenes for a forthcoming issue.

On behalf of the M.P.T.O.A. they interviewed the man who is probably the ranking authority on trade and business conditions in all of the United States.

The interview is interestingly dramatized, with Judge Gary talking to the reporter. At the end of the interview there is an especially nice bit where the Judge turns to a motto on the wall. It reads:

"It can be done,
Can't must be overcome."

Claims Critics Follow Trade Paper Reviews

That newspaper photoplay critics take their cues from reviews published in the motion picture trade journals is the opinion of John J. Hayes, head of the Pacific Film Company, producers and distributors of Culver City, Cal. Hayes states he noted that clippings of newspaper reviews of "The Girl from Rocky Point," featuring Ora Carew, also recently reviewed in the principal trade papers, were the same in effect, if not in text, though sometimes the text was identically the same, leading him to believe that the latter reviews are carefully read and filed away by newspaper critics for future use.

Arrow Closes Big Contract

Foreign Department Concludes Sale for Thirty-Six Features

D. J. Mountain, manager of Arrow's foreign department, this week announces one of the largest sales reported in the foreign field for some time.

He states he has just closed a contract with the Argentine Foreign Film Company of Buenos Aires, Argentine, for thirty-six 5 and 6 reel features among which will be Arrow's big new special "The Innocent Cheat" starring Roy Stewart and Kathleen Kirkham; "Chain Lightning" Arrow-Ben Wilson special starring Ann Little, two Peter B. Kyne productions, "A Motion to Adjourn," with Marjorie Daw and Roy Stewart and "Back to Yellow Jacket" with Roy Stewart and Kathleen Kirkham; "The Unconquered Woman" starring Rubye de Remer and many other big features.

Also included in this deal are fifty-two 2-reel comedies comprising the entire series of Eddie Lyons Comedies, Arrow Speed Comedies, Mirthquake Comedies, and Cruelywed Comedies, a series of eleven Sport Pictorials, a big Arrow serial "Man of the North" starring Ann Little and L. Case Russell's sensational screen version of "Ten Nights in a Barroom." All of these productions were sold for Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Bolivia and Peru.

Another important sale reported by Mountain is that of eighteen Spotlight Comedies and eleven Sport Pictorials for Scandanavia to the Himalaya Film Company. A series of eleven Sport Pictorials were sold to the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

Mountain further states that many other large deals are pending and he points to the fact that his statement a short time ago regarding the optimistic outlook in the foreign market has been more than justified by the business done by Arrow's foreign department recently. He declares that the outlook for Continental Europe is getting brighter every day and that he expects to announce many big deals closed for that territory in the very near future.

Another important statement from Arrow's foreign department is the closing of the deal whereby Arrow will handle the foreign rights to all of the Anchor productions. These will comprise about twenty-six high class features, a series of twelve 2-reel monkey comedies and a series of twenty-six 1-reel comedies. The domestic rights on these productions are now being state righted by the Anchor Film Distributors, Inc.

Mountain states that the foreign department of Arrow will be very glad to hear from any independent distributors relative to handling the foreign rights on all productions of merit. Arrow, he points out, has been tremendously successful in the foreign field and he believes they are in a position to offer better distribution in the foreign field than ever before.

"I Am the Law" Due Soon

Burr Announces Northwest Mounted Police Story for April Release

Latest reports from Bernie Zeidman on the coast to C. C. Burr, president of Affiliated Distributors, indicate that Eddie Carewe's latest picture, "I am the Law," will be one of the biggest money makers in the independent field this year. Zeidman writes that the all-star cast, including Alice Lake, Kenneth Harlan, Gaston Glass, Rosemary Theby, Noah Beery, Wallace Beery and Hector Sarno are all enthusiastic about their work in this royal northwest mounted police production, for they have given their best efforts to it for the past ten weeks.

"This all-star cast has been in the limelight ever since production started, not only because of the tremendous box office power of the players," commented Zeidman, "but primarily because of the wonderful spirit, which characterized the work of the all-star aggregation."

With Eddie Carewe, a past master at directing outdoor pictures, at the directorial helm, production on "I am the Law" went along at a rapid pace until last week, when Carewe became ill and production had to be temporarily curtailed. But Carewe soon recovered, with the result that this week should mark the picture's completion.

The director, after looking at most of the completed laboratory product, immediately wired Burr that "I am the Law" would unquestionably prove to be his greatest effort, and that he would immediately place the finished negative in the hands of experienced cutters, in order that the print might be rushed to New York for immediate distribution.

Burr has been daily flooded with inquiries concerning the release of this all-star production, and on the strength of the coast production reports, he has already arranged for first run showings on "I am the Law" in many of the principal cities. Pending negotiations point to an early Broadway showing of this feature, following which it will be released exclusively to the independent market. Burr is consistently issuing statements that "I am the Law" has been made explicitly for the independent market, and regardless of all offers, this all-star special will positively be placed on the market for state-righters only.

Judging from the latest telegram received at the Affiliated offices this week, "I am the Law" will be ready for release about April fifteenth.

Bartlett Working on Second of Series

Production on "The Shadow Eater," the second of a series of eight pictures of the Northwest to be offered State Right buyers by the Charles E. Bartlett Productions Inc., has been started under the direction of Bert Seibel, at the Gloversville, N. Y. Studio. This is a working title.

Jerry Abrams, sales manager of the Bartlett organization, who is touring the country selling "White Hell," the first of the series which was completed recently, reports increasing interest in this first announcement of virile story of the North country.

The same strong cast which worked in "White Hell" will have roles in "The Shadow Eater," the tentative name of the second of the series. This includes Richard Travers, Muriel Kingston, Charles Grahame, Leeta Morgan Char, and Jack Baston.

The wild country adjacent to Gloversville lends itself admirably to these "he-man" stories of the Northwest. In "The Shadow Eater" Director Seibel has a story which he believes will rank with the greatest screen dramas of the North ever produced in this country.

The Charles E. Bartlett Productions Inc., have adopted the policy of "quality productions at a fair price" and has planned a wide advertising campaign on the series.

New Exploitation for "Yankee Doodle, Jr."

One of the big features of the advertising and exploitation campaign that will be used heralding "Yankee Doodle, Junior," produced by M. J. Burnside, is an illuminating night display of fireworks, including roman candles, red fire, smoke pots and red sky rockets. The red fire and smoke pots will be used in front of the larger theatres that play "Yankee Doodle, Junior."

For the benefit of exhibitors who favor a special lobby display, Paul Gray, exploitation director for M. J. Burnside, is now drawing plans that will permit of a special display that can be moved from city to city for the use of exhibitors. This will be furnished without extra cost.

"The Glorious Adventure" for Capitol

Rothafel has announced April 23rd as the opening date for the presentation of "The Glorious Adventure," the Blackton - Frizma drama with Lady Diana Manners, at the Capitol.

The picture is undergoing reassembly and titling, and it is said that no previews or screenings will be given prior to the opening at the Capitol theatre. This decision has been reached by Carrol Dunning of Prizma, Inc., and M. L. Malevinsky, representing Commodore Blackton, on the ground that ordinary projection room screening can give no adequate presentation of the color values in the film.

Rapf to Produce "Brass" Charles Norris' Story

Production of "Brass," the widely read novel by Charles G. Norris, dealing with the much married and the much divorced, will be started on or about July 1, at the Warner west coast studios. Harry Rapf will leave for the coast on April 10 to produce the picture. The first two productions to be made by Rapf will be "From Rags to Riches" and "Little Heroes of the Street," both featuring Wesley Barry. Work will be started on May 1. Rapf expects to return east the early part of September. The three stories will be known as Harry Rapf productions.

Mack Sennett Greeted by Philadelphians

Mack Sennett was the recipient of an enthusiastic greeting in Philadelphia on Monday of this week when he arrived in the Quaker City to attend the opening of his picture, "Molly O," at the Aldine theatre in that city. Among those who were on hand at the Broad Street Station to welcome the comedy producer were the secretary to the Mayor, the directors of Public Works and Education, and the president of the City Council. The reception committee headed by Maurice E. Felt, owner of the Aldine theatre, escorted Mr. Sennett from the station to the Ritz-Carlton Hotel. A special detachment of police was on hand to handle the enthusiastic crowds of Philadelphians who clamored to get a close-up of the well-known producer.

"The Challenge" Title of Cassinelli Film

Star Productions, Inc., announces that the permanent title of the picture which Dolores Cassinelli is making under the direction of Tom Terriss will be "The Challenge," a name heretofore used only for a working title.

Mr. Terriss expects to conclude the photographing of this production at the Harry Levey Studio in West 38th street the latter part of this week. The company is making extensive plans for future productions.

Correction of Caption in April 1st Issue

In the April 1st issue of the News, Page 1981, a two-column photograph was incorrectly captioned "A Scene from Wildfire," featuring Frank Hayes and Babe London. "Wildfire" is on the Gunning schedule. This photograph shows a scene from "When Romance Rides," made by Benjamin Hampton and adapted from Zane Grey's story, "Wildfire." "When Romance Rides" is on the Goldwyn release schedule, not on the Gunning list.

Will Revive Old Favorites

Productions Which Developed Stars to Be Revamped for New Showings

A PLAN is under way for the revival of sixty-four motion picture productions, which originally aided to stardom such screen celebrities as Constance Talmadge, Norma Talmadge, Clara Kimball Young, Alice Brady and Elaine Hammerstein.

The undertaking is in the hands of J. L. Kempner and Louis Jacobson, who will operate under the corporate name of Kempson Pictures Corporation. The home office will be at 1457 Broadway, New York City. In the aggregate these sixty-four productions are said to have cost $6,000,000. According to announcement, an additional outlay of $1,000,000 will be made in re-editing, re-cutting, retitling and new prints. Work on the first sixteen pictures has been about half completed.

A sales force of 75 men has been organized, and arrangements for physical distribution have been made with the Hodkinson Exchanges. A publicity and exploitation campaign has been mapped which will be nation-wide.

The sixteeen pictures are: "The Way of a Woman," starring Norma Talmadge; "The Marionettes," starring Clara Kimball Young; "Red Head," starring Alice Brady; "The Argyle Case," featuring Robert Warwick and Elaine Hammerstein; "Sauce for the Goose," with Constance Talmadge in the title role; "The Claw," with Clara Kimball Young; "The Death Dance," with Alice Brady; "The Code of the Yukon," with Mitchell Lewis; "The Probation Wife," with Norma Talmadge; "The Savage Woman," with Clara Kimball Young; "The Knife," with Alice Brady; "Ruling Passions," with Edwin Arden and Julia Dean; "The Studio Girl," with Constance Talmadge; "Shirley Kaye," with Clara Kimball Young; "His Bridal Night," with Alice Brady; and "The Silent Master," with Robert Warwick.

The supporting casts in these productions include such well known screen celebrities of the present day as May McAvoy, Thomas Meighan, Conway Tearle, Thomas Santchi, Conrad Nagel, Mary Alden, the famous mother in "The Old Nest," and a number of others. It is expected that the pictures will be ready for release at the rate of four a month, beginning the middle of April.

Graphic Wants 2-Reelers

New Consolidation to Distribute Best Independent Pictures

A call for independent two reelers of diversified nature has been issued from the offices of Ivan Abramson, president of the Graphic Film Corporation. In a statement made in conjunction with the recent announcement of consolidation with twenty-seven independent exchanges throughout the country Abramson announced plans of the new Graphic Film Exchanges, Inc., will include the distribution of all the good purchased product available in the Independent State Right Market.

Two reel specialties and two reel comedies, preferably a series of twelve; issued one a month is what Graphic seeks to add to its newly organized program of distribution.

In his statement Abramson said, "The newly organized facilities of a national distributing organization are offered to the independent producer of high class two-reel comedies and short features who can supply us with such material at the rate of one release a month. I believe our offer embodies a legitimate and guaranteed distribution through the new Graphic Film Exchanges such as has never been offered to the State Right field before.

"We want to offer such producers of short stuff a more feasible arrangement than previous Independent releases have heretofore enjoyed and in return we are looking to be in a position to offer our exchanges a year's program that will spell revival and better times."

Up to the time of last week's announcement the Graphic interests had associated themselves with twenty-one exchanges for national distribution of their product. Within ten days, it was stated at the offices of the corporation, partnership agreements will be completed with the remaining seven exchanges.

Polo Starts Big Campaign

Serial Will Be Exploited for State Righters and Exhibitors

An extensive and far-reaching advertising, publicity and exploitation campaign, designed to serve the state rights buyer in the marketing of his product and the exhibitor in playing to capacity, has begun in conjunction with "Cap'n Kidd," the first of six special serials which are to be made featuring Eddie Polo, well-known serial star, and which are to be distributed on the state rights market.

A large appropriation has been set aside by the Star Serial Corporation for publicity and advertising purposes, which, according to present plans will embrace adequate representation in all of the trade and regional journals in this country and abroad.

An elaborate and unusual press book, to number thirty-two pages is being prepared in behalf of "Cap'n Kidd." A barrage of exploitation suggestions, advertising matter, press stories, feature articles and sundry printed "copy" will be embodied in this press book.

STATEMENT of the ownership, management, circulation, etc., required by the Act of Congress of August 24, 1912, of Motion Picture News, published weekly at New York, N. Y., for April 1, 1922.

State of New York, County of New York, ss.

Before me, a Notary Public in and for the State and county aforesaid, personally appeared E. Kendall Gillett, 729 Seventh avenue, N. Y. C., who, having been duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that he is the Business Manager of the Motion Picture News, and that the following is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, a true statement of the ownership, management (and if a daily paper, the circulation), etc., of the aforesaid publication for the date shown in the above caption, required by the Act of August 24, 1912, embodied in section 443, Postal Laws and Regulations, printed on the reverse of this form, to wit:

Third of Robert Bruce Series Is Announced

"Nights of Many Shadows" is to be the third release in the series of Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce which Educational is distributing. It is a story about a group of men around a campfire, and the weird tale one of them relates about the occasion on which a ghostly old man ran away with his pack train.

WHAT ROGER FERRI SAYS OF

EDDIE POLO

in "CAP'N KIDD"

In the Independent

BY ROGER FERRI

From Moving Picture World Issue of April 1, 1922

Week in Review

CONGRATULATIONS to the independent field in general on the acquisition of Eddie Polo, one of the best box office serial stars in the business, who is now turning out an 18-episode serial, "Cap'n Kidd," at the Peerless studio in Fort Lee, N. J. Congratulations to Joe Brandt who heads the Star Serial Corporation which will State right the six Polo serials. The invasion of the independent field by Eddie Polo is one of the outstanding features of the current season.

POLO has grossed millions for exhibitors throughout the country. He will turn out serials along his own ideas—and they are practical, new and original. If the first two episodes of "Cap'n Kidd" are samples of what he will offer in the future, we have no hesitancy in saying that his serials will prove money-makers for exchanges and exhibitors alike. The first two episodes of "Cap'n Kidd" are brimful of action, thrills and adventure, sprinkled with enough romance and humor, to satisfy any audience.

OUR congratulations to those local exchangemen who were keen enough showmen to sign up the Polo serials immediately after it became known that he was to produce independently. They are on the ground floor—and will clean up. We had a long chat with Eddie Polo at his studio and are 100 per cent. sold on his serial ideas, because they are original and, according to our way of thinking, just what this market needs. He is spending carefully and considerably.

A MASTER showman, covering a period of ten years, Eddie Polo brings to the State rights market the wisdom and experience of one of the most successful serial stars this industry has known. He has surrounded himself with a capable cast, headed by Kathryne Myers, and a staff of technical experts, who constitute an organization that is working as one. Eddie Polo will deliver the goods. Of that we are certain. But to do so he must have the co-operation and support of those to whom he is catering. He is entitled to that. His success will be your success. He knows his business and is big enough a showman to realize that to succeed he must produce money-making pictures. Go to it, Eddie—and good luck!

Warner's Exchange Is Now N. Y. Federated

Warner's Exchange this week changed its name to The N. Y. Federated Exchange. The change extends to the name only. The personnel remains the same. The policy of active co-operation in advertising and publicity for exhibitors will be enforced more strongly than ever.

With the change in name there will be an expansion of product. The biggest box-office attractions available have been procured to maintain the even excellence of its offerings. "His Nibs," the Chic Sale starring vehicle that has been advertised nationally in the Saturday Evening Post and in the trade press, was bought this week from the Hiller Syndicate. It has come to be known as the "prize picture" of New York, as almost every exchange has been after it, but none succeeded in coming to terms. Its record-breaking business in Cleveland recently, and in other cities, was a factor in its purchase.

"Your Best Friend," the latest Vera Gordon feature, is the second big production acquired at the same time that the new name was adopted.

To round out its variety of product, the latest Selig serial, "The Jungle Goddess," starring Elinor Field and Truman Van Dyke, was bought from Export and Import.

Cartoonist Plans "Felix" Poster Illustrations

Pat Sullivan, cartoonist and creator of the "Felix" carton comics, the series of which are controlled for world-wide distribution by Miss M. J. Winkler, will henceforth be responsible for the poster illustrations as well as the subject matter of the "Felix" comics. This information is revealed in the text of a statement issued this week by Miss Winkler.

That exhibitors and state rights buyers will appreciate this interesting bit of news is brought out by some of the replies which Miss Winkler has received as the result of a questionnaire which she sent out recently with respect to her proposed action. It is but another bit of evidence of the desire of Miss Winkler to make "Felix" a national figure in theatre circles.

Third of Co-Star Series Shows Increased Sales

Reports of initial bookings for the third picture of the co-star series, "The Greater Duty," starring G. M. Anderson, Carol Halloway, Frank Campeau and Melbourne MacDowell in equal prominence, and released through Amalgamated franchise-holders by East Coast Productions, Inc., are given out by Franklyn E. Backer as an interesting example of the increase in business obtained by the independent exchanges handling the series over the amount of business reported by them before the release of the first two pictures.

While the increase in the number of first run bookings scheduled for the third of the set before its release testify, according to Backer, to the popularity of the co-star idea and the quality of the productions, he does not think that the marked improvement in the business obtained by the franchise-holders can be credited to the success of the pictures entirely. He believes that the independent exchanges are growing stronger from day to day, that they have turned the corner in their fight for equal consideration, on the part of the larger theatres, with the national distributing organizations, and that their return to prosperity will be gradual but steady from now on.

Curwood Production Is Nearing Completion

Arrow is in receipt of advice from Pine Tree Pictures, Inc., that the actual shooting of the latest James Oliver Curwood production has been completed and that Dell Henderson and his technical staff are now engaged in cutting and titling the picture.

Arrow's officials are very enthusiastic over this production, the title of which has not yet been announced, and state that it is by far the strongest Curwood picture that has been filmed.

An unusually strong cast interprets the various roles, and such well known players as Zena Keefe, J. Barney Sherry, Robert Elliott, Roy Gordon, Gypsy O'Brien, Joseph Depew, Jack Hopkins and Jack Drumier indicate a splendid box-office attraction.

Latest Cartoon Comic Ready for Release

Miss M. J. Winkler, distributor of the new "Felix" cartoon comics the series of which are animated by the Pat Sullivan studios, announces this week the completion of "Felix Makes Good" third of the series of twelve subjects, the rights to which she controls for world-wide distribution.

Pat Sullivan completed last week the work of editing, titling and assembling his latest subject, and a sample print of "Felix Makes Good" was rushed to the offices of Miss Winkler for private review.

The picture it is announced, is now available for release on the independent market.

Origin of Strip Poker Portrayed on Screen

In the next "Official Urban Movie Chat of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America" the reel opens with a Travel section, detailing some of the ancient glories of Rome. These are especially interesting by comparison, as, for instance, the ruins of the famous Coliseum whose great amphitheatre away back in the Middle Ages was equipped to seat 87,000 persons.

The modern complexities of handling traffic are demonstrated in the section on Public Service. The example is New York's methods with its electric signal towers, colored lights, etc.

Sports and Pastimes has its locale out among the Indians who show their "stick-game," which in all probability is the innocent origin of the modern game of American strip-poker. An interesting sidelight is the "spirit song" which is chanted to dance music while the game is played.

The section on Industry is bound to interest womenfolks in the audience, inasmuch as it shows how powder-puffs are manufactured.

Thomas A. Edison is the subject of the week's sketch on Interesting Personalities. This is a brand-new pictorial study of the famous inventor.

"Torchy's Hold-Up" Is Nearing Completion

Announcement comes from C. C. Burr, producer of Johnny Hines in the "Torchy" comedies, that Hines is putting the finishing touches to his latest this week, which will be titled "Torchy's Hold-up."

The story is built around the theft of some valuable bonds, the recovery of which causes Hines to go through no end of humorous caperings and daredevil escapes before this highly amusing two-reeler comes to a finish.

Appearing opposite Johnny Hines is the popular Dorothy McCail, the Ziegfeld Follies beauty, who has been Hines' leading lady for the past year. Miss McCail is called upon to go through many difficult scenes with Hines in this comedy.

To further insure the high class calibre of this latest "Torchy," Burr arranged to have Flora Finch in the cast. Miss Finch has lost none of the art that made her so famous, and the manner of her characterization in "Torchy's Hold-up" will bring many a laugh from the younger and older generations of movie-goers.

To round out this all-star comedy cast, Gregory Lacava, who directed the Katzenjammer Kids comedies, which enjoyed special runs at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres some time ago, has been permanently retained by Burr to supply the "gags" for all of the "Torchy" comedies.

Lee-Bradford Announce Sales During Month

The Lee-Bradford Corporation announces many sales during the month to the various State Righters. Among them are the following:

Myriad Pictures Corp., New York City — "Flesh and Spirit" and "Cloudburst."

Superior Film Exchange, Philadelphia — "The Unconquered Woman."

Twentieth Century Film Co.—"The Way of a Man."

Pioneer Film Corp., Washington, D. C.—"The Unconquered Woman."

Southern States Film Co., Atlanta—"Branded," "Serving Two Masters," "The Way of a Man" and "Cloudburst."

Stephens Film Dist. Co., New Orleans—"Branded."

Federated Film Exchange, Omaha—"Branded," "Serving Two Masters," "The Way of a Man," "Cloudburst" and "The Unconquered Woman."

Wisconsin Film Corp., Milwaukee—"Branded," "The Way of a Man" and "Flesh and Spirit."

In addition to the above, a number of foreign territories have been closed on "The Unconquered Woman" and "Flesh and Spirit."

Billy West Featured in Sunbeam Comedies

Harry Cohn is producing the new series of twenty-six two-reel comedies featuring Billy West, which has been announced by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation for States Right distribution. Four of the most important territories, including eleven states, were sold before any production work was begun.

The new series has been christened "Sunbeam Comedies."

An additional sale was made this week, when contracts were closed, whereby the R. D. Lewis Film Co. of Dallas secured rights to the territory including Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Cohn announces that the first of the comedies on this series is almost complete and, under the title "You'd Be Surprised," will soon be completely edited. It presents Billy West in the role of a newlywed, different from anything he has done before.

It is planned to pay special attention to "continuity" in the stories that comprise this series, both Harry Cohn and Billy West believing that this is an essential in the making of a good comedy, as in any type of production.

"Dangerous Adventure" Is Completed

The Warner Brothers fifteen chapter serial, "A Dangerous Adventure," starring Grace Darmond, has been completed at the Warner west coast studios, it is announced. Prints of the final episode are now enroute to the east.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

Geo. Randolph Chester Engaged by Universal

GEORGE RANDOLPH CHESTER, creator of "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford," and who is widely known as a writer for magazines, stage and screen, has been engaged by Universal to fill an important position in the scenario department at Universal City.

Chester will rank as a supervising editor, and will have immediate jurisdiction over the preparation of material for two of Universal's important producing units—those handling the pictures of Frank Mayo and Gladys Walton.

Chester's first work with Universal will be injecting his inimitable humorous touches to "Afraid to Fight," Frank Mayo's next picture, and to "Top o' the Mornin'," the new Gladys Walton production.

The new acquisition to Universal's scenario department, represents the latest move by Carl Laemmle, Universal chief, in carrying out his announced policy of giving Universal stars the best possible stories. Chester is recognized as one of America's foremost writers. Since he turned his attention to the screen, he has done much to upset the fallacy that men of literature have nothing in common with the art of the motion picture.

"U" Serial Policy Changed

Arrangements Made So Houses Can Start Off With 3 or 4 Chapters

UNIVERSAL announces a new policy in the presentation of its serial, "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe." Instead of showing this latest "historical-educational serial" in two-reel episodes, week by week, many theatres will be able to star the serial by showing the first three or four chapters at once. This plan was determined upon, according to word from the Universal headquarters, in response to a desire on the part of many high-class theatres which were hesitant about introducing serials on their programs but which want to show the "Robinson Crusoe" chapter-picture.

"The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe" also will present a further serial novelty. It will be limited to twelve episodes, or a total of 24 reels instead of the usual 36 reels of serial plot. The decision to keep the Crusoe serial to 12 episodes is due to two conditions.

The first hinges upon the story itself. In the preparation of the Defoe classic for the screen, the production experts at Universal City announced that the story would not admit of 36 reel treatment. Even with certain additions to the plot, enlarged from actual incidents in the book, and approved by the school authorities in New York City, it was found that it would not run more than 24 reels without padding. Twelve chapters therefore were set as the limit.

This shortening of the serial length also was brought about by the attitude of certain first-run theatre owners who do not think their patrons want an 18 weeks continuous film story, but who, nevertheless are eager to present the Crusoe chapter-play on their screens.

Mr. Laemmle conferred with many prominent exhibitors on these matters before actually giving the word to mould the Universal serial policy again. In six months he already had turned Universal's serial policy upside down—changing the serial out-put from the old style of serial, to a new "thrills-from-history" brand of screen entertainment that has won the warmest praise of censors, educators and parents, instead of their bitter criticism, as formerly.

"Reckless Youth" Release

Elaine Hammerstein Picture to Be Issued in April, Announces Selznick

March 30 marked the release of Elaine Hammerstein's latest screen presentation, "Reckless Youth." In this subject Niles Welch again works opposite Miss Hammerstein, with Huntley Gordon playing a "heavy" that figures almost as importantly in the proceedings as does the leading male role. The basis of "Reckless Youth" is a Cosmo Hamilton story, scenarionized by Edward Montagne.

Ralph Ince personally staged the new Selznick offering, last of the productions to be made in the East preceding the move to Hollywood, decided upon some time ago and lately announced by Myron Selznick, vice-president in charge of distribution. This is the second Elaine Hammerstein presentation that Ralph Ince has directed, his initial work with that star being "Remorseless Love," the photoplay in which Niles Welch first played Miss Hammerstein's leads.

Constance Bennett, a daughter of Richard Bennett, the sterling stage celebrity, has her first screen role in support of Miss Hammerstein, playing the part of a chorus girl in a manner that comes in the Selznick report as most impressive and indicative of inherent talents well applied. Louise Prussing is also supplied with a role of benefit to the presentation.

"Go-Get-'Em Hutch" for Release April 9

"Chained to the Anchor" is the opening episode of the new Pathe serial "Go-Get-'Em Hutch," starring Charles Hutchison, which will introduce the "stunt star's" new vehicle to exhibitors during the week of April 9th. "Go-Get-'Em Hutch" is a serial which has already won the approval of the National Board of Review because it is absolutely censorproof and because it gives an insight into one of the leading industries of the day—the shipping business.

The picture was produced by George B. Seitz and the supporting cast includes Marguerite Clayton, Richard R. Neill, Frank Hagney, Joe Cuny, Cecile Bonnel and Pearl Shepard.

Thos. H. Ince Invited to Better Films Conference

An unexpectedly long absence from his studios and the necessity for returning to Los Angeles at an early date forced Thomas H. Ince to decline an invitation to be a guest of honor and to speak with Will H. Hays at the Southeastern Better Films Conference in Atlanta on April 28.

The invitation was inspired by the high approval of Mr. Ince's latest release, "Hail the Woman" on the part of the Better Films Committee of Atlanta.

Fox News at Special Showing in Capitol

E. S. Rothapfel, manager of the Capitol theatre, New York, was so impressed with the enterprise of Fox News in securing the first complete pictures on board the French-owned liner, the S.S. Paris, that he entertained the officers and members of the crew at a special showing of the film Tuesday evening, following the regular performance.

The theatre was gaily decorated for the occasion, the State box being draped with flags, including the French and American emblems and the flag of the Compagnie General Transatlantique. This box and several others were occupied by the officers of the Paris. More than 200 members of the crew were present.

Pauline Frederick to Return to Stage

Pauline Frederick, popular star of R-C Pictures, has left Hollywood for Chicago where she will perfect arrangements with A. H. Woods, theatrical magnate, for her return this fall to the speaking stage. Miss Frederick's abandonment of the screen for a former vocation follows an insistent demand for her return to the stage. During the eighteen months of her screen career as an R-C star, offers from foremost New York producers have come to her to return to the spoken drama. Her acceptance of the Woods offer came only a few days after her completion of a screen version of the William J. Locke novel, "The Glory of Clementina," which will soon be released by R-C Pictures.

During her five years as a screen star, her work in "Madame X," and "The Glory of Clementina," her forthcoming picture will be especially remembered. Other noteworthy successes are "The Mistress of Shenstone," "Salvage," "The Sting of the Lash," "The Lure of Jade," and "Two Kinds of Women."

Big Reception Is Given "The Fire Bride"

"The Fire Bride," the first of the Entertainment Series of features to be released by the Gunning organization, was praised by all the trade critics, without a single exception, when it was shown at the Keith-Moss Broadway theatre. The Alder and Unander picture, which was actually taken in Tahiti, with a cast including Ruth Reneck, Edward Hearn, Fred Stanton and Walt Whitman, pleased on the score of beauty, action and romance.

"It is good entertainment," said the Motion Picture News. "It provides action, combining Robert Louis Stevenson and Jack London. Audiences will like it." The Moving Picture World critic summed it up thus: "It is an unusual production—one that will entertain." Harrison's reports said: "It is beautiful to the point of enchanting—the story arouses interest and at times holds one in tense suspense."

Vitagraph Units Are Busy

Heavy Production Schedule Augmented by Three New Productions

W. S. SMITH, manager of the studios, after several days conference with Albert E. Smith, President of Vitagraph, issued the statement that the heavy production period which Vitagraph has been experiencing would be further augmented within the next few days by the opening of three new productions.

Although Earle Williams, William Duncan and Alice Calhoun have just completed pictures, this trio will start on the same day with new productions. It was announced that Mr. Williams will be starred in an O. Henry story. The direction will be by Robert Ensminger who has been associated with Earle Williams as director in the production of previous stories.

Simultaneous with Mr. Williams' opening, Alice Calhoun will begin upon her fourth picture since reaching Vitagraph's California studios. Her new story is called "Blue Blood." A notable fact is that Alice Calhoun will be directed in her forthcoming picture by David Smith who directed her in "The Little Minister." Mr. Smith is just now putting the final touches on the big special "My Wild Irish Rose," which will be finished this week so far as actual filming is concerned.

William Duncan, Vitagraph's western star, has recently finished "The Silent Vow" and is already in production on another. This latest story is strongly western in tone. Edith Johnson will appear opposite Duncan.

Larry Semon is in the midst of a mirthful comedy in which he plays two parts, that of an immigrant and that of a king. Semon was recently provided with his own separate studio for his specific production unit. This studio has now been sufficiently completed to admit of its being used by the comedy king in production of his current two-reeler.

Corinne Griffith is now at Charleston, S. C., where she will make exterior scenes for a new picture. Miss Griffith and her company returned only a short time ago from up North after filming some unusual snow scenes for a Corinne Griffith production which will follow the sensational "Island Wives" to release.

Special Juvenile Bill Staged in Chicago

Through the co-operation of Balaban & Katz, Superintendent Mortenson, of the Chicago schools, last week was given an opportunity to test out the sort of pictures children of school age appreciate most highly.

Four thousand five hundred children from six southside schools were admitted free to the Tivoli Theatre, and a diversified program of subjects, selected by the superintendent, was given, the object being to select by practical experiment the picture material which can be developed and used to wean children away from too much enthusiasm for wild west and for sex pictures.

Judging by the interest shown by the youngsters, animals are the stars they want, and according to Miss Grace Reed, principal of the Williard School, film makers can start working with dogs, monkeys, turtles, poultry, and be sure that the children will revel in such pictures.

Following the performance, Frank Mayo, principal of the Wadsworth School, said: "Animal subjects were of supreme importance to the children. Travel scenes, no matter how beautiful, fail to have the animation needed. Egyptian tombs put the children to sleep, but views of turtles in action, snapping, eating, walking, delighted the children. Princess Mary's wedding procession bored them, but views of sardine fishing and canning held them intent. They cheered more loudly for a dog and monkey picture than I have ever heard them cheer for a cowboy film.

Paramount Exchange Divides N. Y. Territory

On account of the amount of business now flowing through the New York Paramount exchange, the exchange territory has been divided into three divisions. Under the new arrangement, Paul Swift is placed in charge of Division No. 1, comprising Manhattan, the Bronx and Staten Island. Division No. 2, embracing Brooklyn and the remainder of Long Island, will be in charge of Richard Gledhill. Division No. 3, consisting of the territory of Northern New Jersey, will be in charge of John Hammel.

All three divisions will be under the direct jurisdiction of Harry Danto and under the general supervision of Mr. Buxbaum, whose district includes the New York, Albany and Buffalo exchange territories.

Director Uses Exploitation Angles

One of the many unusual features about Robert G. Vignola's latest Cosmopolitan production, "Beauty's Worth," to be released early in April, which will appeal particularly to exhibitors is the exploitation angle which the director has injected into his production while in the making, states Cosmopolitan.

The basic method behind Mr. Vignola's idea is that where the story itself has no natural exploitation possibilities he devises them and makes them a part of the picture so that they are not obvious. In "Beauty's Worth" he has put several novel ideas.

Miss DuPont Bears Message to California

An official message from the Mayor of Boston to Mayor Cryer of Los Angeles is to be delivered by Miss DuPont, Universal star, who was chosen for this purpose after her personal appearance in Boston in connection with the showing of 'Foolish Wives."

The letter was one aimed at the establishment of better trade relations between the two coast cities.

"Dollar Devils" Finished on Coast

"DOLLAR DEVILS," the first big Victor Schertzinger Production, to be released through Wid Gunning, Inc., has just been finished at the American studios at Santa Barbara, according to a wire just received at the Gunning home offices from Wid Gunning, who is now out on the Coast.

"Dollar Devils" is considered by Gunning to have one of the strongest box-office titles of the year, which, according to report, is well backed up by an absorbing story of tenseness and human interest. Among the all-star cast of players which has been at work for months is Joe Dowling, who achieved fame in "The Miracle Man."

Prison Chaplain Lauds "Turn to the Right"

Coincidentally with Will H. Hays's emphasis, in a speech delivered in New York within the last few days, upon the potentialities of the motion picture as a moral influence, comes an announcement from Metro Pictures Corporation that its photoplay of the Winchell Smith success, "Turn to the Right," will be shown in the penitentiaries of the country. The first such exhibition has already taken place at the Michigan State Prison, Jackson. From the Reverend William F. Hopp, chaplain of the institution, and from hundreds of inmates, Metro has received communications of earnest appreciation of this Rex Ingram production of the John Golden stage play, written by Winchell Smith and John E. Hazzard.

Strong Cast in Bull Montana Picture

A strong cast has been assembled by Hunt Stromberg for support of "handsome" Bull Montana in his first starring comedy, "A Ladies' Man," production upon which was launched last week at the Hollywood Studios on the West Coast.

Chief among the ensemble are Claire McDowell, Charles Mailes, Myrtle Lind, Frank Kingsley, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Charlotte Woods and "Snitz" Edwards, with "Spike" Robinson and Billy Elmer —the "faithful two" of Bull's own "personal staff"—on the job in the roles of "Kid" Tracey and "Professor Hoboken," respectively.

"A Ladies' Man," written by Hunt Stromberg and adapted by Rex Taylor, is to be three reels in length. Charles "Chuck" Riesner, formerly of the Chaplin production staff, is directing under the supervision of Stromberg. Pliny Goodfriend and Steve Evans are at the cameras, with Fred Fralick as casting and studio production aide and Frank Kryger as assistant director. Work on the second Montana vehicle, tentatively titled "Lourie from the Bourie," will begin immediately following the completion of "A Ladies' Man," with a noteworthy cast to include Otis Harlan.

Gunning Feature for B'way

"The Bootleggers" Will Open at B. S. Moss' Broadway April 3rd

"THE BOOTLEGGERS," one of the Entertainment Series of features released through the Gunning organization, has been booked to play for a week at B. S. Moss' Broadway theatre, New York City, starting April 3. This is the second picture in the fast-moving series to play the Broadway within a short time, "The Fire Bride" having been shown to crowded houses there several weeks ago.

It was the enthusiastic reception accorded "The Fire Bride" by audiences and trade-paper critics that made B. S. Moss book "The Bootleggers" so soon after the first of the series. Both pictures are shown in pre-release engagements, and are presented by the management of the Broadway in an elaborate musical and scenic setting.

"The Bootleggers" is considered by the theatre management as a particularly timely picture, with a title which is on everybody's tongue and in every newspaper headline. Several unusual exploitation stunts are planned by the theatre and the Gunning exploitation forces in connection with the showing. Federal Prohibition Enforcement officials and agents have been invited to a private showing of the picture during its run.

"The Bootleggers" is an exciting story of rum-running by ship, aeroplane and wireless, based on dramatic incidents gleaned, by special permission, from private Government reports. The picture features Walter Miller, Paul Panzer and Norma Sheerer, and was directed by Roy Sheldon.

Bookings on the Entertainment Series throughout the country have come into the Gunning headquarters in such volume as to create a high water mark of sales, declares a statement from the Gunning home-office.

Lupino Lane Busy on Coast

Is Completing His First Two-Reel Special Comedy for William Fox

LUPINO LANE, the English comedian and pantomimist who was recently signed to a contract by William Fox, is nearing completion of his first two-reel special comedy at the West Coast studios, under the direction of Jack Blystone, according to announcement from the offices of the Fox organization this week. The title of the picture is "The Broker," and the story is said to provide many extremely humorous situations suitable for the art of the mirthmaking artist.

Lane, the idol of the London Hippodrome and of Drury Lane, made his American debut when the English production "Afgar" was presented in New York City in December 1920. So great was the impression he left on the first nighters and the newspaper and magazine reviewers that he was acclaimed as one of the best performers of his kind who ever played on the American stage. His performance even eclipsed that of the much-heralded female star with "Afgar," according to the reviewers. Lane received word recently to begin work for Fox as a star of the new series of Lupino Lane Special Comedies.

Before making his successful entrance into this country, Lane had played the principal comedy roles in the London presentations of "Little Johnny Jones," "The League of Notions," "Watch Your Step," "Follow the Crowd" and "We're All In It."

Two Paramount Features Released April 2nd

APRIL is ushered in on the Famous Players-Lasky schedule with William D. Taylor's Paramount production, "The Green Temptation," starring Betty Compson and May McAvoy in the Realart picture, "Through a Glass Window," both set for release the 2nd.

Adapted from Constance Lindsay Skinner's novel, "The Noose," "The Green Temptation" is described as a detective story in which is interwoven a colorful picture of the life led by the Apaches in their underground haunts in Paris. Monte M. Katterjohn wrote the scenario of "The Green Temptation."

Both the original story and the scenario of "Through a Glass Window" were written by Olga Printzlau. There is said to be an abundance of pathos in the story which is of a plucky little girl who struggles with the double burden of a blind mother and a young brother who is a bit too weak.

Baird on Third of Her Series for A. E.

Arthur F. Beck, who is producing the Leah Baird productions for release by Associated Exhibitors, has started work at Culver City on the third picture starring this actress. Wallace Worsley has been engaged to direct the picture. The supporting cast includes such well-known players as William Conklin, Eulalie Jensen, Jack Mower, and Katherine Lewis. Miss Baird's first picture for Associated Exhibitors, "Don't Doubt Your Wife," is reported to be proving popular. Her second vehicle, "When the Devil Drives," will shortly be assigned a release date.

Betty Blythe to Star in Pyramid Picture

Betty Blythe has signed a contract to star in a Pyramid picture. Miss Blythe has scored in her two latest vehicles which are "The Queen of Sheba" for William Fox and "Fair Lady," a United Artists' release. Her work in the latter picture, just recently opened on Broadway, has won her praise from the pens of the Metropolitan critics. Miss Blythe is engaged on her new picture in the East. Most of her recent productions have been made on the West Coast.

Owen Moore Pre-view at Ritz-Carleton April 7

Myron Selznick has arranged a pre-view of the Owen Moore special "Reported Missing" to be held at the Ritz Carlton Hotel on the evening of Friday, April 7. Following the showing of the picture there will be a dance.

The affair will also be a farewell party to the production staff which will leave for the coast two days later on April 9.

Paramount Anniversary in Australia

CABLE advices from Sydney, Australia, received by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, report record-breaking business for Australasia's observation of the tenth anniversary of Paramount Pictures. Rentals for the month of March have greatly exceeded the business of any previous month, and the theatres are reporting new box-office records daily, according to Managing Director John W. Hicks, Jr.

The most extensive advertising campaign ever known in the Australian film industry was conducted as one means of celebrating the month, leading newspapers and publications in all of the principal cities carrying large announcements of Paramount's tenth anniversary and the part played by Mr. Zukor in the upbuilding of the industry.

Edna Murphy Wins Popularity Contest

Edna Murphy, the Fox star, was declared the "Sweetest Girl on the Screen" and winner of a popularity contest of picture stars conducted by George J. Wehner, a Brooklyn, N. Y., exhibitor controlling a string of ten theatres.

Miss Murphy, according to letters accompanying the votes, won her distinction particularly in the last three or four pictures in which she has been featured. They included "Play Square," "What Love Will Do," and "The Jolt."

Marshall Neilan Starts New Production

Marshall Neilan started "shooting" on his next production, "Her Man," last week, and announced the engagement of Matt Moore and Leatrice Joy for the picture.

For the first time in his career Mr. Moore will get away from playing "straight" parts and in the new Neilan picture, to be released by First National, will portray a character part, that of a small town newspaper editor with various eccentricities in dress and manner.

Fox Special Is Announced

Estelle Taylor With Strong Cast to Appear in "A Fool There Was"

A DISTINGUISHED cast, with Estelle Taylor in the role of a 1922 "vamp," has been announced by William Fox for "A Fool There Was," a photodrama based on the stage play by Porter Emerson Brown—which in turn was inspired by Rudyard Kipling's famous poem, "The Vampire." Work on the production has already begun, according to announcement from the New York offices of Fox Film Corporation.

Emmett J. Flynn, who directed "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," "Monte Cristo" and other Fox specials, will direct this picture. Bernard McConville, associated with Mr. Flynn in several of his most important pictures, prepared the new screen adaptation of the famous play.

The director and the scenarist, with the expert technical staff of the Fox Hollywood studio, have been busy since December laying out and arranging the sets, which are now complete. Work on the production is to begin at once.

Estelle Taylor is remembered especially for her work with William Farnum and in the Fox specials, "While New York Sleeps" and "Blind Wives." The remainder of the exceptional cast includes:

Schuyler, The Fool—Played by Lewis Stone, one of the finest character actors on stage or screen.

Mrs. Schuyler, The Fool's wife—Played by Irene Rich, well known screen star.

The Schuylers' Child—Played by Muriel Frances Dana, known as the 4-year-old Bernhardt of the screen.

Nell Winthrop, The Fool's Sister—Played by Marjorie Daw, who has been featured in many Marshall Neilan productions, and is known to screen fans wherever motion pictures are shown.

Morgan—Played by Mahlon Hamilton, one of the best leading men in the country.

Parmalee—Played by Wallace McDonald, well-known leading man, who has been featured in big productions.

Boggs—Played by William V. Mong, who played Merlin in "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," and is recognized as a leading character man on the screen.

Parks—Played by Harry Longsdale, noted for his character work with Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks.

In addition to elaborate sets built and ships chartered, particular attention is given to the gowns of the women. The gowns to be worn by Miss Taylor were especially made by Paquin and Worth of Paris, and Lucile of New York, according to word from the Fox office. The furniture to be used in the sets was shipped by Tiffany studios, New York, to Hollywood, it is announced.

Critics Laud "Fair Lady"

Favorable Reviews by New York Press Mark Its Opening on B'way

FAVORABLE reviews by New York newspaper critics marked the initial Broadway showing at the Strand theatre of "Fair Lady," Rex Beach's second photoplay for United Artists Corporation, on Sunday, March 19. "Fair Lady" is a romantic melodrama, based on the well-known Rex Beach novel, "The Net," and produced by Whitman Bennett.

"'Fair Lady' is a smashing good melodrama," writes Harriette Underhill in the New York Tribune. "Betty Blythe is the heroine and the supporting cast is without a flaw. Every one is at some time or the other under suspicion, but you are never quite sure till the very end which is the villain and which the hero. The people act like real people and do and say interesting things all the time. Betty Blythe is beautiful and regal as the Countess Margherita, and Thurston Hall, Robert Elliott and Macey Harlan are perfect as the three men in the case."

"Both 'Fair Lady' and Betty Blythe are thoroughly worth while," says R. W. Baremore in the Morning Telegraph, "providing one of the best film attractions seen on Broadway in some time. It is a photo-drama that commands attention from the very start and holds the interest right up to the last fade-out."

"'Fair Lady' makes one realize that the movies can still set the old pulses going," says the critic for the New York Herald. "In it one has all the elements for a first class emotional spasm. The manner of the villain's undoing is picturesque and unexpected. You can see how it is all contrived, but you hold your breath just the same. Miss Betty Blythe proves that she can act as well as wear beautiful clothes. In fact, all the cast are excellent."

"Just about as thorough and absorbing a photoplay dealing with Sicilian intrigue as we have seen," says Quinn Martin in the New York World. "It is a finished play, distinguished by effective acting by Betty Blythe, Thurston Hall and Robert Elliott. And it will be a popular picture wherever shown. The various characters are well chosen, from the supernumeraries to the principals. 'Fair Lady' ought to do well."

Elephant Hunt Scenes in Pathe Review

Some unusual jungle scenes will be shown in the Pathe Review No. 150, to be released April 9th. These remarkable scenes illustrate the method of elephant hunting in Africa.

Constance Talmadge Will Make "East Is West"

MOTION picture rights to "East is West," a recent success of the legitimate stage, have been acquired by Joseph M. Schenck, and the play will be used as the next vehicle for Constance Talmadge.

Sidney Franklin, who directed "The Primitive Lover," will direct "East is West" also.

Robt. Bruce Goes West to Begin New Series

Robert C. Bruce, whose new series of Wilderness Tales, which Educational recently began releasing, and which have attracted such an unusual amount of favorable attention, has returned to the Northwest to resume his work of making plays with scenic backgrounds.

Mr. Bruce was much impressed with the beautiful scenic backgrounds for his stories in the states of Washington, Oregon and California on his tour last year, and decided that this was the best locality he could find for settings for his second series of outdoor playlets. His program for this season is much more elaborate, and he promises a surprise or two when he returns in the Fall with his finished pictures.

Mr. Bruce will make his headquarters in Portland, Ore., from which city he will make frequent trips into the beautiful country nearby for the taking of scenes in the several pictures which he has planned.

Harold Lloyd in Humorous Character Study

"Grandma's Boy," Harold Lloyd's latest production, is declared to be a new proof of the star's versatility in characterizations of a humorous kind. The comedy, which is in five reels, is said to involve a well-rounded story and to be a character study of a timid boy who becomes as brave as any of them when he is made to realize the depth of his own latent strength. But while there is ample provision for heart appeal in some of the big dramatic moments, the humor is said to have full sweep from start to finish. "Grandma's Boy" will be an Associated Exhibitors' release.

Lynch Chain Signs for "Woman, Wake Up!"

The Lynch circuit embracing thirty-six theatres in the states of Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, North Carolina, and South Carolina has just signed up first-run bookings for "Women, Wake Up!" in which Florence Vidor makes her bow as an Associated Exhibitors' star. Associated Exhibitors point to this engagement as evidence of the box-office value of this production.

Strong Cast to Support Ray in New Vehicle

"THE Tailor Made Man," which Charles Ray is making for United Artists' release, is now well under way on the Coast. The continuity by Albert Ray, which took several weeks to be put into proper shape, is said to include all the salient points of the stage play.

A strong cast has been engaged to support Mr. Ray. Thomas Ricketts has been chosen to take the part of Anton Huber, the tailor, and Victor Potel serves as his assistant in the shop. Santon Heck has the role of Abraham Nathan, the financier and ship-owner. Frank Butler is Theodore Jellicot; Fred Thompson enacts Mr. Stanlaw, with Kate Lester as Mrs. Stanlaw, and the beautiful Jacqueline Logan plays the role of their daughter Corinne. Nellie Peck Saunders is the choice for Kitty Dupuy, with Charlotte Pierce as her daughter Bessie. Douglas Gerrard has his first part with the Ray organization as Dr. Gustavus Sonntag, and Eddie Gribbon makes an ideal Russell, the head of the workingmen's delegation.

George Rizard heads the camera force as usual. Robert J. Ellis is the art director, and the usual Ray staff fills in otherwise. "The Tailor Made Man" is being directed by Joseph De Grasse. Harry Decker serves as his assistant.

Harry Harris Returns as Universal Director

Harry B. Harris, who "broke in" as a director with the Gladys Walton company, when that star was making her first bid for screen popularity, has returned to Universal City and again will handle the megaphone for Miss Walton.

The first picture Harris will direct is "The Trouper," a stage story by A. P. Younger, Universal scenario writer.

"Four Horsemen" Runs 21 Days in Duluth

Twenty-one consecutive days' run in a downtown house in Duluth was the mark set by "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," Rex Ingram's production for Metro of Blasco Ibanez's novel. The original engagement at the Garrick Theatre, Duluth, was to last one week. The crush of attendance proved this period quite insufficient, and so the great photoplay was held over a fortnight longer.

Goulding Changes Stars

Alf Goulding who has been directing the destinies of the dog Brownie for Century Comedies has switched stars and has now started a picture with Harry Sweet, Alberta Vaughn, and John E. K. Fox of the many freckles completing the cast.

R-C Announces New Film

"Queen of the Turf," Race-Track Drama, Listed as Spring Offering

AS its initial offering for the spring season, R-C Pictures Corporation announces this week a race-track drama entitled "Queen of the Turf." This in accordance with the belief of the releasing company that not only is a big picture of special appeal necessary to start the season's business, but that the production should be appropriate for the season. Both these requirements are fulfilled in "Queen of the Turf," declares R-C Pictures. In addition the feature is one which contains many exploitation angles which will make possible a varied and appealing campaign.

Described as an entrancing romance of the Australian race course, "Queen of the Turf" offers as a climax a racing scene which embraces the ultimate in suspense and thrills. "We have selected 'Queen of the Turf' to head our spring releases," states R-C Pictures, in announcing the feature to exhibitors, "because we know it is something that the public will welcome with enthusiasm. Spring is the time for sport and quick, tense, out-of-door action. 'Queen of the Turf' fits perfectly into the atmosphere. It offers clean, fascinating romance and a race-track finish, which we believe, for sheer thrills, has seldom been equalled on the screen. It is our answer to the demands of the exhibitors—the demand for fast action pictures which depart from the beaten path of conventional screen entertainment."

Especial attention has been paid, in the production of this feature, to provide a race track story that catches the tense atmosphere of the turf. With thousands of people unconsciously serving as "extras," the race scene brings to the screen all the excitement, tense nervousness and thrills that are found on the big handicap day at an American track.

The leading feminine role is played by "Brownie" Vernon, a delightful ingenue, who takes the part of the "Tomboy" girl who rides the horse to victory in the big race. Others in the cast include John Faulkner, Robert MacKinnon and Evelyn Johnson. The picture was directed by John R. Wells and is five reels in length.

R-C Pictures is preparing special exploitation material for this feature, and every effort will be made to allow exhibitors the opportunity to take advantage of the exploitation possibilities which the picture affords.

Praise Goldwyn Contest

Exploitation Idea for "Grand Larceny" Praised by Many Exhibitors

FROM all sides the Goldwyn Company has received the most emphatic commendation from the "Grand Larceny" contest tie-up as announced in a four-page insert in the trade papers of a few weeks ago. Not only the idea, but the manner of bringing it to the attention of exhibitors, has been hailed as something new and welcome in the exploitation of motion pictures, states Goldwyn.

Referring to the "Grand Larceny" contest to be conducted in newspapers in conjunction with the showing of the picture, H. E. Jameyson, advertising manager of the Doric and Liberty theatres, Kansas City, Mo., writes: "It's a bear of a scheme, and it will make a lot of money for the boys that use it. Seems to me you've got the idea of selling pictures to the exhibitor—sell 'em the way to bring the patrons—then give 'em the picture."

A. L. Selig, exploitation and publicity manager for the Lucas, Colonial, Odeon and Folly theatres, Savannah, Ga., is another booster for the contest in which a newspaper offers prizes for the best conclusions to "Grand Larceny," a story that ends with a question mark. He writes: "There is no better advertising or exploitation than a newspaper tie-up, and the idea you have evolved in getting your splendid picture 'Grand Larceny' before the public."

"A DISGRACE TO CIVILIZATION"

TUBERCULOSIS was once considered a disease that "had to be." Now we know better. We know it for what it is—a disgrace to civilization. Under proper conditions of daily living, tuberculosis would disappear.

Deaths from this cause in New York City have been greatly cut down, particularly in the past dozen years. Last year in fact, the reduction was 18 per cent over 1920.

This is certainly encouraging. Yet the fight must be kept up. There must be no slackening in effort. Six thousand deaths a year are six thousand too many.

For the good of New York we shall be glad to give helpful information, without charge, to all who may inquire of us.

Edward Dillon Enters Ranks of Producers

EDWARD DILLON has entered the ranks of the producers as the head of his own organization. The new company is to be known as The Genius Film Productions, Inc. The first subject, as yet untitled, is now nearing completion. It is stated that Mr. Dillon's determination to go into production for himself was made despite tempting inducements from several of the biggest producing companies to join their directorial staffs.

The initial Dillon production is based on an original story by Adelaide Heilbron and presents an all-star cast. Roy Overbaugh, who was formerly attached to the camera staff of John Robertson, the Paramount producer, has been engaged by Dillon as his chief cameraman. Releasing arrangements for the initial Dillon production will be announced in the near future.

Eddie Dillon's first screen work was an actor back in 1908. For eight and a half years he served in directorial capacities under D. W. Griffith. Later Mr. Dillon directed for Reliance-Majestic, Triangle, Fine Arts, and Famous Players-Lasky. When De Wolf Hopper appeared in his screen version of "Don Quixote," Dillon was engaged to direct the production.

Goldwyn Is Preparing Chinese Fantasy

An original photoplay by Gouverneur Morris, a Chinese fantasy, "Whims of the Gods," is being prepared by Goldwyn for release in the near future. The picture is declared to be totally different from anything ever attempted before on the screen.

Rowland V. Lee was signed by Goldwyn especially to direct this production. The continuity was prepared by Ruth Wightman aided by Mr. Morris. Jack Abbe, the young Japanese actor, plays the role of What Ho, the cook. Winter Blossom, a young Chinese actress, is the Ting-a-Ling, James Marcus, the Go Hang, Edward McWade and Mai Wells, Mr. and Mrs. Wing, Fred Becker is the bandit chief, while Snitz Edwards, Joe Murphy, Jackson Reade and J. Junnis Davis are ordinary bandits. Harry Gribbon and William Orlamond act the parts of a bully and a detective respectively.

"The Rosary" Comes Near to Doubling Record

The Steinauer theatre, of Steinauer, Neb., came within $9 of doubling its house record with "The Rosary," a First National attraction, Feb. 26 and 27. Manager Edson wrote the First National offices that had the weather conditions been good he should have doubled the business he had on it.

Marion Davies Wins Critics' Approval

Marion Davies is receiving congratulations of exhibitors and picture-goers on the success of her second picture under Robert G. Vignola's direction, "Beauty's Worth." This Cosmopolitan Production, when first presented at the Rivoli theatre, was favorably received by the New York reviewers. Miss McElliott in the "Daily News" advises her readers: "You'll like Marion Davies in her new picture. She is natural, pretty and convincing in her role of a Quaker maiden."

Quinn Martin, in the "World" writes: "Marion Davies is at her prettiest in 'Beauty's Worth.' The cameraman, director, a fashion artist and the scenario editor have joined in presenting this truly beautiful young actress in her best attitudes—all the way from bathing girl to Quaker miss."

Alan Dale, in the "American:" "Miss Davies really looked so lovely that her beauty leaped forth as it has never leaped in picture before. . . . 'Beauty's Worth' was exquisitely set all the way through. It was a feast for the eye."

"Fool's Paradise" Equals Success of "Forever"

Following close upon the showing of "Forever" at the Century Theatre, Baltimore, Cecil B. DeMille's "Fool's Paradise" scored fully as marked a success at the same Whitehurst house, according to Manager L. A. DeHoff who wrote the report of the unusual attendance to C. C. Wallace, Paramount branch manager at Washington, D. C.

Three Playgoers' Pictures

"Sunshine Harbor" and "Pasteboard Crown" Are Two Named for April

THREE productions are on Playgoers Pictures schedule for release in April. First on the list, set for April 2nd, is the attraction, "Sunshine Harbor," in which Margaret Beecher is featured. This offering, produced and directed by Edward Hemmer, is from the story by Jerome N. Wilson. In the supporting cast with which Miss Beecher is surrounded are Howard Hall, Ralph Harolde, Coit Albertson, Dan Jarrett and Myra Brooks, among other well known players.

On April 16th comes the release of another Playgoers offering, "A Pasteboard Crown," which was directer by Travers Vale. This is from the story of stage life by Clara Morris. The romance is portrayed by a special cast, including, among others, such screen favorites as Evelyn Greeley, Gladys Valerie, Robert Elliott, Eleanor Woodruff, J. H. Gilmore, Albert Roccardi, Jane Jennings, and Dora Mills Adams.

A third attraction of the month is set for April 23rd—"Lonesome Corners," an Edgar Jones production. This is a picture in five reels, with Edgar Jones, Edna May Sperl and Henry Van Bousen prominent in the cast. "Lonesome Corners" is a light comedy, telling a story of the north woods.

Playgoers Pictures sells through its own salesmen in the exchanges of Pathe. It announces that in making these selections of pictures for April release it has accumulated a collection of films which it feels confident will prove of great entertainment and box-office value.

Educational Signing 'Em Up

Home Office Anticipates Almost 100% Showing During April 16-23

REPORTS of special bookings of Educational Pictures in the more important theatres so far reported to the home office of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., include such a large percentage of the bigger and better houses that they indicate almost 100 per cent showings will be the rule for Educational Pictures Week, April 16 to 23, declares a statement received during the week from the Educational Films headquarters.

Many theatres are taking advantage of Educational's offer of a special one-sheet to tie up with Educational's national advertising campaign which Educational is giving free. Several theatres already have requested large numbers of these one-sheets, which will be posted about the cities in which these theatres are situated.

A large number of the branch exchanges were able to line up the biggest of the first run houses early in the campaign, it is announced. Several others have reported their most important bookings in the last week. Among these branches are those at San Francisco, Seattle, Indianapolis and Buffalo.

In San Francisco the leading exhibitors who will use Educational Pictures during Educational Pictures Week include Roth and Partington, with the California, Granada, Imperial and Portola Theatres, and Turner and Dahnken, who will show Educational Pictures in the Tivoli theatre. Among the big district houses are the Haight, Coliseum, New Fillmore and New Mission theatres. A large number of first run houses in other cities in the San Francisco territory also were reported as having booked Educational Pictures for the week.

Jensen and Von Herberg theatres in the Seattle district will show Educational Pictures during Educational Week. Among the important houses listed by the Seattle branch as having booked these short subjects are the Liberty, Strand and Coliseum, Seattle; Rivoli, Columbia and Liberty, Portland; Clemmer and Liberty, Spokane, Wash.; Rialto and Colonial, Tacoma, Wash., and Rialto, Butte, Mont.

J. P. McGowan Signs Up New A. E. Series

A CONTRACT has just been closed with Playgoers Pictures, Inc., for the release by that organization of six more pictures starring the popular western actor, J. P. McGowan. The papers were signed by S. F. Champion, Jr., of the Champion Film Corporation, of Grand Rapids, Mich., which will produce the features.

Mr. McGowan accompanied Mr. Champion to New York City and the two called on John C. Ragland and other officials of Playgoers Pictures. Champion Film Corporation, they announced, will establish at once production studios both at Grand Rapids, Mich., and in California.

Selections have not been made for the forthcoming vehicles, but Mr. McGowan promised that they will be action pictures, following the same general lines as those with which he has achieved his present wide popularity.

"Man from Home" Made in Five Countries

A record for international motion picture photography is claimed for "The Man from Home," the new George Fitzmaurice production for Paramount Pictures, "shot" in four different countries. The countries included are England, France, Italy and America,—Kokomo, Ind., to be exact.

Producer Fitzmaurice made his headquarters in England where most of the interiors were taken at the London studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Important exteriors were filmed in France and in Sorrento and Capri, Italy. The first and last scenes of "The Man from Home" are laid in Kokomo, Indiana, so when George Fitzmaurice arrived in America enroute to Hollywood he stopped off in Kokomo long enough to get several shots of the railroad station there.

"A Poor Relation" Is Booked for Capitol

Goldwyn's picturization of Edward E. Kidder's famous old comedy, "A Poor Relation," starring Will Rogers, will be next week's attraction at the Capitol theatre, New York. This photoplay is said to be one of Rogers' best as the role of Noah Vale, the inventor, gives him opportunity for his peculiar style of droll, dry humor. "A Poor Relation" served the late Sol Smith Russell as a starring vehicle for many years a quarter of a century ago.

Eight First Nat'l Pictures

Demand for Novel Stories Answered in New Features, is the Claim

AMONG the pictures now in process of production for First National release there are eight which that company believes will be among the box office successes of the near future. They answer the cry for novel stories, states First National. The eight attractions are:

"Suzanna" portrays the romantic lives of the dons and peons of the California of 1853. Directed by F. Richard Jones, supporting Mabel Normand are Winnifred Bryson, Carl Stockdale, Eric Mayne, George Nichols, Evelyn Sherman, Walter McGrail, George Cooper, Leon Barry and Minnie Ha-Ha.

Douglas MacLean has some wild adventures in "Bellboy 13," all of them of a rip-roarious nature, before he marries the actress against whom his uncle-guardian is "dead sot." Douglas calls in the aid of three fire engine companies and organizes a hotel strike of bellboys, chambermaids and night clerks, in order to beat out his guardian. Thomas H. Ince's "The Brotherhood of Hate" is a strong drama of the Kentucky hills, a story of feuds, of primitive loves and elemental hates.

Filming of the Ince comedy, "A Man of Action," by Bradley King, commenced late in February, with James W. Horne as director and Max Dupont as photographer. The settings are both metropolitan and western.

In "The Woman Conquers" Katherine MacDonald has a role which is totally different from any she has ever played before. Her part takes her from a Fifth Avenue setting into the snows of a French-Canadian trading post.

In "Alias Julius Caesar" Charles Ray has the role of a young man about town who likes his golf and who plays it morning, noon and night. The complications which result are of a screamingly funny nature. Casting has just begun on "Someone to Love," an Ince drama of a circut, a Canadian trading post, a girl, an elephant and a musician. It was written by C. Gardner Sullivan. John Griffith Wray will direct the all-star cast now being chosen. Madge Bellamy will have the principal feminine role.

Marshall Neilan's "Her Man" is now being adapted from George Pattulo's Saturday Evening Post story. The story is that of a woman who revolts at never having had a sweetheart like other girls and who starts a strange series of adventures for herself by identifying the body of an unknown stranger as that of her "husband."

First National Changes Four Titles

The titles of four productions to be released soon by Associated First National have been changed, the company announces.

Constance Talmadge's latest comedy, filmed under the working title of "The Divorcee," is to be known as "The Primitive Lover." Thomas H. Ince's "Jim," will be released as "The Man She Married." Allen Holubar's next production has been changed from "The Soul Seeker" to "The Sea Tigress." Katherine MacDonald's recently completed photoplay will be called "Heroes and Husbands."

Statesmen View "Four Horsemen" in Paris

PRESIDENT MILLERAND, Marshal Foch, Premier Poincaire, the American Ambassador Robert T. Herrick, and other distinguished members of the highest social and diplomatic circles of France were present at the Vaudeville Theatre in Paris on March 19, when Metro Pictures Corporation presented the first European showing of Rex Ingram's production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," the screen adaptation of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's famous novel. The presentation was under the direction of Harry Cohen, foreign manager of Metro.

Big Bookings Continue for "Peggy Behave"

"Peggy Behave" the comedy which appeared on the same bill as "Wild Honey" at the Central Theatre Universal's first run house on Broadway keeps rolling up praise. Not only the New York critics who gave Baby Peggy special space praise is but the out of town exhibitors are booking it rapidly—including such houses as the Liberty theatre of Kansas City.

"Peggy Behave" is now playing at the Cameo Theatre, 42nd st., New York City, booked for the Moss Circuit. Out West Sid Grauman has booked it for his Million Dollar house.

"Peggy's Busy Day" Is Star's Latest

Baby Pegg's latest picture is "Pegg's Busy Day." It tells the story of a dentist who is about to close shop on account of lack of patients. The diminutive Peggy as his daughter comes to the rescue just as he is about to commit suicide and with the aid of a restaurant puts people's teeth in a condition where they require the services of a nearest dentist. In this picture Peggy wears a new kind of costume in the shape of a sandwich board.

Paramount's Foreign Dept. Circles Globe : : :

E. E. Shauer, assistant treasurer and director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

ONE of the important factors in the growth of the Paramount organization founded ten years ago by Adolph Zukor has been the foreign department, over which Emil E. Shauer, assistant treasurer of the corporation, has presided since 1915. The foreign department had its inception shortly after the founding of the Famous Players Film Company, in the fall of 1912, when Mr. Zukor made his initial trip to Europe to find a foreign market for his first productions.

The growth of the company's foreign business has kept pace with the rapid development of the Paramount organization, with the result that Paramount has become a household word throughout the civilized world. In the last five years the foreign department has shipped more than 63,000,000 feet of film, or enough to make 12,618 ordinary five reel features. Last year more than 16,500,000 feet of film were delivered to the various foreign branches and distributing agents of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. In view of the demoralization of foreign exchanges and the difficulties which have beset the export business, this is declared to be one of the outstanding achievements of the American film industry since its foundation.

The first of the numerous foreign organizations formed for the distribution of Paramount Pictures abroad was the Famous Players Film Company, Ltd., organized by Mr. Zukor on the occasion of his first visit to Europe. This is the parent European organization of Famous Players-Lasky and is the largest and most important of the Paramount foreign organizations. Through Famous Players Film Company, Ltd., many of the details of Paramount's European business are handled, under the direction of John Cecil Graham, managing director. Later the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., was formed to handle the distribution of Paramount Pictures in the British Isles, also under the direction of Mr. Graham.

As rapidly as consistent with the growth of the company's foreign business Mr. Zukor founded other foreign branches, chief among them being Peliculas d'Luxo da Americal do Sul of Brazil, with two branches, and Feature Films, Ltd., of Sidney, with six branches. This is the Paramount distributing organization for Australia and New Zealand, over which John W. Hicks, Jr., presides as managing director.

Each year has seen a steady growth of the company's foreign business, the consistent high standard of Paramount quality having become recognized wherever the motion picture industry has gained a foothold. In 1921 Paramount's foreign business showed handsome increase over 1920, a remarkable record when one considers the terrific slump which beset all export business. On numerous occasions throughout the year it was necessary to make shipments of from 500,000 to 1,000,000 feet of film to satisfy the demands of the foreign offices and distributing agents. During one week these film shipments reached 1,500,000 feet, an absolute new record.

Last year two new Paramount organizations were formed—Famous Players-Lasky S. R., of Mexico, and Société Anonyme Française des Films Paramount, the latter having charge of Paramount distribution in France, Belgium, Egypt and the French colonies. Branch offices have already been opened in Brussels and Lille and arrangements have been made by Adolphe Osso, the resident manager, to open several new branches during the present year. Offices for the distribution of Paramount Pictures are maintained in other large cities throughout the world by some of the most important and influential independent export and import distributing agencies.

Cosmopolitan Films Ready

"The Good Provider" and "Find the Woman" Booked for Broadway

TWO pictures created by Cosmopolitan Productions will have a Broadway presentation simultaneously on April 9th. On that date "The Good Provider," a Fannie Hurst story featuring Vera Gordon and Dore Davidson, will be seen at the Rivoli and "Find the Woman" with Alma Rubens, an Arthur Somers Roche mystery drama, will open at the Rialto. The following week "The Good Provider" moves to the Rialto. Both are Paramount releases.

"The Good Provider," which bears many points of similarity to "Humoresque," is said by Cosmopolitan to be superior to even that gold medal photoplay of 1920. It was written by the same author, directed by the same director—Frank Borzage, and has three of the noted players of the earlier picture—Miss Gordon, Mr. Davidson and Miriam Battista.

This production, a story of the family life of immigrant folk who find in America the blessed land of opportunity and happiness, is declared to be Frank Borzage's finest picture in the opinion of those who have seen it in the projection room. It is in every way the sort of vehicle to enable the young director to display his humanness, his sympathy and his grasp of character. The scenario, written by John Lynch, is a deft elaboration of Miss Hurst's original story which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

"Find the Woman" with Alma Rubens, is the second Cosmopolitan Production directed by Tom Terriss, the first being "Boomerang Bill." There are many threads to Mr. Roche's story, all of which were skillfully woven together in a scenario prepared by Doty Hobart.

Miss Rubens has excellent support in this production. The cast includes: Eileen Huban, seen on the speaking stage as the star in "Paddy the Next Best Thing" and "The Dark Rosaleen"; George MacQuarrie, Norman Kerry, Arthur Donaldson, Harrison Ford, Henry Sedley, Ethel Duray and Sydney Deane.

New Manager for "Big Four" Denver Office

Announcement is made by Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists Corporation, of the appointment of J. A. Krum, as sales manager of United Artists branch office in Denver. Mr. Krum is well known among the exhibitors in the Denver territory.

"BIG BOY" WILLIAMS IN "BLAZE AWAY"

Exhibitors Herald says:

Handicapped by a name reminiscent of bread-and-butter days, the star of this initial Frederick Herbst Production overcomes it to a large extent as he fights and loves his way through his first vehicle, "Blaze Away." "Big Boy" (Gulnn) Williams has a likable screen personality and he sure can fight.

Good, clear photography, well chosen locations and a logical continuity assist in making a typical Western drama.

There is a really good fight between the foreman and Williams, when Williams disarms the former, throws away his own gun, and is punishing the villain properly when the foreman gets a grub-hoe and attempts to kill him. Williams runs, climbs a high barn, and does some Fairbanks stunts, enticing the foreman to throw the weapon at him, after which he chases him and gives him a good thrashing.

All in all, this is a satisfactory Western, certain to please those who like their screen stuff full of action and simple of story.

A clean Western drama, full of action and thrills. Runs smoothly, is well photographed, and will satisfy lovers of true-to-type Westerns. Williams has pleasing personality and carries a wicked punch.

"The Bigamist" Is Set for April 2 Release

APRIL 2nd has been set as the official release date of "The Bigamist," a drama of domestic life, by R-C Pictures Corporation. "The Bigamist" features Ivy Duke and Guy Newell. A most favorable report has been received by R-C Pictures from the theatres which have given this picture a pre-release showing. Especially noteworthy is the reception of the beautiful star, Ivy Duke. Miss Duke, states R-C Pictures, has been advertised by exhibitors as "the most beautiful woman of the screen."

Another feature of this picture, in addition to the great beauty of Miss Duke, announces R-C Pictures, is the artistic staging of the production. Under the direction of Guy Newell, whose aim was to make each individual scene a beautiful picture in itself, "The Bigamist" ranks with any picture of the year in point of artistic endeavor. The story is described as a powerful drama, and is laid in a wealthy estate in Southern France. Dramatic strength is developed from the story of the woman who finds her happiness suddenly shattered by the knowledge that her supposed husband has a former wife who refuses to divorce him. A stirring climax results, and the ending is happy.

Fox News to Eliminate Competitive Views

All views appertaining to the radiophone, baseball players in practice, or individuals prominent in the public eye who are connected with the sport of baseball are to be barred from the issues of Fox News, according to a recently adopted policy of that news reel enterprise. The reason for the policy, according to word from the Fox headquarters, is that both the radiophone and baseball are proved competitors of the motion-picture theatre and Fox News is determined to eliminate all subjects which might tend in any way to injure the business of exhibitors by encouraging screen patrons to go elsewhere for diversion.

Instructions in this effect have been issued by the Fox News office to all its cameramen in the field.

New Moore Film Named "Reported Missing"

"Reported Missing" has been definitely selected as the title for the big Selznick special starring Owen Moore which has been in the making for a long time and is to be released within the next few weeks.

The picture was staged by Henry Lehrman. The cast includes in addition to the star, Pauline Garon, Nita Naldi, Tom Wilson, Togo Yammamoto, and others.

Kyne Stories for Jack Holt

Lasky Announces New Series: "To Have and to Hold" for Miss Compson

JESSE L. LASKY announced Friday at Hollywood the securing of a series of stories by Peter B. Kyne for Paramount production, starring Jack Holt and directed by Joseph Henabery. The screen versions will be written by Albert Shelby LeVino.

"I was so deeply gratified," said Mr. Lasky, "by the production, 'While Satan Sleeps,' starring Jack Holt and adapted from Mr. Kyne's story, 'The Parson of Panamint,' which I prophesy will be one of the season's hits, that it gives me added satisfaction to be able to announce that we have secured several more of the author's most important stories.

"Among them are 'The Lost Kingdom,' which Mr. Kyne and Mr. LeVino are adapting from the former's Red Book story; "Humanizing Mr. Winsby' and 'The Land Just Over Yonder," which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. Later on another Cappy Ricks story is to be produced."

It was also announced by Mr. Lasky that Mary Johnston's novel, 'To Have and to Hold,' will be George Fitzmaurice's first production on the Coast. Betty Compson is to be featured with a prominent male star. Ouida Bergere is writing the scenario.

A third feature of Mr. Lasky's announcement was to the effect that "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow," a story by Perley Poore Sheehan, author of "The Whispering Chorus" and "If You Believe It, It's So," will be produced with Thomas Meighan as the star. Frank Condon is preparing the adaptation and Alfred Green will direct.

Pathe's April 9th Releases

First Episode of Hutchison's New Serial Heads Short-Subject List

PATHE EXCHANGE, Inc., announces that its collection of short subject features and the serial episodes scheduled for release the week of April 9th will be augmented by "Chained to the Anchor," the first episode of the new Pathe serial, "Go-Get-'Em Hutch," starring Charles Hutchison.

"Shadows and Sunshine" is the latest Pathe Playlet re-edited to three reels from its original feature length form. Baby Marie Osborne is the star and is supported by Lucy Peyton, Daniel Gilfeather, Mollie McConnell and R. Henry Grey. It was made under the direction of Henry King.

"The Golden Pool" is the fifteenth and last episode of the Pathe serial starring Ruth Roland. The chapter, although presenting the climax of the serial, is replete with thrills and there is no let-up in the action until the final few feet of film.

"Next Aisle Over" is the title of the current re-issued one-reel comedy starring Harold Lloyd. "Jump Your Job" is the latest Hal Roach comedy featuring "Snub" Pollard. Pollard is assisted in the offering by Marie Mosquini and the staff of the Hal Roach comedians. "The Rich Cat and the Poor Cat" is the current animated cartoon of the series of "Aesop's Fables."

Pathe Review No. 150 is the third of the anniversary series and presents a number of carefully chosen subjects. "Winter Reflections" shows some beautiful landscapes as seen by the Pathe cameraman; "The Ivory Hunters" presents an exciting day with the elephant hunters in Central Africa; "They Say—" is a tale of two gossips satirized in the new Camera Caricatures; "The First Flash of Life" records the actual beginning of life within a fish egg, photographed by the microscopic camera.

Comedies Only Will Be Made at Roach Plant

DUE to contracts with Pathe for additional comedy output, such as the forthcoming "Snub" Pollard two-reel comedies and a series of two-reel animal and kid comedies now in preparation, the Hal Roach Studios will make no more serials and will concentrate all their activities on comedy production.

As recently announced by Pathe production of the next two Ruth Roland serials has been contracted for with the United Studios, formerly the Brunton Studios. "The Timber Queen," starring Miss Roland, having been completed, work on the first of the two new serials began at the United Studios on April 1st.

Relieved of their serial responsibilities, the Hal Roach Studios—lately much enlarged and provided with new and valuable equipment—are in an excellent position to meet the constantly growing demand for the class of screen comedy distributed by Pathe.

Joseph Striker Engaged by Pyramid Company

Joseph Striker has been signed to play the leading role opposite Martha Mansfield in the Pyramid production, "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge," now in work at the Pyramid studio in Astoria, Long Island.

Mr. Striker's most recent appearances have been with Pearl White in "The Broadway Peacock," with Alice Calhoun in "The Matrimonial Web," and with Mary Carr in a Fox special production as yet unnamed.

Pearl White to Start Serial in July

The Pathe office announces that Pearl White will have completed all her European theatrical engagements in time to start work on her new Pathe serial during July. This announcement was made during the week to refute impressions created in certain quarters that Miss White did not expect to return to this country at least this year in her professional capacity. Her appearance in the Joan of Arc Pageant will practically terminate her appearances abroad, it is stated.

"Experimental Marriage" Is Talmadge Revival

In the series of revivals that Select exchanges are circulating as part of the "Forty from Selznick" program for this season "Experimental Marriage" is set for circulation late in April. Constance Talmadge is the star with Harrison Ford her leading man in this screen version of William J. Hurlbut's stage play, "Saturday to Monday." Robert G. Vignola directed.

FEATURE REVIEWS

"Beauty's Worth"

Paramount—6751 Feet

(Reviewed by J. S. Dickerson)

THIS is the sort of story, whether in fiction or on the screen that apparently never grows old. It is orthodox "Pollyanna" from beginning to end but it will please the average fan even if the plot development is formula and in spite of a rather irritating persistence on the part of the titles to call attention at frequent intervals to the fact that the star is beautiful.

Director Robert Vignola and a noteworthy cast are mainly responsible for the success of this picture; Mr. Vignola for taking a slender plot and stretching it for a multiple reel feature when in reality there was material for only two or three reels; the cast for working honestly and conscientiously with roles that had few possibilities and by sheer force of personality, putting them over.

As for the star she is good, first as the modest Quaker maid in the traditional white and grey costume of the sect and later as a butterfly society girl. Miss Davies looks "cute" in her Quaker costume and when the time comes to blossom forth in glad rags, certainly delivers the goods.

There is one sequence that is a decided novelty. A charades entertainment in three scenes is presented with Miss Davies in the leading role. For this part of the picture, some of the most gorgeous sets and costumes to be shown in any picture of recent release, are presented. The charades really have nothing to do with the story but the scenes have been so artistically done that they hold attention at a time when the story is sagging badly and when the plot threatens to give out from stretching.

Among the supporting players who deserve commendation, are Thomas Jefferson, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Forrest Stanley, June Elvidge and Halam Cooley.

It would seem that the picture might be cut to advantage especially in the matter of excess titles that have a great deal to say about "beauty," "beauty's worth," etc.

However, all in all, looking at the production from the patrons standpoint, it ought to get by as well as anything Miss Davies has ever made.

Story by Sophie Kerr. Scenario by Luther Reed. Directed by Robert G. Vignola. Settings by Joseph Urban. Produced by Cosmopolitan Productions.

The Story—Quaker maid is induced to become society butterfly by society crowd artist, in order to win attentions of childhood sweetheart. The artist designs beautiful gowns for her, stages a charades entertainment in which she carries away the honors, and finally the man she has wanted to marry, proposes. It is then that she decides that she hasn't been in love with him but does care for the artist who has been responsible for her success.

Production Highlights—Charades sequence, one of the most artistic and beautiful novelties ever presented in a picture. Gorgeous gowns of star and supporting players, pretty scenic backgrounds of all exteriors, acting of the all star cast, and general excellence of production.

Classification—Romantic drama showing evolution of Quaker maid into society butterfly founded on a theme of "beauty is skin deep."

Exploitation Angles—Number of players besides Miss Davies who have reputations and friends among the fans. The charade sequence, as an artistic bit. The theme of the story and the general idea of the plot insofar as it pertains to the evolution of the Quaker girl.

Drawing Power—Especially good for the family trade and should have a strong appeal with the matinee crowd with possibilities for the high brows in connection with the charades sequence. Not recommended for theatres where wild melodrama is preferred.

"Gypsy Passion"

Vitagraph—Seven Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE foreign invasion continues apace. Not content to sit idly by and see the Germans swamp the American market, the French are beginning to unload their wares. In "Gypsy Passion" they have a picture which compares quite favorably with the Teutonic subjects. Certainly it contains high entertainment values if for no other reason than it acquaints the American public with a pantomimist of the first order. Mme. Gabrielle Rejane's name may not mean much to the average picturegoer. But when they see her portrayal of Romany Kate, the old gypsy woman, they are quite apt to appreciate her clearly defined and emotional expression. Rejane who died since the making of the production, stood at the top of her profession in France. The spectator will not take issue with this argument once he has seen her excellent interpretation.

If "Gypsy Passion" possessed no other qualities than her portrayal the fact that she embroiders it with her gifted talent gives it a merit certain to be appreciated by those who place art above pretense. Louis Mercanton, the director, has told his story in a straightforward manner and this is rather an amazing feat considering the fact that French studios are lacking in technical equipment. There are episodes which rely a good deal upon the subtitles. This is to be expected. Furthermore the photography and lighting are uneven. In compensation, however, there is incorporated some extremely picturesque backgrounds. And these suggest a convincing element for the duration of the story.

The plot itself is nothing original. But the director builds to a satisfactory climax in terms of adequate suspense. The onlooker really does not guess the denouement. Consequently when it is shown that the hero is a gypsy and free to marry the heroine the episode arrives with snug interest due to the element of surprise. The story is a melodramatic one but Rejane's performance, the colorful background and atmosphere and the romantic phases are sufficient to interest seven picturegoers out of ten.

The Cast

Romany Kate, an old Gypsy.....Madame Rejane
Miarka, her granddaughter.....Desdemona Mazza
Count de la Roque.....Jean Richepin
Ivor, the Count's nephew.....Ivor Novello
Octavia, the Count's sister.....Mme. Montbazon
Monsieur Chenal.....Marcel Numa
Louis.....Charles Vanel

By Jean Richepin. Directed by Louis Mercanton. Produced by Louis Mercanton. Released by Vitagraph.

The Story—Miarka, a young girl, according to her gypsy grandmother, Romany Kate, is to marry the chief of all the gypsies. The heroine, the old woman and the former's tame bear live upon the estate of an elderly man who is kindly disposed toward Romany Kate because of his interest in gypsies. A gardener in love with the girl robs the master and plots successfully in making Kate appear as the guilty one. She is convicted but the bear jumps to the rescue and kills the gardener and he confesses his crime. The old lady discovering that Miarka is in love with the master's nephew takes her away. But it is shown that he is really the king of all the gypsies.

Classification—Romantic melodrama based upon gypsy life with scenes laid in France. Carries some tense moments and picturesque characterization.

Production Highlights—Gifted character study of old gypsy woman by Mme. Gabrielle Rejane who died since completion of picture. She is acknowledged to be the peer of all actresses in France since Rachel. Scene of bear fight with villain. Colorful backgrounds of France. Romantic element.

Exploitation Angles—Since this is a French production the public may feel a trifle wary of its merit. But play up the title and concentrate upon Mme. Rejane's remarkable impersonation. Make mention that it is a colorful production teeming with melodrama and romance. Needs heavy exploitation. Colorful prologue is suggested from title.

Drawing Power—Will go best in select neighborhood houses where art is appreciated. Highbrow audiences will delight in Rejane's acting. Title will attract. Billed as colorful romance will help a great deal.

"Monte Cristo"

Fox—Eleven Reels

(Reviewed by Lee Cabot)

THE best thing that can be done with such a frankly fanciful romance as Alexandre Dumas' famous story, "The Count of Monte Cristo," is to let romance run riot. This the Fox producer has done to a very creditable degree, giving life to the author's imagination with just a little bit to spare. To pick technical flaws or to point out defects in detail is to defeat the purpose of a review of this kind of a production. The fact that Edmond Danton's transition from a clean-cut young man to a bewhiskered old prisoner of six years' incarceration, is not convincing, does not prove the point because in the subsequent action which covers a further period of fourteen years, the spectator is quite accustomed to the gray beard; in other words, it serves the purpose of telling the story.

The presentation of Monte Cristo is one of the rare examples of a famous story improving in its metamorphosis into a screen entertainment. Here a much-read and widely acted work, which has assumed with the years all the dignity and heavy mental weight of a classic, suddenly becomes just a corking good yarn and such a yarn it is as does credit to the producers. The development of the story in the earlier part of the picture is necessarily slow and difficult, but suddenly it begins to move fast and from the imprisonment of young Danton to the end of the picture, Monte Cristo is a capital entertainment, a splendid production and an enthralling romance. The Fox penchant for big scenes is in evidence here and there, resulting in a magnificent ball, an exquisitely arranged dinner, and a court-room scene of unusual proportions. John Gilbert makes a splendid figure as the avenging count, Robert McKim is a notable addition to the excellent cast which includes George Seigmann, Spottiswood Aitken, Herchell Mayall, William V. Mong, and others. It cannot be said that the ladies of the cast shine in proportion to the brilliance of the male actors.

The Story—Edmond Danton is falsely imprisoned in a French island dungeon. After twenty years he makes his escape and following the diagram given him by a fellow prisoner lands on the island of Monte Cristo where he discovers a cave of wealth according to instructions. With his appearance entirely altered by his sufferings he returns to his home city as the count of Monte Cristo, who lavishes favor and entertainment on those about him, but his object is to encompass the utter ruin of those responsible for his imprisonment, and this he does in a series of terrifying incidents.

Classification—A romance of the old school, full of impossible but interest-compelling situations, satisfying drama of the swift-moving variety.

Production Highlights—Fair fidelity to the Dumas story, good judgment in taking advantage of scenic opportunities both in studio and exteriors, better titling than the usual habit of Fox in taking liberties with classics.

Exploitation Angles—The exploitation man who attempts to handle this production without seeing it makes a mistake. No matter how familiar he may be with his story, there are a number of features here for individual handling which become so for purely production reasons. The sinister figure of the count is a revelation which the wide-awake publicity man will readily recognize and in other spots in the story there is good special material. The Monte Cristo trademark of "The World Is Mine" is, of course, applicable to the picture for all routine purposes.

Drawing Power—The fact that we are so sure that the story is impossible places us in an attitude receptive for heavy dramatic sequence. This picture satisfies that innate craving and will therefore win the admiration of both old and young.

"Yellow Men and Gold"

Goldwyn—5800 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles B. Larkin)

ACTION! That's the term that best describes this stirring story of red-blooded men. It's adapted from Gouverneur Morris' tale of adventure, and Irvin V. Willat, who also directed the production, has done a good job in putting it in shape for the screen. The leading roles are taken by Richard Dix and Helene Chadwick, two of the most refreshing stars now appearing before the camera. The work of both in this picture is perhaps the best they have ever done.

The story has been given a novel opening and close. The plot itself is supposed to be the unfolding on the screen of a book which the hero has written. The suspense starts after a short prologue and holds one in a tight grip until the close. It's all about a chase for treasure left on a deserted island by the crew of a Spanish galleon. And right here we want to say that it is some chase. The hero finds the map of the island showing where the gold is buried. The last man to own it lost his life trying to hide it. A gang of "wild men" frisk the hero who, however, is wise enough to make a duplicate and sew the original in the hem of his coat. The villains drug and throw the hero into the ocean, and get a fake copy which shows the island but not the location of the gold. Here romance enters in the person of the attractive Helene, who does an Annette Kellermann off a Chinese tramp ship and rescues Parrish.

In the meantime the villains, not knowing that they have a crude map, have started in search of the yellow metal. The ship Calliope is commanded by Carroll, the chief bad man. Parrish, regaining consciousness, explains things.

The girl had been rescued by the Chinese captain when a baby during a volcano eruption in China. They decide to start after the gold. Then things begin to hum. They keep humming and reach an intensely exciting point when both gangs met at the treasure site. Here a series of real battles is waged, with the hero's forces winning after some scenes that should bring the average audience to the end of the seats.

Mr. Dix and Miss Chadwick take advantage of the many opportunities offered them by the story and they are given admirable support by Rosemary Theby, Henry Burrows, Richard Tucker, Henry J. Hebert, George King and Goro Kino, the Chinese captain.

Scenically, photographically, in direction and backgrounds, the production approaches perfection. While the volcano eruption is a set, it is so well done that it is hardly noticeable. Director Willat has been fortunate in obtaining some fine types for his Chinese and ruffian gangs. "Yellow Men and Gold" comes at a time when something off the beaten path is badly needed. It fills the well-known aching void.

The Cast

Parrish	Richard Dix
Bessie	Helene Chadwick
Carroll	Henry Burrows
Carmen	Rosemary Theby
Lynch	Richard Tucker
Craven	Fred Kohler
Todd	Henry J. Hebert
Cunningham	William Moran
Chang	Goro Kino
Jili	George King
John	William A. Carroll
Abraham	R. T. Frazier

By Gouverneur Morris. Scenario and direction by Irvin V. Willat. Photographed by L. V. Jefferson; Editor, Clayton Hamilton; Art Director, Cedric Gibbons.

The Story—Deals with the chase for a treasure island by two gangs with the villains doing a lot of "dirty work" to defeat the hero in his purpose. The "girl" in the case does some real "he-man" tricks herself in helping the hero. Following a series of gripping scenes and all kinds of battles on the island, there is the inevitable clinch.

Classification — Romantic adventure drama which starts off with a bang and ends with a wallop. Touches on melodramatic ever and anon.

Production Highlights—The attempted drowning of the hero. The eruption of Vesuvius and its attendant destruction. The rescue of the hero by the girl. The plottings of the villains. The realistic battles on the treasure island. The fire aboard the Calliope. The final meeting of Carroll and Carmen in which both give their lives. The fine production given the picture. Attractive photography. Excellent acting.

Exploitation Angles—Two talented and attractive stars whose popularity is increasing. The fame of the author. Good chance for lobby displays of old boxes painted to represent treasure chests. Get some money bags from the bank, and stack them full of paper and pile them in the lobby. Chinese angle and Far East gowns worn by Miss Chadwick might be hint for women's wear window display.

Drawing Power—This should draw in the best houses. Stars are popular. Title will attract. Filled with action.

"The Bearcat"

Universal—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS western relies upon its characterization for its appealing qualities. Since it carries a dominant element of humor in its chief figure and the manner in which it is developed there is no reason why it doesn't offer fully as satisfying entertainment as a western dependent upon unadulterated action. Westerns must carry novelty nowadays to succeed. If an author can get away from the beaten track—well all credit to him. The tale might have been written with Hoot Gibson in mind so well does it fit his personality.

He is a blustering type of cowboy, given to whooping it up on the least occasion. But his bark is worse than his bite. He rides into a border town singing some rollicking ditty anent a bandit cowboy quick on the draw. There is some amusing business as he calls for sarsaparilla in the local made-over saloon. The sheriff eyes him nervously and finally declares that he doesn't look like anyone wanted for crime. The next seen of Hoot he is riding madly to the rescue of the heroine carried away by a runaway team. Which makes things easy for the subsequent romance. The result of his courage gets him a position on her wealthy father's ranch. The remainder of the plot concerns his efforts to clear himself of an unjust charge held against him across the border and to live up to the fighting qualities of the title.

If the first reels are rather quiet in action the finish more than compensates. It is a and at 'em boys from the third reel to the conclusion. The hero shows up the worthlessness of the heroine's lover and everything ends according to Hoyle. The humor marks most every scene, the author relying upon the element to make his story different from the general idea. There is some fast riding and some gun toting. "The Bearcat" is a title which should act like a magnet in leading them to the theatre. The supporting cast adequate.

The Cast

The Singing Kid	Hoot Gibson
Alys May	Lillian Rich
Sheriff Bill Garfield	Charles French
Doc Henderson	Joe Harris
John P. May	A. Hollingsworth
Peter May	Harold Goodwin
Archer Aitken	William Buckley
Mary Lang	Fontaine LaRue
Henry	Jim Alamo
Jake Hensen	J. J. Alle
Cut Face	Stanley Fit
One Eye	Joe DeLacru
Piping Willis	Sam Pol

By F. R. Buckley. Scenario by George Hively. Directed by Edward Sedgwick. Photographed by Charles Kaufman.

The Story—Picturesque type of westerner rides into border town singing bloodthirsty verses calculated to make people think he was a bad man. He makes a friend of the sheriff and falls in love with girl whom he saves from runaway. She is engaged to college youth but westerner triumphs after series of vivid episodes. The hero is given a job on the ranch belonging to the girl's father, a wealthy cattleman.

Classification—Western carrying considerable comedy. Forepart of picture filled with humor and incident. Finishes with customary action.

Production Highlights—Sufficient novelty of characterization to get by as fairly original. The comedy values of story. Gibson's he-man work under fire. Scene when he rescues heroine from runaway.

Exploitation Angles—This is a nifty title for a western and the fact that Gibson is the star will do much to stimulate curiosity to see it among the patrons of this type of drama. The exhibitor should feature the comedy note—or rather the song verses shouted by the hero. A good paper display and typical press notices will help patronage.

Drawing Power—This one will draw wherever westerns are enjoyed. It carries the well-known "kick" at the finish although it proceeds rather slowly at first. Sure to be enjoyed among the boys who like red-blooded dramas. Best for neighborhood houses. Title is a winner.

"Up and Going"

Fox—4350 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WITH "Up and Going" coming right on top of "Sky High" it looks as if Tom Mix is out for a record. The newest release contains all the fine qualities of the last-mentioned with the possible exception of the pictorial values. The Grand Canyon carried "Sky High" to the heights of photographic appeal. However the latest offering releases some remarkable shots which are fully taken advantage of by an apprciative director. And Lynn Reynolds has long been noted for his ability to collect picturesque locations. He also collaborated with the star in fashioning the story.

They have chosen a plot a trifle out of the ordinary. Mix appears as a polo player at his introduction and he shows his versatility in other directions besides his horsemanship and his skill with the trigger finger. He can paddle a birch canoe like a son of Deerfoot. The idea behind the story centers upon an old favorite formula—the Northwest Mounted. There is a sort of prologue to this tale which shows the son of an Englishman arriving in Canada in search of adventure. He joins the Mounted and is assigned to the task of bringing in a couple of whisky smugglers—one of whom is married to his mother. And she is forced to flee with him taking with her the hero's childhood sweetheart because she knows too much about the crime of the smugglers.

The picture offers several thrills which take up man-to-man fights. The battle in the canoes and the struggle in the water is sufficiently picturesque to score everywhere. Of course the offering carries its padded scenes. In reality the climax is a long time coming, but the intervening moments are packed with enough punch to carry over the lapses. The hero eventually meets his mother and falls in love with the girl. The star executes some new stunts and his supporting cast is entirely competent consisting as it does of Carol Holloway, trained in the William Duncan school, William Conklin, and Sydney Jordan, who is rapidly becoming "wallybeery" like in his villainy.

The Cast

The Prologue

Albert Brandon.....Cecil Von Auker
Marie Brandon.....Carol Holloway
Jacquette McNabb.....Helen Field
David Brandon.....Marian Feduche

The Play

David Brandon.....Tom Mix
Jackie McNabb.....Eva Novak

Story by Lynn Reynolds and Tom Mix. Directed by Lynn Reynolds. Photography by Bennie Kline. Produced by Fox.

The Story—Treats of English youth whose father in falling heir to a title is ashamed of his wife. He divorces her and informs the boy that she is dead. The mother returns to her native Canada and marries her ex-husband's old partner. Later the youth comes to Canada and joins the Northwest Mounted where he is instrumental in rescuing his mother and childhood sweetheart from two lawbreakers.

Classification—Story of romance and adventure treating the formula of the Northwest Mounted. Contains melodramatic incident and typical Mix stunts.

Production Highlights—The canoe paddling of Tom Mix. The battle in the canoe and the struggle in the water. The slight variation on an old theme. The picturesque shots. The work of the entire cast.

Exploitation Angles—This one is a fitting companion piece to "Sky High" and should be mentioned as such. Played up for thrills and colorful backgrounds and Tom Mix versatility is certain to appeal. The title is nifty and suggests action and incident. Carol Holloway should be mentioned. Bring forth that star has some new stunts up his sleeve.

Drawing Power—This picture is certain to draw in all neighborhood houses. Is certain to please the dyed-in-the-wool fan who enjoys crisp and snappy westerns. Tom Mix's following will be highly pleased. Best suited for clientele that caters to westerns.

"Seeing's Believing"

Metro—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THEY sort of knock the old adage contained in the title of this picture for a goal. "Seeing's Believing" is a first rate little comedy-drama—one which affords the spectator no little amusement. Certainly he will notice that it carries a plot that can be called slightly different. The twist enters when the heroine, attempting to compromise her sweetheart by employing a couple of crooks to play the badger game, finds herself the innocent victim.

She is an orphan who is discovered by the aforementioned youth in a delicate situation. He believes the worst. In fact he fully believes in the old wheeze as contained in the title. So just to show him that he is wrong she intrigues with her aunt to lead him astray to a country hotel where he is to be victimized by the "badgerites." But they see bigger game in the wealthy girl. What happens? The hero breaks in the door where the frame-up is occurring and rescues her in the customary romantic fashion.

While this picture travels along on this slight thread there is enough compensation in sparkling highlights or interludes to keep one at attention. The suggestion of humor is constantly manifesting itself. In fact the plot carries out the spirit of "give and take" with sufficient gusto to delight most any crowd except those who are hopelessly hard-boiled. Harry Beaumont demonstrates again that his comedy style introduced in "Skinner's Dress Suit" has not forsaken him.

The picture is well mounted and the technical phases are entirely in order. Viola Dana plays the role with her customary vivacity—suggesting throughout the irrepressible hoyden. While you can see the finish arriving far in advance, this is not detrimental to the interest. There is enough sparkle and dash to keep one from yawning. Some hokum appears in the country hotel but it is not overdone. We are of the impression that your crowd will like the feature.

The Cast

Diana Webster.....Viola Dana
Bruce Terring.....Allan Forrest
Aunt Sue.....Gertrude Astor
Jimmy Harrison.....Philo McCullough
Jack Webster.....Harold Goodwin
Henry Scribbins.....Edward Connelly
Martha Scribbins.....Josephine Crowell
Mr. Reed.....Colin Kinney
Mrs. Reed.....Grace Morse
Sheriff.....J. P. Lockney

by Rex Taylor. Scenario by Edith Kennedy. Directed by Harry Beaumont. Photographed by John Arnold. Produced by Metro.

The Story—Treats of wealthy orphan girl who succeeds in discrediting theory that "seeing is believing." Her sweetheart believing her compromised enlists the services of two crooks to play the badger game upon her suspicious admirer. They realize that she is a better victim. But the youth comes to her rescue and appreciates the fact that he has used bad judgment.

Classification—Romantic comedy-drama based upon theory that "seeing is believing" is all wrong. Contains satirical twist as well as some humor and melodrama.

Production Highlights—Sparkling development of story. Scene when heroine finds herself really compromised. Her rescue by hero. Good production.

Exploitation Angles—Title is an old adage which will invite curiosity to see film. Viola Dana has good part. Sparkling comedy for good share of footage. Snappy teaser campaign looks like best angle. Slightly different.

Drawing Power—This picture will get over because it carries substance. Will be liked by most every class of patron but the factory hand who likes 'em rough. Good for all houses, though not quite heavy enough for week run.

"The Bigamist"

R-C Pictures—5400 Feet

(Reviewed by Matthew A. Taylor)

THOSE motion picture fans who see the star of this picture, Ivy Duke, for the first time, have a big surprise in store for them. Miss Duke is beautiful enough to make one think of everything from soft violin solos to a rose garden in full bloom. She is of the statuesque type—tall, blonde, and with perfect features. Incidentally, she is an actress capable of handling the drama which the story affords.

The picture is one of domestic drama which keeps the interest. It manages to present a "triangle" problem which appears for a time absolutely unsolvable. Guy Newell is featured with Miss Duke and gives capable performance.

If Miss Duke is one asset of the production, the artistic settings are certainly another. The action is laid in Southern France, in an estate of great wealth. Every detail is perfect and each scene suggests luxury and affluence. It rivals De Mille in point of artistic endeavor. Exteriors have been found which fit like the proverbial glove into the story. The beauty of the Riviera is faithfully transcribed to the screen.

The story is such that only a negligible amount of action is called for. The wife suddenly learns that her supposed husband has a first wife who refuses to divorce him. To leave him means to leave her children. So she remains in his house. The two quarrel eventually and the husband leaves her. The ending is a reconciliation of the two, largely through the efforts of a young admirer of the heroine. His sacrifice of her is the only suggestion of gloom in the ending. The producers have been sufficiently radical to allow him to live and go away unhappy. The suggestion is, however, that husband and wife see a life of contentment spread out before them. The first wife has died and the bigamist is free to marry the woman he loves.

"The Bigamist" has a theme which can be exploited by the wise exhibitor, and it has satisfying story, a wonderful, lavish production, and a beautiful star to back it up.

The Cast

George Dare.....Guy Newall
Pamela Arnott.....Ivy Duke
Herbert Arnott.....Julian Royce
Richard Caruthers.....A. B. Davenport
Constance Caruthers.....Dorothy Scott
Blanche Maitland.....Edith Elison

Directed by Guy Newall. From the novel by E. E. Mills Young. A George Clark, Inc. Production.

The Story—Herbert and Pamela Arnott are living happily together with their two children on a beautiful estate in Southern France. It is their sixth anniversary. Mrs. Arnott then learns that her husband has a first wife who refuses to divorce him. Arnott, driven to desperation by his deep love for his wife, Pamela, had never told. Pamela, learning the secret, still stays in his house, because of her devotion to her children. Both become cantankerous, and Herbert conducts a mild flirtation with the governess. Apparently they leave home together. But George Dare, an admirer of Pamela, learns that Herbert has not run away with the governess, and that he is seriously ill in a Paris hospital. The real Mrs. Arnott has now died. A marriage ceremony is performed in the hospital and Herbert, repentant, and Pamela are reunited. George Dare makes his sacrifice and disappears.

Classification—A domestic drama, lavishly produced and beautifully staged.

Production Highlights—Every exterior is a delight to the eye. It is new scenery for the American public. Artistic interiors. The remarkable beauty of the star. The cabaret scene. The banquet scene.

Exploitation Angles—The fact that one of the most beautiful English actresses appears in the picture; the name of the author, F. E. Mills Young; catch lines from the title; should be press noticed as a drama of tremendous power, and the question that confronts the woman can be emphasized to advantage.

Drawing Power—Any audience will appreciate the settings and exteriors. The story will satisfy anyone who likes heavy drama.

"The Man with Two Mothers"

Goldwyn—5000 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles B. Larkin)

IN this production Goldwyn has a delightfully entertaining little story which should go well in any class of house. It is an ideal feature for high class neighborhood theatres, because of its appeal to every member of the family. It's another "Mother" story, with Mary Alden of "The Old Nest" fame doing some excellent character work as the Widow O'Neill. Miss Alden's portrayal stands out in every scene in which she appears.

The cast is one of real merit. Cullen Landis, as the "man with two mothers," who leaves Ireland to take over a junk business which he inherits, acts just the way we would expect a youth of this type to act in real life. Landis seems to have the happy faculty of knowing how to be "natural" before the camera. Sylvia Breamer, Hallam Cooley and William Elmer are some of the other well-

Paul Bern has directed Alice Duer Miller's story in fine manner. He has succeeded in putting some real pep in the fight scene between Landis and Elmer in the junk yard office. The opening shots of the old home in Ireland are well done.

The title of the picture comes from the fact that Dennis O'Neill, while living with his mother in Erin, is notified that his uncle in America has made him heir to his fortune and that he is expected to go to New York at once to live with his aunt. He complies with the request and takes his mother with him. His aunt becomes "the second mother."

The picture contains many "situations" that pull at the heart strings. One is where on the arrival of the mother and her boy from Ireland, they are confronted by Mrs. Bryan, who does not want to be reminded of her humble origin, and makes it plain that though Dennis is welcome, his mother must return to Ireland. Dennis, however, reluctant to lose his mother, makes a diplomatic move and gets her off the boat just before it leaves. Then he joins the crowds on the dock and "waves goodbye." He hides her in an apartment next to his own and springs a real surprise on his "other" family when they all sail in on him, believing that he is "leading a double life." It is a delightful moment for the fans when they see the dismay of the villain when a large screen topples over, disclosing the mother.

"The Man With Two Mothers" is finely acted, well photographed and attractively staged. It should be a good box office attraction.

The Cast

Dennis O'Neill.....Cullen Landis
Claire Mordaunt.....Sylvia Breamer
Widow O'Neill.....Mary Alden
Ritchie.....Hallam Cooley
Butler.....Fred Huntly
Mrs. Bryan.....Laura Lavarnie
Tim Donohue.....Monti Collins
Clancy.....William Elmer

By Alice Duer Miller. Directed by Paul Bern. Scenario by Julien Josephson. Photographed by Percy Hilburn. Produced by Goldwyn.

The Story—Treats of the adventures in America of an Irish lad who has inherited a fortune grown from a junk business. Arriving from old Erin, with his real mother, he finds that all is not well with the way the business is being run and proceeds to "clean up" in a most efficient manner. He falls in love with his aunt's niece, who becomes extremely jealous when she finds that he is interested in another woman next door. All ends well, however, when this woman is the old mother who has been hidden away because she did not feel she was welcome in the new surroundings.

Classification—Comedy drama laid in Ireland and America, with real heart interest.

Production Highlights—Realistic fistic battle between hero and villain. The good work of Mary Alden as the star. Cullen Landis is fine in leading male role. Adequate production. Smooth running story.

Exploitation Angles—The fame of the star who appeared in "The Old Nest." Title carries value for a good mystery campaign. Plan special matinee for children in town with two mothers. Might turn lobby into Irish cottage front.

Drawing Power—Should go well in every house regardless of location. Title is unusual. Especially well suited to high-class neighborhood house.

"Hills of Missing Men"

Associated Exhibitors—6500 Feet

(Reviewed by Eugene Carlton)

ALTHOUGH primarily a western picture, a pleasing mixture of mystery is woven into the plot of "Hills of Missing Men," which adds much to the quality of the production. The theme does not deal with the "broncho bustin'" element of the West, but rather with the early governmental problems of the western border, portraying the efforts of a half-mad individual, who lived like a feudal monarch, to become a ruler of Lower California. There also is a love story, hinging around the activities of a government agent who barely escapes joining the "hills of missing men," who have gone before him.

At several stages the action narrowly escapes the bounds of exaggeration, but this phase is so handled, through some good directing, to increase rather than decrease the interest of an average audience. A Chinese villain, a pretty girl who falls into unscrupulous hands, a notorious bandit who in reality is a government spy, and a good supporting cast all combine to stamp the picture as one worthy of elevation above the usual western. The work of J. P. McGowan, daring several feats that could end disastrously, calls for commendation, while the settings are of the type that put the "west" in western.

The Cast

The Dragon.....J. P. McGowan
Crando.....Jean Perry
Li Fung.....James Wang
Bandini.....Charles Brindley
Buck Allis.....Andrew Waldron
Hilma Allis.....Florence Gilbert
Amy Allis.....Helen Holmes

Produced by Playgoers Pictures. Story by John B. Clymer. Photographed by Ben Bail. Directed by J. P. McGowan.

The Story—Half-crazed man living in castle believes he is destined to become emperor of Lower California, but he delays violent action on part of his confederates because he loves pretty girl. A supposed bandit joins his ranks, it later developing that bandit is a government spy, whom half-crazed man tries to kill by giving him poison cigarette, but pretty girl revives spy. Battle with government troops follows and spy finds pretty girl in castle, where she has been forcibly taken, and the realization that they love each other dawns upon them, while half-crazed man ends life with own poison cigarettes.

Classification—Sixty per cent western, thirty per cent mystery and ten per cent love story, with a liberal sprinkling of human interest element.

Production Highlights—Flying leap of hero across chasm; battle between government troops and outlaw band and cavalry troop's ride down a mountain side.

Exploitation—Good opportunity for "missing man" advertising campaign. Show pictures of missing men. Have one disappear each day and then play up the fact that they have all been found in "The Hills of Missing Men."

Drawing Power—Should go best in neighborhood houses of city or rural theatres. Needs considerable advertising and exploitation. Probably would make money in larger houses, but is best adapted to smaller ones.

"The Heart Specialist"

Realart-Paramount—4768 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE producers have capitalized on the sob-sister columns of the family newspapers to find a medium for Mary Miles Minter. While it carries its improbabilities the story is a pleasing yarn which carries interest chiefly because it keeps going with plenty of vitality. The romantic element is ever dominant as its title would indicate and is much more ideal for the star's expression than her recent vehicle written around the Mennonites.

"The Heart Specialist" is a bright little tale filled with happy touches. It doesn't pretend to solve any question but goes along merrily registering romance in its unpretentious way. There is nothing left out to supply a melodramatic dressing. Life in a harem and in the newspaper office are all clearly focused. There is even a tragic note suggested when a physician plots to do away with a wounded soldier in order to gain his property. The star plays the role of the editor of a column in a New York paper—a column devoted to paragraphs concerning tragedies and fancies of romance. You'll find a similar column in the evening paper on the magazine or woman's page. When it is argued that the column is worthless because it is suggested that romance is dead, the heroine wagers that she can find the heart stuff within a certain distance of the office. So she arrives in a small town selected at random where she is mistaken for a distant cousin of a wealthy returned soldier. She finds the moment opportune to indulge in romantic fancy.

The following scenes show the scheming doctor intent on killing the youth and the girl clears up the complications in her best romantic manner. "The Heart Specialist" is a first rate comedy most of the way. It isn't heavy or weighted down with too much hokum. What appears is in good order to bring humor or adventure. Because of its dominant note of romance and its melodramatic intrigue the picture is sure of its patronage in the neighborhood houses.

The Cast

Rosalie Beckwith.....Mary Miles Minter
Bob Straton.....Allen Forrest
Winston Gates.....Roy Atwell
City Editor.....Jack Matheis
Dr. Thomas Fitch.....Noah Beery
Fernald.....James Neill
Grace Fitch.....Carmen Phillips

By Mary Morrison. Scenario by Harvey Thew. Directed by Frank Urson. Photographed by Allen Davey. Produced by Realart.

The Story—Treats of editor of newspaper column devoted to romance. When it is argued that the column doesn't pay the charming editor wagers that she can find adventure within a certain distance of office. She encounters a deal of intrigue, but wins when she discovers a romance of her own.

Classification—Romantic comedy-drama featuring editor of sob-sister column devoted to heart talk. Plenty of intrigue and adventure and romantic element is ever dominant.

Production Highlights—The sparkling quality of story which breezes along with plenty of dash and adventure. Miss Minter's adaptability to role. The scene when she wagers that she can discover romance. The melo-dramatic finish. The good taste of the production.

Exploitation Angles—Good for a smart teaser campaign. Press notices should be written to capitalize sob-sister column. Played up for its novelty is certain to arouse curiosity. Miss Minter is pleasing in role. Title is nifty and should win over the younger set.

Drawing Power—Where there is a daily change of program this picture will draw. Good for select neighborhood house which caters to flapper set or college and boarding school girls. Romantic angle will please. Good for all small towns and smaller cities, and likely to please the hard-boiled in the large towns.

ADVANCE REVIEW

"Spooks"

Mermaid Comedy—Two Reels—Released Through Educational Exchanges, Inc.

A HIGH standard has been set in this two-reeler, and rich and plentiful gags make it really funnier than even its preceding Mermaids. There has been no stinting in the production. The latter part of the reel is laid in a large set with a lot of wax figures serving as props.

Lige Conley is the comedian. The opening is conventional, but a unique touch is presented in showing the Smith Brothers, purveyors of the famous cough drops, as automobile insurers. But once the action goes to the Chamber of Horrors of the Wax Works, the real fun begins. This is probably a new locale for comedy. And the possibilities, as can be easily imagined, are almost unlimited. Especially so when a timid negro breaks in and tries to rob the place. Conley is spending a nervous night there to win a bet. Wax hold-up men point revolvers out of dark corners, and wax executioners hold heavy swords over the heads of the poor humans. Then there is a wax set of "Inferno." The negro, falling suddenly into it, is certain that he is in the next world. He accidentally starts a fire and the wax devil melts sufficiently to tumble down upon him. Other gags just as good, follow in rapid succession.

"Spooks" is a fine Mermaid, and a rattling good slapstick.—Matthew A. Taylor.

ITEMS OF THE EXCHANGES AND THEATRES

CANADA

Laval Photoplays, Limited, has been organized with headquarters at Montreal, Quebec, by L. Ernest Ouimet, president and managing director of Specialty Film Import, Limited, Canadian distributor for Pathe, with a capital stock of $300,000 for the purpose of producing features. The organization of the new company followed the recent visit of Mr. Ouimet to California, and announcement is made that Laval Photoplays has a large studio at Los Angeles at its disposal. Mr. Ouimet is one of the first exhibitors in Canada and is also a pioneer of the film exchange business in the Dominion having started in this business more than 15 years ago.

Directors of Laval Photoplays include the following: L. E. Ouimet, president; Arthur Gaboury, superintendent of the Montreal Railway Company; Ludger Gravell, wholesale merchant and former president of the Montreal chamber of commerce; Frank Callaghan, a local lawyer, and Fred Poirier, a French-Canadian editor of Montreal.

Manager Val Bureau of the Francais theatre, Ottawa, conducted an "All-Serial Week" at this theatre starting March 27 that aroused wide interest. The whole 18 episodes of "The Secret Four," starring Eddie Polo, were screened in two-day instalments, six chapters being shown continuously each day with changes in the story on Wednesday and Friday. Violet MacMillan, star of "The Mystery Mind," also made personal appearances at the Francais on Friday, March 31.

Mary Miles Minter is as popular as ever in Ottawa, Ontario, theatres. During the week of March 27, Miss Minter was seen as the star at two different local theatres, "Moonlight and Honeysuckle" being presented at the Centre theatre and "Tillie" at the Regent theatre, both being first-run downtown theatres.

CLEVELAND

Lakewood, Ohio, a fashionable residence suburb of Cleveland, has just formed a Cinema Club to be known as the Lakewood Cinema Club. It is an auxiliary of the Cleveland Cinema Club, and will endeavor to supervise pictures in Lakewood. The Cleveland Cinema Club has been in existence for more than six years. It claims to be a constructive organization, offering the motion picture theatres co-operation, and not criticism. The object of the club, according to Mrs Elmer G. Derr, president of the club, is to boost the good picture—not to knock the poor pictures. The Lakewood Club will follow along identical lines.

George Dumond, managing director of Loew's State theatre, keeps abreast of local enthusiasms. Within the past ten days, Cleveland has gone "radio" mad. Everybody has a radio outfit, is collecting a radio outfit, or is trying to get the wherewithall to procure such an outfit. Dumond also has a radio outfit. It's in the lobby of the State theatre. And every evening at 7.30, the State theatre instrument picks up whatever is of interest. Of course, the State lobby is jammed packed full every evening to hear the radio reports. And after the lobby entertainment, they keep right on going in the same direction in which they were headed, and see the State theatre program.

George Erdmann is back in Cleveland after an absence of six months. Erdmann was Cleveland branch manager for Associated Producers until the A. P.-First National amalgamation. He was then transferred to Indianapolis to look after A. P. pictures in the Indianapolis First National office. Last Tuesday he returned to Cleveland as local manager for Associated Producers' output. He is to be found in the Cleveland First National offices, seventh floor of the Film Building.

Charles W. Perry, president of the Cleveland F. I. L. M. Club, gave a talk before the members of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce last week, at which he set forth how the present censorship system clogs the wheels of the motion picture industry. The Cleveland Chamber of Commerce is making an exhaustive study of motion picture censorship, and is inviting speakers to set forth arguments both for and against the practice.

INDIANAPOLIS

Officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana who have made arrangements to attend the Washington convention of the national organization May 8 to 12 are E. H. Bingham, Indiana member of the national executive committee; G. G. Schmidt, state president; Charles Miller of New Albany, first vice-president; Joseph Bommersheim, Bluffton, second vice-president; C. R. Andrews of Muncie, secretary and Frank G. Heller of Kokomo, treasurer. Harry Cohen, owner of the Colonial, Indianapolis, with Mr. Bingham, also will attend. Indiana headquarters will be at the Hotel Washington.

President Schmidt of the Indiana exhibitors, last week formally announced his candidacy for the Republican nomination for State Senator from Marion county. He was a city councilman for four years ending January 2 of this year. The primary election will be held May 2.

The newly formed Laporte Theatre Company of Laporte, Indiana, has announced it will break ground in the next thirty days for a theatre costing $400,000 or $500,000. A. Sommerfield is president, Norman Wolfe, vice-president and J. Levine, secretary-treasurer.

SAN DIEGO

S. S. Blachly has taken over the management of the Colonial theatre in this city, succeeding H. H. Homer, who has located in Los Angeles. Mr. Blachly has long been connected with the motion picture business, and during the fourteen years that he has been on the Pacific coast he has owned or operated a number of houses, including the Laughlin in Long Branch.

Manager Russell Rogers of the Plaza theatre found it necessary to bring back for another showing "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," and the following week he again presented "The Sailor Made Man," which had proved such a popular feature on its first showing at his house, a month before. With the Harold Lloyd picture was also shown "The Idle Rich," featuring Bert Lytell.

C. E. Murray, house manager of the Vista theatre at East San Diego, one of the string of Bush theatres, has started the publication of a weekly paper in that city to be called The News. Mr. Murray has had considerable experience along editorial lines. He will retain his position at the Vista.

As an added feature for its program of the week of March 19, the Superba presented Rex, the mental wizard, and his company in an oriental entertainment. "Two Kinds of Women" was the film offered.

Stout & Weir, managers of the Rialto, also put on a special feature in connection with the showing of "Wild Honey," when they offered Harry Becker, a popular vocalist, at their 7 and 9 o'clock shows. The Rialto is providing its patrons with first run feature films at its regular prices, which are 20 cents for matinees and 30 cents for evenings, with loge seats at 40 and 50 cents respectively, tax included.

WESTERN NEW YORK

Frank Davidson, chief operator at the Mark-Strand, Buffalo for the past nine years, has resigned. He will give his full time to the management of the Buffalo branch of the Independent Movie Supply Company. He has been succeeded at the Strand by Fred Vester.

The Elmwood, Buffalo, has reduced prices. Bruce Fowler, manager, in making the announcement, says: "The trend of things has been downward, and the management is willing and anxious to do its part to bring about the adjustment which will bring this old world back to earth, so to speak, and traveling on an even keel; hence the reduction in prices." The Elmwood is one of the finest neighborhood theatres in the city.

Art Skinner, manager of the Victoria, Buffalo, gave over the theatre to the Lafayette high school, Friday, April 7. He also procured film for the show, which was for the benefit of the school athletic association.

East Aurora, N. Y., the home of the Roycrofters, has voted in favor of Sunday moving pictures. "Shall moving pictures be allowed on Sunday as a commercial enterprise," was the question voted upon at the recent town election. "Yes," said 456; "No," said 308.

The Loew State in Buffalo is now showing a separate bill on Sunday. Features and acts are being booked for the one day only. The policy opened Sunday, March 26. The new Lafayette Square adopted the same policy several weeks ago.

D. H. Finke of the Bellevue, Niagara Falls, put over a fine exploitation campaign on "Peacock Alley," recently, the feature of which were page ads. in the newspapers in the form of tie-ups with local merchants.

Max Levine, manager of the Masque theatre in Buffalo is mourning for the loss of his father, who died following an extended illness.

John Lowell, star of "Ten Nights in a Barroom," who appeared at the Strand during the showing of the picture, also visited the Victoria one evening and attracted a big audience.. Manager A. L. Skinner has booked the Arrow production.

ST. LOUIS

The managers of the motion picture, vaudeville and dramatic theatres have dropped their demands for new working agreement with the Musicians' Union, permitting great liberty in employing players, provided the musicians will submit to a satisfactory wage reduction. Recently the managements asked a cut of 30 per cent in wages but the Musicians' Mutual Benefit Association turned the proposition down. There are about 500 musicians employed by local theatres. The present contract expires April 30.

Albert Luther Moody, proprietor of the Empress theatre, Springfield, Mo., has filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy with the United States District Court. He lists assets of $23,435 and liabilities of $20,465.

Fred Robinson, owner of the Irma and Wellston theatres, Wellston, Mo., is a candidate for alderman of the third ward in University City. He has no opposition. B. E. Boswell, owner of the Independent Producers Exchange here, is an unopposed candidate for the newly organized City Plan Commission of University City.

The Associated Retailers of St. Louis and the St. Louis Publicity and Conventions Bureau have gone on record as opposed to the recently opened Union Station Moving Picture theatre. They claim that the movies in the railroad station will prevent visitors from inspecting the points of interest in the city or patronizing the local stores. The theatre is controlled by O. J. Grace and W. J. Miller.

THE CAROLINAS

Federated Exchanges, Inc., have opened an office in Charlotte, N. C., to handle the distribution of their product in the Carolinas.

The management of the Reliance theatre, Orangeburg, S. C., has been changed. J. H. Zeigler, who has managed the theatre for the past six years, has been succeeded by James Izlar Sims, the president. Mr. Sims will hereafter manage the show. One of the first things Mr. Sims is going to do is to attempt to get the ladies' clubs, etc., behind the shows, and cooperate in every way with the civic bodies of Orangeburg.

The S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., have purchased the Broadway theatre in Durham, N. C., and are now operating same as one of their chain in North Carolina.

Cork Carpet Satisfactory for the Small Motion Picture Theatre

Has Many Characteristics Necessary for Desirable Floor Covering

It is always a problem for the smaller motion picture theatre to select a suitable floor covering. Various materials are criticized for one or more of their characteristics, such as the expenditure necessary for the initial installation and renewal or the difficulty in keeping clean. Again, a floor or floor covering may prove undesirable in that the noise caused by the people walking over it proves distracting to the audience. However, Cork Carpet is now being used by many exhibitors who feel that this flooring, thru its resilience, durability and moderate cost, best fulfills the requirements for the theatre.

Why Cork Carpet?

Cork Carpet affords a floor covering that is both economical and durable. It is not only considerably lower in cost, but also a much simpler proposition to keep clean than many other floor coverings. Cork Carpet tends to give a small theatre the same luxurious feeling under foot that is found in the larger playhouses, and will deaden the sound of traffic. In motion picture theatres, unlike ordinary playhouses, there is a constant coming and going of the audience. The smaller the theatre the more noticeable is this disturbance. For this reason the resiliency and sound-deadening qualities of Cork Carpet are highly desirable.

Another feature possessed by Cork Carpet in a greater degree than any other floor covering is its "non-skid" quality in wet weather. In motion picture houses there is often a decided pitch to the floor, which becomes dangerous when water is tracked in. So a floor covering that minimizes the chances of slipping, in addition to its other features, is a very desirable asset.

The whole auditorium of a theatre may often be profitably covered with Cork Carpet, but if this is not advisable, the use of this resilient material on just the aisles and back areas will be found to do away with an appreciable amount of noise.

Cork Carpet—What It Is

Cork Carpet, as its name suggests, is a floor covering similar to linoleum. However, it is made by a different process of manufacture, and of cork particles that are not ground so finely nor so tightly compressed. It is, therefore, thicker and softer than linoleum—more resilient and comfortable under foot. It gives the luxurious feeling and appearance of woven carpet, but costs considerably less, and is much more durable.

Thorough Investigation Necessary

We are here presenting a descriptive and educational article on a particular type of floor covering with the idea of so informing the exhibitor that he will be inclined to thoroughly investigate the merits of various floor coverings when confronted with the problem of the selection of same. The material contained in this article was furnished by those directly connected with its manufacture. Such recommendations therefore that are herein contained regarding the laying and care of cork carpet will probably prove the best practice.

In these days when every exhibitor is economizing to the utmost degree it naturally follows that he should be interested in any material for his theatre equipment that would tend to cut down his overhead expense. Expensive floor covering in the smaller houses at times proves a luxury rather than a need. Nevertheless it does not necessarily follow that the owner of a small house should select the material proving most economical simply from a matter of initial cost and upkeep, as the other considerations, such as appearance, etc., should always be taken into account. The exhibitor must use his own discretion in judging the importance of the merits of various materials.

Attractive in Appearance

Cork Carpet comes in attractive shades of brown, green and terra cotta—six in all—with polished or dull surface. Some one of these colors will be found to harmonize with almost any scheme of theatre decoration. The brown, however, is most often selected, probably because its neutral tones always look well, and also because it shows footprints less than the others.

Easy to Clean

Cook Carpet on a theatre floor means a saving in cleaning costs. A quick sweeping or mopping will clean it of dust and dirt in a very few minutes. This kind of cleaning saves time and labor, and consequently lessens cleaning costs.

Economical

It costs considerably less to install Cork Carpet than hardwood, tile or a composition flooring. In fact, initial cost, low maintenance expense, and extreme durability all considered, Cork Carpet is a remarkably economical floor covering.

Where It Can Be Used

A distinctive feature of Cork Carpet is the fact that it may be used throughout the entire theatre. Its practical, attractive and sound-deadening qualities make it equally appropriate for lobby, foyer, auditorium, rest rooms and offices.

By having Cork Carpet installed on all the floors throughout a theatre, the annoyance of having two or three different floor coverings, each requiring different care and attention, is abolished. One floor covering and one cleaning system saves time, labor and money.

How to Buy Cork Carpet

The best grades of Cork Carpet are about one-quarter of an inch thick. Cork Carpet of this weight will give good service. It is possible to obtain Cork Carpet that is guaranteed by the manufacturer to give satisfaction, and though these guaranteed goods may cost a little more, they are obviously to be preferred.

When arranging for bids on Cork Carpet for a theatre, it is wise to have the estimates submitted in either a lump sum for the entire floor, of "per square yard of floor area covered." Under this arrangement the contractor will cut waste to a minimum.

Must Be Properly Laid

A good, responsible contractor should be employed who will lay the Cork Carpet properly. If he knows his work and uses the best material he should be perfectly willing and able to guarantee a satisfactory job.

Each length of the material should be

Exterior of the Lorain-Fulton theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, which has recently been erected at the cost of 300,000 dollars. This house presents a very attractive appearance

Entire Seating Capacity, 1500, of the Lorain-Fulton on One Floor

The Lorain-Fulton theatre, Cleveland's newest motion picture theatre recently erected at a cost of $300,000 by Thomas J. and John M. Urbansky, at the intersection of Lorain and Fulton Roads, is unique in many ways. Not only has the house every modern convenience and appliance for operating and rendering service, but it stands alone as a memorial. The Lorain-Fulton theatre was erected as a permanent memorial to Thomas Urbansky, father of Thomas J. and John M. Urbansky was not only a prominent leather merchant of Cleveland, but he was also a public spirited man, and believed that the motion picture theatre was the greatest and most far-reaching influence of the present day.

From the art stone exterior of the two-story building, right through to the last electric switch button, the Lorain-Fulton theatre spells service. The outside of the building is highly ornamental, with wrought iron railings around the roof of the second story, and elegant in appearance, to accord with the surroundings. The marquis is wide, and at either end is equipped with illuminating light signs announcing the attractions of the day. Above the marquis, and extending to the roof of the building is a huge electric sign with the name Lorain-Fulton in bright lights.

The lobby of the theatre is of white Italian Terazzo. Its Italian marble side walls with rose tinted ceiling afford a striking contrast to the black and gold fixtures. Large panels are artistically placed in the side walls to admit the placing of posters and advance notices. These posters are encased in glass doors.

Six sets of doors finished in silver oak open into the foyer. Here the color scheme of the lobby is amplified. Delicate rose shade and cream white are blended to the best advantage. Heavy rose-colored carpets cover the floor, of a deeper shade than that used for upholstering and interior decoration.

The Auditorium offers an unbroken vista. There are no posts to obstruct the view from any angle. Every one of the fifteen hundred seats in the Lorain-Fulton offers clear vision of the screen. The floor of the theatre proper is made of cement. The aisles alone are heavily carpeted. An arched ceiling over the auditorium also carries out the rose color scheme which is first introduced in the lobby.

Elaborately designed grilles cover the air ducts. They are tinted in cream and accentuated with bas reliefs of classical figures done in cream with a pale blue background.

The lighting fixtures all through the building are distinctly different from what is usually shown in theatres. They are candle stick lighting fixtures mounted on wrought iron brackets in black and gold, which contrast well with the delicate walls. The overhead fixtures are also done in black and gold, with stained glass of deep purple and reds for the subdued lighting effects.

The Lorain-Fulton theatre is equipped with a complete stage measuring 40 ft. x 18 ft. A heavy velvet curtain, operated automatically, hangs in front of the screen.

In addition, there are ample lounging room on the main floor, luxuriously appointed. Th furniture and decorations of the Lorain-Fulto theatre follows the Adams period of desig Panels, grilles, lighting fixtures were all de signed to conform with this period.

The Urbanskys have provided real music fo their patrons, also following the thought o their father, who believed that the Motion Pic ture Art was on a par with the other fine arts The Lorain-Fulton theatre is provided with th largest three manual and echo organ in Cleve land. In addition there is a twelve-piece or chestra, under the direction of Professor Pau Lampkovitz, a graduate from the Warsaw Con servatory of Music.

In addition to the beauties and comfort which are visable to the patrons, great care ha been spent in providing the comforts which ar not seen. To this end, the Vento Radiatio method of ventilation has been installed by Her bert H. Holmes & Co. of Cleveland. Fresh ai is constantly supplied by the use of a gian rotary noiseless fan. A Johnson service tempera ture and ventilating system automatically regu lates both the heating and ventilating. Th modulated steam system with low pressur steam of 2½ to 3 pounds from Peerless dow draft double grated smokeless boilers, with 9, 800-foot capacity, insures comfort in the mos extreme weather.

The second floor of the building is devote to a dance hall.

The Lorain-Fulton theatre has one of th finest projection rooms in Cleveland, including the recent million dollar houses which were erected here last year. Every modern convenience for securing perfect projection and for providing the operators with comfort and consideration has been provided. Two new Motiograph de Luxe projection machines, made by the Enterprise Optical Company of Chicago, were installed by the Oliver Motion Picture Supply Company of Cleveland. This is the first theatre in Cleveland to use the G-E high intensity arc lamps for supplying illumination for the screen. This equipment, used in connection with the special Diamond Bead Screen, made by the Diamond Screen Products Co. of Cleveland, and installed by the Oliver Motion Picture Supply Co., gives sufficient light so that all details of the picture stand out clearly from the rear seats, 175 feet away, without eye strain. There is a 175-foot throw, projecting a picture 15 x 20 feet. The projection room is further equipped with motor re-winds, special film cabinets and other modern fireproof conveniences. In keeping with the general high class type of installation, the projection room also has a complete speedometer equipment, by which the orchestra leader is advised at all times of the speed at which the machines are operated. Hot and cold water lavatory conveniences adjoin the projection room. In addition to the machines, the projectionist also operates the velour curtain by an electrical contrivance placed near the projection machine. A fire-proof curtain that hangs in back of the bead screen is also manipulated from the projection room and insures added protection against fire. A complete dimmer system which controls all the lights in the house are also manipulated by the operator. This is done to insure proper lighting effects for the pictures.

One of the most unusual features of the new Lorain-Fulton theatre is a generator room, separate and distinct from the operating room. This generator room has one 240 ampere G-E motor generator. This is to provide plenty of light for both screen and house illumination. A 120 ampere G-E motor generator was also installed as an auxiliary device. The machine is to be used only in case of emergency. Having the generator room apart from the projection room also eliminates all possibility of generator noises reaching the auditorium.

The theatre was designed and executed by Henry Hradilek, architect, of Cleveland. Charles Peterson Company of Cleveland were the general contractors. Painting and decorating was done by Zema & Wienbroer. Bagnall Taylor and Company supplied the ornamental plastering. T. H. Brooks and Company did the structural and ornamental steel work. The Electric Construction and Sales Company put in the electrical equipment and fixtures.

The Lorain-Fulton theatre has adopted a first-run policy, with the popular admission price 25c. The opening attraction was "What I Men Want?" No expense has been spared give the patrons of the West Side the highe class entertainment, with the best surroundin possible.—E. Loeb.

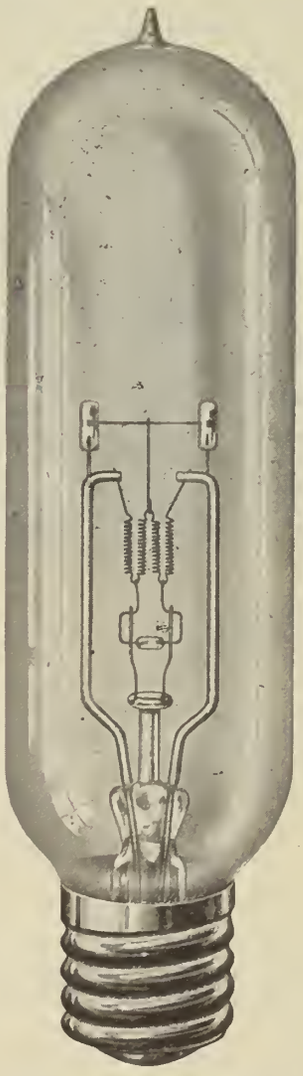
New National MAZDA Motion Picture Lamp

The perfection of the new National MAZDA Motion Picture lamp and its practical application to projection service is the result of several years of exhaustive research and development work in the MAZDA lamp laboratories. The satisfactory performance of this lamp has been proved by more than one thousand very successful theatre installations.



The 900-watt, 30 ampere National MAZDA Motion Picture lamp. The 600-watt, 20 ampere lamp is similar in construction, and is recommended for very small theatres, churches, lodges, schools, etc.

Simplicity, efficiency, convenience and economy —advantages that made the MAZDA lamp the one illuminant in the usual classes of service—are equally important in the highly specialized field of light projection. They are attributes of the new National MAZDA Motion Picture lamp.

This lamp is the last word in motion picture projection. It projects a picture of correct tone effects with high lights and shadows as they should be. It projects a picture without any annoying flicker, for the light source is unvarying. It projects a picture that may be restfully enjoyed even by the patrons in the front seats.

Because the new National MAZDA Motion Picture lamp gives off no obnoxious fumes and gases, it has made a hit with the projectionists. And, because this lamp requires no adjustments after the initial setting, the projectionist has more time to watch the picture on the screen to make better the attraction for which people pay the admission price.

More than one thousand exhibitors have used this lamp in actual theatre installations. These exhibitors endorse the lamp on two counts—it makes possible a saving in current consumption of from one-third to two-thirds, and it projects a better picture. It sends patrons away from a theatre with the desire to "come again and come often."

The 900-watt National MAZDA Motion Picture lamp can be used successfully with proper incandescent lamp projection equipment in theatres having main floor seating capacities up to 1,000, or picture widths up to 16 feet, or throws not exceeding 120 feet. It gives better results than an alternating current arc, and is the equal of the direct current arc up to 50 amperes. It is rated at 30 amperes, 28-32 volts. Its rated life is 100 hours. List price $6.75.

You, Mr. Theatre Owner, want to increase your attendance and reduce your operating cost—to increase your net profits. The new National MAZDA Motion Picture lamp will enable you to do just that. Write today for more complete information and for recommendations for installation in your theatre. Good Pictures on Alternating Current With the New G-E Incandescent Lamp Projector

The General Electric Company's new Incandescent Lamp Projector gives constant, even and steady illumination for motion pictures. It can be used successfully in theatres having a main floor seating capacity up to 1000, at a throw not exceeding 120 feet and with a picture not over 16 feet wide. It gives better results than an a. c. arc and is the equal of the d. c. arc up to 50 amperes.

It has other important advantages:

Adaptability: The G-E Incandescent Lamp Projector can be attached to any projection machine made in the United States.

Economy: The 900-watt Mazda lamp and regulator consume but 1 kw. an hour as against 4 kw. an hour consumed by a 50 ampere d. c. arc. The cost of lamp renewals does not exceed the cost of carbons for the arc and there is a further saving in the absence of any carbon dust to injure the delicate moving parts of the projection machine.

Simplicity: The Incandescent Lamp Projector requires no adjustments while operating.

Healthfulness: Being hermetically sealed the Mazda lamp gives off no fumes nor dust to contaminate the atmosphere of the projection room.

President 306 Starts Service Station

Welcome news to projectionists of greater New York and in fact the members of the craft in the surrounding territory is the announcement of the opening of a service station for all makes of projection machines by Samuel Kaplan, president of Moving Picture Machine Operators' Local 306, and for many years chief inspector for the Precision Machine Company.

The new service station is conveniently located on the second floor of 729 Seventh Avenue, in the equipment center maintained by B. F. Porter, and it is expected will fill a long felt want by operators in this territory.

Kaplan has recognized ability in this line of work and it is said that the opening of this service station will give the exhibitors and projectionists a place for expert workmanship.

Aside from the business aspects of Kaplan's new service station there is a new thought in better projection in its opening. The popular president of Local 306 has been constantly striving to instill in the minds of the men a sense of pride in the important function they perform for exhibitors. It is to further this plan that Kaplan first entertained the idea of an up-to-date service station where the men could visit to talk over their machines and the problems encountered. A complete stock of parts is carried in stock, as well as loan heads, and a big feature of the service is to be thoroughness and speed in repairs.

High Class Theatre in Moderate Neighborhood Proving Success

The Republic theatre, Grand and Keap Streets, Brooklyn, N. Y., one of the newest, largest and finest houses in greater New York, is located in a neighborhood which ordinarily would be provided with a small sized house giving a mediocre performance in the shortest possible time. The owners of the Republic theatre decided that the plan of packing audiences into a theatre, rushing them through a performance and then rushing them out again is hard on the audience and hard on the management. It is unquestionably hard on projectionists, projectors and films.

The Republic theatre, seating over thirty-five hundred, is not on a main thoroughfare, no transit lines pass the doors and is surrounded by moderately priced flats occupied by people who work in the near-by factories and the docks, which are a short distance away. The people who attend the Republic are not, as a rule, automobile owners, and this theatre almost entirely depends upon people who live within a short walking distance. When making their plans the principal owners, Messrs. William and Frederick Small, said: "We will build a fine, big, roomy house which will compare favorably with anything in the city. We will give a good vaudeville show and provide the best photoplays and good projection. In this way we will get all the people in our locality, and have them come back often." These plans have been carried out to the letter, and the Republic has been highly successful since the night it opened last year. This theatre is equipped with a Raven Halftone screen, 14 x 16, and has a throw of 130 feet.

The manner in which an owner builds a projection room is a fairly good way to gauge what he intends giving his audience. If he gives his projectionist good working conditions and provides the best possible equipment, it is fairly good evidence that he wants his employees happy and wants his audiences kept the same way. The projection room of the Republic is in keeping with the theatre as a whole. It measures 12 x 16 feet, is well lighted, well ventilated and properly located with a properly supplied washroom adjoining, and the G. E. generator set safely located in another room close by. The projection room is equipped with a battery of three Power's 6B type-E projectors equipped with Power's G. E. High Intensity arc lamps.

Mitchel Fiskin is chief projectionist of the Republic, and with his assistants, Clinton S. Hancock, J. Hersh and E. Bendheim, has had entire charge of the installation and operation of the projection equipment since the opening of the theatre last October. Mr. Piskin, who is a member of the I. A. T. S. E. Local 306, was born in Europe, and back in 1906 operated for Pathe through various European countries, using gas in the earlier years for illumination. Some time after he came to this country, and in 1911 began working for Fox, Loew and other well known exhibitors. Mr. Piskin was greatly pleased when he heard he was to help install and to operate the new G. E. high intensity lamp, and immediately set to work to learn as much as possible regarding them. After operating the Power's G. E. lamps for nearly six months, Mr. Piskin expressed himself as being very well pleased with the Power's G. E. High Intensity arc lamps and would not want to return to the old type arc lamps. He also states that it has been a pleasure both for himself and assistants to have been pioneers in the field of high intensity illumination for motion picture machines, and adds that they have had no troubles which could not be readily overcome by a moderate effort and with the knowledge which practical projectionists should possess.

Precision Machine Co. Takes Precautions to Insure Perfect Parts

The Precision Machine Company has submitted a copy of a letter that they are sending to all those handling the Simplex machine in which they have outlined a new policy that insures, to a great degree, perfection in every respect of the intermittent parts.

Below we are publishing the complete letter as received by us which presents the reasons and details of this plan:

Gentlemen:

Here we are with a most important announcement, and one which we feel you will welcome. And so that you can easily and quickly digest it, we will make it brief.

As you know, all the parts which go to making up our intermittent movement are made to within a one-ten thousandth of an inch, in order to insure not only perfect fit when used in replacement instances, but to provide for long service as well.

To do this, it is necessary to maintain the strictest sort of supervision during the manufacturing stages as well as a most minute inspection service, all of which gives us the assurance that when the parts are ready for delivery each one of them is absolutely accurate and perfect.

We have found, however, much to our dismay, that after taking every possible precaution in the handling and manufacturing of these parts, they reach the ultimate user in a different condition than when they left the factory, this being due to knocking them against one another, or otherwise scarring them in handling. This means that some men gain the impression that our parts are not what they used to be, which is not the case and of course injures all of us.

And then again, the "fake" or spurious parts that are finding their way onto the market are becoming so generally distributed, that we feel called upon to fully protect our distributors, our users and ourselves.

So we have arranged to send out all inter-

Dear Ed:

I joined the N. A. M. L. about three months ago and have used up all my blank stamps, so please send me more.

I wish to inform you of my experiences as propectionist at the largest suburban theatre in the southwest, "The Parkway."

I have two Powers 6B machines, Type E. Lamphouse with 50-50 motor generator set. These machines are both 22 models and I think the most thorough and complete projector on the market.

My projection room is 16 x 18. You can readily see the advantage I have in a well constructed concrete and plastered wall for work, so I'm able to project the perfect picture on the screen.

Now the motor generator, I notice where there has been lots of discussion on this. There is only one thing that need be said. Keep the bearings well oiled and the motor and generator clean, and you will have no trouble. We have a Minusa Gold Fibre screen, the best made. You can see the results, I guess.

We also have a $15,000 pipe organ. Next to the finest in Dallas. With the Film Music Cue we are able to play in accord with the picture.

As soon as I can get a picture of the projection room will send you one, and you can see more clearly the kind of projection room I have.

With best wishes to Brother Projectionists and the Motion Picture News, I am,

A. J. Vineyard,

Chief Projectionist, Parkway Theatre, Dallas, Texas. I.A.T.S.E. No. 249; N.A.M.L. No. 1572.

Brother Vineyard certainly has a department to be proud of and I'm sure he is keeping everything going in tip top shape. If we all could have this quality of equipment I'd say the projectionist who kicked would need to be kicked. However, the time is coming when the projection department will be recognized as one, if not the most important, ends of the theatre as the tendency is today to build better projection rooms. Show them, fellows, that you deserve it.—Ed.

Dear Editor:

You will find enclosed the blank for new League members that I have filled out.

In reference to having bronze buttons made and charging League members whatever the buttons cost you, I think it is a good idea. I don't think that any operator would object to paying 25 or 30 cents for a good bronze button. Besides it is not fair for you to have to stand all the expense of the buttons.

I am, yours for Better Pictures,

Lawrence Miller,
Palacios, Texas.

Dear Editor:

Will try and kick in with a few lines again. Am still on the job, and getting some films in pretty bad condition the last few weeks. But have sent them all back in better condition than I received them. I think some of the exchanges depend entirely on the N. A. M. L. members to keep their films in good shape but certainly think they should meet us 50-50 at least. I have got a collection of punch holes. Haven't decided whether I shall frame them or what I will do with them. I may as well quit this kicking as it doesn't do much good.

I am sending you an application signed by my helper for the N. A. M. L. which I hope will be accepted, as he takes a great interest in helping me keep films in good shape. I was down to Alexandria, Va., this week to see Brother Dale and some of the boys, as I am a member of the local, 619. Mr. Dale is president and is sure a hustler. Will ring off for this time as I guess this will hit the basket.

Very truly,

G. S. Heatwole,
I. A. T. S. E., local 619,
N. A. M. L No. 423.

P S.—Have you decided about the new buttons yet? What you say we hurry it along as I am sure all members are in for new ones. I think all members of local 619 are N. A. M. L. boosters and members.

It might be a good idea if Brother Heatwole would just drop a reminder to the exchanges bothering him with bad films and let them know that they wouldn't be overdoing themselves to meet him fifty-fifty.—Editor.

Dear Editor:

Inclosed you will find my application for membership of the Misframe League.

As assistant projectionist in this theatre, I have always made it my policy to do my best to make it easy for my fellow operators. I am only 18 years of age but I have had four years of experience in a prejecting room.

In the projection room where I work we have 2 type B Simplex machines and a Hertner Transverter. The house seats a thousand and is doing good business partially as a result of good projection.

Projectionally yours,

Charles Wade,
American Theatre, Canton, N. Y.

Dear Editor:

Membership card and labels received okay and am glad to be a member. I would like to hear from some of the boys with old equipment. I have a Simplex and a Motiograph which have been running 3 shows daily for the last ten years, matinee and night. Am using 110 volt A. C. with a 3½ H.P. motor running a Wurlitzer organ on the same line ahead of the booth. This is my third year in this theatre, with four years previous in Detroit. Am getting a very good picture now and have often wondered what I could do with equipment some theatres have. Business is so slow in this section of the country that I don't expect any improvement.

I would like to hear from some of the boys with old Motiographs. Both machines throw a steady picture, 108 feet, using 60 amps. To cut down expense, I turned over the Simplex intermittent sprocket and drilled a new hole with great success. $4.00 saved.

Yours for better projection,

Richard Weaver,
New Reaper Theatre, Monroe, Mich.

Dear Ed.:

Reading some of the letters today in the News made me think to write a few lines, and want to say right here and now, the N. A. M. L. has been the biggest and best thing that was ever formed. I can remember back several years ago what bad film we used to get and it happened about every day, too, but now it is altogether different, for just once in a while I get hold of band film and then at that it is not as bad as it used to be, and it is just about all being done by the league. Whenever the buttons are ready, just let me know and I will send money or stamps for it.

Here is hoping all the boys and you luck and success.

W. C. Caines,
Columbia Amuse. Co., Ashland Ky. No. 914.

Dear Editor:

Kindly let me know when the new buttons come in so I can send in for mine. I would dig down and pay 50c. for one. I think the new buttons would be better than the old ones, altho I did not have an old one.

Some of the film I get now is in very bad condition, but they leave the St. Joseph's Auditorium in good condition. I am still keeping up with my pledge with you about keeping the film in good condition. I am in the projection game for 5 years now. Guess I'll get off the line for the time.

Yours for better projection,

Andrew J. Gmitter,
82 East 3rd St., Mauch Chunk, Pa. No. 1517.

Membership Buttons

We have just received the metal membership buttons which have been so consistently demanded by the members. Every brother should hop to it and get one of these, as they are a great improvement over the former celluloid type.

It is our desire to sell this button to the fellows for what they actually cost us. The price for one button is 25 cents. Any member sending us this amount in stamps or coin will be sent a button immediately.

Cork Carpet

solidly cemented to the floor base. Tacking or cementing the edges alone will not last.

Some manufacturers recommend the insertion of heavy felt paper between the floor base and the carpet, all four surfaces to be cemented together. It is doubtful, however, if this method is advisable, because there is some serious question whether four surfaces cemented together will not give more trouble than just two, and whether the tensile strength of felt paper is sufficiently great to stand the constant pull between floor and Cork Carpet. One large manufacturer who has made extensive study of methods of laying Cork Carpet publishes a complimentary booklet on laying, as well as specifications. The new improved method recommended by this manufacturer does away with the troublesome felt paper.

Care of Cork Carpet

Though exceedingly durable in itself, proper care will materially increase the life of Cork Carpet. To clean it, use just tepid water and pure, mild vegetable soap. Caustic soaps and scouring powders are to be avoided because they eat into the cork and cause its disintegration. Mop off the floor, first with soapy water, then with clean water (using always as little liquid as possible), and dry it quickly.

The success of Cork Carpet has already been demonstrated in many motion picture houses all over the country. When well laid and properly cared for, it can be said to take at least one worry off the shoulders of the motion picture theatre owner, for he will have to give little or no thought to his floors while they are covered with Cork Carpet.

mittent parts in separate boxes, each box sealed up tightly and each box containing detailed instructions for installing the parts contained therein. These boxes are so made up that they can be readily distinguished and are marked with distinctive markings. This program of course calls for additional labor and expense on our part which we feel, however, is justifiable, when we consider the very great amount of benefit that such individual packing and sealing will mean to us all.

Commencing with March 15th, we will ship in boxes only and in the March 25th issue of the trade press we will advertise our new method of sending out in sealed packages. This schedule will allow you two weeks in which to move your present supply of the following items:

B-16 Star Wheel Cam Gear and Shaft.

You'll pay for a cooling system this summer

Whether you install Monsoon Cooling System, or whether you don't, it makes no difference—you're going to pay for it anyway.

If you don't have it you'll pay its price in the receipts you lose during hot weather. And this price you'll pay every summer—year after year.

But if you do install Monsoon Cooling System, you pay for it only ONCE, and then it'll pay back its entire cost this summer.

"I can truthfully say that my increased business, as a result of installing Monsoons, paid for the entire system inside of ten weeks."
CHAS. W. BOYER
Palace Theatre, Hagerstown, Md.

Now, which will you do: Install Monsoon System, NOW, and pay for it only ONCE—or go without it and pay for it anyway—this summer and every summer ?

Think it over—and install Monsoons for this summer

Mr. S.R. Kent, General Manager

My dear Mr. Kent:

I want to commend the good judgement of Famous Players-Lasky in offering exhibitors the re-issues of "The Miracle Man," "Male and Female," "Old Wives for New," "Don't Change Your Husband," "On With The Dance," "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" and "Behold My Wife!"

These productions were top-notch box office attractions upon their initial release and they still have wonderful drawing power. We have played all of the attractions mentioned above and are glad to have an opportunity of playing them again for the results, I am sure, will be satisfactory

Cecil B. De Mille found his stride when he made "Old Wives for New," "Don't Change Your Husband" and "Male and Female." Although his later productions have attracted more attention, they do not contain any more vital theme or greater dramatic strength than this trio of winners. The crowds that witnessed these pictures will come again and enjoy them as much as the newer ones.

George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man" smashed my box office record and hundreds of exhibitors who played this one will agree it is bound to draw as a revival. "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" and "Behold My Wife!" have permanent places among the old-ever-new classics that combine humor and pathos with a distinctive characterization. The public repeats many times on such stories in book form and on the stage and exhibitors will find that they will repeat on the screen.

Paramount has more classics that will stand reissue.

Yours very truly.

We said the day we announced it: "'CARDIGAN' will be seized eagerly by exhibitors who have 'good show sense' because with it they can get more local newspaper and exploitation co-operation than with any other picture in years."

Four weeks have proved this with smashing conclusiveness. "Cardigan" is one of the big hits of the year and the greatest first runs and circuits of the country have booked it.

We have the honor to announce a single booking for 150 Minnesota cities and small towns under one contract—the largest booking ever taken within the boundaries of any one state in the American Union—a total of four hundred days. This follows right behind the booking of "Cardigan" by Finkelstein and Rubin for Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth.

"MAN TO MAN" NEW WESTERN WITH ALL THE OLD TRICKS

By McELLIOTT

If you want to see a really good "Western," with lots of the old kick and go, and plenty of the new attention to detail, you'll make a point of taking in "Man To Man." It's really worth your while.

The old Western pictures (and almost all the early ones, you remember, did bristle with sagebrush) were slap-and-dash affairs, full of impossible situations, the chase, villians, the chase, a heroine, and once again, the chase! That was not so good. You grew to be most awfully tired when you sat through one of them, and you closed your eyes when twenty red-skins bit the dust.

Mr Harry Carey's new picture up in the Central, I must admit, has a chase or two . . . but with a difference. F'rinstance, when a herd of cattle is being stampeded to ruin, and Mr. Carey plunges on a foaming horse to their rescue, you get an immense thrill out of the situation. It is great stuff, and real There is no faking about it.

With Harry as the derelict hero, the story opens on the tropic isle of Tiva Harry Carey

Tiva. Mr. Carey looks, and is, hardboiled. He wears shreds and tatters of clothing, and his feet are bare. He has drifted to Tiva because he was branded as jailbird a year before. However, in a free-and-easy tavern of the isle and he finds waiting for him a summons from home. His father is dead. The ranch awaits his hand. An old pal, Bill Royce, writes to beg him to return and save the land from the clutching hand of his grandfather, aptly dubbed Hellfire Packard.

Harry goes back . . . and the battle is on. True, there is the usual thieving, brutal foreman . . . there is the usual girl next door who pretends to hate, but who really loves him madly all the while. There is the usual happy ending . . .

But I said before, "Man to Man" is good stuff. Mr. Harry Carey . . . I am for him!

To the motion picture patron it means the certainty of a whole evening's entertainment—the assurance that the short-subject half of your program will be as good as or better than the feature.

To you, the exhibitor, it means a full house. And you do not need to be told that it is more profitable to show pictures which cost a little more to capacity audiences than to show pictures which cost a little less to empty seats. "A Chance to Crash the Money Gates!"

Says-Motion Picture News

"The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe"

THEY'VE got another H G Wells and history to account in their previous serial chapters The two preceding productions, "Winners of the West" and "With Stanley in Africa" have now been rounded into a complete trinity "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe" looms up as a fitting member—a serial which is bound to enlist the attention of every child over the age of ten It is our impression that this type of serial has paved the way for something absolutely new in screen production Why bother with wild harum-scarum exploits, the mad dreams of some highly imaginative hack, the sterile living, when the fertile dead are offering their wares for visualization? The field is inexhaustible Universal has started something

Good old "Robinson Crusoe"—the favorite of every boy in search of adventure has come to the screen with a fidelity which will kindle the imagination and bring back memories of one's childhood. It is an achievement which is bound to be heard from in box-office returns. Why not? Look at that title. Look further and find Harry Myers as the star And the star put over "The Connecticut Yankee" shows that he is something else than a buffoon. He is Crusoe and a colorful figure. He steps from the pages of DeFoe's classic and tramps up and down the deck of the pirate ship giving vitality to every scene. You forget your environment. And you follow the many episodes of this story unmindful of the fact that your memory is rather hazy regarding the story.

They're off! Crusoe and Friday, Feg-Leg and all the rest of 'em The picture offers unlimited opportunities for exploitation. The widely read novel, the star, the educational and story values—these should be capitalized by the exhibitor. Three of these better serials have reached the screen, and "Buffalo Bill" is coming. Get out the paper, distribute the bills, hire a band—the chance has arrived to crash the money gates with this opus.—LAURENCE REID —and you can get a share of $7000 for doing it!

GO to it! Declare yourself in on a share of the $7000 in cash prizes offered by Carl Laemmle for the best exploitation ideas submitted on "Robinson Crusoe."

SEND your name at once to the Contest Manager, Serial Dept., Universal Film Mfg. Co., 1600 Broadway, New York City, regardless of when you show this chapter-play. After you have put over your stunt, write it up and send it in with a photograph of it and one of yourself. All reports must be in before July 31st.

DURING each of the months of April, May, June and July, $1750 will be split up among 16 live showmen. The four most practical plans submitted each week will receive $50 each. At the end of each month the three best from among the sixteen winners of the weekly prizes for that month will receive the following additional grand prizes—the first, $450; the second, $350; and the third, $200. This will make a total of 64 prizes and 12 grand prizes, aggregating $7000 in cash. The exploitation stunts will be judged, not by their cost, but by their effectiveness, simplicity and practicability. Send your name in at once.

Full details appear every week in Universal's "MOVING PICTURE WEEKLY." Address Circulation Manager at 1600 Broadway, N. Y. C., if you fail to receive it.

HOW PHOTOPLAY AND GOLDWYN HELP

EVERY month, starting with the March issue PHOTOPLAY MAGAZINE, with a circulation of 500,000, carries lavishly illustrated stories on this contest.

Identification of your theatre with the New Faces offer at once gives you the full value of that circulation in your section.

Goldwyn will supply, absolutely free, copies of March and April PHOTOPLAY with the announcements already published. Month by month the magazine will afford a volume of material.

Goldwyn will supply the slide and entry blanks shown on the opposite page, together with the four 8 x 10 photos and the panoramic view of the Goldwyn studios shown in the suggested lobby display.

Make the request to your exchange.

WHAT YOU MUST DO TO GET BENEFIT

SHOW the slide at every performance. Put a display in your lobby. At the right of this double page we suggest a 3-sheet size announcement. Copies of the magazine and the photos are supplied free by Goldwyn. You supply only the board and the lettering.

Every newsdealer selling PHOTOPLAY will cooperate. Furnish them with window cards like those suggested. Get them used every month.

Distribute the entry blanks at your theatre. You can have a special day for receiving these entries.

Newspapers will cooperate. There's a tie up with photographers.

Get busy and play it hard.

The winner of this contest gets a year's contract at the Goldwyn Studios. Here are the dressing room she will occupy and an aeroplane view of the studio. Both photographs free to you.

Why Your Public Should See "Fair Lady"

"Fair Lady" is a smashing good melodrama, one of the best all-round melodramatic romances that has been screened for a long time. It is full of love, mystery, adventure and intrigue.

A beautiful woman foregoes her vow of vengeance as love wells up in her soul and devotes all her energies to righting the wrong she has done to the final choice of her heart.

There is an all-star cast without a flaw and that contains such well known screen stars as Betty Blythe, Gladys Hulette, Thurston Hall, Robert Elliott, Macey Harlam and Effingham Pinto.

Every woman in your theatre territory always wants to see beautiful clothes and handsome costumes when properly worn. Every woman will see this in nearly every scene in "Fair Lady."

This melodrama is full of action and thrills from the very start to the final climax when the most stirring punch is delivered.

This picture is thorough and absorbing—a finished photoplay. It is sure to be popular wherever shown. It has in it all the elements for a first class emotional spasm and never fails to stir the pulses of the audience.

Every man, woman and child who likes stirring melodrama, well played, with thrills and action aplenty, will find what they want in "Fair Lady."

How to Get Your Public to See "Fair Lady"

Play up the name of Rex Beach, the photoplay being adapted from his popular novel, "The Net." His name is a big drawing card anywhere. Tie-up with bookstores on Rex Beach books. Concentrate on the title, "Fair Lady," which lends itself to all sorts of attention-attracting exploitation and gives a chance for co-operative tie-ups and window displays with almost every type of business house and merchant in any city. Go strong on the fact that this is a high class, romantic melodrama, with a stirring love story, full of action. Make much of the mystery element in the picture. Run a teaser campaign, based on the title of the film, and copy for which will be found in the exploitation folder. Start a newspaper contest. See the exploitation folder for this also. Use plenty of paper. The posters are unusually strong, and exactly suited to "Fair Lady."

"Your Best Friend" Has Heart Pull
Warner Brothers' Production Starring Vera Gordon Is Given Premiere in Stanton Theatre, Philadelphia
The Warner Brothers' seven-reel production, Your Best Friend, was given its premiere on Sunday evening, March 19, at the Stanton Theatre, Philadelphia, before a crowded house.
The program of the evening consisted n overture by the orchestra; a Prizma based on Whittier's "School Days," usually funny comedy featuring Banks, also, like the feature, re- y Warner Brothers; a prologue senting the specially prepared our Best Friend" solo, and the he house, which was completely most appreciative and respon- ing its enjoyment and approval ained laughter at times and by prolonged applause at the close ening's entertainment.
est Friend is another great Vera mother picture! And it has all s and heart-tugs and real human t that have made her earlier pic- such favorites.
sther Myers has raised a family and ved a goodly fortune. Her oldest son, Robert, a lawyer, marries a girl whose mother needs Mrs. Myers' financial assistance to climb the social ladder. So they transplant Mrs. Myers and her faithful old bookkeeper, Morris, from East Twenty-third Street to a fashionable apartment up on West End Avenue. There are parties and parties, and Mother Esther pays the bills.
Finally a second son, Harry embezzles money from the bank where he works and "his best friend" finds him about to run away; of course, she will raise the money to meet his debt! Then, true to their type, Robert's wife and her mother sneeringly reject the suggestion that they curtail any expenses in order to help Harry! Since you've decided by now to see the picture, there's no use my spoiling it for you by telling how it ends.
The comedy elements, centering largely about Morris, the human string to Mrs. Myers' money bags, come in just at the right time to relieve the tension. He complains about the awful extravagance of drinking that which costs at least $10 a quart. Mrs. Myers finds him sampling the liquid rather thoroughly and laughingly reminds him of its cost. "But I don't waste it!" is his rejoinder.
In the cast supporting Mrs. Gordon are Harry Benham, Stanley Price, Belle Bennett, Beth Mason and Dore Davidson.

Critics Call 'Pay Day'

Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the big Broadway house, said there hadn't been such vast throngs crowding the Strand this year — nor had he seen such delighted audiences.

The S. R. O. signs were up, and the crowds lined up for a block trying to get in. The police had all they could do to keep traffic open.

Is Here for Every Exhibitor

A Newspaper Editorial of Money Value To Every Exhibitor!

Here's something most unusual. Seldom does a great newspaper devote its editorial columns to a single picture. But the Chicago Tribune, one of the most influential papers, uses its editorial space to tell the public that this marvelous picture will inspire all who see it!

Speaking of

Joseph M. Schenck's presentation of

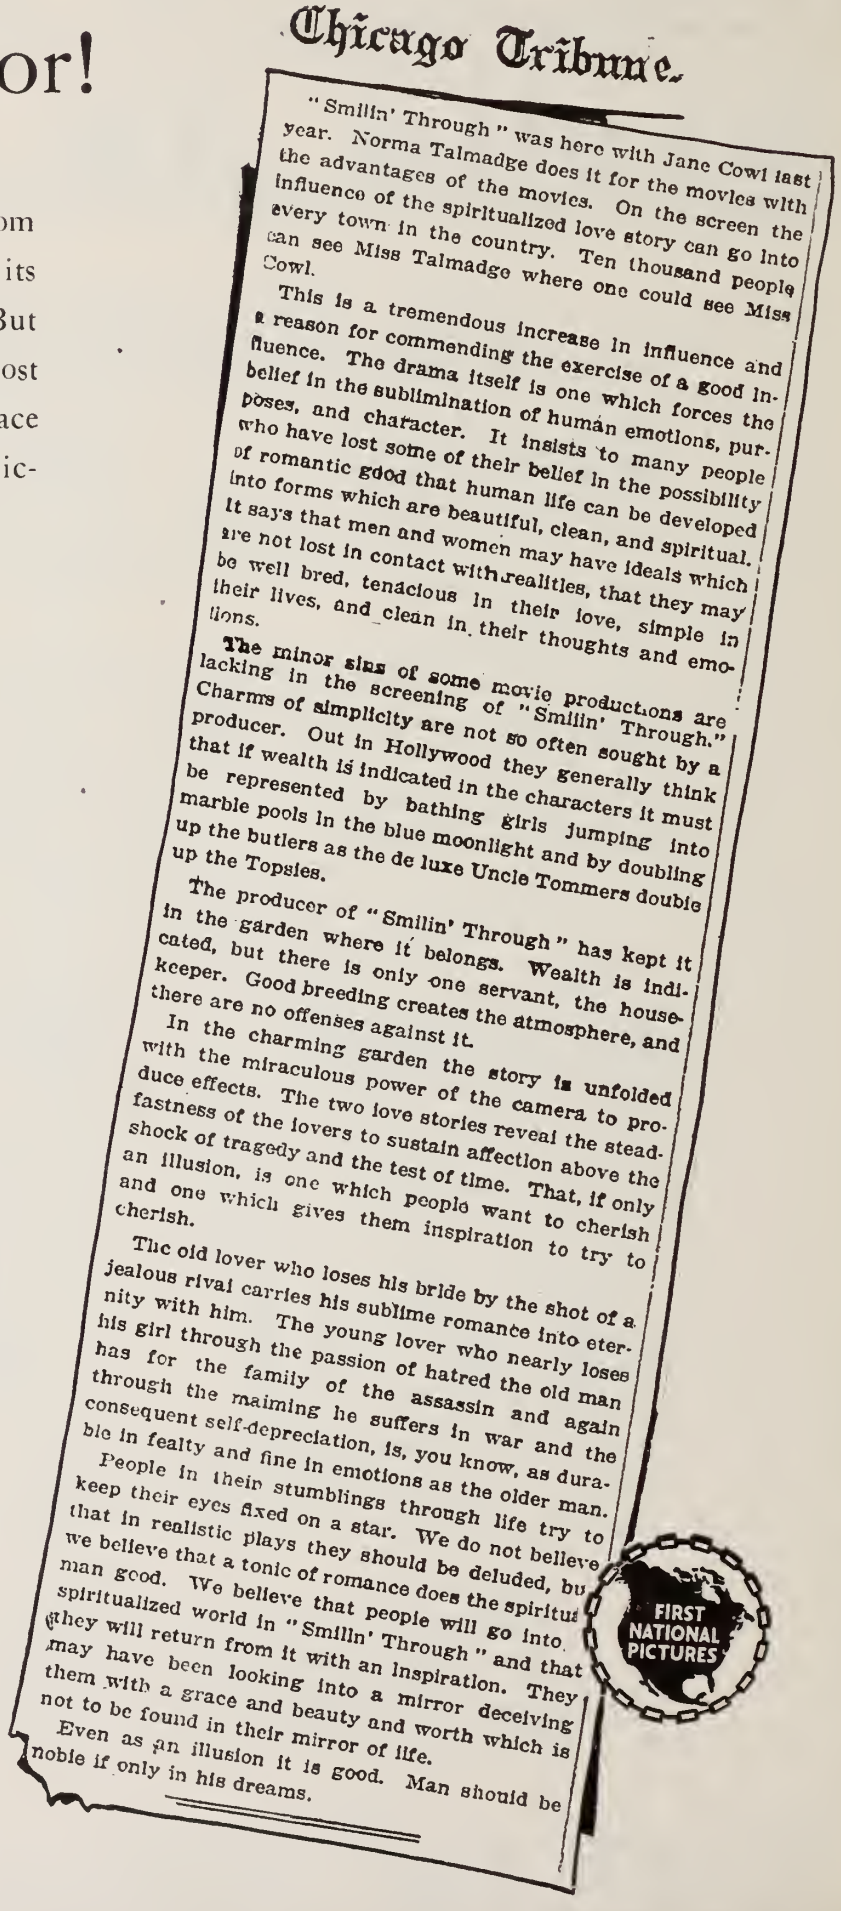
NORMA TALMADGE

in

"Smilin' Through"

Adapted by James Ashmore Creelman from Allen Langdon Martin's Play. Directed by Sidney A. Franklin.

A First National Attraction



Chicago Tribune.

"Smilin' Through" was here with Jane Cowl last year. Norma Talmadge does it for the movies with the advantages of the movies. On the screen the influence of the spiritualized love story can go into every town in the country. Ten thousand people can see Miss Talmadge where one could see Miss Cowl.

This is a tremendous increase in influence and a reason for commending the exercise of a good influence. The drama itself is one which forces the belief in the sublimination of human emotions, purposes, and character. It insists to many people who have lost some of their belief in the possibility of romantic good that human life can be developed into forms which are beautiful, clean, and spiritual. It says that men and women may have ideals which are not lost in contact with realities, that they may be well bred, tenacious in their love, simple in their lives, and clean in their thoughts and emotions.

The minor sins of some movie productions are lacking in the screening of "Smilin' Through." Charms of simplicity are not so often sought by a producer. Out in Hollywood they generally think that if wealth is indicated in the characters it must be represented by bathing girls jumping into marble pools in the blue moonlight and by doubling up the butlers as the de luxe Uncle Tommers double up the Topsies.

The producer of "Smilin' Through" has kept it in the garden where it belongs. Wealth is indicated, but there is only one servant, the housekeeper. Good breeding creates the atmosphere, and there are no offenses against it.

In the charming garden the story is unfolded with the miraculous power of the camera to produce effects. The two love stories reveal the steadfastness of the lovers to sustain affection above the shock of tragedy and the test of time. That, if only an illusion, is one which people want to cherish and one which gives them inspiration to try to cherish.

The old lover who loses his bride by the shot of a jealous rival carries his sublime romance into eternity with him. The young lover who nearly loses his girl through the passion of hatred the old man has for the family of the assassin and again through the maiming he suffers in war and the consequent self-depreciation, is, you know, as durable in fealty and fine in emotions as the older man.

People in their stumblings through life try to keep their eyes fixed on a star. We do not believe that in realistic plays they should be deluded, but we believe that a tonic of romance does the spiritual man good. We believe that people will go into spiritualized world in "Smilin' Through" and that they will return from it with an inspiration. They may have been looking into a mirror deceiving them with a grace and beauty and worth which is not to be found in their mirror of life.

Even as an illusion it is good. Man should be noble if only in his dreams.

Motion Picture News

The Keynote at Washington

WE assume that the keynote of the Washington Convention of Theatre Owners in May will be the encouragement of the independent producer.

There couldn't be a better keynote.

If we are to have enough good pictures—pictures which will satisfy the entertainment fancy of the great motion picture public—we must have independent producers. A lot of them! A lot of good ones. And, constantly, new ones!

There's no further question about that.

But there is a question; a very practical one.

And that question is: How shall the independent producer be encouraged?

First of all the independent producer must be encouraged by distribution. He asks and must have a fair deal; in other words, all the action his picture deserves.

Here then is the first big hurdle. If it isn't successfully cleared you can orate and debate and prognosticate—till doomsday, and the independent producer won't be one dollar better off than he is today; and today he is about ready to quit.

Is he to distribute through an exchange system owned by other producers, or affiliated with, or heavily committed to, other productions?

Is he to distribute through independent or neutral exchange systems already existing—either national or state rights?

Is a new exchange system, owned and run by exhibitors themselves, to be inaugurated?

This is a weighty question.

It can't be decided hastily. It isn't, for instance, a convention matter. It will take a number of intelligent men a considerable time, and they will want a lot of figures, before they will decide conclusively so serious a business problem.

Distribution is the very backbone of this business. It is a big and specialized activity demanding the undivided time of specialists. That is true in every other trade.

Distribution isn't something that follows easily and automatically just because you have something else in hand. It is highly competitive. It calls—to be successful—for the last word in selling force, and selling economy. Exhibitors, whose time is or should be entirely used in their own specialized branch, will never be successful distributors—unless they give up the exhibiting business.

After all, isn't the encouragement of the independent producer right up to the individual exhibitor?

Is organized effort necessary? Isn't it simply a matter of how the individual exhibitor buys his pictures?

We had occasion to speak of this important matter right after the Minneapolis Convention, last year.

And what we said then seems to hold good now.

We said:

"The primary aim of the convention was the encouragement of the independent producer.

"Well, just what is it that discourages right now the independent producer?

"Not a thing in the world except the profitable sale of his pictures.

"Profitable sale means a sufficient number of bookings at a sufficient price.

"And who will settle this problem?

"No one in the world except the exhibitor. Not necessarily the organized exhibitor; not the formation of an exhibitor-owned distributing corporation. But simply the individual exhibitor everywhere.

"And he'll settle it, not with sentimentality, not with resolutions for independence, but simply with hard, cold, business sense."

We repeat, the independent producer wants bookings, at fair prices.

And this will depend, largely, first upon the box-office value of his pictures and secondly upon how the exhibitor buys.

At the Albany Convention of New York State Exhibitors a few older and wiser heads stated that no organized effort to reduce rentals was needed if the individual exhibitor used good business judgment in buying.

It seems to us that exactly the same advice applies to the independent producer and his pictures.

Encourage him! Yes, by all means.

Very well. Encourage him by booking his worth while pictures.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

Different States Making Hot Censorship Fight

Public Officials and Editors Give Support in Opposition to Movement

FROM all parts of America reports are coming regarding censorship conditions in the different states. Many public officials and others are expressing their views on the situation and some lively tilts are expected before definite conclusions are reached.

A new factor is arising amidst the strife and turmoil of blue law and censorship battles in Missouri. A factor which bids fair to forever silence the "mud slinging," self-appointed reformers of the "Show Me" state—the public press. The following statement of C. D. Morris, editor and publisher of the St. Joseph Gazette, one of the leading metropolitan newspapers of the state, is typical of the sentiment of the press towards the screen.

"The public school stands out in the annals of civilization as the greatest instrument of freedom and progress. The public press, from its initial development, has been considered the greatest educational force with which the common man is blessed. The screen, indeed the two, the screen and the press, united in an alliance for the promotion of an intelligent and worth-while citizenship, form a combination never dreamed of a quarter century ago, and the power of which can not, even now, be adequately estimated. Many theatres are today showing the actual transaction of news-making."

With Sunday openings at stake in many Missouri towns in the election April 4, the following statement was issued by Attorney General Jesse Barrett of Missouri, regarding censorship.

"Censorship of the silent drama is certainly unnecessary if we do not also need censorship of the spoken drama, for the latter can make a much more harmful appeal. If you are to censor the theatre through Government inspectors, why not also then the magazines and the press? Considering the small salaries of public office, where are you to secure men of that rare intelligence and wisdom which should be required to decide what it is proper for the multitude to see? What has happened to the common sense of the general public that it cannot any longer be trusted to think for itself? Since when must human nature be straitjacketed by government? Since when has the character and the morality of the people become the burden of our legislature?

A new aspect of the censorship muddle in the State of Ohio, and one which hits directly at the moving picture going public of that state, has resulted from the Ohio Censor Board's attitude towards news reels.

The week-end print of the International News, it is understood, reaches Ohio early Saturday afternoon. Being news and needed for immediate release, it should be censored without delay so that theatres through the State might show it Saturday night or Sunday.

Mrs. Snow has definitely refused, however, it is said, to censor this reel after 12 o'clock on Saturdays. Therefore, it has to lay on the shelf until Monday.

George Arliss, screen and stage star, delivered a radiophone address from the Amrad broadcasting station of the American Radio and Research Corporation of Medford Hillside, Medford. Arliss spoke on "Censorship of Motion Pictures and Stage Plays."

"It is much better for a growing boy to grow good through the influence of his conscience rather than through the application of the birch. The motion picture industry is a growing boy. It is growing better and purer every day of its own volition. If it is let alone it will grow to healthy and useful maturity. If it has the life beaten out of it with the thick stick of censorship it will become dull and heavy and stupid, without originality and without spontaneity."

Mr. Arliss's address also included a resume of the history of censorship back through several hundred years and quoted from famous authorities who were opposed to censorship in their own days. Radio experts were of the opinion that the star's words reached as far as the Carolinas and the Canadian provinces.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

WILL H. HAYS will be tendered a dinner in New York on April 26th by the publishers of the United States. The double occasion is Mr. Hay's retirement as Postmaster General and the combined meeting in New York of the Associated Press and the American newspaper publishers Association. Speakers of national prominence will be heard. The dinner, sponsored by the National Publishers Association and the Publishers Association of New York, will be a very large one. Mr. Hays will probably address over one thousand of the leading editors and publishers of the country.

ALONG the New York Central tracks at Irvington-on-the Hudson several hundred feet of large letters proclaim "Urban Motion Picture Industries" and just above them is the large, imposing plant formerly occupied by the Cosmopolitan Magazine when owned by John Brisben Walker.

This exterior, however, imposing as it is, gives little idea of the size of the industrial equipment within. Briefly, a trip through this plant will give most any film man, as it did to the writer, a feeling that he has been asleep at the switch.

Eighty thousand feet of floor space, not to mention outside and contributing equipment is devoted to the making of educational pictures, color pictures, projection machines, and still more largely to the construction of the Spiragraph, the Urban home projection machine and the disc film records for its use.

The big job is all but finished. It has been done efficiently, economically and completely. And the whistle is all but ready to blow.

There's a story here of vision, persistence and industry—all spelled with capitals. It's a big story. Charles Urban began working on all these big developments years ago, and with this visual realization unmistakably before you you can't help taking off your hat to him. Surely, it looks as if the vaguely large fields of the home and the school room were soon to be actually tilled.

Watterson R. Rothacker's attractice and well-written treatise on motion picture advertising is not only a credit to Rothacker printing and developing but also to industrial pictures in general and, in fact, to the motion picture industry For the general good we hope it will have a large circulation in the business world. It is inspiring.

Nick, of the Hotel Astor, reports a favorable outlook for the industry this Summer. Figuring on table cloths took a sudden spurt two weeks ago and the pace is still rapid. In the months of January and February laundry bills showed no increase over the depression period that became definite in the Summer of 1921. The graph was broken however about March 15th. Only one table cloth, too, has totals exceeding ten millions in annual profits, which indicates a new conservatism and stability. Star's salaries also show declines of several thousand dollars a week. Twenty-two new companies await incorporation.

SOME producers have good policies; some have good productions. Arthur Friend has both. "Disraeli" and "Ruling Passion" are plain and consecutive proofs. And we predict more of the same sustained quality. This isn't hit or miss production. There's a policy back of the proven ability. We are not going to allude to these productions as clean pictures. They are fine dramatic pictures; and the public throughout the United States high and low, native and foreign born, liberal and provincial wants them.

Carl Fritzche arrived in New York from Berlin on the Rotterdam last week and is stopping at the Hotel Astor. He has with him several German super productions. The Trans-Ocean Film Company, Mr. Fritzche's concern, handled the United States rights on "Passion," "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," "One Arabian Night," "Gypsy Blood," etc.

THE Goldwyn scenario contest, conducted through the Chicago Daily News, is one of the most forward steps thus far taken in production. It has called forth over 27,000 stories from 20,000 authors, all of them presumably written directly for the screen. The appeal for original screen stories has always been shouted from the industry's housetops. This contest certainly must have, with one scoop, produced the results.

Some interesting facts have been brought forth by the contest.

For one thing, the prizes have gone almost entirely to amateurs. According to Eugene Mullen, Goldwyn's scenario editor, there were hundreds of professional writers entered but they gradually fell behind in the race, and in the final list, with one or two exceptions, are not represented at all.

This, however, parallels the experience of most fiction contests in national magazines. The prizes are generally won by the unknown writer.

Another interesting point is the fact that contestants not only entered from every State in the Union but also from Canada, Africa, England, Ireland, Scandinavia, Philippine, Hawaii and Cuba. It is just this diversity of creative outlook and effort that the screen needs—and needs badly today.

The winner of the first prize of $10,000 is Miss Lavinia Henry, nom de plume for Miss Winifred Kimball, Apalachicola, Florida, a town of 3,000 inhabitants. The story "Broken Chains" has already been sent to Culver City, California, where the Goldwyn staff will immediately prepare the script for filming.

We cannot but believe that Goldwyn productions will show the splendid effect of this story contest.

HOWARD E. JAMEYSON, advertising manager of the Doric and Liberty theatres, Kansas City, has put out a book of advertising aids "prepared by an exhibitor for an exhibitor" called "The Idea." Mr. Jameyson says the book is designed "to bridge the gap of poor press sheets that span the distance between good ones."

"The Idea" is a good idea. Mr. Jameyson's book is along the lines of advertising service prepared for retail merchants. Advertisements, headlines, catch lines, etc., are prepared to fit most any kind of picture on most any exhibitor's program.

"I belong to the school of old fashioned advertising men," says Mr. Jameyson. "I am one of the few who place straight confidence in the power of printer's ink. The wave of 'nut ballyhoo,' other picture stunts, etc., hasn't quite washed me off the deck."

We agree with Mr. Jameyson. We, too, believe in newspaper advertising.

The Columbus Citizen says that the State Education Director has been quick to make several much needed reforms in the State Censorship Board following the recent utterances of Mrs. Evelyn Snow; and in conclusion the "Citizen" makes this pat comment—"That these were bills which needed correction is obvious."

But what brought the correction?
Publicity!

Suppose there had been censorship of the press as well as of the movies. Would the bills then have been corrected?

No.

Why?

Because the publicity would not have been permitted by the censor.

A busy man, P. A. Parsons, Pathe advertising manager. But the office saw nothing of him last Saturday, for he was busy in a different direction—mighty busy welcoming a new arrival, Lowell Dutton Parsons, lusty, shouting, and weighing 9¼ pounds. Mother and child both doing well, and P. A. himself mighty proud.

* * *

Thomas H. Ince sends us the following letter:

"My dear Mr. Johnston:

"Mr. Maurice Tourneur has very nearly completed, at my studios in Culver City, a magnificent picturization of 'Lorna Doone.'

"This production has been created with all the skill of Mr. Tourneur, and there has been spent upon it all the money that was necessary to faithfully bring to the screen this classic of English literature.

"I am informed from creditable sources that there are in existence several other editions of 'Lorna Doone,' including one very inferior importation, and that these other editions are being held in abeyance awaiting the release of Mr. Tourneur's picture, so that they can be exploited upon whatever success it attains.

"I am sure that you appreciate as much as anyone, the desirability for bringing to the screen the best stories of the world's libraries, and you are familiar with the inadequacy of legislation for the protection of these works when they are converted into pictures.

"The condition which exists will certainly discourage the legitimate producer from filming the Classics unless our industry does devise some means of combating this brand of piracy.

"The evil of 'leech pictures' has been increased by the resumption of production in Europe on a large scale, and while I feel that no American producer of standing fears the competition of pictures which are imported solely for exploitation upon American successes.

"I understand that your policy has been to discourage this form of piracy, and speaking particularly for Mr. Tourneur, as well as for other reputable producers, I trust that we will have your support in event an attempt is made to force an inferior version of 'Lorna Doone' upon the public.

"It seems to me that the exhibitor by booking pictures of this kind for such purposes is undermining the thing he most needs, the confidence of his public, and certainly the motion picture industry can ill afford to deliberately invite another black eye."

It goes without saying that we concur heartily with Mr. Ince. We have stated our views on the "leech picture" editorially a number of times. The matter is largely, if not wholly, up to the exhibitor. If he wants productions filmed from the Classics and wants them done by the best producers, in the best possible way, he must encourage these efforts by protecting the producer against the "leech picture." There is no argument in the matter at all.

* * *

"Reported Missing," characterized by the Selznick Company as the real big picture of its career, was shown in the Grand Ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton on Friday evening, April 7th. The review follows in our next issue.

That is a novel slant on the star salary question evidenced by the Wisconsin Exhibitors in their resolutions published in this issue. Taking the stand that the public makes the star they propose to tell the public how the star's salary has grown to such a point that it either cheats the picture or makes it impossible for an exhibitor to show it at reasonable prices, that is, they propose to do this unless the star sees fit to take a reasonable salary.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan have followed the lead of several other State organizations in a move to secure lower rentals. H. M. Richey, manager of the Michigan organization, has sent out a thorough-going questionnaire to all theatres in the State.

ONE looks to William H. Swanson, founder of Universal City and former treasurer of Universal, to spring surprises every once in a while.

Swanson put Salt Lake City on the map in so far as amusements are concerned. He gave the city some of the most elaborate picture theatres in the country five years ago, and has followed it up by giving them good entertainment in those theatres.

Now he has hit upon a new note, and put into effect a long cherished idea—none other than the erection in his American theatre of a ball room, built in as a part of the theatre, and operated the same as any other feature of the house.

"The Dansante" is the name given this Salt Lake institution, and it is for patrons of the theatre only. Those who come in late can while away their time until the feature again comes around, or until a second show begins, by exercising their terpsichorean art.

If that isn't meeting competition, and giving that old bug-a-boo "Hard Times" a run for his money, what is?

Matthew A. Taylor, for several years on the editorial staff of Motion Picture News, and who conducted the State Right department of the magazine, has become associated with Robertson-Cole Pictures. He will handle the publicity for that company, under Nat Rothstein. The best wishes of his associates on the News and his many acquaintances in the industry, goes with him in his new enterprise.

Chester Smith, well known San Francisco newspaper man and former sporting editor, and who has handled country-wide drives for the Salvation Army and a number of banking enterprises, succeeds Mr. Taylor on the Motion Picture News.

In Town—Willard Paterson, from Atlanta; Morris Schlank, from Los Angeles.

WE are in receipt of a recent copy of "Colonel Mayfield's Weekly," Vol. 1, No. 27, published at Houston, Texas, bearing the catch line slogan "Just to pep up the game; this slow life is killing me."

The Colonel is out for the nomination for Lieutenant-Governor of the State.

The Colonel is also out after the movies. In two articles on his front page he states that his consuming ambition is to save the people of Texas from motion pictures, and he characterizes the latter with words that young ladies at boarding school are not supposed to look up in dictionaries. Evidently the Colonel doesn't believe in censorship of the press.

The Colonel's paper is printed on a brilliant pink. Judging from his first page he is strong for the Ku Klux Klan.

He carries several full pages of oil stock advertisements, one of which is headed "$2,500 for each $100 invested." We wonder if the Colonel guarantees his advertising as he guarantees his statements against motion pictures.

And still we also wonder how on earth the people of any State in the United States, in this more or less enlightened time, can stand for this sort of obvious guff.

But they do. The Colonel's paper has a very large circulation.

All Branches of Pathe Exchange Unite to Honor Paul Brunet

Receives Autograph Volume on 4th Anniversary as Pathe Head

PAUL BRUNET'S fourth anniversary as head of Pathe Exchange finds him the proud possessor of a volume de luxe testimonial of loyalty and confidence signed by eighteen hundred executives and employees. The autographed vellum pages of the book amount to a practically complete muster roll of the Pathe industrial army, stationed at the Home Office, the factories and laboratories and at the thirty-five branch exchanges. On behalf of all the donors of the testimonial, General Manager Elmer Pearson presented the volume to President Brunet on March 25, the date of the closing of the "Brunet Anniversary Sales Contest." In the course of his report to the organization regarding the presentation Mr. Pearson made use of these expressions:

"Those of us in the Home Office who constitute ourselves spokesmen for you found that the testimonial itself made any words of explanation superfluous. It was the best possible assurance of our appreciation of the many kindnesses and the consideration each of us had enjoyed while helping to carry out Mr. Brunet's organization policies. This presentation was the crowning feature in connection with the sales and collection drive in honor of President Brunet's Fourth Anniversary, which, from the figures at hand, is certain to prove the most successful in Pathe history. It was but natural that out of such organization spirit should come an idea for the preservation to Mr. Brunet of suitable evidence of the love and esteem in which we all hold him.

"Mr. Brunet responded with the request that we convey to you his thanks and deep appreciation of a token so beautiful, so obviously sincere, of so much more value to him than any other thing we could have done."

The testimonial is bound in rich Levant. Into the front cover is set a bronze medallion portrait of Paul Brunet by the celebrated sculptor Jeno Juszko, member of the National Sculpture Society, Architectural League, Numismatic Society, etc. The signatures are autographed on leaves of Japanese vellum, following those containing the beautifully illuminated inscription and address. The volume was made in detail under the direct supervision of Harry Lewis, manager of the Pathe Art Department. The inscription and address are as follows:

"To Paul Brunet, president Pathe Exchange, Inc.,

"Greetings!

"We, the Pathe family, by this token of our hands express to you the Gratitude, Love and Esteem in which we hold you.

"This month of March, Nineteen Hundred and Twenty-two, marks the Fourth Anniversary of your leadership, so capable and resourceful as to have won the respect and admiration of the entire industry; so considerate and fair as to have built up the affection and unswerving loyalty of your employees.

"The success with which your administration has been crowned, despite the difficulties encountered, reflects great credit upon you, has brought profit and prestige to the company, and has touched the lives of its many employees with newer hopes, higher ambitions and renewed enthusiasm.

"It is accordingly our pleasure to wish you many more years as president of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and to extend the assurance of our loyalty and best efforts that we may continue to merit the favor of your counsel and command."

The Brunet Anniversary Month competition during March is also hailed by Pathe officials as another evidence of the evidence of the success of Mr. Brunet's four years' administration. The contest opened February 27th after a six weeks' qualifying competition conducted for the purpose of classifying the exchange branches in the five divisions, within which, respectively, each branch made its fight for its division's definite list of prizes. It was supervised from the Home Office by General Sales Manager E. A. Eschmann from the time of General Manager Elmer Pearson's announcement to the branches that the contest was in honor of President Paul Brunet's fourth anniversary as chief of Pathe, and that, "the winners, figuratively, will have to take off their coats, roll up their sleeves, and work as they never worked before."

"They certainly have done all that, and more," said Mr. Eschmann, making a general statement of the result. "It was much more than an ordinary sales contest for cash prizes. It was a practical and spontaneous whole-hearted expression of regard for Paul Brunet personally, and of loyalty to and confidence in the President of Pathe Exchange. The remarkable re-

"Giving Value Is True Economy"

There are two types of economy, according to Frank L. Newman, owner of the Newman theatres, Kansas City—economy in price and economy in business methods. In no other industry is this statement more adequately adapted than in the motion picture business. It is the latter form of economy upon which Mr. Newman has based his success in theatre operation. The $1,000,000 Newman Theatre, the Royal and Twelfth Street theatres in Kansas City stand as tributes to his success.

"One of the most closely adhered to rules of my policy always has been to sell every show at the same price," said Mr. Newman. "True, many productions warrant higher admission charges on account of their unusual merit and cost of production, but my patrons have never been made to bear the extra burden of expense. There has been much comment as to whether an exhibitor can maintain a 40-piece orchestra, stage occasional prologues and songalogues and yet keep his audiences primarily interested in the feature picture. It can be done, easily.

"A prologue should be something that improves a picture, not take the place of it or tell a part of the story in advance of the picture. The prologue should merely be an added attraction and should leave the public in a receptive mood for the feature production. Directors who devote their entire time to the making of pictures are much more capable of bringing out the vital points of a production than an exhibitor.

"I am a staunch believer in good music. My orchestra of 40 pieces at the Newman Theatre is one of my largest expenses, but I never allow the music to dominate the picture. As to economy in operation, a complete sprinkler system installed by me not long ago has resulted in a reduction of 85 per cent in my insurance. All suggestions made to me by fire inspectors are carried out at once. Give the public every consideration—provide comforts that will make your patrons feel that they are indirectly attached to the theatre. All of my houses are fully equipped with fire preventives. An exhibitor owes this much to his patrons.

"Yet, never forget the picture. That is the thing. I believe in featuring a type of program that includes orchestra, current events, prologues, songalogues and short subjects. Sell the feature picture—nothing else. The box office value controls film rentals. Due to the fact that vaudeville houses now are showing first run pictures, in addition to several acts of vaudeville, the 'average' picture is gradually losing in rental. All of which makes it imperative that a feature picture must have real merit and drawing power, in order that it may withstand the competition of combination houses. Expensive settings do not necessarily increase the drawing power of a picture, but, on the other hand, if the production is especially adapted to lavish settings and they will increase its drawing power—then they should be used.

"As the public, not the exhibitors, views the situation, censorship is proving a great barrier to good pictures. 'Impossible' climaxes and endings are being forced in productions, in order to appease the wrath of censors, which give the pictures an untrue ring, improbable and unnatural in actual life. The novels from which productions are taken are not censored—why should the picture then be censored? Is it any worse to read than to see?"

Portland Exhibitor Winner in Prize Contest

Paul E. Noble, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Portland, Ore., has been declared winner of the first prize ($150.00 cash) in the exploitation contest among exhibitors conducted by Associated First National on "The Silent Call."

Willard C. Patterson won second prize ($100.00) for the campaign he put over with "The Silent Call" at the Metropolitan, in Atlanta.

Third prize ($50.00) was won by W. J. Bittner, manager of the Cambria, Johnstown, Pa.

The awards were made by a jury composed of John Spargo, Exhibitors Herald; Epes W. Sargent, Moving Picture World; J. S. Dickerson, Motion Picture News; R. W. Baremore, Morning Telegraph, and Charles Simpson, Exhibitors Trade Review.

10-Year Contract Signed by Selznick and Select

Selznick Pictures Corporation have just signed a ten-year contract with Select Pictures Corporation for the distribution of their product through Select exchanges. The new contract was executed last week, President Myron Selznick appearing for the producing company and Lewis J. Selznick, President of Select, signing for the distributing concern.

The new contract was made necessary by the recent reorganization of what have for a long time been known to the trade as the Selznick interests through which Select Pictures Corporation and Selznick Pictures Corporation were entirely divorced from each other in a business way. The designation of the Selznick producing company as merely one independent unit, moreover, is in line with Select's recent announcement that it was in the market to distribute worthwhile photoplay attractions made by any producer.

New York F.I.L.M. Club Holds Entertainment

The F. I. L. M. Club of New York again gave one of their very entertaining parties to their many friends on Saturday evening last at Automobile Club, 247 West 54th Street, New York City. About 300 couples attended and enjoyed the festivities.

There were many out of town guests including Mr. Alfred S. Black of Boston. The punch bowls were well patronized.

Mr. W. E. Raynor, Chairman of entertainment committee, acted as master-of-ceremonies, ably assisted by Messrs. Murray, Iris and Rodner.

"Cut Rentals or We Lay Case Before Public"

Wisconsin Exhibitors' Demand for Reduced Expenses Extend to Studios

AS a result of a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin held February 21, the findings of which have only now been made public, a battle of some proportions is threatened between the theatre owners, producers and others in the industry. It was the sense of the meeting that unless radical reductions were made in rental prices of films, what are alleged as true conditions would be widely exploited and the fight put directly up to the movie going public, which is responsible for the success of any production.

At the conclusion of the meeting resolutions were adopted demanding of screen stars, directors, producers and distributors that they modify what was termed their insatiable demand for exhorbitant remuneration for the pictures they make in order that such pictures in question may be put into the hands of the theatre owners at fair and equitable prices."

According to a statement made the claim is put forth that the Government tax reports for 1921 show that exhibitors paid eleven million dollars more for rentals in 1921 than in 1920 and the same reports show a loss of forty-three million dollars in receipts for the same period.

Owners of theatres, according to a resolution adopted, are largely responsible for establishing prominent stars by supporting and boosting and generally establishing them. The claim is made that the exhibitors and their patrons are almost entirely responsible for the profits to directors, producers and artists and that the exhibitor is entitled to more consideration in the price of his film, and the patron entitled to more consideration by a reduction in admission prices that would be possible if rental prices on pictures were reduced by the exhibitor.

A part of the resolution reads as follows:

"RESOLVED, That unless relief in the measure above requested be granted us, that we, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin, shall with pitiless publicity lay our case before the tribunal of public opinion and shall do our best to enlist the co-operation and support of our patrons in supporting only those who show a disposition to co-operate with us in our efforts to keep open our theatres and to bring the price of screen entertainment within reach of our patrons at a time when they need, as never before, the diversion the screen affords, and which they now find it so difficult to benefit by, owing to the general depression and high prices of entertainment."

The part of the resolution relating to a reduction in salaries by the directors, stars and others reads:

"RESOLVED, That we, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the State of Wisconsin, make a demand upon the stars particularly, the producer, directors, and distributors, to voluntarily reduce their salaries and demands for remuneration to the extent that film rentals can and will be cut forty (40) per cent from 1920 prices."

To further impress those upon whom these demands are being made, the resolution continues:

"RESOLVED, That a printed copy of this resolution be mailed directly to every screen actor of note, to every trade journal, to every distributor, and to every producer, and that sufficient copies be mailed to the officers of every state branch of the M. P. T. O. of A., to reach every exhibitor in every state, as well as copies to be placed on file with our national headquarters."

Gunning Pictures Sold for Foreign Field

Trading Corporation Consummates Deal Involving Tremendous Sum

THE most important foreign deal consummated in many months was closed early this week, by which the Apollo Trading Corporation (Lawrence Weber, Bobby North, Ben Hicks) are to handle the foreign market on all productions released by Wid Gunning, Inc. According to officials of the Apollo Trading Corporation, the contract runs into the million dollar figures.

The announcement, coming at this time, is of particular interest to the industry and to business at large, because of the general belief that the foreign market was stagnant, and that American business men were marking time until more stable conditions obtained abroad.

That the officials of the Apollo Trading Corporation, who have been watching the foreign market with the greatest care, should now enter into the deal, is taken generally as an indication of their confidence in the recuperation of Europe economically.

According to the statement of the Apollo Company, the term of the contract will run for a long period of years, and will call for its handling exclusively the releases of the Gunning organizaiton.

The Company will export and distribute aroad: "What Do Men Want?" and "The Blot," Lois Weber productions; "The Girl From God's Country," a Nell Shipman feature; "White Hands," a Graf Production, starring Hobart Bosworth; "The Old Oaken Bucket," a May Tully feature; "The Fire Bride," an Alder and Unander production; Wray Physioc's "The Madness of Love" and "The Love Nest"; "The Bootleggers"; "Alias Phil Kennedy"; a number of Victor Schertzinger specials, the first of which, "Dollar Devils," had just been completed; all future Lois Weber productions, and twelve specials to be made by Wid Gunning.

In announcing the closing of this big deal, the officials of the Apollo Trading Company issued this statement:

"The Apollo Trading Corporation has followed with extreme care and study the pulse of foreign distribution, which is generally believed to be now stagnant. Reports and indications from many foreign countries, however, have been garnered, and are the basis for the belief that the foreign market is now on the upward trend, and will develop steadily towards a once more normal condition.

"The Apollo believes that American pictures of high class, with universal appeal, not only will not meet with opposition in foreign countries, but will actually be welcomed.

The Gunning pictures meet the requirements of the present foreign market to the highest degree, in that they contain maximum mass interest, story value, production and acting.

"In addition to the pictures already released, there was taken into consideration in putting through the deal the fact that important production plans are under way, under direct supervision of Wid Gunning, and that a number of big productions are forthcoming in the near future.

"Among these productions are a number of pictures directed by Victor Schertzinger, of which one, "Dollar Devils," has been completed; future productions by Lois Weber, who made "What Do Men Want?" and "The Blot," two big winners; and twelve specials to be made by Wid Gunning with noted directors."

More on Press Books

THE following from Peter Bylsma, Manager of the Victory Theatre at Napoleonville, La., is self-explanatory:

Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Gentlemen:—

I have read with considerable interest, your recent editorial; also articles from various exhibitors anent the press sheet question.

It certainly is remarkable what a vast amount of ignorance is displayed by those responsible for the issuance of press sheets and exhibitors' campaign books.

Just why advertising matter that the exhibitor wants to use for exploitation purposes should be rendered absolutely useless because of stuff (Stuff is right), that concerns the distributor and exhibitor only, stuff spread over every page, such as "Launch this Campaign," "Flash this beautiful slide at every show," "Catch lines!" Catch what? The public does not regard with favor any implication that it is a sucker, and "Catch" suggests fish.

Almost every page contains "inside information" which offsets completely, any value such sheets may have as an advertising medium.

The only way I have been able to utilize any of this "stuff" is by cutting out columns, or half-columns, of reading matter that gave information about the picture itself, thus eliminating "Teaser paragraphs," "Suggestions for throwaway." Who wants a suggestion of this nature when you feel like throwing the whole thing away.

Oh yes, a press sheet might assist the exhibitor materially if it could be used verbatim instead of "verboten."

In conclusion, if an exchange or distributor wants to offer me advice as to the best method of advertising, I'm willin', but don't disfigure the press sheets with a lot of "stuff" not intended for the public eye, the public wants information about the picture. My business methods may not interest the patron at all if he gets what he has a right to expect."

New Cinema Cable Code Is Being Compiled

A new cable code, designed exclusively for the use of the motion picture industry, is now being compiled by the American Code Company and will be ready for distribution in the near future. The National Association is actively engaged in the plans.

The new code for the motion picture industry will be known as The Cinema Code. It is an abbreviation of all existing codes insomuch as three-letter words will prevail, instead of the five-letter words which at present are used by other industries.

Goldwyn Manager Tells of English Conditions

A. George Smith, managing director of Goldwyn, Ltd., Goldwyn's English branch, arrived in New York from London last week to confer with the home office executives. A summary of Mr. Smith's comments on conditions in England follows:

A campaign is under way to secure the abolition of the entertainment tax which is a big handicap. A substantial reduction, if not a complete revocation of the tax, is looked for.

Censorship is but little discussed. The government is disposed to accept the trade's own censorship.

The ban on German pictures has been removed by the C. E. A. Early showings of German product are looked for.

British pictures are steadily improving. A National Association to which both producers and exhibitors belong has been formed. Trade conditions have been bad, but there is a commendable disposition to improve present theatres and build newer and greater buildings.

The cinema business has had a rough season. Careless selection of programs is partly the cause. Blind booking is practically dead, but block booking prevails to a considerable extent. Exhibitors are still backward in the matter of advertising. Only recently has there been any ready sympathy on the part of editors to encourage the industry.

Sam E. Morris Sails for England April 11th

On April 11 Sam E. Morris, accompanied by Mrs. Morris and their son, Edwin, sails for England, where as recently announced, he becomes president of Select Pictures, Inc., a corporation formed to handle Select's foreign distribution.

One of the pleasant eposides in connection with the departure of one of the most popular and highly esteemed of Select's officials was a beefsteak dinner his friends in the picture business and the employees of Select and Selznick tendered him the evening of April 8.

Kansas Exhibitors to Have Business Manager

WITHIN a week a business manager of the M. P. T. O. Kansas will be appointed, thereby constituting the initial step towards transforming the exhibitors' organization into a business institution." Since the adoption, at the semi-annual convention at Wichita, Kas., of a plan to employ a business manager to assume charge of the organization's business affairs, M. Van Praag, president, has been considering men eligible for the position.

Since the return of Mr. Van Praag to Kansas City from the convention every exchange, which was not represented at the convention, has pledged itself to refrain from renting film to non-theatrical institutions, with the exception of United Artists. Educational and scenic films were not included in the agreement.

Cut Price a Success

MAX MARCUS, owner and manager of the U. S. Theatre, Woodland Avenue and East 30th Stre Cleveland, everybody's friend, and a m whose word can be implicitly taken, ma the unique statement the other day th he is filling his house every night and th he is making money.

In the face of so many contrary statements from other exhibitors, it is interesting to diagnose Marcus' house, his location, his clientele, and his method of procedure.

The U. S. Theatre is a big place. has 1,400 seats. Marcus says he can a does easily stand up 400 more. The theatre is located in the midst of a foreig settlement. His patrons are all depende upon the Saturday night envelope. Jo in that district have been scarce.

One reason for the success of the U. Theatre is the fact that Marcus foresa the labor conditions and cut his prices ten cents just as soon as the bubble bur He had been getting up to 30 cents duri war time. Ten cents was his pre-w admission price. His patrons could co tinue to pay 10 cents. They still contin to find 10 cents somewhere in their jean and the result is that the U. S. Theatre a financial success.

"The only way to meet the present co dition," says Marcus, "is to cut down th overhead. I did that first. Then I cut th admission price. In order to make mone exhibiting a picture, it is necessary to fi your seats. I am doing it at 10 cents seat. And it's been such a successful e terprise that even at 10 cents I can no give my patrons more for their money tha I could a year ago. When I started t slash my prices I eliminated the orchestr I kept one piece.

"When business became stabilized fo me, and I saw things coming fairly well, put in a second musical piece. A thir followed, and now I am running a fou piece orchestra and making money. Wha do I give 'em for 10 cents? I give 'em five-reel feature, a two-reel western, or serial, a news reel, and a comedy.

"You see, it's this way: I'd a whole l rather fill my house every night, as I a doing, at 10 cents a seat than play to empt benches at 30 cents a seat."

The Allen theatre of Cleveland ha changed hands. This was learned on Fr day, when the Allen Cleveland Theatr Company was incorporated in Columbu The deal disclosed the fact that control o the Allen theatre has passed from Jul and J. J. Allen to a group of Clevelander whose names have not been made know

The taking over of the Allens' ninet nine year lease by the new company mark the termination of the Allens' manageme of the first theatres secured in the Unite States by the Allen Theatres, Ltd. It said, however, that the Allens are sti retaining an interest in the new Clevela organization.

Goldwyn Names Winners of Scenario Contest

Goldwyn-Chicago Daily News Competition Had Entry List of 27,000 Stories

THE Chicago Daily News on April first announced the winners in the $30,000 scenario contest and some of the facts brought out in conjunction with the announcement and the results of the contest may prove revolutionary in the history of screen writing.

The scenario contest, which closed last November, with an entry list of over 27,000 stories and 20,000 authors, has provoked wide interest and considerable discussion in screen circles during the last few months. The Goldwyn Company, which, with the News, read all the submissions, has contracted to produce the first prize-winning story. From November until the end of March, the Goldwyn Company was busy reading all the submissions and all the resources of the New York editorial department, under the supervision of Eugene Mullin, Editor, with a staff of expert readers and technicians, were brought into play to give each manuscript the thorough reading an analysis the importance of the contest warranted. It is rather interesting to note how the Daily News and the Goldwyn Company handled these submissions. Although the judges were, for the most part, moving picture authorities and trained technicians, the prizes have gone almost in their entirety to amateurs.

Mr. Mullin, in commenting upon the final results stated: "Professional writers, of whom there must have been hundreds entered, gradually fell behind in the race and, in the final list, with one or two exceptions, are not represented at all. The matter of finally selecting the last 31 involved a great deal of spirited discussion and clashes of opinion among the judges during the final days of the contest, which was rendered all the more exciting by the fact that the judges in question, D. W. Griffith, Samuel Goldywn, Norma Talmadge, Charles Chaplin, Rupert Hughes (all of the film world), Gertrude Atherton, Gouverneur Morris, Mary Roberts Rinehart, authors, and Amy Leslie, dramatic critic of the Chicago Daily News, the Culver City and New York editorial departments of the Goldwyn Company were all scattered in various parts of the country so that final agreements were reached only after the exchange of many long and exciting wires. Right up to the last day the matter of the first prize was in doubt, but in the final voting the $10,000 check went to Miss Lavinia Henry, nom de plume for Miss Winifred Kimball, of Apalachicola, Fla., and the story is "Broken Chains," a powerful, graphically written story presented in a well constructed, tersely written motion picture synopsis of five thousand words. The other prize winners are scattered from coast to coast and from border to border. The contest appealed to people of all regions of the country and of many walks of life. It has been learned that housewives, workingmen, all sorts of persons who have had no literary experience but ever-present literary ambitions were given encouragement to try their talents at a work that is deemed badly needed—namely the furnishing and contributing of original and excellent themes to the art of the motion picture.

The list of prize winners follow:

First Prize, $10,000. "Lavinia Henry," nom de plume for Miss Winifred Kimball of Apalachicola, Fla., whose story is "Broken Chains."

Second Prizes, $1,000 each: Albert D. Barker, Prospect Street, West Bridgewater, Mass.; "The Verdict of the Sea."

Michigan M. P. T. O. Sends Out Questionnaire

FOLLOWING is the list of questions being sent to all exhibitors in Michigan by H. M. Richey, general-manager of the M. P. T. O. of Michigan. The questionnaire is a part of the state organization's campaign to reduce rentals.

"1. Are you operating at a loss? If so, to what do you attribute the cause and why?

"2. Have you reduced other running expenses? Be specific. Tell where. Also what salary, if any, you are allowing yourself.

"3. Have your film rentals increased or decreased during the present season? Give percentage.

"4. What exchanges are selling you films at a rental that you feel is fair, or at a price that you can get a legitimate profit?

"5. What exchanges have made no reductions in price and are demanding prices that are excessive or are causing you a loss?

"6. Is competition in your neighborhood keeping up the price of film rentals?

"7. What in your opinion is the most effective method of reducing film rentals, and are you willing to cooperate with the association to reduce rentals?

"8. Would you be willing to submit your books and other facts and figures to an arbitration committee of exhibitors in an effort to secure livable rentals?

"9. What has been your experience with so-called 'super' specials, etc. Be specific with name of picture, facts and figures.

"10. Have you postponed giving play dates on pictures because you could not afford to play them at a loss? .What exchanges?

"11. With what exchanges have you unexpired contracts?

"12. What stars have ceased to draw at your theatre, making it impossible for you to play them?"

Brunet Honored

sult means unequivocal admiration for a quality of industrial leadership that is all too rare, in these or any other times. It is also an expression of gratitude for the privilege of uninterrupted employment, of security through a trying economic period, gained only under leadership of such proved capacity.

"Although the returns are far from complete as yet," said Mr. Eschmann, "and the winning teams accordingly not yet determined, the gross sales and collections resulting from the 'Brunet Anniversary Contest' exceed the most sanguine Home Office anticipations. The fact that general business conditions were less favorable than existed at the time of previous contests does not seem to have had any influence on the spirits or energy of the contestants. The certainty that the business was there is proved by the circumstance that they went out and got it. Practically every branch quota is exceeded, with returns still coming in.

"The extent to which sentiment entered into the contest is a convincing expression of the personal popularity which President Brunet has won in all ranks of the Pathe organization.

The returns have not yet determined with certainty what teams are winners. In each instance the prize money will be divided on the basis of forty per cent for the branch manager and sixty per cent to be shared equally between all the winning Pathe salesmen, assistant manager, booker, cashier, etc. Wherever a tie results, the full award will go to each branch thus tied.

The capital prizes fought for within each division are: First Division, $2,500; Second Division, $1,500; Third Division, $1,000; Fourth Division, $750; Fifth Division, $500.

New Film Ruling Made on Rental Tax

A RULING of much importance to the motion picture industry was announced yesterday in Washington by Deputy Commissioner A. C. Holden of the Bureau of Internal Revenue regarding the application of the 5% rental tax to certain forms of contracts made in 1921.

The official ruling follows:

"Where a deposit of approximately 10% of the rental is exacted but the film is not exhibited and the balance of the rental paid until after January 1, 1922, the tax imposed under Section 906 does not apply in the case of a transaction of this nature; if, however, practically the full rental is paid at the time of entering into the contract and such contract is made prior to January 1, 1922, the tax would attach.

"If a contract of this kind was not fulfilled and the rental charge refunded, the taxpayer would be entitled to a refund of the tax thereon.

"Respectfully,
"(Signed) A. C. HOLDEN,
"Deputy Commissioner of
"Internal Revenue."

Illinois Theatre Owners Hold Convention

THE Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners convention was held Tuesday and Wednesday at the Sherman Hotel, Chicago, and plans were made for building up and strengthening the organization. The Board of Directors was increased to twenty-seven, eleven from Chicago and sixteen from outside cities.

A sharp debate resulted over the candidates. At the suggestion of John Silha, Joe Hopp, Debilka and Louis Frank withdrew as candidates in the interest of harmony and the election of the following then resulted: Nathan Joseph, Ludvig Siegel, George Hopkinson, Julius Tamin, D. Chrissis, H. Geldson, Sidney Selig, Harry Kaufman, Verne Langdon, Sam Abrams and A. Powell of Chicago; Glen Reynolds, Dee Robinson, W. W. Watts, L. M. Rubens, Ben Beive, Charles Lamb, William Pearl, J. C. Miller, J. Taber, Adam Dernbach, Charles Law, Gus Keresotus, outside of Chicago. This leaves four out of town members to be elected from districts not now represented.

Among the resolutions passed was one calling on national officers to bring about closer relations with the producer and distributor organizations and report steps to this end.

The growing number of special producer's weeks was condemned and a resolution was passed declaring the Association was not opposed to the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association.

Woman Commissioner Given Suggestions

On March 29, a party of Rochester motion picture exhibitors tendered a luncheon at the Hotel Rochester to Mrs. Deloss G. Eldredge, who had as her guest Mrs. Eli T. Hosmer, member of the New York State Motion Picture Commission, who was in Rochester as a delegate to the convention of Republican women of the state.

During the luncheon Mrs. Hosmer invited questions regarding the processes of the Motion Picture Commission and the exhibitors questioned her freely. Mrs. Hosmer admitted she had received valuable suggestions as to future operation of the board, among which was one that the commission should issue a catalogue of pictures together with their license numbers for the information and protection of exhibitors, and that provision should be made so that an exhibitor in the absence of a license number on a film might avail himself of temporary emergency measures.

Discuss Nationalization of Indiana Endorsement Plan

The nationalization of the Indiana plan of photoplay endorsement was discussed at the annual meeting of the Indiana Indorsers of Photoplays at the Claypool Hotel, Indianapolis, on Wednesday, April 5. Mrs. David Ross, president of the Indiana Indorsers and of the National Indorsers of Photoplays, presided at the meeting. W. D. McGuire, executive secretary of the Board of Review, attended.

Convention Plans Include Accessory Exposition

An unusually large response of a favorable nature, from theatre owners, in all parts of the United States, features the all sent out from the headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America for the big National convention of that body, which will be held in Washington, D. C., week of Monday, May 8th.

A large number of accessory manufacturers and others have arranged to take space in the Accessory Exposition which will be held at the Coliseum on Pennsylvania Avenue.

The convention proper will be held in the ball-room of the New Willard Hotel, which accommodates upwards of three thousand people. The first session of the convention will open about noon, Monday, May 8, and then regular morning and afternoon, sessions will be held until Friday evening, when it is expected the final work of the convention will be cared for. Prominent officials of the Government will be present at different sessions, and there are a number of very pronounced surprises of an agreeable character in store for the exhibitors.

Changes Are Announced in Lasky Departments

Claud Saunders, director of Paramount exploitation, announces that J. Albert Thorn has been placed in charge of the reorganized department of Lithographs and Lobby Accessories.

Thorn has been with Paramount five years. Since S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution for Famous Players-Lasky Corp., established the lithograph department under the Division of Exploitation, Thorn has been conducting experiments in multi-colored lobby cards and other new departures in accessories.

John J. Friedl, for many years publicity manager for the Hostettler theatres throughout the Dakotas, has joined the Paramount exploitation staff and has been stationed at Des Moines.

Claude Saunders, director of Paramount exploitation, also announces the transfer of Albert Boasberg from the Detroit exchange to Albany. John D. Howard, exploiteer at Albany exchange goes to Detroit to succeed Boasberg.

Robertson-Cole Wins Suit Over Carpentier Photos

THE suit brought by Lumiere against Robertson-Cole, claiming infringement of copyright of photographs of Carpentier, has recently been decided in the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The decision of the lower court in favor of Robertson-Cole was affirmed, on the ground that Lumiere was hired to make these photographs and was paid for them by Robertson-Cole, to whom they belong, together with any rights of copyright.

This case is of interest to the motion picture industry, because of the numerous suits brought by Lumiere, actions against Pathe, Goldwyn and others, being still pending.

Musicians Lockout Likely in St. Louis Houses

Danger of a lockout of the musicians of the St. Louis moving picture shows on May 1, when the present contracts with the Musicians' Mutual Benefit Association expire, looms more alarming.

On Friday, March 31, the United Theatre Managers of St. Louis representing all the moving picture houses charging more than 15 cents admission and all the vaudeville and dramatic houses, served an ultimatum on the musicians, notifying them that the houses would play without music at the expiration of existing contracts unless the players immediately signify their intention of accepting a 30 per cent reduction in wages and agree to certain changes in the working agreement.

The legitimate houses have contracts for the remainder of their season, but will not sign a new contract unless wages are cut.

The Board of Directors of the musicians' union was in executive session all day April 1, but no statement was given to the theatremen or the press as to the intentions of the union.

Hoy Plan Extends to Five More Territories

The first practical step in the direction of nationalizing the exchange managers boards of trade and the Hoy Reporting Service was taken last week. In five cities existing managers' associations were reorganized and re-named, the Hoy Reporting Service was installed and is now functioning with arbitration boards composed of equal representation of exhibitors and exchanges. These cities are: Detroit, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and Washington, D. C.

The inclusion of these cities in the Hoy Service plan brings the total of exchanges now functioning as film boards of trade with the credit rating system of the Hoy Service up to ten in number. The other exchange centers are New York, Albany, Buffalo, New Haven and Boston.

New York Law Provides for Standard Buildings

THE McGinnies bill, providing for a New York state standard building code in connection with motion picture theatres and other places of public gathering, was signed by the Governor this week. The bill was introduced in the legislature following the Knickerbocker disaster in Washington, D. C.

The law gives the state industrial board authority to adopt a minimum building standard which supersedes any existing special law or local ordinances which may be inconsistent. The industrial commission will supervise the enforcement of the code except in cities which have a department or office charged with the enforcement of its building laws. In all other places the state police will be the enforcing authority. The law carries with it an appropriation of $10,000 to be used for enforcement purposes.

In a special bulletin issued by the National Protective Association it is stated that the Industrial Board of the Department of Labor and Industry of Pennsylvania, in its latest list of proposed rules governing the exhibition of films in places other than theatres and factories, has omitted a clause which would restrict permits for exhibition only where approved fireproof booths are provided. Such mission, the N.F.P.A. contends, will make permissible the use of inflammable film in homes, schools, churches, etc., without adequate fire protection.

The Bulletin registers a protest against the omission of such a protective clause and calls for the re-insertion in the Industrial Board's list of rules of just such a provision previously recommended by the N.F.P.A. The Industrial Board has been considering regulations for the exhibition of film in non-theatrical houses since July, 1921, with a view to compiling a comprehensive code of rules.

Assistant Directors Meet and Will Organize

The Assistant Directors in the East met Monday evening in New York for the purpose of discussing the forming of an association, similar to the one now existing in Los Angeles. Bert Sutch, who is D. W. Griffith's Assistant, was made Chairman of the meeting with Walter R. Sheridan acting as secretary.

Among the other equally well known assistants, who were able to be present on that occasion were: Ben Behrens, George Kleine, Warren Fromme, Joseph Boyle, Charles Berner, Frank Bates, Eddie James, Al Reibach, Charles Van Aredale, Billy Hamilton, Eddie Lawrence, Chaddy Graham, William Harvey and Cullen Tate.

The next meeting will take place next Wednesday evening.

Drastic Censorship Hurts British Film Game

A report of film conditions in the United Kingdom has been received by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry from the U. S. Department of Commerce. Drastic censorship and inferior films are given as the principal causes for the falling off in attendance at picture houses in England.

British films are said to be decidedly inferior to American product and a sense of patriotism prompts the exhibitor to show the home product, though the public is willing to pay the price for the proper kind of high class films.

The two most important censorship regulations issued recently are:

"No films are to be exhibited in any theatre holding a Council license unless they have been previously passed by the British Board of Film Censors.

"After July 1, 1922, no person under the age of 16, unless accompanied by a parent or bona fide guardian, shall be present at any theatre, where films passed by the board for public or adult, but not for universal exhibition, are shown."

Educational Film President Returns from Coast

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., returned to New York a few days ago from Los Angeles, where he spent several weeks with producers, whose product is released by Educational, and with Educational's Pacific Coast representatives.

Plans were perfected by Mr. Hammons and the producers for a large share of Educational's program for next season. Contracts providing for certain changes in the production schedules for some of Educational's series of comedies are now in process of preparation for signature.

The program outlined for the studios on the Pacific Coast, together with the acquisition of certain other pictures, will be announced soon.

Missouri Exhibitors Hold Convention in St. Louis

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri convened at the Hotel Statler, St. Louis, Mo., on April 5th and 6th. The first day was marked by the discussion of plans to combat attacks on the industry and oppose individuals seeking to advance their personal prestige by onslaughts on the screen.

A resolution was passed favoring the passage of the Lambert bill in Congress. This measure favors the repealing of the music tax law. With a view to bring about lower rentals the executive committee of the state body will begin an investigation of the salaries paid movie stars. Seventy-five out-of-town exhibitors attended the convention.

Motion-Picture Conference in Atlanta April 28th

A SOUTHEASTERN conference on Motion Pictures called by the Better Films Committee of Atlanta, Ga., for April 28th will bring to Atlanta several nationally known figures, and it is rumored that one of the very high-up officials in the ranks of producer and distributors will represent the profession from New York. Well known figures on the conference program are: Burdette G. Lewis, Commissioner Institutions and Agencies of New Jersey and former assistant to the late Mayor John Purroy Mitchel; Orrin G. Cocks, secretary of the National Committee for Better Films; Mrs. Fred Lucas, chairman of the Motion Picture Comittee of the National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher associations; Mrs. W. S. Jennings, first vice-president of the National Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. David Ross, president National Photoplay Indorsers and others.

The purpose of the conference was stated in one sentence "to consider constructive means of bettering Motion Pictures through promotion of better films and co-operation with exhibitors." Delegates numbering more than 200 from Kentucky, Tennessee, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, and Mississippi, and comprising representative men and women from those states will be in attendance.

The co-operation of more than four hundred theatres in the Southern states has been pledged.

F.I.L.M. Club Is Formed in Cleveland

Cleveland has an F. I. L. M. club. It is being formed according to the Hoye system, and, it is said, will eventually become a part of the national organization.

Local officers elected at the initial meeting are as follows: President, W. J. Kimes, manager Goldwyn exchange; vice-president, C. E. Holah, manager Wid Gunning exchange; secretary, Tom Colby, manager Universal exchange; treasurer, Percy Block, manager, Famous Players-Lasky exchange. Executive committee: C. E. Almy, Metro manager; M. Goldman, Robertson Cole manager, and Phil Selznick, president of Phil Selznick productions.

The Cleveland F. I. L. M. Club will meet every Friday evening.

International to Increase Studio Facilities

The International Film Corporation, controlled by William Randolph Hearst, is planning extensive additions to its New York studios, at present taking in a full block between 126th and 127th streets and running from First to Second avenues. The newly acquired lot just purchased from the estate of Mary A. F. Draper takes in a block front on the west side of First avenue from 126th to 127th streets. The plans for improvement include the building of a large studio on the site, according to press reports.

The Reader Has His Say

"Dear Mr. Johnston:

"I have just finished reading Mr. Eppstein's article in your March 18th issue and I cannot tell you how glad I am that I've found somebody who is not obsessed with the admission lowering mania and who is possessed of the two-day feature run for small towns. Again, I cannot refrain from asking: "Haven't small town exhibitors yet discovered that the two-day booking policy is two-thirds of their salvation?"

"As outlined in my recent 'Seeing It Through' article, I am showing every picture two days and have been doing so for seven months. Receipts have increased, not decreased—because they do not see one of those impossible 'star series' pictures once a month. The two-day policy was inaugurated within seven weeks after I took over this theatre. With it, admission (adult) was increased from 25c. to 30c. This theatre, however, is unusually elaborate for a town of 3,200 population—thus the 30c. admission.

"Experiences differ, of course, but in towns of 2,500 population, or more, where there is but one theatre, it would appear that the two-day policy could not help but be a great advantage. Our move in that direction was prompted by a six weeks' study of patrons, through which we discovered that there were not ten people who attended the theatre every night. Buying a new picture for ten people is idiotic on the face of it. The majority, of course, attended two or three times a week, but a change every other day gets thm just the same.

"I have the utmost respect for Mr. Eppstein's policy. Apparently, he has a broad knowledge of the fact that a small town theatre will not run itself any more than the New York Rialto will. Such a simple and inexpensive little "stunt" as that of placing a violinist behind the scenes to play "Humoresque" during the screening of that picture, according to the music cue sheet, was considered quite a novelty merely because no details were ever worked out here before on the thousand and on problems of presentation.

"More power to our Southern brother and his undeniably conspicuous knowledge of showmanship!

"Yours very truly,
"FREDERICK C. HINDS,
"Cresco Theatre,
"Cresco, Iowa."

Western Penn. Exhibitors to Hold Conference

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania will hold their second annual convention on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, April 10-11-12, at the Fort Pitt Hotel, Pittsburgh. Sidney S. Cohen, National President, and Senator Jas. Walker, National Counsel, will attend.

Paramount Anniversary Closes with Ball

THE celebration of Paramount's Tenth Anniversary Month was brought to a fitting close the evening of March 31, when some fifteen hundred people danced into the early hours of April at the annual ball of the Paramount Club at the Hotel Commodore. It was one of the largest social affairs of its kind ever given within the industry and was attended by a notable galaxy of celebrities of the motion picture and theatrical world.

Nils T. Granlund was master of ceremonies following the dancing and introduced many professional entertainers. Among those contributing to the program were: Phelps and Tanning, Alexander Carr, Eddie Cox, Brock Sisters, Frisco, Johnny Hines, Bernard Granville, Harry Rose, Fay Marbe, George Martin, Sissle and Blake, Frankie Farnum, Jim Barton, Baby Dorothy Olive, Miriam Battista and Aleta Dore.

Stanley Co. Buys Interest in Philadelphia House

The Plaza theatre, at Broad and Jackson streets, Philadelphia, one of the largest and most elaborate buildings exclusively devoted to the showing of motion pictures in South Philadelphia, has been acquired for Stanley Company of America direction by the purchase of Edmund J. Bamberger's interest in the enterprise by Jules E. Mastbaum, President of the Stanley Company. Mr. Morris Spier retains his interest.

The Plaza theatre, which was erected during the latter part of 1912 and completed and opened to the public on May 30th, 1913, was then considered to be the most modern house of its kind in the city. It occupies a lot of 180 feet on Broad street by 100 feet deep, and seats 1,600. The stage is equipped with the latest devices and was built to accommodtae vaudeville and other productions on a large scale, besides motion pictures.

St. Louis Theatres Act to Reduce Musicians Wage

The moving picture, dramatic, and vaudeville theatres of St. Louis have demanded of the local Musicians' Union that the wages of musicians in the city be reduced approximately 30 per cent when the present contract expires on April 30.

The musicians have rejected these demands, and at their last meeting appointed a special committee to meet a similar committee of eight representing the theatres to see if a compromise can be reached. The first of these conferences was held in the Musicians' Union headquarters on Tuesday, March 21.

The theatre owners insist that there must be a substantial reduction in the price of music. The general public is demanding lower admission prices and the musicians must do their part to make it possible to meet the wishes of the patrons of the shows, the exhibitors maintain.

PERSONAL APPEARANCES—
OPINIONS ON BOX OFFICE RESULTS OBTAINED

"The other day I had quite a chat with the owner of our leading daily; in the course of conversation, I told him frankly and in terms that could not be misconstrued, that I thought it was an outright shame, inconsistent with business judgment, and not a policy of fairness, to play up the "Hollywood scandal" as his and other papers had done. I made it clear that there appeared no more foundation for bringing in the name of nearly every popular star, than to connect the name of every ball player, at the time the "Black Sox" scandal broke. Here's his answer: 'I only partially agree with you. Do you know, Fred, that if the Baseball Magnates had been less farsighted, if they hadn't been brainy enough to get a man like Landis at the head, Baseball would be a thing of the past this season? And I want to say to you that Hays is YOUR only solution. I fully realize that you, and other theatre owners are the innocent sufferers, for I must say that from all I hear and see, your management is of the highest caliber, and gives no reflection for criticism. But you would be surprised, Fred, if you knew the talk that is going on, in places you don't often intermingle with, such as ladies' societies, social functions, clubs, churches, and gatherings of a like nature. All you hear is the filth, the degeneracy and the inflated salaries at Hollywood. We newspaper men got the 'inside dope' a long, long time ago. The public was slow to take hold, but today, your patrons are sick and disgusted with the rumors they hear about Hollywood. Long before we printed anything about the Arbuckle and Taylor cases, visitors and friends at the coast, wrote home, some perhaps boastfully, about what was going on in Hollywood. Your industry needs a thorough housecleaning. For your sake I hope that Hays is the man who can do it. If he fails—well, I make no prophecy, but you know what caused the downfall of the liquor dealers. It was not the great 'dry propaganda,' but the utter disregard and apparent indifference of the men who were IN the business, that made the name of Volstead a household word.' In the foregoing, I have told, almost verbatim, what this man said to me. I want to say in explanation that this party is VERY liberal; very independent—(to the extent of refusing many thousands of dollars, offered to his paper for DRY propoganda); he is decidedly ANTI blue law and against censorship. In fact, he is extremely BROAD. Now then. If a man of his caliber speaks as he does, what is the opinion of your average patron and mine? Trade papers are only partly justified in condemning the press for its yellow journalism in the Taylor case. In the first place, if things of late weren't happening so thick and fast, A. P. notices would be played up in 6 or 8 point, instead of 24 Chelt. And another thing. Granted that a great deal that has been printed is based on the imaginative mind of some special correspondent or the overworked brain fantasy of one of Hearst's cub reporters. Let's be consistent, and look things squarely in the eye. Brisbane, whom I personally consider our greatest newspaper man today, editorially condemns the press for its attacks. But his very papers are the worst offenders. And what about all the brazen articles that caused so much talk, published month after month in FILM TRUTH? I have been in this industry practically since it's inception. When a two reel picture was considered a FEATURE, you didn't hear any scandal, did you? No. And when five reelers first made their appearance, there was no gossip, or at least, it was carefully kept under cover. When Mary Pickford started her (so named) own company and distributed thru Artcraft, instead of Paramount, hell broke lose. You've seen "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." Well, we'll call this historical fact horse number one. Then when Triangle was established, we became acquainted with the 2nd horse, as the stock went up in smoke. And now the mad bidding for stars begins. Soda dispensers are made HEROES, department store girls of no ability except looks are recognized as STARS—chauffeurs become FAMOUS directors, and Horse number three triumphantly enters. From here on, it's a matter of recent history. The 4th horse arrived with Arbuckle, and it's galloping unhampered since. All four horses are running wild. Why? Following the Arbuckle case, Universal considered it good publicity to spread broadcast (and A. P. sure shot it out) that henceforth every Universal contract would contain a MORALITY clause. Was that GOOD publicity? Why was there need for such a clause, unless an urgent necessity demanded it?

"I am not trying to find fault with any and everything in our industry, but I heartily agree —altho unwillingly so—that unless we ourselves clean house, our business will slowly but surely diminish. We're concerned about censorship. If Fox hadn't conceived the idea of "getting rich quick," I doubt whether we would be bothered half as much about censors. We say that Blue laws are unconstitutional and un-American. Nicely said, but—would you subscribe to a sentiment that permitted a dancer or actress with a questionable character to hold the spot in your theatre, on Sunday or any other day in the week? You would NOT. Well, then, listen. I am thoroughly SOLD on the idea, absolutely convinced, that we no longer present THE SILENT DRAMA. Your patrons and mine know MORE about the members of the cast. I refrain from mentioning stars—than we do. And it makes them sick, nauseated, and billious to see Miss Cutie (we'll call her that for the moment; you can substitute many of your biggest drawing cards) act the innocent, MUCH ABUSED HEROINE, fighting for her freedom, when the public knows, or what is worse still—thinks it knows, what kind of a girl she is. How many theatre owners are there that can truthfully say that Mary Pickford is anywhere near as big a drawing card, as she was, before she married "Doug." The woman always pays! Citing a local instance, I will say that Pickford is dead; Fairbanks continues to please and draw. But to get back to the point. What will your patrons and mine THINK or feel, the next time they see Mary Miles Minter act her INNOCENT little part? True enough, Minter was dragged into this mess, but it's too late to explain. And besides, one Mrs. Grundy can do more harm than 1,000 boosters. What then, is the answer? First of all: Forget all about personal appearances of stars, at least for the present. Let this odor evaporate, and affairs gradually die down. Agree, don't argue, with the public, when they tell you what a horrible tale they've heard of the star you're playing today. Set yourself up as the innocent victim, the martyr, for you ARE, whether you realize it or not. And finally, WAKE UP TO THE FACT THAT ORGANIZATION IS OUR ONLY SOLUTION. When they said the country would go dry, we laughed. And we look with scorn and ridicule upon any prediction that our industry might fall by the way-side. We need less political wrangling, less petty jealousies, and MORE BACKBONE about our own affairs. Who cares whether Cohen or Brady removed the 5% tax. It's done. Let's thank them both. What do I care, how much graft Tom Jones gets out of a thing, so long as MY BUSINESS IS MATERIALLY BENEFITED. If it's the only solution, let's go to Judge Landis and ask him to draft us a policy like they have in organized Baseball. When it came to a show-down, Babe Ruth found out WHO IS THE BOSS. And the owners of the New York club were not at all alarmed, about losing their mainstay. When our producers can work in unison as they do in organized baseball; when exhibitors begin to realize that their existence and income does not depend on any one or two stars or any one or two distributors; when the stars and actresses learn that there is a HEAD of the organization, and that they can't run loose, then and then only will we have arrived on a fundamental and sound foundation. And until this is brought about; until Hays or somebody cleans house; until we forget all about personal appearances of stars, and discourage rather than encourage it—until then we have no right to feel abused, humiliated, or discriminated against. We exhibitors—you and I—are the victims. There's only ONE REMEDY. What are we going to do about it?"

M. P. T. Ass'n Changes Name

The association hitherto known as the Motion Picture Theatrical Association has changed its name to the "Better Pictures' Association of the World." Announcement to this effect was recently issued by John A. Quinn, president of the organization. Mr. Quinn declares the movement for "Better Pictures" sponsored by his association is meeting with the cooperation of many representative men and organizations among the public and the press. A Southern California division will be formally launched in the near future, according to Mr. Quinn.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE.

S. A. Shirley, district manager of Metro, is confined to his home at 725 Irving Park Boulevard, fighting off an attack of grippe. Mr. Shirley had been feeling badly for several days, but refused to give up to the illness till the first of this week.

King's Theatre, in Forest Park, was the scene of a fire Monday night which wrecked the building. The blaze started after the last of the audience had left for the evening, and no one was injured.

Fred Aiken has severed his active connection with Superior Screen Service, although retaining his interest in the exchange. Mr. Aiken will take a short vacation and upon his return to the city will announce his future plans. He is one of the pioneers of the industry, and it is understood that he soon will again be actively connected with the picture business.

Ed Silton, who has been manager of the Pioneer Exchange, of Illinois, whose failure followed that of the New York Pioneer Exchange last week, states that the majority of pictures that Pioneer had been releasing in this territory were his personal property, and that so far as possible he will carry through booking contracts with exhibitors and see that their deposits are protected. Mr. Silton desires the good will and co-operation of exhibitors in carrying out this endeavor and will open a new state right exchange with offices at 831 S. Wabash Avenue. Jack Barry goes with Mr. Silton to the new exchange, and will be sales manager. Mr. Silton is leaving for New York this week where he will secure a number of high class feature pictures for release in this territory through his new exchange.

Gladys Walton in "The Wise Kid," a new Universal production

May 14th to 20th will be Rozelle Week in Chicago territory. Manager L. A. Rozelle, of Metro, is calling on his exhibitor friends to co-operate with him in making this a big event for his company, and for the box offices of their theatres. Rozelle Week will celebrate more than six and one-half years of continuous service by Mr. Rozelle to exhibitors in this territory, a record of which he is proud.

L. M. Rubens sends a postal card from Cairo, Egypt, stating that he is enjoying the land of the pyramids and harem veils, and is in good health and spirits. It probably will be some time before he returns from his prolonged foreign trip.

Aaron J. Jones is back in Chicago again after an absence of more than three months, during which he has traversed France, Hungary, parts of the old Austrian Empire, and visited the Holy Land, Egypt, Italy and Monaco. While he enjoyed every moment of his trip, he states that he is glad to be back in good old Chicago once again. His son, John J. Jones, booking manager for the Jones, Linick & Schaefer Circuit, and Ralph T. Kettering, general representative, met Mr. Jones in New York when he landed from the Olympic, and accompanied him on his journey to Chicago.

John F. Dittman has fixed the opening date for his new quarter million dollar theatre at Freeport, Illinois, for April 17th, and plans are under way for a number of Chicago notables to attend the dedication ceremony. The party will leave Chicago late in the afternoon, traveling on special Pullman cars, and will return early the following morning. The new house will be called the Lindo, a word coined by Mr. Dittman from the names of Lincoln and Douglas, the two statesmen whose historic debate at Freeport, Illinois, the theatre commemorates. Rapp & Rapp, who designed the Chicago, Tivoli and Riviera theatres in Chicago, are the architects of the Lindo, which has a seating capacity of over twelve hundred. There is no balcony in the house, all the seats being on one floor. It will be one of the finest theatres in northern Illinois.

August Bossen, who has taken over the Princess at Mendota, Illinois, from E. J. Degenhardt, has closed the house for two weeks and will redecorate and bring it up to date before reopening.

The Idle at Canton, Illinois, has been rechristened the American Theatre by the proprietor, Joe Ross.

Balaban & Katz report that the week of March 26th marked the highest attendance record ever made at the Chicago Theatre, "Smilin' Through," the fine Norma Talmadge picture, being the feature production. The record is all the more remarkable when the weather is taken into consideration, almost every day and night being either rainy or snowy.

Activities of Exchange Managers, Exhibitors, Salesmen and Others

Atlanta

Arthur S. Dickens is back in town after having helped H. B. Farley put over "The Four Seasons" in Montgomery.

The Rialto theatre has booked through Enterprise Distributing Corp. fifteen two-reel features of the Sherlock Holmes series. Enterprise states that the Rialto was booked for this series within a week after their having bought them.

H. B. Mabley, Y. M. C. A., Ware Shoals, S. C., was in Atlanta this week booking pictures for his home town.

Major John W. Quillian, of Enterprise Distributing Corp., is in Macon having an operation performed which was necessitated by an injury received in France.

J. A. McWhorter, formerly salesman and branch manager for Pathe and then sales manager in Atlanta territory for Associated Exhibitors, has now lined up with R-C Pictures. R. J. Ingram, Jr., of R-C, who has been covering the field at large, will return to his Alabama and Tennessee route.

U. T. Koch, local Goldwyn branch manager, is in Florida this week.

Frank Jene, New Orleans R-C Pictures branch manager, spent Saturday and Sunday with R. A. Davis of the Atlanta R-C office.

Charles Rogers, general manager of distribution for R-C Pictures, was in Atlanta the early part of this week, where he called a conference of Southern Branch Managers for discussion of R-C's plan of distribution for the next season.

Albert Hill, formerly manager of the Arcade theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., has been transferred to the Lucas theatre in Augusta, Ga., where he is to succeed John Evins, who has resigned.

Carson Bradford was in Atlanta over the week end. He has again secured ownership of the Fairfax theatre in Miami, Fla., and will continue to run it.

Oscar Oldknow has returned to his branch managership of Consolidated after a trip to Jacksonville and Miami.

Harry K. Lucas of the Lucas Theatre Supply Co., Atlanta, has installed a radio receiving set and each night is entertaining friends and associates with concerts gleaned from the air. Mr. Lucas, in installing his set, is hoping to introduce the radio to exhibitors throughout the South and extends a cordial invitation to all exhibitors in town to call around and inspect and hear his instrument.

Pen Sketches

Al Becker

EVERY exhibitor in western New York, Canada, Alaska, Jerusalem and other places knows Al Becker of Buffalo. Al is head of the Becker Theatre Supply Company, western New York distributors for the Simplex machines and about everything in the way of theatre equipment imaginable. Al came into the industry soon after Edison discovered the motion picture. He will probably remain in it until he is 100 years old. Of course he will not live over 100 because he is living too fast a life just now. Al is making so much money that he is thinking of buying the new Statler hotel in Buffalo for his home. Most of the theatres in Buffalo have been Simplexized by the Becker Theatre Supply Company. Al is the man who puts on the picture entertainments in front of the newspaper offices every Election night. He also furnishes film shows for the leading clubs on various occasions. He is a member of Buffalo Consistory and Ismailia Temple, Shriners. It is said that when Al crossed the hot sands, he had a h—— of a time, almost turned his hair gray. Al says if business is as bad this summer as last he is going into the bootlegging game. Whenever anyone in the business goes to Buffalo and wants to know anything about the fillum business locally call Al on the phone.

Buffalo

COLONEL P. H. SMITH has resigned from the United Artists' sales staff. Mr. Smith was formerly branch manager for the same company. He also managed the First National office for some time. P. H. has won many friends while engaged in the business in this end of the woods and it will be a distinct surprise to the boys to know that he is about to enter the producing end of the business, with offices in New York. A number of Buffalo financial men are now organizing a company which Mr. Smith will manage. A well known star has been engaged. Details will be announced by Mr. Smith in a few weeks. Joe Daly, formerly office manager at the Hodkinson office, has been engaged as a member of the United Artists' sales staff by Manager M. H. Markowitz.

J. Emerson Dickmon, Esq., "salesman de luxe on the main line," for several years representing Nu-Art Pictures of Buffalo, has been engaged by District Manager Clayton P. Sheehan as city salesman for Fox, taking over the work of Charlie Johnston, recently promoted to branch manager.

Marion Gueth, who last summer practically managed the Hodkinson office when it was located in the Pathe exchange, and who has been "out of the game" for several weeks, is back again. She is now booker for Educational in the Nu-Art exchange, 221 Franklin Street.

J. L. Cook has resigned from the Pioneer staff.

Dave Gross, special representative for First National, has arrived in Buffalo. He will spend a few weeks in the territory. Manager E. J. Hayes is now directing a "Clean-Up Campaign" which will continue until April 29.

John Kimberly, executive manager at Nu-Art, announces the signing of "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" for presentation at the new Lafayette Square theatre. The same production has been closed by Fred M. Zimmerman for the entire Proctor circuit in the Albany territory. May 1 the Nu-Art exchange will move into the new film building in north Pearl Street, occupying the south side of the third floor. Pathe and Goldwyn will be on the first floor and First National on the second. J. Emerson Dickmon has resigned from Nu-Art to join Fox.

Manager C. W. Anthony of Vitagraph has been getting acquainted with exhibitors in Rochester. On a recent trip to the Kodak town he found all doing good business. Mr. Anthony is planning a screening party soon on "Too Much Business," the new seven part comedy drama.

Harry Royster, formerly a member of the local Paramount exploitation staff and now stationed at Cleveland, jumped into Buffalo Friday, March 31, and took unto himself a wife. She's a Middletown (N. Y.) girl.

There is a wave of sickness at the Fox office. Orville Rieffel, cashier; Bill Elliott, Syracuse representative; Joseph H. Berdel, salesman, and Clayton P. Sheehan, who, however, only has a bad cold, are all laid up.

A. W. Moses, R-C Pictures Corporation manager, has returned from a trip down state, where he closed "Beyond the Rainbow" for a week run at the Empire, Syracuse, and the Regent, Rochester. Fenton Lawlor has been assigned to the Utica territory, formerly covered by Charles Faust, who is now with Universal.

There's some class to this fellow, Richard C. Fox. "Dick" is manager of the Select exchange, and in a recent number of the Brain Exchange, the Select organ, we find that the Buffalo exchange tops both the Operating Cost and the Film Rental Efficiency columns with a percentage far in advance of every other city in the country, including San Francisco and New York. This is the fourth time that "Dick" has been the headliner this year.

Kansas City

The Progress Picture Company, which will distribute Arrow product in the Kansas City territory, has been organized by J. S. Jossey, representative of the Arrow Film Corporation. The Phoenix Film Corporation, which last week discontinued business, formerly distributed Arrow product in the Kansas City territory. Joe Fox, former manager of Phoenix, is the manager of the new company, which has established headquarters at Nineteenth and Wyandotte streets.

Robert Withers and Y. Donnell have joined the sales force of the Enterprise Distributing Corporation's Kansas City office. Mr. Donnell formerly was with Vitagraph, while Mr. Withers comes from Peacock Productions, Inc., having formerly been affiliated with Enterprise.

Due to his wife's ill health, Harry Cohen, manager of Select's Kansas City office, resigned last week and will go to California. Mr. Cohen came to Kansas City from California about six months ago, having formerly managed the Selznick office in Los Angeles. Mr. Cohen's successor has not yet been named. Mr. Cohen has not decided upon his future business connections in California.

Following the announcement that all Universal exchanges were to be turned over to the employees during April and May, employees of the Kansas City Universal exchange have voted to share their profits with the exhibitors. C. Calvert, Kansas City manager, says that he intends to offer a proposition that will dazzle the exhibitors in that territory.

A deal between Al Kahn and manager of Crescent-Federated of Kansas City, and Warner Bros., last week provides for the distribution of all Warner Products by Mr. Kahn in Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska. Among the pictures to be distributed are:

"Broadway After Dark," "Why Girls Leave Home," "Your Best Friend," "Main Street," "Brass," "From Rags to Riches," and "Little Heroes of the Street.

The pictures in Nebraska and Iowa will be distributed through Mr. Kahn's Federated exchange in Omaha.

James M. White, manager of the Kansas City Fox office, has been ordered to report to the home office in New York. As to just what his "assignment" will be Mr. White does not know. He will be succeeded by Bert Edwards, manager of the Oklahoma City Fox office and formerly a salesman out of the Kansas City office.

The Richards and Flynn Film Exchange, Kansas City, has acquired the distribution rights in the Kansas City territory of "Ten Nights In the Bar Room," the new Arrow production, at what is said to have been a record price. The picture is ready for immediate release, according to Mr. Flynn, and an extensive exploitation campaign will be launched within the next few days.

Howard E. Jameyson, advertising manager of the Liberty and Doric theatres, Kansas City, has just completed a year of genuine labor on a publication which he has titled. "The Idea." The book is a compilation of original catch lines, newspaper advertising and effective exploitation that is intended for use by exhibitors.

An exploitation department, solely for the aid of exhibitors, has been established at the Universal Kansas City office by C. Calvert, branch manager. The new department will be thrown open to exhibitors and unlimited aid in increasing attendance through effective publicity will be offered.

Peter Evans of Kansas City, has purchased the Treece theatre at Treece, Kas., while the Princess theatre, Sterling, Kas., has been purchased by Greshan and Greshan from J. H. Peats.

First National's prize winning exchange force in Buffalo

The Linwood theatre, Kansas City, has been sold to the Capitol Enterprises and improvements costing $50,000 will be put in this summer. The Capitol Enterprises is the new $1,000,000 company organized recently by Samuel Harding of the Liberty and Doric theatres, Kansas City. The Linwood is the first of a string of theatres in Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma that the new company expects to buy.

"The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes," a series, has been obtained by the Enterprise Distributing Corporation, according to Truly B. Wildman, Kansas City branch manager, and now is ready for bookings. These two-reel pictures dealing with mystery are taken from the stories by Sir A. Conan Doyle, there being fifteen of them in number. An unlimited field for exploitation, including imitation detective badges, is offered, Mr. Wildman said.

The Kansas City Pathe office has qualified in the $1,500 sales contest, according to Harry Graham, branch manager. The entire personnel of the Kansas City office is jubilant over the apparent prospects of nosing under the wire ahead of the field.

Following the announcement of Al Kahn, general manager of Crescent-Federated Film Exchanges, Kansas City, that "School Days" was ready for distribution in Western Missouri and Kansas, long distance telephone calls and telegrams began to pour into the office from exhibitors. That the production will set a new record in the Kansas City territory is the firm belief of Mr. Kahn. Exhibitors will be taken care of in the order in which their contracts are received, Mr. Kahn said.

Four changes in ownership and management of theatres in the Kansas City territory have been announced during the last week, including the purchase of the Cozy theatre, Lyons, Kas., by J. L. Colborn from P. E. Edwards, the purchase of the Fairport theatre, Fairport, Mo., by Phil Ausmus, the purchase of the Schnell theatre, Harrisonville, Mo., by A. T. Perkins and the purchase of the Star theatre, Yates Center, Kas., by E. L. Kirkham.

"Bob" Calvert led the field in Universal's sales contest in February, but he is confronted with lively opposition this month as Arthur A. Jacobson now is covering the territory in a $3,250 Jordan sport model car. Business is great, Jacobson said, but made no definite specifications as to "what business." Incidentally with this report came word from Fairport, Mo., that Phil Ausmus, owner of the Fairport theatre, had agreed to run Universal products exclusively. "Yep," there'll be one show each week, rain or shine.

A "private" contest is being staged by C. M. Parkhurst and Joe Rosenburg of the Hodkinson sales force at the Kansas City office. A new spring "lid" is the stake and both men are working with energy that bids fair to mount the sales records a notch or so higher.

C. S. Trowbridge, assistant general manager of the United Artists' Corporation, is in Kansas City, for a conference with T. Y. Henry and incidentally to look over the territory in that section.

Plans for the annual convention of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners, which will be held at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, on April 4th and 5th, are being completed and the program as outlined insures an interesting series of meetings from the time the convention convenes at 11:00 A. M. on the 4th, until it adjourns on Wednesday night. The Chicago branch of the organization will be host to the visitors at a luncheon, to be held at the Sherman Hotel, on the second day of the meeting, and other features of entertainment will also be arranged for those in attendance. According to officers of the association, the importance of matters to be considered makes it extremely desirable that every member who may find it possible should attend.

CLEVELAND

MAX LEFKOWITZ, owner of several prominent down town motion picture theatres, including the Gaiety on East Ninth Street, together with Harry Greenberger, has bought the Keystone theatre, an 800-seat neighborhood house, at Waterloo Road and East 156th Street.

Harry Greenberger formerly was a half partner of Sam Barch in the Market Square theatre, one of the largest houses on Broadway.

Frank Gross, prominent local exhibitor, has purchased Harry Greenberger's interest in the Market Square theatre. Gross has also purchased the Grand theatre, at Broadway and East 72nd Street, in addition to which he has taken over the management of the Park National.

R. C. Steuve, the genial exhibitor from Canton, well known as the owner of the Orpheum theatre, was in Cleveland one day this week. Steuve says business is picking up in Canton.

O. J. Bannon of Elyria, Ohio, has taken over Elyria's four down town pictures houses from the Standard Film Service of Cleveland. These houses include the Strand, American, Dreamland and Colonial.

Jack Soglovitz, prominent in local film circles, has joined up with the Standard Film Service of Cleveland as salesman. Soglovitz has recently been in the poster rental business.

Des Moines

A. R. CUNNINGHAM of the First National Exchange has left Des Moines for Sioux City, where he will have charge of the Princess Theatre. Noone has replaced Mr. Cunningham as exploitation man for First National.

The Pathe exchange of Des Moines has a change in management. Mr. H. D. Baumeister, for some time in charge of the exchange has resigned, resignation taking effect on Monday. Mr. A. W. Flues takes his place. Mr. Plues is from New Orleans, where he was connected with Vitagraph. He also was a prominent exhibitor in Greenville, Miss. It is expected that Mr. Baummeister will accept a position in Des Moines with some picture concern.

John J. Friedel of the Paramount exchange, has been visiting points in Iowa, including Ottumwa, Cherokee and Nevada, and reports that exhibitors are interested in "Mistress of the World," and are booking it in a way that looks good for the feature serial.

Outstanding Features of This Week's Section

If you are going to play "The Barnstormer" the cut above showing the lobby front on this picture arranged by Willard Patterson of the Criterian theatre, Atlanta, offers suggestions.

Another lobby display of interest is shown on page 2185 explaining how the Old Mill theatre, Dallas, Texas, decorated for the showing of "Ten Nights in a Barroom."

Metzgar's "mystery box" explained by the story on page 2186 is an idea that is worth borrowing when you play "Unseen Forces."

Johnny Jones, manager of the opera house, Centreville, Md., borrowed Willard Patterson's "rain insurance" stunt and it worked for him just as it did for "Pat." See story on page 2187.

Manager Fred Meyer of the Palace theatre, Hamilton, O., is reviewing his pictures without kid gloves for the benefit of the fans. The idea is explained by the box at the top of page 2188.

Even New York falls for the hokum stuff. For evidence see story and cuts on page 2189 explaining how the Broadway theatre, New York, is putting over "The Bootleggers."

Sidney Grauman, Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles.

Louis K. Sidney, Managing Director, William Fox theatres, Denver.

Two window displays which helped H. V. Smoots, manager of the Vine theatre, Mt. Vernon, O., put over "The Prodigal Judge"

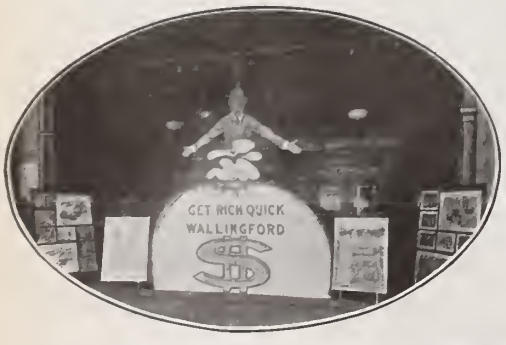
"Just Around the Corner" Tie-up at Ontario

"Just Around the Corner," the feature attraction at Loew's Theatre in London, Ontario, for March 30 to April 1, afforded an opportunity for a splendid "hook-up" with numerous local merchants whose places of business are situated just off the main thoroughfare of the city. A special combination page was published in the London Free Press on March 30, the advertisers in which used the title of the picture to indicate that their stores were "just around the corner." These included automobile dealers, home furnishers, restaurants, jeweler, tobacconist and clothes shops. Incidentally, the names of two local people, taken from the directory, were printed in each of the nine advertisements on the page and those who spotted their own names were entitled to a double pass to the current performance.

Harlem Drug Stores Help Regun Theatre on "Saturday Night"

Five Harlem drug stores tied up for "Saturday Night" combination sales offering $1.25 values for $1.00, and with each purchase a pass to the Regun theatre.

All it cost Manager Morris Weiser, in addition to the passes, was the idea, which he got for nothing from Fred Greene, the New York exploiter. Each drug store came through with a window.



This lobby display on "Get Rich Quick Wallingford" is by the Lyric theatre, Connersville, Ind.

Houston's "Sailor Made Man" Stunts

H. C. HOUSTON, manager of the Gem theatre, Sherman Texas, put over a number of exploitation stunts in connection with his showing of "A Sailor Made Man."

At a special "kids' matinee" the opening day he gave sailor hats to more than 350 small boys, and the youngsters, in wearing these away, proved an excellent walking advertisement.

A special front, in keeping with the nature of the comedy, had been arranged on the sidewalk, the ticket-taker and the ushers wore sailor suits, and at all performances a quartette, in sailor uniforms and wearing Harold Lloyd glasses, sang several nautical selections. After the first performance, he borrowed an idea recently explained in an issue of Motion Picture News. A window next door to the theatre was boarded up and a sign reading "This window broken by vibration, caused by the roars of laughter of audiences viewing "A Sailor Made Man," now showing.

"Nomads of the North" Lobby Pleases Augusta Fans

"Nomads of the North," at the Rialto Theatre, Augusta, Ga., was exploited by Manager Frank Miller, with a huge transparent screen across the front of the theatre, leaving only a narrow space on either side for entrance and exit.

On this transparent screen the figures of the hero and heroine of the picture, life-sized, had been cut out and pasted. Around them were some of the animals which play such a prominent part in the picture. The two people seemed to stand in water, as if fording a stream, and the banks on either side were thickly wooded. Back of the woods on one bank, was the ominous red glow that suggested a forest-fire.

The whole thing was effectively mounted, but did not show up in its full beauty until night, when the rest of the lobby was left in darkness, and an ingenious arrangement of lights behind the transparency gave life and color to the scene.

Art Panels Prove Effective Drawing Card

The Strand Theatre, Albany, N. Y., is responsible for an innovation that has been a big drawing card at the house, a big exploitation asset for the showings there, namely, art prologues. Specially painted art curtains have been dropped over the stage during the playing of the overture and just before the start of the feature picture. Their artistic excellence and their appropriateness to local conditions have made them especially popular features at the Strand.

For the showing of "R. S. V. P." a drop was used of the siege of the Block House at Lake George. The virile style of the drawing and its fitness as a memento of Colonial history won favorable comment in the Albany newspapers and was a good exploitation bet for the Strand.

For the showing of "Love's Redemption" a drop was used typifying the spirit of motion pictures. The figure of art at the top winding out reels of film with Intellect and Originality at each side was explained in the programs and the audiences applauded this tribute to their favorite form of entertainment.

This ballyhoo on "Forever" was used by the Liberty theatre, Corning, N. Y.

The Old Mill theatre, Dallas, Texas, rigged up this lobby front on "Ten Nights in a Barroom" at a total cost of one dollar. Story accompanying explains how it was done

Barroom Lobby Front Interests Dallas Fans

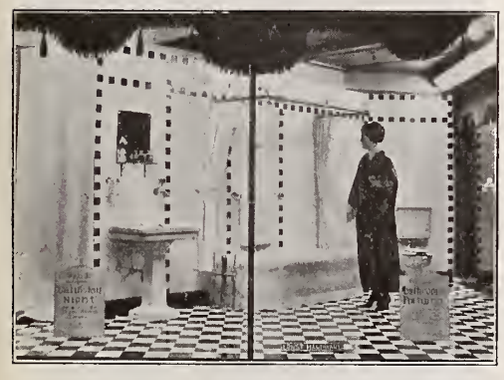
"Ten Nights in a Barroom" was booked at the Old Mill, Dallas, Texas, and Assistant Manager Robertson was delegated to plan out an exploitation campaign for it.

The result was a barroom lobby display that was good for hundreds of dollars' worth of extra business for a cost of one dollar.

This is the way that Mr. Robertson got so much for his money.

Robertson sold the Electrified Water & Machine Co., of Dallas, on the idea of a Ginger Ale display in the Lobby of the Old Mill. The local manager promoting this new Ale is paying for good space to exhibit his "drink" atop of the Hotel Adolphus and he could readily see the advantages of accepting the free offer to place an Exhibit in the Old Mill Lobby. The Electrified Company installed a complete Bar on the right-hand side of the Old Mill Lobby at their own expense. Sunday's crowds saw frosted mirrors in back with old familiar signs of Beers, Ales, etc. They saw also the real thing. Mahogany top counter, Marble sides, brass foot rail and everything. On the shelf in back were displayed pyramids of vari-colored Liquor bottles and bottles of Electrified Ginger Ale and near Beer. A real red-faced bar-tender in white apron dispensed free drinks of Ale to every thirsty theatre patron.

Sawdust was on the lobby floor, while the "empty kegs" were placed either side of Oil paintings and a cut-out. The ledges of the box-office were "decorated" with Bevo, Budweiser, etc., also loaned for this occasion.



This cut shows a "Saturday Night" window display, one of a number which the Strand theatre, Seattle, secured as exploitation on this picture

Jamestown Merchants Help Put Over "Molly O"

IN presenting "Molly O" at the Wintergarden in Jamestown, N. Y., a full page advertising tie-up was used in the Evening Journal, a novel feature of the ad being the use of telephone numbers at the bottom of each merchant's display. The numbers and names were taken at random from the city phone directory. Anyone who saw their names in the ad were given free admission to "Molly O."

Springing the Siamese Folklore on the Iowans

The Plaza theatre, Sioux Falls, Iowa, wanted to spring some Siamese folk-lore on the public as a selling angle for "Fool's Paradise."

The encyclopedias were singularly destitute of good fairy tales, so John Friedl and Harold Horne of the Paramount exploitation staff made up one that would make the Brothers Grimm and Hans Christian Andersen go bury themselves in the Baltic.

They got a herald with an envelope of salt attached; on the envelope were figures purporting to be Siamese, a fact which no Sioux Faller disputed. Underneath the "Shakers" was this legend:

"In Siam, where this bag of salt came from, they have a peculiar superstition. They believe that if carried on their person between the twelfth and nineteenth days of the mystic month of March, it will bring them wondrous good fortune.

"They believe, furthermore, that if they carry this with them to the best feast and entertainment in the village during this enchanted period, good luck will befall them for the rest of the year.

"So we are passing it on to you with our best wishes, and with this suggestion: This is March. The 12th is next Sunday. And the best feast of film pleasure in Sioux City will be Cecil B. DeMille's marvelous motion picture creation, 'Fool's Paradise,' and this will be shown at the Plaza, the home of Paramount Pictures. So, here's to you. Here's for a joyous evening, and here's hoping this little bag will make this year the most glorious you ever knew. So be it! Selah!"

These were mailed to every home in Sioux Falls and got over big.

Tooker Makes Cooperative Display Serve Double Purpose

One of the recent converts to exploitation is George Tooker, manager of the Regent theatre, Elmira, N. Y., but now that he is converted hardly a week passes but something good is put over in the city where they send bad New York boys for indefinite vacations.

Recently Mr. Tooker wanted to get a line on the stars that have more than an ordinary following at the Regent but he didn't want to spend money to do it, so in connection with the engagement of "Her Husband's Trademark" he talked twenty local merchants into a scheme to accomplish his purpose at their expense. Here's the way the stunt worked:

A double truck was landed with the twenty merchants footing most of the bill for their co-operative displays. With each of the twenty ads was a picture of a Paramount star. The truck announced the details of a most unique contest.

The contestant cut out the ad containing the features of his favorite male and female star (two ads) and then wrote a 50-word explanation concerning his choice and sent it to the paper.

The male and female stars getting the highest number of votes were then determined and the best essays on each were adjudged the winners and the writers awarded $10 cash prizes. The writers of the best essays on each of the losing stars were given two tickets to the Regent.

Stage setting for the prologue number on "Hail the Woman" recently presented at the Branford theatre, Newark, N. J.

This cut explains how Manager H. C. Houston of the Gem theatre, Sherman, Texas, exploited "A Sailor Made Man"

Kashin Originates Prologue on "School Days"

Morris Kashin, in charge of presentation at the Elsmere Theatre, New York, recently presented a prologue for "School Days" which won the plaudits of the theatre's patrons.

The number opened with the orchestra playing the song "School Days."

A small spotlight revealed the back of a barefoot boy in tattered clothes slowly advancing from the wings. The barefoot boy made "her" way to the centre of the stage, still humming "School Days." There he discovered a huge blackboard and pulling a piece of chalk from his pocket began writing in a childish hand. In simple words he told what a treat was in store for all those who saw his friend "Wes" Barry in "School Days," which was shown to be shown at the Elsmere. A bit of pantomime followed.

With the last stroke of the chalk the humming ceased, the spot faded out and the show continued.

This "Three Live Ghosts" ballyhoo put the picture over for Manager Cohen of the Rialto theatre, Brooklyn

Gillen Uses "Peacock Alley" as Fashion Show Vehicle

WHEN Fred Gillen put on "Peacock Alley" at the Strand in Binghamton, N. Y., he arranged a Fashion Promenade with several local merchants which brought the theatre a lot of free publicity in the local newspapers. The revue was put on between the evening shows. Six attractive young women of the city displayed the latest modes in feminine attire on the Strand stage. A half dozen concerns co-operated. All the merchants taking part in the fashion show also put on special window displays calling attention to "Peacock Alley," at the Strand.

Newspaper Impanels "Law and the Woman" Jury

The Hannibal, Mo., Courier-Post turned its readers into jurors to decide the guilt or innocence of Betty Compson, arraigned for murder in "The Law and the Woman," playing at the Star theatre.

The Courier-Post did not require the jury to see the picture. The paper printed the facts and briefed both the case for the prosecution and the case for the defense.

The reader was to render a verdict and write a brief essay giving reasons for it. The best essays were awarded the prizes.

The Star theatre gave $10 in cash and twelve tickets to be distributed by the paper. Instead of requiring contestants to see the picture before rendering their verdict, the Star elected to publish a resume of the plot.

This secured the interest of a greater number of people and sold the picture to them.

Uses Novelty Float to Ballyhoo "Saturday Night"

Manager H. J. Adams of the Palace Theatre, Corsicana, Texas, used ballyhoo stuff to put over his showing of "Saturday Night."

An up-to-the-minute bathtub was placed on the chassis of an old automobile. Two youngsters rode on the float and at intervals pretended that they were about to disrobe. The chassis carried an appropriate sign. This sign was painted in red letters, shaded with blue, on white beaver board.

Metzgar's Mystery Talking Box Sold "Unseen Forces"

"Unseen Forces" was rightly named according to Creston, Ia., which came close to a stage of panic with the exploitation Manager E. Metzger of the Strand Theatre devised when he played this attraction. A mystery talking box was suspended from the ceiling of the lobby and gave answers to questions asked by passersby and occasionally identified them by name and described the clothes they wore.

It had every equipment for arousing the inquisitive, for it was apparently not connected with any part of the theatre except for a hemp rope that ran from the ceiling and the end of which was in plain sight of every one. Unknown to the fans, however, a very thin wire from the side of the building entered the rope just where it touched the talking machine and furnished the connection.

The same exploitation medium was used in showing "Stranger Than Fiction." Prizes were offered this time for anyone giving a correct answer as to how this machine was manipulated so that it could play violin solos and converse with patrons; but so closely had the secret been guarded that no one came near a correct solution. It was later placed in the theatre itself, hung from the ceiling and proved a big drawing card.

Miniature volcano used in the lobby of the Albemarle theatre, Brooklyn, as exploitation for "Vesuvius Conquered"

Huntsville Merchants Help Sell "Law and the Woman"

When "The Law and the Woman" played in Huntsville last week not one, but several stores co-operated with the Lyric theatre in helping put over this attraction through neat window displays. In each case photos and cut-outs of Betty Compton were used in connection with the ladies' ready-to-wear department and toilet preparations. One store went so far as to make this statement: "Two places in Huntsville to get the best for your money—one is here, the other at the Lyric theatre.

A drug store stated: "You can have a beautiful complexion like Betty Compton if you use our high grade toilet preparations."

In addition to these tie-ups mentioned above, Manager Crute displayed four seven-yard banners at the most prominent gathering places of the city. He also ran a preambulator two days prior to the showing of this picture.

Rain Insurance Gag Sets Town Agog

WHEN something new hits Centreville, Md., the townsfolk get "het up" about it.

Manager Johnny Jones of the Opera House, sprang Rain Insurance on them during the run of "The Sheik" and started something.

He sent a story to the local newspaper that if as much as one-tenth of an inch rain fall fell it would cost the Hartford Fire Insurance Company $300. The story went on to explain that leading insurance companies all over the country were guaranteeing amusements against inclement weather.

Right after the newspaper sprang this gag, Mr. Jones saw to it that the populace kept talking about "The Sheik" through a street ballyhoo of a man clad in the true Arabian costumes.

Winnipeg Dickens Fans Boost "Our Mutual Friend"

The 350 members of the Dickens' Club in Winnipeg, Manitoba, co-operated with the Lyceum Theatre, Winnipeg, for the presentation of the feature, "Our Mutual Friend." Members of this club came out strongly in favor of this picture and an arrangement was made whereby every member undertook to sell theatre admission tickets among friends and others to boost the engagement.

Miniature Volcano Works Overtime at the Albemarle

The Albemarle theatre, Brooklyn, exploited "Vesuvius Conquered," a feature of a recent issue of Fox News, in a most interesting manner.

In the lobby a miniature volcano belched smoke, and in the cloud above a tiny model of an airplane whirled. Beside it stood a large specially printed poster featuring the short subject. The volcano was about six feet in height and made of papier mache. The smoke was effected by the burning of punk within the "crater."

Cooperative Ads. Big Help in Selling "Hail the Woman"

One of the big talking points about "Hail the Women" is the number of players in the picture who are stars in their own right. The Liberty Theatre, Zanesville, O., capitalized this fact by using cuts of eight different players in the eight advertisements that went to make up a two-page advertising tie-up in the Zanesville Dispatch the day the picture opened. The cuts were run without captions and prizes were offered by the Dispatch to the first four readers sending in a correct list of who these players were.

The advertisements also tied up cleverly with the picture, "'Hail the Woman' who gives her children Youngman's Bread" was the opening line of a well-known bakery. "We 'Hail the Woman' with a Banking Service Unexcelled," said the Old Citizens' National Bank. "'Hail the Woman' and Hail the Opportunity to Own an Automobile," declared a dealer in second hand cars starting a sales' drive.

A special pre-view showing was arranged for a Citizens' Committee before the opening.

"Foolish Wives" window display put over by Marc Lachman, exploiteer for Universal, during the run of this picture at the Brooklyn Mark Straud theatre

Cooperative Ads. for "Foolish Wives"

Brooklyn Exploitation Campaign Given Newspaper and Merchants' Cooperation

MARC LACHMAN, Universal exploitation Representative, arranged a shopping tour for Miss du Pont and effected an advantageous newspaper tie-up with the Brooklyn Eagle in connection with the showing of "Foolish Wives" at the Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre.

Other stunts included a window display in a local music store window as shown by the accompanying cut.

Two pages of advertising purchased by the leading merchants of Brooklyn were run in the Eagle on Tuesday, March 21st, announcing a shopping tour during which Brooklyn could get a real "close-up" of Miss du Pont, feminine lead in "Foolish Wives." Miss du Pont also appeared in person at the Mark Strand. Every ad carried a picture of the star and announcement of the theatre run. A five-column banner across the top of each page announced the stunt in bold face type.

In brief, the idea was as follows: Miss du Pont visited the stores, met the customers and in several instances went behind the counter and sold merchandise while huge crowds swarmed in the aisles. The stores were decorated with "Foolish Wives" banners and announcements. They were very effective in creating a personal atmosphere to accompany the actual appearance of the star.

At noon Miss du Pont visited the Eagle plant and dined with the compositors, reporters and office force in the Eagle lunch room. A special machine conveyed the star from store to store. A motion picture camera took shots of the various stores and beginning on Thursday, the pictures were shown on the screen of the Strand during the remainder of the "Foolish Wives" engagement. This brought many to the theatre.

"Thrill Checks" for Patrons

WHEN Guy Graves, of the Strand theatre, Yonkers, N. Y., booked "The Mistress of the World," he got up thrill checks which were distributed by a girl throughout Yonkers Saturday afternoon.

The girl was dressed as Miss Liberty and got rid of 15,000.

Mr. Graves placed a desk in his lobby which carried the sign "thrill check station," and this, together with the checks, created much comment.

Meyer Tries "Nothing But th Truth" Policy

FRED MEYER, managing director of the Palace theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, has struck out on a new path. He is issuing a monthly bulletin to his patrons, telling them just what he thinks of his coming attractions. If he likes the shows, he boosts them. If he doesn't he tells them so. But he goes further than that. He has agreed to follow up his criticisms of his own shows with a financial statement, showing whether he made a good guess or not, in connection with the picture mentioned in the bulletin the previous month.

Of "Never Weaken," Harold Lloyd comedy, which he played March 5, 6, 7, 8, he said. "Compared with all the Lloyd comedies we have seen we would rank this among the five best. Entertainment value 90.

"White Oak," a William S. Hart picture, Meyer said: "Some steen hundred of our patrons have asked us why we never show a Hart picture. There's nothing like trying anything once, and here's the attempt. 'White Oak' is neither better nor worse than any of the other stories that have made Hart popular. As a western, we rank it at 75. A very good cast makes the offering dependable."

This is something new in motion pictures. An unbiased, truthful opinion about attractions, giving actual entertainment value, as it strikes the man who is most vitally interested. It's interesting to see just how much profit this candor will bring the exhibitor from Hamilton, Ohio.

Indianapolis Specializes in Directions by Indirection

In Indianapolis they don't say "The Baldwin Piano Company is at 2201 Pennsylvania Ave." They say "Just Around The Corner from Washington Street on Pennsylvania Avenue there is a Baldwin Piano Company."

This was the clever phraseology invented by the Ohio Theatre to put over "Just Around The Corner" with a page of co-operative ads in the Indianapolis News. Other catch lines read like this: "Indiana's two busiest cigar stores are 'Just Around The Corner' from the Ohio Theatre" and "There a Book Store handy around on the corner."

Illustrating the ballyhoo which Manager McDonald of Moss' Broadway theatre, New York, used to exploit his engagement of "The Bootleggers," as explained by the accompanying story

"Bootleggers" Stunt Amuses Gotham

McDonald's Ballyhoo Gets Even Broadway's Attention

MANAGER CHARLIE McDONALD, of B. S. Moss's Broadway Theatre, made the Gay White Way stop, look and read with a thorough-going campaign of exploitation on "The Bootleggers," when that timely offering was shown there last week.

Manager McDonald started his campaign a number of days before "The Bootleggers" opened at the Broadway. He wanted a trio of men to act the part of bootleggers, but he did not want to engage the usual type of unconvincing ballyhoo, with "ad" sticking out all over him.

So he hired actors—experienced players—and told them to do their worst. The result was a little group who looked as if they had hit Broadway right from their still in the Tennessee Mountains. There were two tall, rangy men, and one short one. The tall ones had on dilapidated slouch hats, flannel shirts, bright neck-cloths, corduroys, mountaineer boots, and a stubble of beard of weeks' growth. The little one was covered with a rain-coat, from the depths of which he produced flasks and bottles now and again.

The two tall "bootleggers" started up Broadway from the theatre, perhaps a block ahead of the little fellow. They would stop at some corner, and engage in conversation with the nearest person—a policeman, perhaps—asking the way to the nearest Mills Hotel. The crowd which gathered around them was so thick at times that traffic was stopped, and they were forced to move on.

The little man then arrived to complete the tie-up. On his back, he bore a sign, stating that "The Bootleggers" would arrive at the Broadway within a few days. Then the trio would move on, the two bigger men gradually moving on ahead until the next jam collected.

The actors were well made-up, and the genuineness of their costumes was evidenced by the curious remarks of the bystanders. When the flask was produced, there was always an immediate heightening of the interest. As prohibition is a topic on everybody's tongue and in every newspaper headline, so the appearance of the bootleggers and their flasks crystallized the common topic of discussion. It is safe to say that thousands were started talking about "The Bootleggers" by the appearance of these picturesque characters on busy Broadway.

The method of working the street stunt was to keep the sign hidden until the crowd's curiosity was aroused. The sign-bearer would lean nonchalantly against an automobile talking to his "pardners"—then, when there were enough lookers to satisfy him, he would turn his back, and reveal the ad.

Another view of the "Moonshiners," who aided in "The Bootleggers" campaign

They would stop in front of rotisseries and other restaurant windows. While the two looked longingly in the window, making loud comment, in mountaineer dialect, of what they would do to large gobs of that food if they could get it, the little man leaned against the window. Then he would suddenly become interested in the sizzling chicken on the spit—and another crowd knew about "The Bootleggers."

Several days of covering Broadway in this fashion, particularly during the hours when theatre crowds were about, reaped its reward when the picture's run began. The "bootlegging" trio divided their time between working the streets and standing in front of the theatre, where they interested and amused the crowds by their running fire of repartee and comment on things in New York. Hiring men of intelligence, instead of $1-a-day men, brought a new note of real fun and interest into the stunt.

The front and lobby of The Broadway helped materially in putting across Manager McDonald's timely ideas on this timely picture. A big sign called "The Bootleggers" "The Sensational Expose of 1922" and "A 100 Proof Film Knockout."

All around the marquee of the theatre were strung pennants of white, on which were painted in bright colors a series of snappy remarks anent prohibition, drink and bootlegging. A group was continually stopping to read and smile at such as these:

"What'll You Have, George?" "I'll Have a Pony of Horse-Radish." "Have You a Little Bootlegger in Your Home?" "Water, Water Everywhere—But Who Wants to Drink Water?" "Drink Hair-Tonic High-Balls and Grow a Beard on Your Liver.

"My Boy" window display secured by Harold B. Franklin for the run of this picture at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

Franklin's "My Boy" Campaign Elaborate and Complete

One of the finest exploitation campaigns ever put over by Harold B. Franklin at Shea's Hippodrome was that used in connection with the showing of "My Boy."

There were two big features of the campaign. One was the big party for the orphans of the city. This was a tie-up with the Buffalo Evening News. "My Boy" was shown for the city waifs at a special screening Saturday morning. The News gave the event a two column head on page one every day during the week and a big special story the day of the show. Father Baker's boys band played a program for the kiddies just before the presentation.

The other feature was the tie-up with the Kleinhans company, through which this store put on a "My Boy" week and for the first time in its history turned over an entire Main street window to a special display of "My Boy," which included Coogan middie suits, a large hand painted scene from the picture and photos from the film.

Mr. Franklin also arranged to have the photo of Jackie published on the front page of "Truth," a local weekly publication. He put on a fine hand-drawn advertising campaign.

H. L. Swain's lobby decorations on "Fool's Paradise" when this picture played the Saenger theatre, Shreveport, La.

Cobe's Knock-Out Lobby Display Is Miniature Prize Ring

THE accompanying cut shows a lobby display for "The Leather Pushers," conceived by Manager A. J. Cobe for the showing of this series at the New York Central theatre.

The display consists of a miniature prize ring, complete in every detail, even down to the towels, the tiny sponges in the water buckets and the ringside benches for the reporters. Overhead, as seen by the illustration, is strung an electric arc which is lighted by dry storage batteries inside the table on which the ring rests.

There is a continuous crowd around the tiny ring, each one vieing with the other trying to pick some minor flaw in its construction. As yet none have been found, and Manager Cobe shows his true instincts as a showman when he offers to let anyone in, gratis, if they can show him one single imperfection.

Flivver Parade as "Connecticut Yankee" Exploitation

The management of the Liberty theatre, Sacramento, Cal., arranged an elaborate street ballyhoo for the exploitation of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court." It was in the form of a parade, led by an automobile of the "flivver" type used in the picture, this being followed by four motorcycle-mounted "knights."

By attaching to the sides of the automobile a large sign which, in addition to bearing the name of the production and the theatre, also bore the name of the automobile agent, the use of the machine being obtained without cost.

Each of the four motorcyclists carried a stiff board banner at the end of a wooden spear. Each banner contained one word, and the four words made the following sequence: "Connecticut Yankee Liberty Theatre."

In the tonneau of the machine a woman in overalls proclaimed through a megaphone the merits of the picture and urged the crowds that gathered wherever the procession halted not to miss the production.

Stresses "Drama of Dishes" Idea in Selling Picture

Emphasizing the idea of "A Drama of Dishes," Manager Herbert Johnson put across a plan for exploiting "The Song of Life" that made a hit, especially with the women and housewives who constituted ninety per cent. of the patrons at the Luna theatre, Lafayette, Ind. The advertising stressed this thought, while for the lobby display handbills and window tie ups the idea of stacked up dishes was worked out in accordance with the suggestions in the press books. Cardboard plates were given away by a street ballyhoo artist, who stopped the women who would be the prospective patrons for such a picture and pointed out that at last the film was presenting the drama of their own lives.

Showing how the Stanley theatre, Philadelphia, exploited and presented "School Days." Left—Ushers and other employees costumed for the showing. Right—a scene of the prologue presented

Stanley, Philadelphia, Presents "School Days" Prologue

The school room prologue idea for "School Days" was used recently by the Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia, talented local youngsters being secured for the roles.

A well planned exploitation campaign was also carried out.

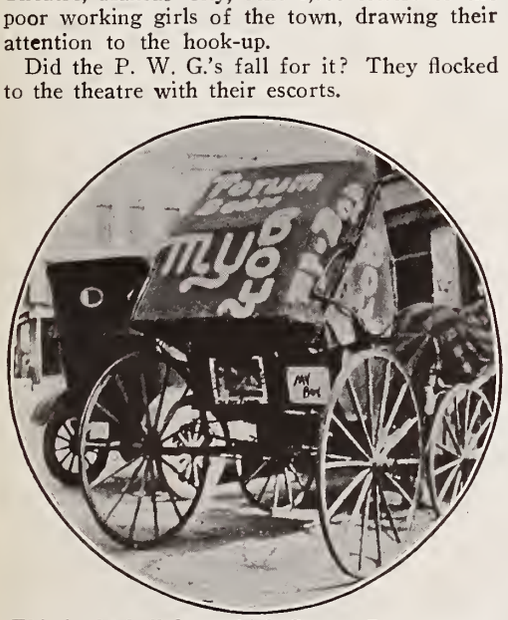
The Stanley doubled its staff of ushers and arrayed each one in kid clothes. A miniature school house was erected in the lobby, and during the matinee and evening performances a school teacher stood in front of the door ringing a bell while a half dozen youngsters played "ring-around-rosey" nearby. In the evening the house was illuminated and it proved to be a veritable magnet in attracting people to the theatre.

Practically every prominent store in Philadelphia carried a window display, and about thirty oil paintings were placed in hotel lobbies. In addition to a big newspaper campaign, the Stanley Company used more than 1000 Wes' Barry cut-outs, placing them in the entire week's run. Twelve people were used in the "School Days" review, and among them was Betty Mastbaum, daughter of Jules Mastbaum.

Working Girls Go to See Their Problems Solved

Taking advantage of the controversy that has swept the country on "Can a Girl Dress on $87.55 a year," and playing on the fact that the heroine of "Back Pay" has a "crepe de chine soul," Howard Jamesyon of the Doric Theatre, Kansas City, sent 1,000 letters to the poor working girls of the town, drawing their attention to the hook-up.

Did the P. W. G.'s fall for it? They flocked to the theatre with their escorts.



This is the ballyhoo which George Rea, manager of the Forum theatre, Hillsboro, O., used to exploit "My Boy"

Rea Sells "My Boy" With Novelty Ballyhoo

THE fact that horse drawn vehicles, especially the old-fashioned buggy, is seldom seen upon the streets, even in rural communities, was used to advantage by George Rea, manager of the Forum theatre, Hillsboro, Ohio, in exploiting "My Boy."

In advance of the engagement Mr. Rea obtained several old buggies on which he placed posters and cards advertising "My Boy" and had them driven through the streets of the town. The tops of the buggies were let down and advertising matter was painted in white across these tops and curtains.

"Queen of Sheba" Questionnaire Sent Out to Mansfield Fans

A clever questionnaire was used by the management of the Opera House, Mansfield, O., in exploitation of "Queen of Sheba."

Printed on blue cards, four by five inches, was a series of 10 questions. A headline, "How Much Do You Know?" introduced the throwaway, the contents of which was:

Mr. Edison says college graduates are terribly ignorant, and in proof thereof shows a list of 175 questions submitted to applicants for positions. Nearly every college graduate was unable to answer the majority of Mr. Edison's questions.

"How much do you know?" Here are ten questions which we challenge the public of Mansfield to answer.

1—Where was the Land of Sheba?

2—Who was the famous King of history that the Queen of Sheba visited?

3—What method of conveyance did she use in going to see King Solomon?

4—Where did she get the diamonds and jewelry that she gave to her beloved King?

5—What costume did she wear when she was presented at the Court of King Solomon?

6—What did she say to King Solomon when she first met him?

7—Did King Solomon wear a beard when he kissed the Queen of Sheba?

8—How many wives did Solomon have when he met the Queen of Sheba?

9—What did the Queen of Sheba wear when she visited the Royal chariot races?

10—Why didn't Solomon marry the girl?

Of course these questions are bound to make you think, and perhaps the average citizen cannot answer them off-hand; but any reader of this card can answer each and every one of the foregoing questions if he or she will go to see William Fox's super-screen spectacle, "Queen of Sheba," which will be presented at the Opera House for a week's engagement.

Dog Hitched to Wagon Ballyhoo for "Come on Over"

Manager Adams of the Auditorium theatre, Concord, N. H., made good use of a dog and a boy's toy wagon in exploiting "Come On Over." The dog was hitched to the wagon and driven about town by a boy, who was usually surrounded by a half a dozen or more other boys.

The wagon was covered with white cloth. On each side was painted the words, "Come On Over." When a curious person went on over to see what it was all about he found an advertisement in the bottom of the wagon telling about the picture, where it was to be screened and the date.

Mr. Adams obtained tie-ups with many stores, one being at a meat market. In the window were the butcher's regular signs giving the prices of meats. At the bottom of the window, on a two by three-foot card, "Come On Over" was painted. In other stores displays of posters and stills were obtained, but the most effective single exploitation feature was the dog hitched to a wagon.

Kingman Builds "Way Down East" Lobby at Small Expense

Manager Kingman of the Strand theatre, Gaffney, S. C. in exploiting "Way Down East" built a most attractive lobby display. Taking a twenty-four sheet, he made cut-outs of the different rural characters, mounted this group of cut-outs over the entrance of his theatre. Directly underneath was a large pumpkin, over six feet high, with the lettering "Way Down East." In the lobby were corn stalks, pumpkins and rural decorations.

As a ballyhoo, he tied up with a local concern, giving them one pass, for the services of their buggy and mule. One of the employees of the theatre was dressed as a county "hick" and drove his buggy into Gaffney, in the residential and business sections of the town. The buggy carried a banner reading: "I came all the way from Kankakee to see 'Way Down East,' Strand theatre today.'

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Great Impersonation, The—
Good story, good acting but very poor drawing card. People that saw it liked it very much. (East.)

Don't Tell Everything—
Audience went wild over this picture. Wish we could get one as good as this every month. Used it three days but good enough for return engagement. (East.)

At the End of the World—
Extraordinary good picture. Played to good business considering the weather. (East.)

The Bride's Play—
A fair attendance, due mostly to unusually strong competition. Made money in a week's run. (Middle West.)

Fool's Paradise—
A real box office card. Did a big week's business, playing to packed houses. (Middle West.)

Feature went over big. Holding it for second week. (Middle West.)

This picture pleased and drew good business. (West.)

Good entertainment and good box office value. (West.)

The Green Temptation—
Good picture playing to satisfactory attendance. (West.)

Miss Lulu Bett—
Fine picture; did good business for five days with no extra exploitation. (Middle West.)

White Oak, The—
Nothing extra for Hart; carried the movie fans through a week. (Middle West.)

Good Bill Hart picture; business very good because of exploitations. (East.)

The World's Champion—
Went over big. Wallace Reid always popular here. Good attendance. (Middle West.)

A typical Reid picture—pleasing, but no mental strain required to see it. Pretty good business. Reid always a good bet, no matter what the vehicle. (Middle West.)

Fairly good picture with fair business. (West.)

It did pretty good—nothing to rave over, just an average program picture. (East.)

Mistress of the World—
Didn't take. Patrons don't like serials. Good crowds. (Middle West.)

Part two not so good as Part one. business is still holding up, however. (Middle West.)

Moran of the Lady Letty—
Valentino big drawing card, but business only fair. Story contains flaws but interesting and photography good. Miss Dalton did not please patrons, with her bobbed hair and role. Valentino did good work. (Middle West.)

Picture was very good, business extremely good but did not keep up to record of "The Sheik." (East.)

Stirring sea story in which Dorothy Dalton and Rudolph Valentino are seen to advantage. Pleased our patrons. Played to big business. (Middle West.)

A fairly good picture. The two stars are a big drawing card. (Middle West.)

Valentino and Dalton put this picture across for a week. Story just ordinary. (Middle West.)

GRAUMANS

Grauman's Symphony Orchestra of 50 Every Mat and Night, Gutzeit and Murtagh

Display Used by Grauman's, Los Angeles, for Ethel Clayton in "The Cradle."

Just Around the Corner—
Very good picture that played to fair business. (Middle West.)

Uncle Tom's Cabin—
No kick on this as helped with exploitation, it went over big. (East.)

Three Live Ghosts—
Very humorous and pleased patrons. Attendance good. (Middle West.)

Bought and Paid For—
Good picture and splendid audiences. (East.)

Crowds liked it very, very much. Heard no adverse criticism. (Middle West.)

Ladies Must Live—
Patrons liked it. Good patronage. (Middle West.)

One Glorious Day—
Best drawing card in several weeks. Played to large crowds for a week's run. (Middle West.)

Her Own Money—
Had a good week with this picture, which I think it a fairly good one. (East.)

Her Husband's Trademark—
Good Gloria Swanson feature. Played to better than average business. (Middle West.)

The Red Peacock—
This is a poor offering and we had poor business with it. (West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

My Boy—
A very pleasing picture which drew big. (Middle West.)

Excellent returns recorded on this subject which was well exploited. (East.)

The Silent Call—
A fine dog picture. Fair drawing card. (Middle West.)

Very enthusiastic comments from patrons. A beautiful thing drawing almost universal praise and very good business. (Middle West.)

The Seventh Day—
Good feature which played to average business. (Middle West.)

Smilin' Through—
Good drawing picture. Especially played up here as this was world's premier showing and Women's club were benefited by Monday performances. Broke no house records but did fine business straight through. Wonderful picture. (Middle West.)

Picture of pictures. Acclaimed by patrons as the sweetest story ever told. Did record business first week with probability of enormous business second week. (Middle West.)

One of Norma Talmadge's greatest and a big box office attraction. Did best business of the year with this feature. (Middle West.)

Serenade—
Played in conjunction with "A Dog's Life," featuring Chaplin, and drew good crowds all week. (Middle West.)

Gypsy Blood—
Not up to the first Pola Negri standard. Audience getting tired of foreign pictures. (East.)

R. S. V. P.—
Poor picture but business fair. (East.)

Polly of the Follies—
Constance Talmadge in a role exactly fitted for her. Good picture which drew well. (Middle West.)

Lots of real, rich humor with Connie highly pleased. (Middle West.)

A real box office attraction. Played to capacity houses all week and made big hit. (Middle West.)

A Question of Honor—
Had a very good week's run with this picture. (East.)

Went across fairly well. Not liked as well as in other releases. (East.)

The Song of Life—
Considered awfully poor; receipts average. (East.)

The Barnstormer—
Old time road shows and troupers burlesqued to painful degree. Does not compare with other Ray pictures and was not a good drawing card in house that ordinarily plays Ray's pictures to excellent attendance. Attendance poor. (Middle West.)

The Lotus Eater—
Opinions varied. Generally speaking it was well received. Drew well during week. (Middle West.)

Wesley Barry is always popular here. Picture no exception. All seemed to like it. (Middle West.)

Stardust—
Ordinary; couldn't have held out more than four days and didn't. (Middle West.)

Peaceful Valley—
On second run brought satisfactory business. General appeal. (Middle West.)

Love's Redemption—
Mediocre picture but business good. (East.)

HODKINSON

The Four Seasons—
Probably the best nature picture yet produced. A fine added attraction. (Middle West.)

Cameron of the Royal Mounted—
This one played to good crowds for a week and was popular with all patrons. (Middle West.)

REALART

Tilly—
Mary Miles Minter in Tilly (shown at vaudeville house). Clean, interesting story. (Middle West.)

Did not come up to expectation and picture fell. Just naturally died. People seemed to be more interested in seeing Miss Minter than in seeing the picture and those who were thus interested were few. Good story but it lacked a punch of any kind. (Middle West.)

About an average picture, but drew well. (Middle West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

A Doll's House—
Went over just fair and business not so good. (West.)

The Ruling Passion—
Very nice picture which went over fine. (West.)

SELZNICK

Why Announce Your Marriage—
Light, fluffy, but highly entertaining. It's the kind of entertainment most people want, so our house was well filled. (Middle West.)

A Man's Home—
This pleased very good and business was satisfactory. (West.)

Handcuffs and Kisses—
Picture which brought general satisfaction. Elaine Hammerstein seems to be a general favorite and gaining in favor. Story rather unusual and good presentation. (Middle West.)

Scandal—
Picture shows a few signs of being an old release but no complaint received thereby. It was shown in second run house. (Middle West.)

The Prophet's Paradise—
Fair picture. Good business for the weather. (Middle West.)

METRO

Turn to the Right—
Wonderful picture though not as big as "The Four Horsemen;" picture is more of a melodrama, though, than a human interest story. Did big business first week. (Middle West.)

How Loew's State, Los Angeles, Advertised William Farnum in "A Stage Romance."

Much favorable comment from patrons. Fair attendance considering general depression in business. (Middle West.)

Very good picture that played to fine business. (West.)

Went over big first week. Had to be pulled off on fourth day of second week. (Middle West.)

Very good picture playing to excellent business. (Middle West.)

Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse—
First time at popular prices. Very good. Played at this house earlier in the season for four weeks. Excellent business for a return engagement at popular prices. (Middle West.)

Peacock Alley—
Picture was very good. Held over for a second week. Pleased audiences. (East.)

Elaborate production which pleased our audiences. Business good. (Middle West.)

This picture has big exploitation possibilities and is a real audience picture. Played to fine business. (Middle West.)

The Conquering Power—
Went over excellently. Much favorable comment. Good crowds despite week of rain. (Middle West.)

Little Eva Ascends—
Bad picture and business to match. (East.)

Glass Houses—
Had a very good week's run with this picture. (East.)

PATHE

Never Weaken—
Great comedy but attendance not sufficient to warrant high price of picture. (East.)

Ruse of the Tattler—
Pretty fair picture. Business very satisfactory. (Middle West.)

Woman Wake Up—
Not especially strong drama. Patrons not pleased. Attendance fair. (Middle West.)

The Unfoldment—
Proved one of best of year. Ninety-eight per cent satisfied. Nice receipts. (Middle West.)

VITAGRAPH

Flower of the North—
My audience liked this one. Curwood's work always takes well here. Good receipts. (Middle West.)

The Prodigal Judge—
Went over dandy. Pair well. (East.)

Good picture with business just the opposite. (East.)

The Sheik's Wife—
Pleasing—receipts much better than expected. (East.)

Audiences did not enthuse over this one. Business fair. (East.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

Eden and Return—
Fair picture. Fair business. (Middle West.)

Foolish Matrons—
Held up well for the week. Doris May popular with patrons. (East.)

Beyond the Rainbow—
Very well liked—receipts pleasing. (East.)

Fairly good picture. Can't tell drawing possibility because we used vaudeville. (East.)

Some entertainment verdict of patrons. Drew excellently considering weather conditions. (Middle West.)

Two Kinds of Women—
Picture very pleasing but not a drawing card. (East.)

The Call of Home—
Despite unusual competition on this one did a fair week's business. (Middle West.)

GOLDWYN

The Invisible Power—

Come on Over—
Good stuff. They liked it. Lots of fun and, featured with a "Cheer Up Week" entertainment, it went over very nicely. (Middle West.)

Grand Larceny—
Only fair and business the same. (West.)

A Poor Relation—
Punk stuff. (East.)

Poverty of Riches—
Fair picture and fair business. (East.)

Theodora—
The unusually large cast in this one attracted attention and the production was widely advertised, which resulted in a lively week's business. (Middle West.)

Drew very well. Receipts pleasing. (East.)

Men From Lost River—
Fair picture and fair business. (East.)

FOX

Perjury—
Fair. Nothing extra. (Middle West.)

Did a fair week's business, pleasing those who saw it. Strong competition and unfavorable weather proved a handicap. (Middle West.)

Iron to Gold—
A good program picture. Heard much favorable comment. Nice attendance. (Middle West.)

The Primal Law—
Exciting western picture; our people liked it very much. Did pretty fair business. (East.)

Thunderclap—
The cast in this one was widely advertised, which resulted in a lively week's attendance. (Middle West.)

A Connecticut Yankee—
Went great for eight days and might have gone longer. Business much better than at this time last year. The people who see this picture advertise it. Had general appeal but men were especially pleased with it. Good for any theatre. (Middle West.)

Did fair business on third run in city downtown. (East.)

Riding With Death—
Business in general picking up and business good for this picture which ran with "The Leather Pushers." (Middle West.)

The Devil Within—
This went over to good business and pleased audience. (West.)

The Broadway Peacock—
Drew them in for capacity all week. (East.)

Chasing the Moon—
Good picture and fine business. (West.)

Ordinary picture for Mix. Did fair business for week. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

Foolish Wives—
Received well—held over for second week. (East.)

Gorgeous settings, excellent photography and very artistic but weak in plot. Patrons disappointed in much heralded picture but conceded points mentioned and agreed it was a magnificent affair from a production standpoint. Attendance good. (Middle West.)

Finished two weeks' run weakly. (East.)

The Leather Pushers—
Received good press notice and brought forth voluntary appreciation from audience. Men especially attracted but women who came liked the first round. (Middle West.)

Wild Honey—
Good picture, and drew all right. (West.)

Fairly entertaining with business about as usual. (West.)

Better than the usual Priscilla Dean picture. The flood scene is one of the greatest scenic effects ever seen in pictures. Better than average attraction. (Middle West.)

Exceedingly well praised. Receipts dandy. (East.)

Man to Man—
Great. Had 'em standing out in the lobby most of the time. Carey is our best attraction. (Middle West.)

STATE RIGHTS

School Days—
"School Days" is another real Wesley Barry success and a sure-fire box office attraction. Went over big for a week. (Middle West.)

Originally booked for a week, but shown only at matinee last half of week. All right for children. (East.)

Very popular with children. Not a great deal of adult appeal. Fairly satisfactory business considering unusually bad weather. (Middle West.)

Burn 'Em Up Barnes—
This is a cracker-pack, pleases young and old. One of the few comedy productions that has brought spontaneous and continuous laughter. Clean throughout and one that the most exacting patrons can find no fault with. (West.)

Not only did a big business, but pleased audiences so uniformly that we did not have a single complaint that the picture did not live up to advertising given it. (West.)

Fair picture and fair business. (West.)

The Sign of the Rose—
With personal appearance of George Beban packed the house. (East.)

Ten Nights in a Bar Room—
Tacked up the best business in many months. Patrons seem to like this kind of picture just at present. (East.)

Intrigue—
A poor picture which did not attract average business. (East.)

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

Partial Payment Plan in Effect by Pacific Co.

To assist independent exchanges in maintaining what he calls "financial equilibrium" John J. Hayes, president of the Pacific Film Company, producers and distributors has placed in effect a new sales policy known as the "partial payment plan."

In an open letter to exchanges Hayes invites subscribers to buy Pacific territories still unsold for the three current Pacific releases by paying twenty percent of the territory cost down and twenty percent every 30 days until the full price has been paid.

Conan Doyle Turns Do Pleas for Stories

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, due in New York from London April 6th, for an American lecture tour to carry him as far as the West Coast will not be tempted into writing a special story for films. The famous author of Sherlock Holmes made this declaration this week in a cable to the Alexander Film Corporation, which controls the American rights to the Holmes productions. When it became known that the writer planned an American visit, many of the big film producers made overtures to him, designed to get from him an original new fiction drama. To each the author made the same response: That his story writing has nothing to do with his forthcoming appearance on the lecture platform. The only films that can be issued bearing his name as author and his approval as a story teller, Sir Arthur avers, are the subjects the Alexander Film Corporation are now circulating.

Strand Shows Mark Twain in Author Series

"Mark Twain" from the "Great American Authors" series, produced by the Kineto Company of America and released by Hodkinson, is the Charles Urban contribution to the all short-subject program which Managing Director Joseph Plunkett has arranged this week at the Strand Theatre.

Plunkett has surrounded the newest Charles Chaplin picture with an excellent choice of short subjects and the Kineto picture on "Mark Twain" is one of the brightest spots on the Strand program. It was directed by James A. Fitzpatrick, who has produced all the "Great American Authors" scries and was edited under the personal direction of Charles Urban.

Print of "I Am the Law" Due

Finished Product Being Rushed to New York for Showing

LESTER SCOTT, in charge of the sales force of the Affiliated Exhibitors, Incorporated, is speeding across the continent to Los Angeles, for the purpose of bringing to New York a finished print of Edwin Carew's independent special "I Am the Law." Six months' actual work has been put into the making of this production. Director Carew is said to have practically cut the picture before it was shot, because previous to the turning of the crank for a single scene the script was changed and altered until it had reached what was considered perfection.

The same degree of care was devoted to the selection of the cast, which contains such famous screen personalities as Alice Lake, Kenneth Harlan, Gaston Glass, Rosemary Theby, Noah Berry, and his brother, Wallace Berry.

In the actual shooting of the picture nothing was spared. A whole Chinese village was constructed only to be torn down after a few shots. The same might be said of an Eskimo village. In all this Director Carew was aided by the splendid photography of Bob Kurle.

Scott was full of enthusiasm when he left New York because of the splendid reports received from the Coast by C. C. Burr, president of the Affiliated Exhibitors.

After leaving Los Angeles with the print it is Scott's intention to visit a few of the key cities on the way back in order to give some of the state right buyers a peek at the kind of box office attraction they are going to get. It is hoped to have the print in New York by the middle of April, shortly after which it will be exploited in a few towns for the purpose of arriving at its real audience value.

One thing is certain. Director Carew and every member of the cast have put everything they had into "I Am the Law." Carew himself is of the belief that it is the biggest picture he has yet made, despite the fact that he was responsible for such productions as "Isobel," "Rio Grande," "The Soul of a Woman," etc. In expressing his opinion of its merits Mr. Carew said:

"The mere announcement of a snow story usually means just some snow exteriors, a more or less faked snow storm, a dog sled team, a killing or two, and then a sunset, with the hero on his way to civilization with the girl he has captured. But I believe I have succeeded in putting a great deal more than this into "I Am the Law," and I feel safe in promising buyers of this indcpendent special a pleasant surprise."

Carew's optimism as to what may be expected of the picture is also shared by B. P. Fineman and Benny Zeidman, both of whom have followed its making from the selection of the story to the final cutting and titling. Fineman's reports to Mr. Burr have fairly bubbled over with enthusiasm. To such an extent has this been so that Burr feels that if "I Am the Law" is fifty per cent as good as Fineman claims it is, the independent market is going to get a whale of a picture.

"White Hell" Soon Ready

Print Expected in New York Shortly; Many Independent Buyers Make Inquiries

CUTTING and titling of "White Hell." first of the series of eight productions being made at Gloversville, N. Y., by the Charles E. Bartlett Productions, Inc., has progressed so far that it is expected the first completed print will be available for showings to buyers in New York within a few days.

Thosc who have viewed the picture in the rough are as one in declaring its story holds from start to finish, and that in atmosphere, photography and quality of histrionic ability as displayed by the cast it will rank with the best of the out-door stories of the year.

Sincc the first announcement of the series was carried in the trade journals, Jerry Abrams, sales manager, who is making his headquarters in New York at the Bristol Hotel, has received scores of inquiries from out-of-town buyers. He is withholding from closing any contracts until the buyers have an opporunity themselves to see the quality of the initial offering.

In the meantime production on the second of the series is under way at the Gloversville studios, with Richard C. (Dick) Travers as star, and a well balanced cast of capable players in support.

A full and attractive line of paper, and a complete and really useable press book are in course of preparation for "White Hell."

"Mother Eternal" Gets Southwestern Booking

Frank Fay, general manager of the Graphic Film Exchanges in Dallas and Oklahoma City, has completed negotiations for first run showings of "Mother Eternal" in Dallas, Fort Worth and Oklahoma City. This is the first of the Abramson features to be released on the cooperative basis just formed between the Graphic Film Corporation and the newly organized Graphic Exchanges.

Johnny Hines Christens New Burr Studio

The new C. C. Burr studio in Glendale was christened this week when Johnny Hines began production on "Torchy's Shoes." The enlarged facilities of the new studio will give Hines greater opportunities to carry out what are considered pretentious plans to make the interior and exterior sets of the forthcoming "Torchy" comedies better than they have ever been.

Production on the "Torchy's" will be speeded up immeasurably since at least ten sets can be set up at the same time and made ready for shooting without a moment's delay.

That the "Torchy" comedies have come into their own is more in evidence every day. Not only are these comedies playing first run houses in New York City, as is evidenced at the Brooklyn and New York Strand theatres and the Criterion, but they are also in demand in first run theatres throughout the country.

Radio Outfit as Bonus Stimulation Stunt

The Alexander Film Corporation had added another publicity novelty to the stimulating list in their campaign to dispose of territory for the firm's fifteen Sherlock Holmes subjects.

The concern was the first to apply radio to their sales talk.

The firm's newest is a radio outfit for a bonus, designed to attract box office receipts by enabling exhibitors to put the outfit up as a popularity prize in the houses signed up. Radio shoots again into the Alexander's weekly doings in that Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, who is due to arrive in America this week to begin a cross-country lecture tour, will give a short broadcasted wireless talk under the Alexander auspices on the day of his arrival.

All Star Features Buys "Wandering Boy"

All-Star Feature Distributors is the latest buyer of Equity's "Where is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" the B. F. Zeidman Production which has been a sensation in the independent market since it first opened at the Criterion Theatre in New York several months ago.

The sale wa sconsummated through Miss Rosenfield, Eastern sales representative of All-Star Features, of which Louis Hyman is general manager and Sol Lesser president, announces Louis Baum, sales manager of Equity. The territory embraces California, Nevada and New Mexico.

The purchase by All-Star Features adds another well known name to the list of "Wandering Boy" distributors. Equity consistently sold this feature to exchange men whose reputations for keen showmanship and discrimination are unexcelled.

Manager Names Staff for Armstrong Comedie

Charles B. Diltz, studio manager of Reaguer Productions, Inc., producing a series of "Billy" Armstrong two-reel comedies for release through the Pacific Film Company, announces the following staff: Rea Hunt, director; Roy Miller, assistant director; Robert Smith, cinematographer and Castillo Querin, cashier.

The Reaguer unit is now busily engaged in producing "Slow and Easy," which will be finished about the middle of April, but which will not be released until June first. Reaguer Productions, Inc., will make a series of 18 "Billy" Armstrong comedies, to be released via the state rights market.

"Big Boy" Williams Sal Numerous in South

Di Lorenzo, Inc., announced this week that the following sales were closed on "Blaze Away," the first of a series of six "Big Boy" Quinn Williams features that are to be released in the independent market; Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas sold to the R. D. Lewis Film Corporation of Dallas; North and South Carolina to the Continental Pictures Corporation of Charlotte; and foreign rights for Argentine, Paraguay, Uruguay, Chili, Peru and Bolivia to Max Glucksman of New York City.

The new "Big Boy" Williams series is being produced by the Frederick Herbst Productions and directed by W. Hughes Curran.

The second of the series is titled "The Trail of Hate."

"Rubaiyat" Persian Not Arabian Picture

Eastern Film Corporation announces that "The Rubaiyat" is a Persian subject and not an Arabian.

It is an eleventh century story, based upon Omar Khayyam's famous quatrains, translated by Edward Fitzgerald and directed by Ferdinand Earle.

Scene from "I Am the Law," which will be given to the Independent Market through Affiliated Distributors, Inc.

Bromberg and Arrow Deal

Big Deal Completed for State Rights Marketing of Pictures

One of the most important deals in the State Right market was recently completed when the Arrow Film Corporation and Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions completed their negotiations for the handling of many Arrow releases in territory controlled by the latter.

Under the terms of the just-signed contract Bromberg Attractions will handle the following Arrow productions in Louisiana and Mississippi:

Twenty-six Sport Pictorials, 52 Arrow Comedies, "Man of the North," the Arrow-Ann Little Serial, 10 productions featuring Jack Hoxie, 4 productions featuring Neva Gerber, 2 productions featuring Grace Davison, "The Deceiver," starring Jean Hersholt; "The Stranger in Canyon Valley," featuring Edythe Sterling; 4 Peter B. Kyne productions.

The twenty-six Sport Pictorials were produced by Town and Country Films, under the supervision of Jack Eaton. Grantland Rice, the world-famous sporting writer, was largely responsible for their titling and editing.

The fifty-two Arrow Comedies represent the following well-known brands: Mirthquake Comedies, Cruelywed Comedies, Broadway Comedies, and Speed Comedies.

The four Neva Gerber productions from the studios of Ben Wilson have been characterized as clean, fine, worthwhile entertainment.

The four Peter B. Kyne pictures, two of which have been released so far, are made from the best works of this popular author, the first one being "A Motion to Adjourn," which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, while the second, "Back to Yellow Jacket," was a Cosmopolitan Magazine story.

As has been said, this deal is a most important one in the independent field and one which will undoubtedly prove highly beneficial to both contracting parties.

Singer May Enter Chicago

Pacific Company Studying Conditions for Chicago Distribution

Julius Singer, eastern representative of the Pacific Film Company, is now diligently studying the Chicago territory with the intentions of opening an exchange for the distribution of the Pacific's output.

If his intentions materialize the pictures which will be handled by the Pacific-Chicago exchange will be Henry B. Walthal in "The Able Minded Lady"; Ora Carew, Walt Whitman, Gloria Joy in "The Girl From Rocky Point," and "The Forest King," with Reed Chapman and Lillian Hall.

Singer states that this is the reason he is withholding the sale of the Chicago territory from innumerable independent exchanges that wish to purchase it.

John J. Hayes, president of the Pacific organization, is the recipient of a number of inquiries for the three pictures in other territories of the United States and Europe. Negotiation for the sale of the output for South America is now in order and an announcement will be made later on the deal.

Both the New York and Culver City offices of this company have been swamped with inquiries in reference to the new series of two-reel Billy Armstrong comedies, the first of which will be released June 1st and one every three weeks thereafter.

Great pains is being taken by Hayes, who is supervising production at the Culver City studio, on these comedies with the intention of making them above the average type. The histrionic abilities of Armstrong can be remembered by his inimitable work in the Mack Sennett forces.

"School Days" Popular for Holy Week Showing

Fourteen theatres belonging to the Stanley Company of America, Phila., will show the Warner Brothers' production, Gus Edwards' "School Days," featuring Wesley Barry, during the week of April 10, known as Holy Week, according to an announcement.

Virtually every representative circuit and theatre throughout the country has played or is planning to show the Wesley Barry feature, it is said. Every big theatre in Canada has played or has booked the picture and it is declared that the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles; Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo; Liberty and State, Pittsburgh; Liberty, Kansas City; the entire Lubliner and Trinz circuit, Chicago, Balaban and Katz, Chicago theatre, and scores of other representative theatres have shown the Warner production with gratifying results.

Jensen and Von Herburgh Circuit, Seattle, is said to have booked "School Days" for its entire chain of theatres without seeing the production.

Public Still Keen for High Class Comedy

That the public demand for screen comedy is keener today than ever is indicated in box office reports from all sections of the country now in possession of Distinctive Productions. The reports cover the second George Arliss production, "The Ruling Passion," which has a marked comedy vein.

A west Coast report from San Francisco states the new Arliss comedy played at the Grenada theatre last week to $24,000.00.

The production has been booked for early opening dates in Lowell, Springfield, Worcester, Lynn and Somerville, Mass.; Syracuse, Albany, Yonkers, Schenectady, Troy, Utica, N. Y.; Indianapolis, Philadelphia, Allentown, Erie, Pa.; Cincinnati; Denver, Kansas City, Mo.; Wichita, Topeka, Kan.; Tulsa, Okla.; San Diego, Cal.; St. Paul, Minn.; Hartford, New Britain, Conn.; Newark, Bayonne, Elizabeth, Hoboken, N. J.; Huntington, W. Va.; Portland, Ore.; Seattle, Spokane, Wash.; Ottawa, Toronto, St. John and Halifax, Canada.

"Daughter of the Night" Reported Popular

The general manager of the L. & H. Enterprises, recently returned from a trip to the Coast, reports an increase in the demand for historical drama as evidenced by his success in placing "Daughter of the Night" with some of the best exchanges throughout the country.

"Daughter of the Night," presented by the L. & H. Enterprises, is an historical drama of revolutionized Russia. Purported to be the history of the only daughter of the Czar's family to escape slaughter by the revolutionists, the picture splendidly portrays womanhood in its highest type, sacrificing wealth, luxury and love in order that she might aid her country and her people.

This picture is being handled in New York by Alexander Film and has already been booked in many houses in Greater New York.

New Firm Will Handle Italian Pictures

AN important step in the development of the motion picture industry marked a few days ago when the filing of the corporation papers of Shipman-Luporini in Albany signalled the entrance of this new firm into the field, to represent pictures made in Italy under American technical supervision.

Ferdinando V. Luporini, senior member of the firm of Luporini Brothers, was particularly gratified for the reason that this marked the realization of a long-cherished dream.

Saint Ilario, the first of a series of stories by F. Marion Crawford, was selected as the initial production of the Ultra, as the new concern will be known. Kenneth O'Hara, for four years associated with Thos. H. Ince, was selected as the continuity writer.

Henry Kolker, director of "Disraeli," was selected to direct "Saint Ilario." The work of photographing this picture was entrusted to Charles Rosher, for many years cameraman for Mary Pickford, and William Colvin, long identified with Mr. Shipman, was sent over in an advisory capacity, in connection with the production.

Mario Luporini, who is in charge of the office of Luporini Brothers, in Italy, is expected in New York shortly.

The Ultra Film Company is composed of Dr. Francesco Stame and his brother Gino Stame, who has greatly contributed to the making of this production.

It is announced that Stephen T. King, long associated with Ernest Shipman, will in all probability represent the interests of the new firm in the absence of its principals.

"Felix Makes Good" Is Booked for Strand

"Felix Makes Good," third of the "Felix" cartoons, the stories of which are controlled by Miss M. J. Winkler for independent distribution, has been booked by Joe Plunkett, Managing Director of the New York Strand Theatre.

Burr States New Policy

Will Produce Creative Pictures Along Legitimate Production Lines

THE purchase of the Glendale Studio by C. C. Burr, not only marked a milestone in the rapid and broader expansion of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., but it also marks the inception of a new policy of production that should go a great way towards making feature pictures really creative with as much thought to their preparation as that behind the legitimate stage play.

In commenting upon this wide departure from the ordinary mechanics of motion picture production, Burr said:

"It has long been my desire to make real productions—pictures that would satisfy and entertain, not because of lavish settings or the proverbial happy endings, but because the pictures were creative, with as much thought behind them as George M. Cohan and other noted theatrical producers give to the legitimate stage play.

"There is no reason on earth why this cannot be done. The public and exhibitors are continually clamoring for pictures that are different—pictures that show the ear-marks of a carefully planned plot, where logical sequence is followed because of legitimate circumstances, and where the action corresponds with life-like incidents that are real, and not the product of a director's imagination.

"In view of my own ideas on the construction of real photo-dramas, I have, for the past year, been building my organization from the legitimate producer's standpoint, and now that I have the increased facilities of a thoroughly equipped studio and men of vision and ideas with me, I am positive that the affiliated product will more closely approximate the legitimate stage play in its preparation and construction than any other production of its kind."

The facilities of the new Burr studio mark it as among the most thoroughly equipped of its kind in the East, for with the actual laboratory on the premises Burr will be able to ascertain ten minutes after the shooting of a scene whether the actual shots taken meet with approval.

Preparing Kineto Catalogue

Thirty-five Per Cent of Urban's Encyclopedia to Be Catalogued

CHARLES URBAN is now preparing a new Kineto Catalogue which will list about thirty-five per cent of the material which will be embraced by "The Living Book of Knowledge," the world's motion encyclopedia which will include a minimum of 1,000 reels, all of which will be of permanent value.

These are all exclusive of the "Official Urban Movie Chats of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America." The new catalogue will list upwards of 350 reels which are completed and in their final form.

Among these are series under the following classifications:

Historical, including the "Great American Authors" and the "Great Statesmen" series; Naval and Military, Maritime and Public Service series; the "Great Outdoors," Nature and "Picture Poem" series, all of which have to do with outdoor life; the Natural History series, the brilliant "Animal Kingdom" series and the "Modern Truths from Old Fables," being motion picture versions of the Fables of La Fontaine; the Urban Science Series, including sections in Biology, Popular Science, Sociology, Psychology and a special series devoted to "Health and Sanitation"; Industrial and Agricultural Series; special groups devoted to "Exceptional Happenings," "Sports and Pastimes," a series on cooking called "Culinary Art," and an extensive series devoted to travel in all countries.

All of this material is being edited in the editorial rooms of the Kineto Company of America, all under the personal direction of Charles Urban.

Vera Gordon Picture Given N. Y. Premier

MORE than 1,200 exhibitors and their friends witnessed the New York premier showing of the Harry Rapf production, "Your Best Friend," starring Vera Gordon, at the Astor Hotel on April 3. The picture is being distributed by Warner Brothers, and it was written and directed by William Nigh.

Rapf put on a simple, yet effective prologue, and Erno Rappe, conductor of the Capitol orchestra, wielded the baton. The presentation was given in conjunction with the Federated Exchange of New York, formerly known as Warner's Exchange.

The program for the occasion was a bank book herald, in which was placed pertinent data relative to the picture. In presenting the prologue, Rapf used a young couple and a judge. The young woman beseeched the judge for a divorce on the grounds of domestic incompatibility, and the judge in an endeavor to reunite the couple began to relate the theme of the Gordon picture.

As he told the story the lights went out and the picture was unfolded. At the close the curtains were drawn apart, and the young people walked out of the room arm in arm.

Altogether the presentation was capably put over, and the audience accorded it an enthusiastic reception.

Dancing followed the showing.

New England Purchases "Cap'n Kidd" Serial

Sam Grand of the Federated Film Exchange of Boston this week attached his signature to a contract which assigned to the New England Federated Exchange the rights to "Cap'n Kidd," first of the independently-produced Eddie Polo chapter-plays which the Star Serial Corporation is marketing for independent distribution. The contract closed by Grand representing the Federated interests and Brandt of the Star Serial Corporation is the first to be consummated on the Polo product in this country.

Beautiful Chinese Sets for "I Am the Law"

A beautiful Chinese garden and interior to match was especially built by Edwin Carew for a short but important incident in "I Am the Law." The principals in the Chinese episode are Alice Lake and Wallace Berry, and the climax is reached with a thrilling hand-to-hand fight between Berry and Kenneth Harlan, during which Berry makes a remarkable fall down a huge staircase.

Frumm Gets Promotion in Pacific Co.

Faithfulness and business integrity received its reward on the coast recently when A. Guy Frumm was made secretary and treasurer of the Pacific Film Co., Inc., formerly a common law concern, but now a California corporation. Frumm has been an associate of John J. Hayes since the latter embarked in the film business.

Schlank in East Plans New Production

Morris Schlank, producer of Arrow-Broadway Comedies, featuring Eddie Barry, is in town from the west coast for a conference with Arrow officials. Schlank has just completed his last contract with Arrow and plans are now under way for the new productions.

Fineman Wires Approval of "I Am the Law"

C. C. Burr, president of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., which is releasing on an independent basis Edwin Carewe's big special, "I Am the Law," yesterday received the following telegram from B. P. Fineman, who in the past has proven unusually conservative in his estimates of the value of productions:

"Tom Geraghty, Lasky supervising director, and Charley Logue, author, think "I Am the Law" as good as or better than "The River's End." We are greatly pleased ourselves. Suggest you don't sell further territories until you see it."

"Broken Shadows" Title of New Production

Second National Pictures Corporation announces that the title of the fourth release, a visualization of the novel, "Nance," by Charles Garvice, will be "Broken Shadows." It was selected according to W. J. Auchterlonie, not only because of its aptness as a deseriptive title but also because it is in line with the "Shadows" advertising campaign conducted in the trade publications through the past two months.

In "Broken Shadows" Isobel Elsom, Mary Forbes, Ivan Sampson and James Lindsay are featured. The production was directed by Albert Ward. It is said to be an enthralling romance strong in the elements of mystery, emotional appeal and love interest. The scenes are laid in Ireland.

It is stated that some new and striking shadow effects will be employed in the advertising of this production.

Third of Curwood-Arrow Productions Completed

Dell Henderson has completed the third Curwood-Arrow production, the title of which is still in abeyance. The picture is due for release the first of May. The cast include Zena Keefe, J. Barney Sherry, Robert Elliott, Gypsy O'Brien, Roy Gordon and others.

"Wandering Boy" Book in Philly for Run

Philadelphia is the latest city to afford the Equity picture, "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" an indefinite run, according to announcement received at the Equity home office from Ben Amsterdam, of Masterpiece Film Attractions, of Philadelphia, which controls the Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey rights.

The B. F. Zeidman production will open at the Stanton theatre, a Stanley house, on April 24th.

Amsterdam was among the first buyers of "Where Is My Wandering Boy?" having purchased his territorial rights immediately after the successful opening of the feature at the Criterion theatre in New York.

Lloyd Scores in First-Runs

"Sailor-Made Man" Given Feature Position on First-Run Programs

IN a letter to Hal. E. Roach, under whose auspices the Harold Lloyd productions are made, Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, lauds Lloyd's latest picture, "A Sailor Made Man," which has been given the feature position on the programs of first-run theatres throughout the country. Mr. Kane writes in part:

"Theatres in which 'A Sailor-Made Man' has been given the feature place, are located in cities on both coasts and the great centers in the interior districts. I have not at hand a complete list, but every city which I am about to name occupies a key position and most of them are the most important cities in their states. In addition to the first run theatres, a very large number of second and third run houses in every district have made this Lloyd offering the feature of their program.

"'A Sailor-Made Man' was a winner in Sam Harding's Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., during the week of January 29th, and in the week of February 5th it packed Manager John H. Kunsky's Madison Theatre, Detroit. Mr. Boyd, general manager of the Stanley Amusement Company, booked it for the week of February 13th for the Stanley, Philadelphia, and it made a clean-up there. On February 16th it began a remarkable three weeks' run in Barbee's Loop Theatre, Chicago, under a contract signed by President W. S. Barbee. Lubliner & Trinz have since contracted for its showing in their Pantheon and Senate theatres, each a first run house, April 30th and May 6th, respectively, as well as in their fourteen other Chicago theatres on early dates, while Ascher Brothers have made arrangements for the round of their sixteen houses in Chicago.

"During the week of March 27th 'A Sailor-Made Man' was the feature attraction in Loew's State, Boston, and at the opening performance broke that theatre's matinee attendance record. In the face of strong competition, Mr. Lloyd's latest feature played the California Theatre, San Francisco, the week of March 12th, and, in the words of Manager Eugene Roth, 'stood 'em out' daily."

New Sales Manager for Selznick News

David O. Selznick announces the appointment of Howard Morris to the position of sales manager of the Selznick News. It was originally announced that E. V. Durling would assume that position, but it is now stated that he has been assigned to other special responsibilities.

Howard Morris has already assumed his new duties, making quarters at the Selznick offices at 729 Seventh Avenue, and is planning a sales drive on the News. Some important announcements regarding the Selznick News are promised for the near future.

"The Big Four" Invades The Far East

HAVING firmly intrenched their business in Europe, Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith have now deeided to invade the Orient to establish there an organization for the distribution of their pietures in the Far East.

With this end in view the personnel of the Oriental offiee sailed last week from San Franeiseo for Tokio. In the party earrying the American film industry into a virgin field were George Mooser, who will aet as Far-Eastern direetor for United Artists, Seymour Hilliard Pierson, who will aet as general manager of the Tokio offiee, and Howard A. Boyle, who will be sales manager for the Far East.

"General headquarters for the new organization will be at Tokio," said Mr. Mooser, "and from here distribution of films made by Ameriea's four greatest stars will be handled for all of Asia."

"When Romance Rides" for N. Y. Capitol

"When Romance Rides," Benjamin B. Hampton's film adaptation of Zane Grey's popular novel, "Wildfire," distributed by Goldwyn, will be the attraction at New York's Capitol theatre next week.

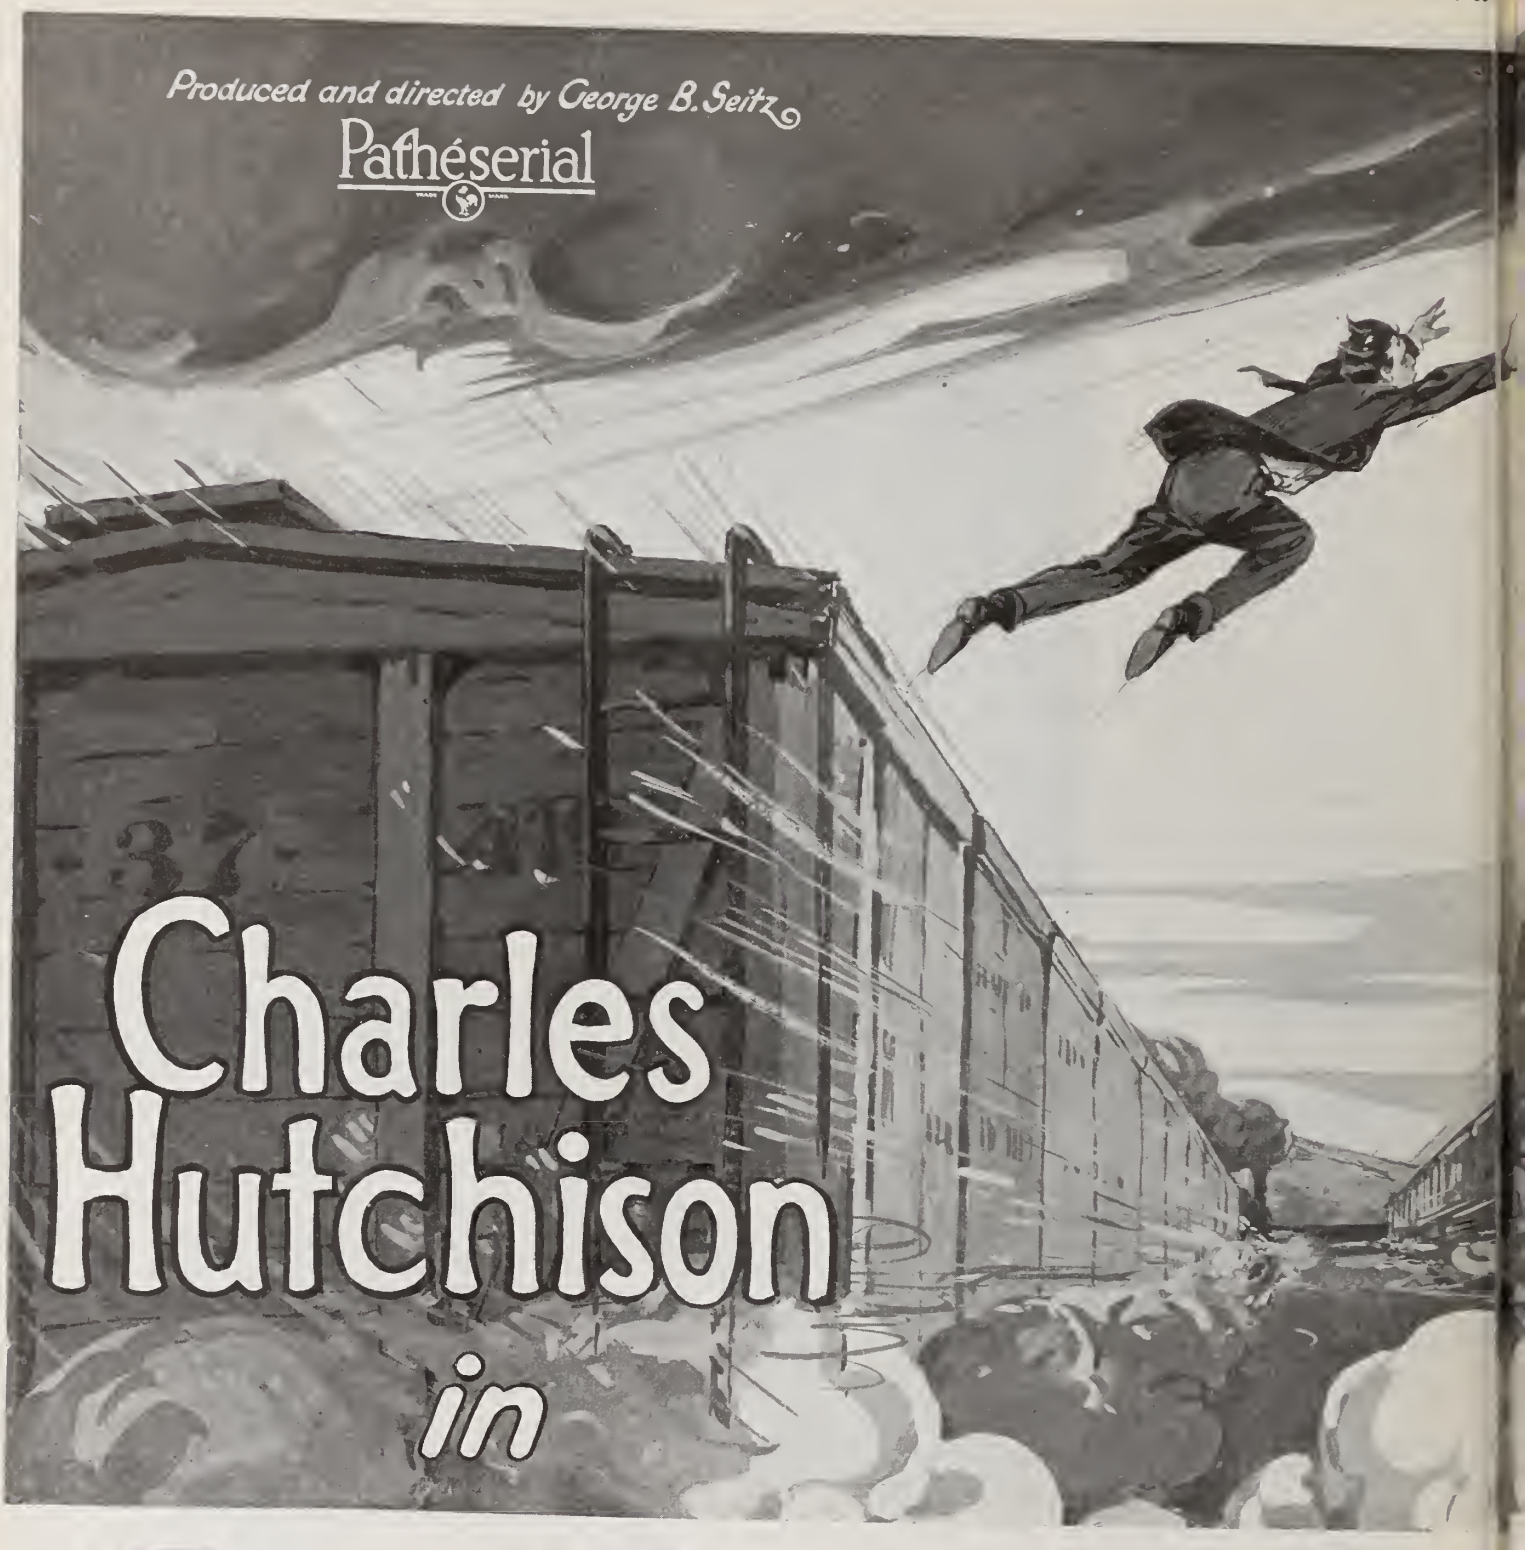
Educational Films Are Listed by League

"Saving Sister Susie," a two-reel Christie Comedy, is listed in the latest Bulletin of the Motion Picture League, among four "Family Films" which the League approves for all members of the family.

The same Bulletin also recommends "The Silver Harvest," a single-reel picture, the latest release of the World Wanderings series, as an Industrial Film for class room instruction, and two issues of Kinograms, Educational's news reel.



"Go-Get-'em

The public wants melodrama.
It wants speed, action, thrill.
It likes to be jolted speechless by incredible stunts.
Play "Go Get 'Em Hutch" and give them what they want.

Hutch"

Hutch, the Thrill King, dares death a hundred times in this lightning-fast, pulse-quickening serial He jumps, fights, rides, and races on skates and skis, and escapes destruction by the breadth of a hair again and again.

Travelaughs an R-C Release

Hy Mayer Subject to Be Nucleus of R-C's Short-Subject Division

HY MAYER, the noted cartoonist whose drawings have enlivened the pages of the world's greatest humorous publications, has joined the R-C Puctures' growing galaxy of stars, and his Travelaughs will form the nucleus about which will be built what is expected to become one of the strong short reel distributing organizations of the industry. This marks a new departure for R-C Pictures, as heretofore they have confined their activities to the distribution of feature productions.

The popularity of the Hy Mayer Travelaughs has already been solidly established. At the Capitol theatre, New York, the Mayer reels have long been an important part of the program and have often been featured in the advertising with the main attraction.

Travelaughs will be issued weekly by R-C Pictures, the first beginning April 23rd. The first subject, "Such Is Life in London's West End," is a commentary on life in the London capital in which scenic views are combined with Mayer's delightful cartoons. This will be followed by "Volendam," a quaint novelty reel of life in a small Dutch town which shows the picturesque people of the land of broad trousers, wooden shoes and windmills.

Newspaper comment in particular has been strong in its praise of Hy Mayer's artistry and the fine comedy elements of his short subjects. The New York Times, in whose columns Mr. Mayer's drawings appeared for ten years, stated that his Travelaughs were among the ten best subjects produced during the year of 1921. This verdict was based on the timeliness, novelty, artistic execution and humorous values of the subjects.

"Block" Program a Success

Paramount Revival Staged at the N. Y. Rialto Said to Prove Big Hit

REVIVAL WEEK at the Rialto Theatre, New York, when Hugo Riesenfeld played on successive days the seven Paramount super-specials recently announced for block booking through the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges, proved a big box-office success, according to the Rialto management.

The pictures played were George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man," Cecil B. DeMille's "Don't Change Your Husband," John Barrymore in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," Cecil B. DeMille's "Old Wives For New," George Fitzmaurice's "On With the Dance," with Mae Murray; George Melford's "Behold My Wife" and Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female."

New York motion-picture fans who had not previously seen these productions, and hundreds who had seen them before and wanted to see them again, flocked to the Rialto throughout the week, declares the Rialto management.

The success at the Rialto, which is reported by Paramount as being duplicated in scores of leading thetres throughout the country, is especially gratifying to Sidney R. Kent, Paramount's general manager of distribution, who put the idea of the block booking of these big productions into operation. "It establishes the fact," said Mr. Kent "that there are certain big pictures which will always be good, whether they were released last week or two years ago. These are the classics of the motion picture business, their worth is established, they are known to the public and they will always be an attraction."

Competitors Pool Efforts

Six Jersey City Theatres Play "Foolish Wives" Day and Date

ONE of the most unusual day and date runs ever put over in the film business took place last week in Jersey City and its vicinity where six competing theatres simultaneously played "Foolish Wives," the big von Stroheim Super Jewel production. The six theatres pooled their advertising and created one of the biggest advertising splashes in the local newspapers ever attempted for moving pictures in that section.

The day and date combine was entered into by the following theatres: The Roosevelt theatre, West Hoboken; the Central theatre, Jersey City; the Pastime theatre, Union Hill; the Lincoln theatre, Union Hill; the Tivoli theatre, Jersey City, and the Fulton theatre, Jersey City. The Roosevelt, the Central, the Pastime and the Lincoln theatres pooled the advertising for their zone, and the Tivoli and Fulton theatres for their zone.

The run in each theatre included three days, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. The newspaper advertising was marked with full page spreads, half page spreads and quarter-pages. The newspaper campaign was supplements by an extra large showing of 24-sheets, 1,000 one-sheets and several hundred posters of other sizes. Among the exploitation tie-ups was a "broken record" music store tie-up which created great interest. The window filled with phonograph records and phonographs advertising the pictures contained a placard reading somewhat as follows: "Foolish Wives Breaking All Records!" etc.

That the concentration of advertising made a hit with Jersey City theatregoers was proved by the long lines that appeared at the box offices of the various theatres on the opening night, according to a statement from the Universal home office. The theatre owners reported that the combined presentation was a huge success and did much to establish each theatre's good will among its patrons in thus supplying the big Monte Carlo picture as a first run attraction.

Exploitation Aids for "Queen O' the Turf"

Following out their purpose of making "Queen O' the Turf," the race track drama which they will release on April 16th, a big attraction for the spring season, R-C Pictures announces that a wide variety of exploitation material has been prepared, all of which will emphasize the thrilling horse race episode.

Among the novelties will be "fake" money advertising "Queen O' the Turf." A second attractive novelty is a paper jockey cap, made in bright colors, on the brim of which is printed "Queen O' the Turf."

"I Intend to Keep Right on Working" Wm. Hart

IN a statement issued this week at Hollywood, Cal., William S. Hart sets at rest the rumors concerning his retirement. He has not retired and probably will not do so for many years to come.

"I intend to resume work in the summer," said Mr. Hart, "in order to have a picture ready for fall release. I therefore will not be absent from the screen at all, for 'Travelin' On,' my Paramount picture recently released, will take me well into the fall.

"The motion picture public made me. I am mighty grateful, and I intend to keep right on working until they say 'Enough!' The reception of my recent picture, 'Travelin' On,' shows me they have not said the word yet. I am not a rich man but I have enough to quit if I wanted to do so. I have enough to provide the necessities and a few of the luxuries of life. My wants are few. But I love work and I love Western pictures. Moreover, I am an avowed rival of everyone who likes my western pictures, 'cause I like 'em, too."

"A Pasteboard Crown" Reveals Stage Life

"A Pasteboard Crown," set for release by Playgoers Pictures, April 16th, carries a double appeal to the public and exhibitors. A Travers Vale production in five reels, declared by all who have seen it in pre-views to be a picture of great entertainment value, interest is heightened by the fact that it is adapted from the novel of that name by Clara Morris.

Miss Morris herself described the book at the time of its publication as "a story of the New York stage." It is not autobiographical, but is based on close study and observation made by this celebrated actress during her many years before the public. Some of the characters, indeed, figure in incidents which were related by Miss Morris in her "Life on the Stage, My Personal Experiences and Recollections," which appeared a year before the publication of the novel.

Among the popular screen players in the cast of "A Pasteboard Crown" are Evelyn Greeley, Eleanor Woodruff, Robert Elliott, Gladys Valerie, Dora Mills Adams, Jane Jennings and Albert Rocardi.

Assd. Exhibitors' Films on Opening Programs

Manager Sam Abrams has selected "Woman Wake Up" and "A Sailor-Made Man," each of them an Associated Exhibitors feature, as the first two attractions for the opening of his Rialto Theatre, a first-run house in Houston, Tex. These two pictures were chosen in the face of spirited competition, representatives of many companies presenting the merits of their stars insistently since the house began to near completion.

Praise "Smilin' Through"

Reviewers Praise Norma Talmadge Film at Opening in Chicago House

IN a statement issued during the week from the First National home office a list of comments made by the Chicago reviewers in connection with the showing of Norma Talmadge's latest starring vehicle, "Smilin' Through," at the Chicago theatre, is submitted in evidence of the favorable impression made by the First National release of the big Balaban and Katz theatre.

A few excerpts as quoted by the First National statement follows:

Chicago Herald and Examiner: "There is a magnificent fineness and vitality about 'Smilin' Through.' It has fidelity, simplicity and power. Norma Talmadge has never had a vehicle to equal it and proves convincingly that she is a rare and most talented actress. There is an air of breeding, thought and background about 'Smilin' Through' that is graceful and ingratiating—an expensive feeling of well being—a glowingness about everything which is close to genius.

"Smilin' Through has heart warmth, tenderness and a great deal of sweetness. It is refreshing.

Mae Tinee in the Chicago Tribune: "Pictures like 'Smilin' Through' are a mighty good thing for they prove to the 'so-called human race' that it's not as hard boiled as it wants to think it is. They surprise it with a tear in its eye and gulp in its throat. They fill it with a childlike, mystic 'I want my mother' yearning it thought it had forgotten all about. Yes, every so often it's not a bad thing to remind us that while we may think we like to sit on the curbstone and smoke cigarettes, we really want to go to heaven after all."

Genevieve Harris in the Chicago Evening Post: "'Smilin' Through' is a beautiful, fanciful romance, adapted from the stage play in which Jane Cowl appeared. It is fanciful rather than dramatic. The director has caught this poetic quality and translated it beautifully into a series of lovely scenes. From the standpoint of settings and photography this is one of the best of Norma Talmadge productions. The part of the picture which deals with Moonyeen is especially well done, and Miss Talmadge herself is a vision of beauty in the costumes of the olden time."

Carl Sandburg in the Chicago Daily News: "'Smilin' Through' is sartorially and dramatically the best thing Norma has had in over twelve months."

"The Soul Seeker" Said to Be "Thriller"

The sea and the air have been liberally utilized by Allen Holubar in making "The Soul Seeker," his next production for First National—said to be a real, sure-fire "thriller." Dorothy Phillips is starred in the picture, which is being directed as well as produced by Mr. Holubar.

Four types of planes, including a ten-passenger hydroplane and a scout that rises at the rate of a thousand feet a minute, have been used in the cranking of some furious action high in the air. Two destroyers were brought into play, and one was used in a descent upon a smuggling ship, with the "gobs" from the destroyer pouring over the deck rail of the schooner and throttling the sailors into submission.

Pyramid Pictures Will Build Radio Station

PYRAMID Pictures, Inc., announces that it has contracted for the installation of a powerful radio broadcasting station at its studio in Astoria, Long Island, and it is expected that the station will be in full operation by the fifteenth of May.

The messages sent out from Pyramid's broadcasting station will be dedicated to the furthering of the best interests of the motion picture and theatrical world. Until now the radio has been considered a rival of the motion picture. "It is expected that this broadcasting station will effect a change and that this change will ally the two forms of entertainment. The radio messages and entertainment will recreate interest in pictures," declares the statement from the Pyramid Pictures, Inc.

The station, now being installed in the Pyramid studio, will have a carrying radius of fifteen hundred miles and, under favorable conditions, may be heard at the receiving stations on the Pacific coast, it declared.

Wide Response to "Better Business" Drive

In connection with the "Better Business Campaign" conducted by "Topics of the Day," the Pathe home-office reports that within seven days after the first announcement of the letter competition, 10,000 replies, representing every section of the country, had been received. The question proposed was "How Can Business Be Improved for the Manufacturer, Merchant, Worker, and Unemployed?"

Prize-winning answer No. 1 submitted by W. J. Cassiday, Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C., is as follows:

"Adopt the Sales Tax or some other tax measure which will do away with all taxes known as 'war taxes.' Let capital and labor arrive at some agreement and stop scrapping. Make reformers go to work and earn an honest living. Bring back beer and light wines. Forget the war."

E. K. Lincoln Finishing Production

E. K. Lincoln, who was last seen opposite Hope Hampton in "The Light in the Dark," her most recent First National attraction, heads an all star cast in the first feature film production of the newly organized Genius Film Corporation, which is now being completed at the Tiffany Studios, in West 44th Street, New York.

The picture, which is tentatively titled "The Price of Her Ambition," is a strong and intensely dramatic story from the pen of Adelaide Heilbron. Edward Dillon is directing.

Philip Rosen Directing Betty Compson

Under the direction of Philip E. Rosen, Betty Compson has just started work at the Lasky studio on her next Paramount starring picture, tentatively titled, "The Bonded Woman," by Albert Shelby LeVino, based on the story, "The Salvaging of John Sumner," by the late John Fleming Wilson.

The role of Angela Gaskell is played by Miss Compson, John Bowers plays the leading male role, that of John Sumner; Richard Dix, formerly leading man at the Morosco theatre, Los Angeles, and well known in pictures, will be seen as Lee Marvin; J. Farrel McDonald as Captain Gaskell, and Ethel Wales as Lucita.

Post to Carry 2-Page Paramount Ad

The Saturday Evening Post issue of May 6 will contain a handsome double-page display advertisement of Gloria Swanson in Elinor Glyn's "Beyond the Rocks," with Rudolph Valentino, the next Paramount super-production selected for day and date booking. The release date is May 7 and on that day the picture will be shown in more than two hundred leading theatres throughout the country.

The left-hand page of the advertisement is illustrated with four stills from the production and contains text bearing directly upon the picture. The right-hand page contains a large picture of Miss Swanson and Mr. Valentino in a striking pose, and in a panel alongside the illustration is an announcement of seven other new Paramount productions.

Song Number for "The Isle of Zorda"

An arrangement has just been completed by the Pathe Exchange, Inc., with the S. C. Caine, Inc., Music Publishers, in New York City, to publish a song, "The Isle of Zorda," as an additional exploitation accessory for the Pathe special feature of the same name. The words of the song were written by Herbert Crooker and Milt Hagen, and the music by Victor Nurnberg.

Many B'way Bookings for Educational

AN unusual number of bookings for first-run in New York are announced by Educational. "Hokus Pokus," a Christie Comedy featuring Bobby Vernon, will be shown at the Rivoli theatre the week of April 2. The Rialto will show the single-reel special "How to Grow Thin" and the Mermaid Comedy "The Rainmaker," with Lloyd Hamilton, beginning April 9, and the following week, which is Educational Pictures Week, "The Rainmaker" will go to the Rivoli.

"Step This Way," a Jack White production in the Mermaid Comedy series, featuring Lige Conley, and "The Family Album," Sketchografs by Julian Ollendorff, also are booked for the Rialto theatre, to be shown at an early date.

"Schoolday Love," a Campbell Comedy with children and animals taking the principal parts, and "The Silver Harvest," one of Educational's World Wanderings, began a three-week run at the Cameo theatre on April 2.

During the week of April 16-23, Educational Pictures Week, the Strand theatre in Brooklyn is to change programs daily. Four two-reel comedies have been selected from Educational's program for this week.

"From Dawn to Dusk in Egypt," a recent release of the World Wanderings series, is still at the Criterion theatre, where it has been showing ever since the beginning of the long run of "The Loves of Pharaoh."

Effective April 2, the Rialto and Capitol in New York and the Strand, Newark, began showing Kinograms, Educational's news reel.

Big Demand Continues for Hayakawa Film

Early reports from R-C exchanges report that the big bookings which greeted "The Vermilion Pencil," Sessue Hayakawa's latest production, have been followed by bookings which insure this feature a wide circulation throughout the country. "The Vermilion Pencil" is claimed by R-C Pictures to be the biggest of the Hayakawa series to date. The Japanese star plays a dual role and is supported by Bessie Love, erstwhile star, who is his leading lady.

Correction of Caption in April 8th Issue

On page 2092 in the April 8th issue of the News, the center panel of the layout was incorrectly captioned: "Wanda Hawley in 'Bobbed Hair,' Realart-Paramount." The caption should have read: "Mabel Ballin and Raymond Bloomer in 'Other Women's Clothes,' which is a Hodkinson release."

Borzage on New Subject for Cosmopolitan

Frank Borzage, director of "Humoresque," "The Good Provider" and other Cosmopolitan Productions, has started work on "The Valley of Silent Men," a James Oliver Curwood story of the Canadian Northwest. The story appeared serially in "Good Housekeeping" and was subsequently printed in book form.

In the cast are: Alma Rubens, lately seen in "Find the Woman"; Lew Cody, Mario Majeroni, Joe King, J. W. Johnston and George Nash.

The exteriors are being photographed in the neighborhood of Banff, Canada.

Loew Chain Books Two Universal Pictures

The Universal home office reports that Priscilla Dean's picture, "Wild Honey," has been booked by the Loew Circuit for a total of 104 days, beginning April 17th. This subject had a run of several weeks at the Central theatre, Broadway, New York, and later was presented at the Cameo theatre on Forty-second Street, New York.

At the same time that the contract for "Wild Honey" was signed Harry Carey's production, "Man to Man," now showing at the Central, was also booked by the Lowe chain. This picture will play over the Lowe circuit for a total of seventy days, beginning April 24th. Both pictures will play the Loew houses on a split week basis, which is the policy of the circuit.

Real Circus in Thomas H. Ince Production

John Griffith Wray, the Ince director, will take over "Howe's Great London Circus" for three weeks to permit the Thomas H. Ince players to film the scenes of "the elephant girl" story from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan. This will be a First National release.

The "Someone to Love" company includes Cullen Landis, Madge Bellamy and Noah Beery. They will be with the circus for the first three weeks on the Central and Southern California tour after the circus leaces its winter quarters at Palo Alto, Cal.

James Kirkwood Opposite Priscilla Dean

JAMES KIRKWOOD has been engaged by Universal to support Priscilla Dean in her forthcoming Universal-Jewel production, "Under Two Flags," adapted from Ouida's world-famous novel. Production, it is expected, will start this week. Tod Browning will direct this subject.

Kirkwood will bear the male stellar honors in the picture, playing the principal role opposite Miss Dean—that of Victor, the soldier of mystery and romance whose indifference to the fiery outbursts of the temperamental heroine in the novel, gives opportunity for many of the strong climaxes of the story. The role of Victor is said to be especially suitable for Kirkwood.

Miss Dean, who will play the exotic role of "Cigarette," will have practically an all-star cast in her support, judging from the list of names already announced. Although the cast has not been completed, the following players have been engaged to play important roles: Stuart Holmes, John Davidson, and W. H. Bainbridge.

"Woman, Wake Up" Is Booked Heavily

The promise made by exhibitors to accord a hearty welcome to Florence Vidor in her first starring vehicle, "Woman, Wake Up," is being more than fulfilled, says John C. Ragland, secretary of Associated Exhibitors. The booking offices of this organization are being flooded with applications for contracts, and the number of these is increasing as reports are received telling of the enthusiasm aroused by the new star and her picture in cities and towns throughout the country.

Special Music Score for Bruce Scenic

Work has been in progress at the Capitol theatre in New York for more than three weeks on a special musical score to be used in connection with the forthcoming showing at that theatre of "My Country," one of the Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce which Educational is releasing. According to S. L. Rothafel, manager of presentation of the Capitol theatre, the music will be a symphonic treatment of "America."

"'My Country' is one of the most beautiful pictures I have ever seen," said Mr. Rothafel, "and we are preparing special music in keeping with it. A symphonic treatment is being given the principal motif from 'My Country, 'Tis of Thee.' It will be treated in such a way that the music will be descriptive of waterfalls, great mountain tops and the other spectacular scenes depicted in this beautiful subject."

First National Studio Briefs

MAURICE TOURNEUR has finished the filming of "Lorna Doone," which presents Madge Bellamy, John Bowers and Frank Keenan in the leading roles. Wyndham Gittens is assisting Mr. Tourneur in the editing of the picture.

The London Follies Company during their week's engagement in Los Angeles visited the Mack Sennett studios as the guests of the comedy producer.

Mable Normand and her company, with F. Richards Jones directing, have been on location on the San Luis Roy River, shooting scenes on a cattle ranch for "Suzanna."

Marguerite de la Motte, the J. L. Frothingham star, has begun work on her fourth consecutive production for First National release. The picture now under way at the Ince studio is titled "A Man of Action."

"Go-Get-'Em Hutch" on "Selected List"

The release of Pathe's latest "stunt" serial, "Go-Get-'Em Hutch," starring Charles Hutchison, finds the picture entered by the National Board of Review in its selected list of films. In one of its late reports the Board had already expressed its approval of this serial for its realism in presenting a drama dealing with big industrial affairs and citing it with two other recent Pathe serial productions as an example in the way of being entirely free from objectionable matter of any kind. The other two highly approved serial productions were "Hurricane Hutch," and the recently completed "Timber Queen," starring Ruth Roland.

Viola Dana in Canada on Appearance Tour

Viola Dana, the popular Metro star, left New York last week for Toronto, Canada, where she is scheduled to make a series of personal appearances. From there she will go to San Francisco for the opening of Loew's new State theatre. After having spent the greater part of the past two months living on railroad trains which took her from theatre to theatre all over the United States, Miss Dana declares she is about ready to settle down to the comparative tranquillity of Hollywood.

Jack Holt to Star in "Man Unconquerable"

"The Man Unconquerable" is the striking title of Jack Holt's new Paramount picture, just started at the Lasky studio under the direction of Joseph Henabery. The story is an original by Hamilton Smith and has been adapted for the screen by Julien Josephson.

Paramount April 9 Releases

Cosmopolitan and Realart Pictures and Ethel Clayton Vehicle on List

THREE features are listed for release April 9 by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, namely, the Cosmopolitan production, "Find the Woman," and Ethel Clayton in "The Cradle," both Paramount pictures, and Constance Binney in the Realart picture, "The Sleepwalker."

Alma Rubens, remembered for her work in "Humoresque" and "The World and His Wife," both Cosmopolitan productions for Paramount, is the featured player in "Find the Woman," which was adapted by Doty Hobart from the story by Arthur Somers Roche. Tom Terriss directed. Eileen Huban, noted actress of the speaking stage, makes her debut in this picture in an important role, and others in the cast are George MacQuarrie, Harrison Ford, who plays the leading man's role, Henry Sedley, Norman Kerry, Ethel Duray, Arthur Donaldson and Sydney Deane.

"The Cradle," which has already been seen in New York, has been called by critics the best picture which Ethel Clayton has had since "The Young Mrs. Winthrop." It is from the original French play of the same title by Eugene Brieux, author of "Damaged Goods." It was adapted by Olga Printzlau and directed by Paul Powell. Charles Meredith is Miss Clayton's leading man and Mary Jane Irving, a remarkable child actress, makes a deep impression in the role of the baby daughter. Others in the cast are Anna Lehr, Walter McGrail and Adele Farrington.

"The Sleepwalker" is said to prove a highly satisfying starring subject for Constance Binney who plays the role of a convent-bred girl.

Pathe's April 16 Releases

Frank Keenan in Playlet, "More Trouble," Heads Short-Subjects

ANNOUNCEMENT comes from the Pathe Exchange, Inc., that the strong collection of short subject features and the serial episode scheduled for release the week of April 16th, will be augmented by "More Trouble," the latest Pathe Playlet, starring Frank Keenan.

"The Falling Wall" is the second episode of the new Pathe serial, "Go-Get-'Em Hutch," starring Charles Hutchison. With the plot of the serial well planted in the first chapter, the second permits it to get away at a flying start with plenty of thrilling feats for the "stunt star" to perform.

"An Ozark Romance" is the current re-issued one-reel comedy starring Harold Lloyd. The offering is uproarious from start to finish, showing Lloyd among the moonshiners. Bebe Daniels plays the role of the daughter of the bearded mountaineer, and "Snub" Pollard is Lloyd's hated rival for the girl's affections. Two "kid" actors furnish comedy moments and get into the Lloydian spirit of fun.

"Stand Pat" is the title of the latest Hal Roach comedy featuring Paul Rarrott and "Sunshine Sammy." In addition, the funniest of the Hal Roach comedians were pressed into service, including Mark Jones, Eddie Baker and Ethel Broadhurst. The comedy is a satire on gambling.

"A Wolf in Sheep's Clothing" is the current animated cartoon of the series of "Aesop's Film Fables."

Pathe Review No. 151 presents another interesting and entertaining series of subjects for the third anniversary series. "Photographic Gems" presents some artistic skyline studies; "When the Salmon Comes Home" is the annual epic of the Alaskan rivers; "The Ski Jumpers" is the Pathe Slow Motion Camera's version of ski-ing.

First of Louis Burston Series Completed

The first of what will be a series of special productions with stories of literary merit and box office value is nearing completion at the Hollywood studios of Louis Burston.

The working title of the initial Louis Burston production was "The Heart of a Child," but this has given way to the more appropriate and final title of "Forget Me Not." Gareth Hughes and Bessie Love are co-starred. Hughes will be remembered for his remarkable work in "Sentimental Tommy." Recently he starred in a series of Metro pictures. Miss Love herself is one of the best known of the younger actresses of the screen.

The cast includes Irene Hunt, Otto Lederer, Gertrude Clair, William Machin, Myrtle Lind and "Queenie, the Miracle Dog of the Movies."

Henry R. Symonds wrote the story and it was picturized by John B. Clymer, W. S. Van Dyke directed under the personal supervision of Mr. Burston. Harry L. Todd has furnished some unusual photographic effects.

Forget Me Not is a story of laughter and tears. It has an orphanage setting, society scenes and the other elements which showmen consider favorable to popular appeal.

Mr. Burston expects to come to New York for a special preview as the result of inquiries from several of the larger releasing companies which have asked to be allowed to see the picture before any distribution contract is signed. Mr. Burston maintains New York headquarters at 1476 Broadway, New York.

Exceptional Sets for "Tailor-Made Man"

A notable addition to the Charles Ray producing organization is Robert J. Ellis as art director, and he has fully justified his selection in the first set prepared for "The Tailor-Made Man," which Mr. Ray has chosen as his first picture for United Artists release.

This set, consisting of the reception and ball rooms in the Stanlaw mansion, constitutes one of the finest ever made for any motion picture and no expense was spared in the preparation. The other sets, the office suites and the tailor shop, are named is certain to be full of character. Some of the additional scenes will come as a surprise and are of a most interesting nature.

Mae Murray at Work on "Broadway Rose"

Robert Z. Leonard began this week actual studio work upon "Broadway Rose," the forthcoming Tiffany Production in which he will present Mae Murray. Announcement of this was received from the home offices of Metro Pictures Corporation, which will distribute this successor to Miss Murray's "Peacock Alley" and "Fascination." "Broadway Rose" has been selected definitely as the title; there has been up to this time an alternative name, "The Broadway Bubble."

Head of Women's Clubs Lauds "Lady Godiva"

Following a special showing of Associated Exhibitors' picturization of "Lady Godiva," Mrs. Clinton B. Smith, chairman of the Motion Picture Committee of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, who viewed the picture in company with other guests of honor, is quoted by the Associated Exhibitors' office as follows:

"As an accurate portrayal of the early feudal period in England, "Lady Godiva" undoubtedly possesses unusual value as an educational picture, while offering satisfactory entertainment quality.

"Lady Godiva's famous ride, which might easily have been handled in a fashion which would have made the film impossible for general presentation, has been beautifully done, and so delicately and artistically that any member of the family circle can view it without fear of being offended.

"The slight deviation from Tennyson's original theme made by the producers, such as the elimination of the character of 'Peeping Tom,' probably enhances the dramatic qualities of the picture, but at least does not seriously detract from its historical accuracy and entertainment value.

"As a whole I feel I can endorse 'Lady Godiva' as a picture, which should be quite acceptable to the great majority of photo-playgoers."

Extended Run for "Polly of the Follies"

Booked for three days—and held three more. That was the record established by "Polly of the Follies," a First National attraction starring Constance Talmadge, at the Empire Theatre in Syracuse, N. Y.

The first three days of the showing were so highly successful and there was such a demand for seats on the third day that the engagement was extended for another three-day period, it is reported. More than 30,000 persons saw "Polly of the Follies," during the six-day run, according to Fitzer Brothers, the operators of the house.

Reginald Denny to Support Gladys Walton

Reginald Denny, star of "The Leather Pushers," has arrived at Universal City. He will support Gladys Walton in "The Trouper," to be directed by Harry B. Harris. Then he will resume production on "The Leather Pushers," the series of short prize-ring features from H. C. Witwer's Collier's stories.

Production on "The Trouper" starts immediately. It is an original story by A. P. Younger, a member of Lucien Hubbard's scenario staff.

Paramount Signs Robt. Cain for Year

Robert Cain, prominent as a screen actor for many years, has signed a year's contract with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to play leading roles in Paramount pictures.

Robert G. Vignola

Vignola on "Biggest Subject of Career"

Robert G. Vignola is now at work on what promises to be the master creation of his career. The subject is "When Kinghthood Was In Flower," the story of the great love of Mary Tudor, sister of Henry VIII of England, for Charles Brandon. Marion Davies, the beautiful star of "Enchantment" and "Beauty's Worth," Mr. Vignola's current productions, plays the role of Mary Tudor.

Acclaimed by Frederick James Smith, critic of "Motion Picture Classics," as "the most promising director of the day, one who has shown the greatest progress," Mr. Vignola hopes to surpass with "When Knighthood Was in Flower" any other production that he has ever made. This picture will in all probability be released in ten reels.

Sets of dazzling magnificence executed by Joseph Urban and costumes of unequalled elegance are being given this production so that no detail of its making will be slighted. Among the sets specially built for this production are castles of mediaval England, whole streets several blocks long, and even whole villages with a population of extra players running into thousands.

Opposite Miss Davies in the role of Charles Brandon will appear Forrest Stanley. Lynn Harding will play Henry VIII. The cast also includes Ernest Glendenning, William Norris, Charles Gerard, Ruth Shepley, Jose Rubin, Teresa Maxwell Conover, Macy Harlan, Arthur Forrest and John Dooley. Luther Reed wrote the scenario.

Pathe Films in Force on N. Y. Strand Bill

The week of April 2nd finds Pathe well represented in the program of Moe Mark's Strand on Broadway, New York. Pathe's new one-reel screen version of Rudyard Kipling's ballad, "The Ballad of Fisher's Boarding House," was given its initial Broadway showing at the big house on Sunday of this week. The current issue of the Pathe Review was also given a prominent position on the Strand program of the current week.

Fox's "Arabian Love" a Desert Romance

"Arabian Love," John Gilbert's latest vehicle for Fox, is scheduled for release April 9. The production was made under the working title, "In the Land of Beginning Again" and was directed by Jerome Storm at the West Coast studios. The story and scenario were written by Jules Furthman.

The photoplay is a tense drama of the great Sahara, in which Gilbert essays the role of a young American who joins an outlaw band of a desert sheik. A series of romantic episodes follow in which he saves the life and honor of a white woman whom the band had kidnapped during a raid upon a caravan. The picture is characterized by most impressive desert scenes and has an excellent cast, including such prominent artists as Barbara Bedford, the leading woman; Barbara Le Mar, Herschel Mayall, Robert Kortman and William A. Orlamond.

Final Scenes of "Son of the Wolf" Filmed

The final scenes on "The Son of the Wolf," Norman Dawn's forthcoming all-star R-C production, adapted from the two Jack London novels, "The Son of the Wolf" and "The Wife of a King," were filmed last week at the R-C studios on the Coast. The production is now being cut and edited and made ready for preview. "The Son of the Wolf" is described as an absorbing story of the Klondike during the gold rush days.

The leading roles in the all-star cast are played by Edith Roberts, as the half-breed Alaskan girl, and Wheeler Oakman, who plays the part of a gold mine prospector. The picture is said to follow closely in atmosphere and dramatic values the original stories by Jack London, which were among his widely read novels. A love story furnishes the motif of the story, through which runs the spirit of high adventure and romance.

R-C Announces Emory Johnson Production

A new Emory Johnson production is announced by R-C Pictures as a big special on their releasing program. The picture, which has been given the attractive title of "The Midnight Call," is now in production on the West Coast. It is a story of the drama that enters the lives of simple folks—the typical American middle class family.

The leading male roles in "The Midnight Call" are played by Emory Johnson himself and Johnny Walker, who rose to fame in "Over the Hill" and has been a star in his own right. Ralph Lewis, a veteran screen player, known to all picturegoers since his work in "The Birth of a Nation," will be seen in the role of an old Irish-American policeman. Claire McDowell plays the role of his wife, Mrs. O'Hara, and is given splendid dramatic opportunities. Pretty Ella Hall plays the heroine. Dick Morris is the heavy.

Fox Filming Company in Jerusalem

According to a cable dispatch from Jerusalem, William Fox's company of screen players, in charge of Director J. Gordon Edwards, has arrived in the Holy Land for the filming of a spectacle based upon the Old Testament story of King David. One of the big scenes in the production, it is said, will be the fight between David and Goliath, which will be staged a few miles north of Jerusalem. Thousands of Jerusalem inhabitants are to be employed in making the picture. One thousand camels and several thousand sheep and goats also will be used, it is stated.

Jess Robbins at Work on "Ladder Jinx"

With the first six-reel light comedy production titled "Too Much Business," scheduled for release in April by the distribution organization of Vitagraph Company of America the Jess Robbins Productions' organization has begun the filming of its second release, which is an adaptation from the Edgar Franklin story, "The Ladder Jinx," which appeared recently in a national magazine.

An all star cast is headed by Edward Horton, who for three years has been leading man in the Wilkes Stock Company at the Majestic theatre, Los Angeles.

Big Bookings for "The Sheik's Wife"

The demand for Vitagraph's special "The Sheik's Wife," which recently featured the program at the Mark Strand theatre, Broadway, New York, is reported by the Vitagraph home-office to have been exceptional, and the amount of prints supplied three of that company's branches has already been increased over the original number supplied. Bids are reported from the California theatre of Los Angeles; the Randolph theatre, situated in the heart of Chicago's famous Loop district, and the Tower in St. Paul. The Tower is playing it all this week, and the Randolph will offer it for an extended run beginning April 29th. The Tivoli, Turner and Dahnken's big San Francisco house, is now playing this special.

International News Wins Good Will

That the International News has won the good will of showmen the country over by its effective service in chronicling interesting and entertaining world events is the statement made by R. V. Anderson, manager of the News Sales Department of International. In support of his contention, Universal submits a list of commendatory letters received within the recent past from theatre-managers. Excerpts from some of these, which are typical of the kind of letters received, follow:

O. L. Meister, manager of the Whitehouse Theatre: "A chronicle of world events that is unequalled by anything of its kind on the screen—that is my opinion of the International News.

"I for one feel that the life and vim it puts into a program, contributes at least 50 per cent to the entertainment of our patrons—and I say—emphatically, that there can be no thoroughly satisfied audiences, where there is no INTERNATIONAL NEWS."

Ferrell E. Butler, managing director of the Saxe Amusement Enterprises: "I wish to say that I have found the International News very satisfactory. The photography, as a rule, is very good and it covers a great many of the interesting news events of the day. I find it goes into detail on many of them, which adds to the value of the reel."

Eugene H. Roth, of the California, Imperial, Granada and Portola Theatre, San Francisco: "I wish you would please convey to the heads of the International News Weekly our sincere appreciation of the enterprising scoop your News Weekly No. 7 and No. 8 contained of the motion pictures of Pope Benedict.

Educational Home-Office Reports Heavy Bookings for Its Specials

SHORT subject specials recently released by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., are attracting a great deal of attention throughout the country, according to word from the Educational Films headquarters, and every mail brings to the home-office reports of important bookings or details of successful showings of such pictures as "The Battle of Jutland" and "How to Grow Thin." Lyman H. Howe's one-reel thriller. "A Ride on a Runaway Train," although not as recent a release as the others mentioned, is reported to be still "going strong."

"How to Grow Thin," the single-reel novelty special which tells in story form how to reduce eight pounds a month by a simple home method, has barely reached the date set for its release, but already a number of big bookings have been recorded for this subject, declares the Educational statement.

"The Battle of Jutland" has been the featured attraction on short subject programs in many theatres in a large number of cities recently. In almost every case where this three-reel historical subject has shown in a big house, however, whether featured in a short-subject program or not, it has been announced prominently in the street lights and in the usual advertising.

"The Battle of Jutland" recently went into the Symphony Theatre in Los Angeles, which has adopted a permanent short-subject policy, for an indefinite run on a program which also included "Torchy and Orange Blossoms," a Torchy Comedy.

The Lyman Howe picture "A Ride on a Runaway Train," which has already shown four times on Broadway in New York and has had many return showings in some of the biggest houses in other cities throughout the country, has just been given a big play by Lowe's State Theatre in Buffalo, which gave this single-reel thriller equal prominence with a popular feature picture in newspaper advertising, in which the two pictures were called "two mammoth entertaining specials." "A Ride on a Runaway Train" is the only picture ever shown at this theatre second run.

O'Brien Film Due April 20

Selznick Preparing Two More Films of Its Former Star for Release

ALTHOUGH the contract Lewis J. Selznick has held with Eugene O'Brien has been terminated by mutual consent, there are still two, and possibly three pictures still to be distributed with O'Brien a Selznick star. The very last production activities in the New York studios, preceding the move to Hollywood, was the filming of a story tentatively titled "John Smith."

"Channing of the Northwest" has passed through the finished stage and has been delivered to Select exchanges in preparation for the release date, April 20. "John Smith," personally staged by Victor Heerman, as his first direction of Eugene O'Brien, is now in the Selznick finishing department, where its editing, cutting and titling will be completed before Myron Selznick, vice-president in charge of production, starts westward with his stars, directors, working staff and studio equipment.

Ralph Ince personally staged "Channing of the Northwest." The leading woman for O'Brien is Norma Shearer and John Willard's story has been screened with a rush of thrilling episodes and fast photoplaying from Edward J. Montagne's scenario. James Seeley, P. C. Hartigan, Carl Axzell, Harry Lee, Martin Faust and Glenn Coulter are in prominent supporting roles, and Nita Naldi has been fitted with an adventuress role nicely suited to her style.

"Channing of the Northwest" carries the spectator into the Canadian Northwest.

Edgar Selden Planning New Film Series

According to an announcement made early this week by Edgar Selden, president of Worth While Pictures Corporation, who is planning a series of elaborate photoplays with Madge Evans as the star, Forrest Halsey the well known author, playwright and scenarist, has been engaged to prepare the script of the initial production in which Miss Evans is to make her debut under her new management.

The story will be based on the famous old song, "On the Banks of the Wabash," the screen rights of which were purchased some time ago by Mr. Selden for Miss Evans and will be the first of a series of similar high class productions based on noted songs or stories in which she will be starred.

"Dust Flower" Hailed as "Big Picture"

Goldwyn officials express the conviction that in "The Dust Flower" the Goldwyn organization has another "big production" of its Eminent Authors group. Basil King, author of "The Street Called Straight" and "Earthbound," also wrote "The Dust Flower" and collaborated in the screen production of the story. Helene Chadwick and James Rennie appear in the leading roles. The cast also includes Mona Kingsley, Claude Gillingwater, Edward Peil, and George Periolat. Rowland V. Lee directed the production.

VIGNOLA

That is one of the many reasons why Vignola-made pictures have been such unusual box-office successes.

Of "Beauty's Worth," now current, the New York Evening Telegram said:

"Miss Davies is always charming in light comedy roles under the direction of Robert G. Vignola as is proved by 'Beauty's Worth' and its recent predecessor 'Enchantment.'"

Now at work on "When Knighthood Was in Flower," a Cosmopolitan production starring Miss Davies supported by a cast of exceptional merit. Probable length, ten reels.

Fox's April Release List

"Shackles of Gold" With William Farnum First of Eight Features

EIGHT feature productions are listed among the April releases by Fox Film Corporation. Both the New York and West Coast studios of William Fox are now in full operation. An Al St. John comedy, two Sunshine Comedies, and five Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons round out the April releases.

Heading the list of features is "Shackles of Gold," with William Farnum. This is a modern thrilling drama of extraordinary power dealing with the possibilities for good or evil which may come from the possession of great wealth. It is based on Henri Bernstein's greatest play.

In "Shackles of Gold," the masterful Fox star is at his best. Supporting him are Myrta Bonillas and Marie Shotwell—the former as leading woman. Herbert Brenon directed.

"Up and Going," the Tom Mix picture presents the star in the role of a young Englishman, who returns to Canada, the land of his birth, in search of romance and adventure, and finds them both. There are some new thrills in this production, which it is said will surprise even the most blasé of motion picture fans.

Charles Jones will be seen in "Western Speed," a story of western chivalry and romantic adventure, adapted from William Patterson White's story, "Lynch Law," and directed by Scott Dunlap and William Wallace. In this production Jones is supported by Eileen Percy as leading woman.

"Money to Burn" is the title of the release starring William Russell. It is based upon the story "Cherub Divine," by Sewell Ford, the noted humorous writer. It deals with a young broker whose financial luck is such that he cannot lose, however daring his adventure, and whose luck in love turns out to be built on similar lines. Rowland V. Lee directed.

Jerome Storm directed "Arabian Love," John Gilbert's April vehicle. Shirley Mason appears in "Very Truly Yours," a story by Helen L. Hawkins, and directed by Harry Beaumont. "Without Fear," is a photodrama of high society and downright democracy, written by Paul H. Sloane and directed by Kenneth Webb. The star is Pearl White. Eileen Percy will be seen in "Elope If You Must," from the story of E. J. Rath. It was directed by C. R. Wallace. The Al St. John comedy bears the title "Special Delivery."

French Tragedienne Scores

Critics Praise Work of Mme. Gabrielle Rejane in "Gypsy Passion"

"GYPSY PASSION," the French production presented at the Strand theatre last Sunday by Vitagraph, jumped into immediate popularity. Not only were the reviewers of the New York daily newspapers enthusiastic in their praise of the characterization presented by Mme. Gabrielle Rejane, the French tragedienne, but they were equally lavish of the production on the whole. "Gypsy Passion" was adapted by Jean Richepin from his own novel, "Miarka, the Child of the Bear," and was produced under the direction of Louis Mercanton, one of the leading directors of France.

The New York reviews, in most instances, ran to considerable length. Some of them said:

"A very superior picture, a fascinating picture."—The Tribune.

"It is an enjoyable entertainment. Mme. Rejane, as Romany Kate, gives a romantic characterization of an old gypsy that never lags in interest."—The Post.

"The picture is fine stuff, not one scrap sensational. The direction is unusually good; the photography great and the value ninety-eight per cent."—Daily News.

"Rejane's consummate acting, a remarkable, well-told story and a series of thrilling scenes combined to make 'Gypsy Passion,' at the Strand theatre, this week, an exceptionally fine picture." — Evening Journal.

"The story runs along like a pleasant and romantic narrative, laid in a real old French chateau, with several charming scenes in the gypsy church, St. Mary's-of-the-Sea, the Mecca of all gypsy tribes of the continent."—Morning Telegraph.

"Belongs among the leaders. Mme. Gabrielle Rejane, the celebrated French actress, is one of those comparatively rare players who mastered the technique of pantomime. Her performance shows this. The others in the cast are also suited and equal to their parts. This helps vivify the story."—The Times.

"The Sheik of Araby" an R-C Revival

May 15th has been set as the release date of "The Sheik of Araby" an R-C revival of the H. B. Warner feature, "The Man Who Turned White." The picture is new, being re-edited preparatory for its issue.

R-C is taking every advantage of the exploitation possibilities which this picture affords. The R-C office states that a tie-up will be arranged with Waterson, Berlin and Snyder, publishers of the popular song by the same name. In addition various novelties will be issued, and striking, compelling paper is now being prepared by Nat Rothstein, advertising director of R-C Pictures. Barbara Castleton is the star's leading lady.

Paramount Signs Fred Niblo for Series

FRED NIBLO has been signed by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for a series of big special productions for Paramount Pictures starring Rodolph Valentino and written by June Mathis, who adapted Rex Ingram's "The Four Horsemen." This announcement, made by Jesse L. Lasky at Hollywood, definitely sets at rest published reports in newspapers that Mr. Niblo had been engaged by another company.

"After witnessing a number of the first scenes of 'Blood and Sand,' which Mr. Niblo is now producing for Paramount with Mr. Valentino as the star," said Mr. Lasky, "I was so impressed by the masterly artistic handling of this important subject that I immediately took steps to secure him for a series of special productions with the same star.

"The next picture following 'Blood and Sand' will be an adaptation by June Mathis of the famous novel by John Amos Mitchell, 'Amos Judd,' and will be titled 'The Rajah.' This will afford Valentino a stellar role no less admirable than that of the toreador in his first Paramount star picture."

Statistics on Ingram Film

Formidable Array of Figures for Filming of "Prisoner of Zenda"

IN a statement issued during the week from the Metro- home-office there is presented a formidable array of statistics in connection with the production of Rex Ingram's new special production for Metro release, "The Prisoner of Zenda." "A script more voluminous than Well's 'Outline of History,' and village and city sets which housed more than 10,000 for fortnight," are two of the startling items submitted in the lengthy tabulation from the Metro headquarters. A summarized version of the statistical statement follows:

"1. The total cost of the picture, computed down to the last two-cent stamp, was $1,118,453.16.

"2. Those who contributed to making the picture numbered more than 23,000 persons. This is, roughly, equal to the population of Oswego, N. Y.

"3. The footage of raw film exposed was 257,521. Laid out in a straight line, it would measure about forty-eight and one-half miles.

"4. The scenario comprised 1,622 pages—more than in H. G. Well's 'The Outline of History.' Every detail of setting and action was typewritten before the camera had been turned a single time.

"5. A village and six blocks of city dwellings were built for exterior scenes in the kingdom of Ruritania.

"6. Twenty-six costume designers and other artists gave four months to the creation of costumes, under the supervision of the director.

"7. The value of the coronation robes worn by the principals in the cast—not including the jewels—was $105,000.

"8. Rex Ingram employed the radiophone for the first time in the direction of a motion picture.

"9. In the costume factory, built previous to the making of 'The Four Horsemen,' 540 persons were employed —tailors, cutters, dressmakers and special workers.

"10. During the two weeks in which the coronation scenes were taken, the village and the blocks of city streets housed more than 10,000 persons. Army methods of providing food were used. At one time there were 432 cooks on the Metro payroll.

"11. The total tonnage of building materials of all sorts used in the construction of the settings was 124,000 tons—about five times the weight of the biggest modern battleship.

"12. Art works, the most valuable lent to Mr. Ingram by wealthy Californian residents in view of their interest in his productions, and used in 'The Prisoner of Zenda' were appraised roughly at over two million dollars."

Big Things Planned for R-C Pictures Corp.

R. S. COLE, president of R-C Pictures Corporation, left Los Angeles on Thursday of last week, March 27th, for New York after a protracted visit to the Coast City during which he conferred daily with P. A. Powers on re-organization plans at the big studio.

Just before leaving Los Angeles, Mr. Cole stated indications pointed to capacity production at the R-C studios within a fortnight. In addition to the Doris May vehicle just started and the Harry Carey picture to be put under way shortly, three other productions are to be started within as many weeks, according to Mr. Cole.

The plan inaugurated by Mr. Powers of having the contributing talent directly concerned in the profits accruing from a production is bound to boost the quality of R-C future product, declared Mr. Cole. The dispatch of special representatives to foreign centers with full powers to arrange for foreign exploitation of R-C's products are also among the new plans announced by R. S. Cole. Europe, the southern hemispheres, and the Orient are to be invaded by extensive R-C exportation, was Mr. Cole's announcement.

Reviews of Latest Short Subject Releases

"Go Get 'Em Hutch"
(Seitz-Pathe Serial—15 Episodes)

GO get 'em—is right. Charles Hutchinson packs enough sensational thrills and stunts in his newest serial to supply three dozen action photoplays. "Hurricane Hutch" is not in the same class and that was considered the last word in hazardous exploits. The star and the director waste no time. They are off from the start. You are no sooner seated in your seat than you are on the edge of it—saying to yourself, "Atta-a-boy, Hutch, Atta-a-boy!" It is concentrated T. N. T. compiled in celluloid shape—perfectly harmless but thoroughly explosive just the same.

Hutch and Seitz have staged their early scenes around the waterfront of New York harbor. The various ships, docks and other atmospheric touches characteristic of the locale are in their places lending a realism that brooks no criticism from the sticklers for truth. The shipyards, the boats and the wharves make an ideal background for the execution of hazardous stunts. They permit plenty of local color to pull off a tricky deed. Dark corners, rope, halyards, fo'castles, crows' nests, above and below decks—well, you can imagine the sponsors missing anything to put over a punch! Not so you can notice it! The plot swings into its element with a crooked lawyer as the god of the machine. He has placed his hirelings about to discourage Hutch and to prevent the operation of the ships owned by the heroine. For good contrast a scheming adventuress is employed.

Hold your breath, folks, for the big moment of the first episode. The company's boat is set adrift and the hero and his sweetheart are the only people on board. The anchor is loosened and her foot is caught in one of the links and she is dragged to the bottom of the harbor. Then comes some undersea photography. There is a life-size thrill gained when the hero finds himself overcome with deadly fumes. And another pops up immediately, when he gives chase to the adventuress' car mounted on a motor-cycle. Her machine has reached the ferryboat and it has left its moorings. Is Hutch daunted? That's not his way. He leaps the chasm and makes the deck safely. These are the opening thrills. There must be hundreds coming. For the action suggests no let-up in the stunts.

The star lives the life of the proverbial cat here bobbing up when he is seemingly ready for an autopsy. And assisting him are Marguerite Clayton, who qualifies as a versatile athlete, Richard Neill, Frank Hagney, Pearl Shephard, Joe Cuny, and Cecile Bonnell. There is no doubt that the folks will stand on their hind legs and shout over it. Go get 'em boys. Get the prints, the episodes as they reach the exchanges. It packs a mean thrill. You'll back us up and so will your crowd. And that's that!—LAURENCE REID.

"Upper and Lower"
(Century Comedy-Universal)

IT doesn't take any imagination to guess that this comedy centers around a Pullman sleeper. Lee Moran is the comedian, who, to make his escape from the minions of the law, blackens his face and seeks employment at a Pullman porter employment agency. There being a strike on the road he is signed up against his will. Once aboard the train the comedy incident hits its stride. There is a colored girl passenger and she persists in making love to the blackface. But Moran forgetting the burnt cork sets his heart upon a charming damsel in the observation car. Of course, she doesn't recognize him as the man who saved her dog until a few gags have whisked by. An old reliable trick is used to close the comedy. The train enters a tunnel and upon emerging all the faces of the passengers have become black from soot. "Upper and Lower" is enjoyable.—Length two Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"Ballad of Fisher's Boarding House"
(Rudyard Kipling-Pathe—One Reel)

RUDYARD KIPLING'S graphic poem of a sailor's boarding house has been transferred to the screen with remarkable fidelity. A dramatic epic, it releases a volume of interesting action, stirring at all times and unusually rich in characterization. The vivid figures are all there in their places from Hans, the blue-eyed Dane, who wears the silver crucifix to keep himself from harm, to Anne of Austria and the rest of the motley throng. The lines of the poem are used in their entirety and as subtitles certainly embroider the picture with realism.

The crew gathers about the table. They are resting preparatory to sailing forth again on the briny deep. And they all have eyes for Anne. The scenes are laid in a waterfront retreat and it is filled with these interesting figures who sail under various flags. The girl is a sailor's sweetheart, but Hans scorns her. And this means a fight to the death. Overcome with fury to find herself repulsed she precipitates the bloody battle. And Hans lies dead upon the floor. She searches his body for souvenirs and comes across the "little silver crucifix that keeps a man from harm." Straightway her redemption begins. She repulses the other sailors, places the crucifix next to her heart and finds spiritual consolation. Thus Anne of Austria rises from the depths of degradation through the death of the sailor.

The little drama is marked for its intensity of scene and the players enter into the atmosphere of the poem with splendid enthusiasm. They are all wonderful types. The picture is a masterpiece of realism, carrying dramatic value and a spiritual flavor. You can catch the suspense by merely watching the expressions of the sailors who lived their elemental lives with complete abandon. Book this offering. It will thrill and entertain. It is a classic of literature.—LAURENCE REID.

"Pay Day"
(Two-Reel Comedy, With and By Charlie Chaplin—Released by First National)

"PAY DAY" is Chaplin as the Chaplin fans like him best, a series of gag sequences most of them new and all of them done as only Chaplin can do them. It doesn't bother with a story or plot. There is little that can be called continuity. In fact the picture begins without explanation and ends without apology. It is just a couple of reels of hokum comedy in which trick photography, mechanical effects and Chaplin working in every scene all contribute in being responsible for about 25 minutes of excellent entertainment.

The star is presented as a laborer employed in the construction of a building. The sequences of the film show the company in and about the new building, in the star's home and at a "club." The star does a "jag" act that has a lot of new stuff in it. By the aid of some trick photography he puts over a brick handling scene that is a marvel. There are also a number of other sequences that have a lot of laughs in them.

The supporting company doesn't get much of a chance. It is a Chaplin film from beginning to end and as such the fans will welcome it with delight.—J. S. DICKERSON.

Pathe Review—No. 154

THIS current Pathe Review features the Columbia varsity crew which is coached by Jim Rice, one of the best known oarsman in the country. The slow motion process is used here in order that Mr. Rice may point out the defects of the stroke and the manipulation of the oars. And slowing the camera to within eight times of normal speed certainly acts as instructive in this instance. The scene is the Harlem River, and the boys take their shell and speed it up. Gradually the stroke is increased under the guidance of the coach. If the slow motion means anything at all it should enable Columbia to bring home the cup or bacon. For each oarsman can watch his efforts and govern himself accordingly.—LAURENCE REID.

"Gee Whiskers"
(Star Comedy-Universal)

THE hirsute adornment has its inning in this amusing comedy featuring Neely Edwards. Visiting a fortune teller it is explained to him that he will meet his finish at the hands of a tall, dark, bearded man. Typical? You said it. So wherever he goes he is confronted with the type. The first one asks for a match. Then he falls into a meeting of a secret society. Beards to the left of him, beards to the right of him. Eventually he lands inside the tent of a circus and discovers a lady in tights. But when she turns around he discovers that she is the bearded lady. It is a bright little idea which touches upon every whisker gag—without the gags being so old that they wear whiskers.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Anvil Chorus"
(Roach Comedy-Pathe)

THIS is a Snub Pollard comedy which revolves around the ultra-modern profession of blacksmithing for women. The comedian having married the daughter of a hefty woman returns to meet her and discovers her four husky brothers, who are also blacksmiths by trade. In the pastime of heaving the anvil about, Snub takes the count. So to make himself strong he invests in a tonic prescribed for the purpose. The medicine fails to work and Pollard has an argument with the bunko salesman. For a climax the villain kidnaps the blacksmith's baby brother. The rescue is effected by a clever trick horse.—LAURENCE REID.

"Your Best Friend"

Harry Rapf-Warner Bros. State Rights—Seven Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A "MOTHER" picture which carries all the humanities—the tender heart throbs expressed through scenes of touching pathos and the contrasting shafts of humor so admirably balanced is "Your Best Friend." The offering serves to introduce Vera Gordon of "Humoresque" fame as a star and her emotional capabilities so wonderfully conveyed in that work are brought forth in terms which mark her as one of the few talented actresses of the screen. Whatever Miss Gordon touches is turned into art. She feels every situation. The shading of her characterization is so rich in human attributes and withal so natural that it seems well nigh perfect. This star is the feminine Warfield. Her emotion is a volcano of expression.

The picture touches upon the self-sacrifice she performs that her children may find happiness. No task is too great. Though she is scorned and insulted and brushed aside by unthinking youth the supreme mother instinct of devotion, faith and love is ever dominant. She has two sons, one of whom marries a mercenary girl. It is when his mother goes to live with them that the acute measure of pathos is expressed. The young married couple and the wife's heartless mother regard her as a nuisance. But she weathers the storm of their scorn with a generosity of soul which endows the picture with a spiritual flavor. Perhaps in real life the younger people would not bring her such agonizing moments. It seems at times as if they are unnecessarily cruel.

It is when the other son steals from his employer that the mother asks a reckoning from the others. She merely suggests that they economize in their expenses. And this precipitates a dramatic conflict when the mercenary women upbraid her for her conduct. She finds expression at that moment. She informs them that it is her money which has brought them worldly pleasures. A stormy scene ensues between the two brothers and the mother takes the side of the weaker youth. The picture suggests an anti-climax after a reconciliation of the boys. But Director Nigh doubtless felt the time ripe to introduce some balancing humor. When the mother returns to her own modest home where she is followed by the feminine parasites, both bent upon a mission of peace in order that mother's money might be kept in the family, the story loses some of its force. In time the youth's wife learns humility and respect. It is a proud moment in her mother-in-law's life when the younger woman calls her mother.

The picture could be shortened with the elimination of little detail and the quickening up of the sequences at their start and their trimming at the finish. However, it is a great box-office bet. The theme, the title, the production and the work of Miss Gordon and Dore Davidson see to that. The feature has been given excellent staging. It carries a definite appeal for communities everywhere. It is more a character study than an exposition of local color. The exploitation possibilities are immense.

By William Nigh. Directed by William Nigh. Photographed by Jack Diamond, Jack Brown, Sidney Hickox. Produced by Harry Rapf. Distributed by Warner Bros.

The Story—Mother with rich income sees her oldest boy happily married. She goes to live with him and is merely tolerated. Her generosity and impulses are so complete that they are not acquainted with her fine humanity until she is unable to withstand their scorn when they find a moment to upbraid her. She succeeds in winning over the younger boy from temptation and her triumph is complete when she discovers that her mother love is appreciated in terms of respect, humility and devotion.

Classification—Mother-love story strong in self-sacrifice. Conflict is expressed throughout between unthinking, heedless youth and the mother whose faith and devotion impels her to weather the storm of abuse and neglect.

Production Highlights—Fine acting of Vera Gordon. The scene when she defends her impulses. The moment when she goes to the aid of the younger boy. The scene when she effects a reconciliation between the brothers. The triumphant moment when she hears her daughter-in-law call her mother. The careful production.

Exploitation Angles—This being a "mother" picture there is no question that it will get over with proper exploitation. Miss Gordon and Mr. Davidson should be played up and mention made of their work in "Humoresque." Comparing it to that piece will help. Suggests an appealing prologue. Title is a humdinger. Mother matinees, etc., will get it over.

Drawing Power—Certain to get over everywhere because of heart appeal of mother love.

"Through a Glass Window"

Realart-Paramount—4575 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

WITH all the freshness of springtime "Through a Glass Window" comes to the screen. It is an epic of New York's East Side life, reflecting in heart appealing manner its joys, sorrows, ambitions, and despairs. In it May McAvoy, as the little doughnut girl, Jenny Martin, contributes to screen literature a characterization of real charm, portraying in realistic style the many shadows as well as sunbeams that enter her checkered career.

"Through a Glass Window" touches on mother love. Because of their worship of an ailing mother, two children are willing to work hard and long to support her. The boy, scantily attired, one evening leaves his newspaper post to get warm in the coffee shop where Jenny, his sister, works. Seeing that the lad is suffering because of lack of proper clothing, the sister becomes so worried that one night when the boss drops a bill she takes it and buys a warm sweater for Dan. The boss discovers the theft and warns Jenny that she must pay the money back at once or be arrested. Jenny confesses all for her brother and he, with a gang of crooks, goes and steals the money. He is traced, however, and sent to a reform school.

Discharged because of the theft, Jenny starts her own little doughnut shop where she is so successful she puts her former boss out of business. Meanwhile Tomasso, head over heels in love with the girl, is told that he must wait until Jimmy returns before she will listen to any romance. She guards her mother's peace of mind by telling her that Jimmy has gone to South America where he has a job. She even writes letters to read, as her mother cannot see they are not from her boy. Then one day "through a glass window," in her little shop, Jenny sees her brother, his term cut short because of good behavior. Tomasso beams. And Jenny laughs between her tears. That is all to this simple little fragment. But it's all woven into a refreshing little picture of real life which should find a welcome place on any program.

The scenes of Gotham east side are well staged. The photography approaches perfection. The shots of the little family at the amusement beach and the ride home on Tomasso's wagon tug at the heart strings. There are some appealing moments when the children and their friends attempt to turn an East Side tenement roof into "a spot in the country." The experiment, however, is a huge success for it brings mother back to health. The picture has been well directed and the entire personnel gives the star good support.

The Cast

By Olga Printzlau. Directed by Maurice Campbell. Scenario by Olga Printzlau. Photographed by Harold Rosson. Produced by Realart.

The Story—Tells of a girl's abiding love and a mother's faith. Heroine is employed in a doughnut shop and her brother is sent to prison for stealing from her employer. The girl assumes much of the blame and is discharged and she succeeds in a similar enterprise on her own initiative. Young Italian falls in love with girl but she refuses to listen to his entreaties until her brother returns. She sees him through a glass window.

Classification—Heart interest story based upon abiding love of girl and faith of mother. Considerable local color in the teeming district of New York's East Side. Pathos and sentiment go hand in hand.

Production Highlights—Scene when girl assumes brother's guilt. Scene when she opens a doughnut shop of her own. Incident when she reads letters from brother in prison—letters written by herself to bring happiness to mother. The scene when she gives herself to romance once she has seen the young convict through the window. The local color.

Exploitation Angles—This picture is so rich in heart interest that it is bound to satisfy everyone with a heart not made of stone. Advertised for its human values and played up for sentiment will pull a crowd. Word of mouth advertising will help. Picture is good enough to run for two or three days. Local color will stimulate patronage if properly exploited by campaign and prologue.

Drawing Power—Picture will please nine out of every ten patrons. Heart interest appeal will please them. May McAvoy well known by this time. Needs exploitation as title does not indicate value of story. Best suited for neighborhoods, although downtown houses will react to it.

"The Man Under Cover"

Universal—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WHEN you get a crook story written by a real "lifer" you've got a taste of realities. That's one thing "The Man Under Cover" has to its credit. The author is said to be serving a life term in the Arizona State Penitentiary and his contribution to the screen should be accepted not only for the publicity value but because he brings an authentic value to the work. The story is a variation of the crook plot wherein the hero after serving a term in jail goes back to his home town with an object of picking up some easy money. He has his prison pal with him. But after seeing his boyhood sweetheart and learning that she is being swindled along with other relatives he decides to go straight and frustrate the plans of the oil sharks.

He operates a fake gusher and succeeds in spoiling their scheme. They have considerable money which they have mulcted from the townspeople and he sells out for the sum which they have collected. When they attempt to make a getaway he catches them and restores the money to the owners. The idea is not new, nor has it been treated to bring forth any novelty of situation. However, it is well told, progressing to its climax easily and surely and conquering the spectators through its heart interest touches and the intimate local color. There is presented a balancing vein of humor which serves its purpose in giving an even quality to the theme.

Herbert Rawlinson plays the hero-crook with breezy abandon, entering into the spirit of the role with adaptable poise. Barbara Bedford is the heroine, while George Hernandez portrays a character crook in his customary fashion—a portrayal rich in personality. The picture is adeouately staged by Tod Browning who has caught the atmosphere of the story so well that the action proceeds like clockwork.

The Cast

Paul Porter.....Herbert Rawlinson
Daddy Moffat.....George Hernandez
Mayor Harper.....William Courtwright
Jones Wiley.....George Webb
"Coal Oil" Chase.....Ed Tilton
Holt Langdon.....Gerald Pring
Margaret Langdon.....Barbara Bedford
Col. Culpepper.....Willis Marks
The Kiddies.....{Helen Stone / Betty Ellison}

By Louis Victor Eytinge. Scenario by Henry Gates. Directed by Tod Browning. Photographed by Virgil Miller. Produced by Universal.

The Story—Crook with his pal serve term in jail and upon their freedom go to farmer's home town with the purpose of finding "easy pickings." The hero discovers his boyhood sweetheart about to be swindled by some oil sharks. He decides to go straight and help her win back her money. He concocts a scheme whereby he has "discovered" a gusher and swindles the sharks into buying it for the sum they took from the townspeople. They find themselves in a trap and attempt to escape but the hero frustrates their plans.

Classification—Crook story on human interest theme carrying a sustained note of romance and some comedy relief. Plenty of local color.

Production Highlights—Good human interest values. Scene when crooks turn tables on oil swindlers. Romantic vein. Fine work of cast. The local color.

Exploitation Angles—Title suggests mystery melodrama but it is good crook story. Played up for its theme will draw. Mention should be made that the story is written by a "lifer" in the Arizona State prison. Rawlinson gives a good portrayal.

Drawing Power—This one will please 'em everywhere on account of its heart interest. Real showmen have chance to cooperate with prison and jail authorities in their towns and put over some big publicity.

"Arabian Love"

Fox—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THEY have taken a familiar situation out of an interior set and placed it as the piece de resistance among the white hot sands of the desert and titled it "Arabian Love." This situation presents the girl falling in love with the man upon whom she has sworn vengeance for killing her husband. The idea has been used often on the screen and when it is developed in the customary fashion it stands to reason that it doesn't offer a great deal of suspense. In this case, however, transplanting it in an Oriental soil and allowing it to thrive amid the seething passions of the Arabs gives it a coloring and atmosphere which will attract attention almost anywhere.

The title is a "nifty" and suggestive of sheiks and passionate amours. In reality the picture is the latest edition of the brand started some seasons ago with H. B. Warner as star and followed up this year with "The Sheik" and "The Sheik's Wife." John Gilbert, the Fox star, makes a good type for the hero, and garbed in the trimmings and trappings of the Arab he fits right into the picture. There is a certain dash about his work which commands praise. For one thing he is in deadly earnest. The action takes in considerable riding over the white sands. For a background one views the numerous caravans, tents and conflicts of the natives—to say nothing of the typically Eastern interiors of the sheik's palace. The story is so familiar that one may be excused for guessing the outcome from the start. However, it keeps a fast pace, is evenly developed and glows with vitality.

The heroine learns that her husband has been killed by an American. On the return journey she is kidnapped by a group of bandit Arabs who cast dice for her possession. The winner is the American youth disguised in Oriental attire. He permits her to escape and the intervening scenes before the climax is reached are filled with his several conflicts. The picture is handsomely mounted and due to the appeal of the characterization which seems to be so popular at present, "Arabian Love" should be a magnet for any house. Barbara Le Mar is colorful as a native girl while Barbara Bedford is adequate as the heroine. The feature possesses good exploitation possibilities.

The Cast

Norman Stone.....John Gilbert
Nadine Fortier.....Barbara Bedford
Thamar.....Barbara Le Mar
The Sheik.....Herschel Mayall
Ahmed Bey.....Robert Kortman
Dr. Lagorio.....William A. Orlamond

By Jules Furthman. Directed by Jerome Storm. Photographed by Joe. August. Produced by Fox.

The Story—Bride leaves husband in Arab community to visit mother. She learns on return journey that her husband has been killed by an American youth. She swears vengeance. When she is kidnapped by Bedouin bandits the American, his identity unknown to her, effects her rescue by winning at dice. Later she learns to love him when she discovers that her husband deserved his death.

Classification—Romantic adventure story with locale in Arabia. Carries similar plot and characterization to "The Sheik." Packed with action and romance.

Production Highlights—Work of John Gilbert. The atmosphere always correct. The fast-moving action. The scene when the hero rescues the heroine. The picturesque backgrounds. A number of adventurous sequences.

Exploitation Angles—This picture should get over with good exploitation. It is a fad, now, with the public to be responsive toward stories with Arabian locale. So cash in on the title and the theme. Gilbert is a comer and his name should begin to attract them. The story suggests a colorful prologue. This can be arranged with atmosphere, oriental dancers, etc.

Drawing Power—Title should prove a winner in attracting crowd. Gilbert beginning to be known after his work in "Shame" and "Gleam o' Dawn." Prologue should help. With proper play feature should draw well everywhere. Not big enough for week run, but good enough for two days. Will be liked for fast action and color.

"Reckless Youth"

Selznick—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

COSMO HAMILTON has long been noted for skating on thin ice. In "Reckless Youth" he skirts the danger mark in his customary style, pointing a moral in a subtle way and showing up the modern tendencies of the irrepressible flapper. This story treats rather delicately that youth, gifted with imagination and impulse, cannot be subject to suppressed desires without reaping the harvest. The result might well be a daring recklessness of consequences. Hamilton believes in letting them have certain privileges which accompany the period when youth is blossoming into maturity.

There is a tendency upon the part of the author to smash conventions. At times he succeeds but the smartness often gives way to a human quality which makes this feature entirely enjoyable despite the fact that the characters are quite exaggerated. The heroine accustomed to having her own way runs away from her crotchety relatives and dashes into the respectable environment of a conservative youth's home. She is far too breezy for him. Her spirited disposition is well contrasted to his plodding manner. Still in search of adventure the youth marries her to give her the protection of his name and steps aside that she might be expected to start a rumpus and display some spirit—some pride of possession. However it is all in good fun.

The climax introduces the dream situation with the girl giving up her mad existence when she dreams that she has been kidnapped by a villain and taken aboard a yacht. The dream is a realistic one and it is effective in bringing to the girl a proper value of things. The picture offers some zippy incident, moves along with creditable speed and is handsomely staged. Ralph Ince directed.

The Cast

Alice Schuyler.....Elaine Hammerstein
John Carmen.....Niles Welch
Mrs. Schuyler-Foster.....Myrtle Stedman
Mr. Schuyler-Foster.....Robert Lee Keeling
Harrison Thornby.....Huntley Gordon
Mrs. Dahlgren.....Louise Prussing
Cumberland Whipple.....Frank Currier
Martha Whipple.....Kate Cherry
Chorus Girl.....Constance Bennett

By Cosmo Hamilton. Scenario by Edward J. Montague. Directed by Ralph Ince. Produced by Selznick.

The Story—Treats of a girl's selfishness—a self interest that inspires conduct governed by a "don't care" spirit. She finally experiences a change of heart when love comes to her through a realization of her husband's worth and her own shallow nature.

Classification—Story of psychology of modern girl's soul—the self-centered flapper who, through experience, learns to measure true values. More of a character sketch than a drama. Sufficient conflict and romance.

Production Highlights—Modern treatment of old theme. Carries a note which will be noticed by the unthinking youth bent on self interests. Good work of star and Niles Welch. Charming bedroom scene not a bit risque. The romantic touches.

Exploitation Angles—Author's name means something. Stands sponsor as writer knowing his subject matter especially when he writes upon moralities of modern life. Title is a humdinger and could be featured in snappy advertising campaign. Stills of star and situations stills will help.

Drawing Power—Wherever Miss Hammerstein is popular picture will draw. Title and name of author will also help. Best suited for select neighborhood houses with a distinctive clientele. Feminine patronage especially will find it an attractive picture.

"Intrigue"

S. R. Levinson-State Rights—4500 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles Street)

THIS is distinctly not a masterpiece. The fault lies in the loose handling of plot and direction, which, although the picture comes from abroad, is not a purely European unhappy faculty. In the role of a spy Pola Negri could be par excellence, but it is owing to the aforementioned shortcoming that she does not measure up to standard. With only a youth to send to a self-selected grave and his father to enmesh there is a sad neglect of skilful portrayal bearing directly on the character.

Miss Negri appears in more forceful poses in this than in some of her other late releases. One lover lost to her through her arrest in a aid on her mother's gambling den, she swears evenge on the unwitting police prefect who akes her into custody the night she was to ıave been married. She enters a forced mar- iage, and, seen next as a spy, her opportunity or vengeance comes unsolicited. She infat- ıates the son of the prefect, tricking him into ;iving her the French government code and)rompting his suicide when she leads him to)elieve his father is her lover. How the 'ather uncovers her treason, after falling in ove with her, and kills her as a menace to his :ountry, is well handled. His stupidity as a)olice official, however, cannot be overlooked.

It is well that the director's identity is un- ınnounced. The story has the police prefect searching for M. Fischer and suspecting Madame Fischer and yet he lets her become ıis mistress.

The Cast

Charlotte Fischer.....Pola Negri
Henri Fischer, her husband
Marie Barbusse, her daughter
Robert Durand, prefect of police — Unnamed
Pierre Durand, his son
Charles Beauvais, State Department head

(No designations whatever concerning direc- tor, photographer, scenario or story writer.)

The Story—Despising her mother's gambling den, Charlotte Barbusse spurns Henry Fischer, business partner of the mother, for a respectable bank cashier. The police raid the den, her arrest causing the cashier to break off. She swears revenge against the unwitting police prefect. She marries Fischer, returning to Paris—both spies for Germany. Meeting young Durand, she selects him to punish his father for her lost lover. The youth's suicide comes after he gives her the code and she has tricked him into believing his father is her lover. In reality the father was seen seizing her correspondence as a spy suspect. Falling in love with the ad- venturess, the prefect is notified she is danger. Her correspondence reveals the code and his son's picture, which goads him to murder her.

Classification — French melodrama, with scheming and love mingled.

Production Highlights—Raid. Madame Fischer vamping young Durand. Durand at piano, visioning Madame Fischer, who flits in minia- ture over piano and by his side. Perfect Du- rand's attack on Madame Fischer.

Exploitation Angles—Playing deadly game, herself meets death. Young Durand haunted by odor of jasmine. Madame Fischer's agitation when correspondence is seized. Prefect Durand discovering son's picture and the code.

Drawing Power—Best suited where specta- tors are not too critical. Go strongest in less prominent theatres, in neighborhoods and small towns.

"Watch Your Step"

Goldwyn—5000 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles B. Larkin)

HERE is a good old fashioned picture—one of those types of yesteryear that helped to make "movies" popular. More like this one and "normalcy" will come from its hiding place. "Watch Your Step" is a story of youth. Cullen Landis and Patsy Ruth Miller have the leading roles. Mr. Landis is excellent as the ne'er do well and Miss Miller brings a new personality to the screen—a new face that is very easy to look at. She lends fine support to Landis and makes a very attractive appearance before the camera.

The story is one of action. It gets away to a flying start with Landis staging an 85 mile- an-hour race in an auto with traffic cops. The race ends in a realistic crash, when the hero wrecks his car in attempting to avoid a closed street. From this point on the plot flows smoothly, always holding the interest.

No sooner does Elmer Slocum get out of jail for speeding than he finds himself being chased again by traffic cps, when he gives a doctor a "lift" on an emergency call. After he wrecks his car in an ditch, he is fol- lowed through the fields. He lays out his pursuer with a right to the jaw. Believing he has killed the officer, he flees. He lands in a group of tramps who rob him of his clothes. In "bum's" garb he "rides the rods" and lands in a small western town. Here he becomes acquainted with Margaret Andrews, played by Miss Miller, and things "begin to commence." A rival enters in the person of Lon Kimball, the role interpreted by Raymond Cannon, and there is a real con- test to win the favor of the fair Margaret. It culminates in one of those fistic battles for which Mr. Landis is becoming noted.. It is waged with his rival with Landis, of course, the winner. A detective is hired by the hero's father to locate the wandering boy.. This he does and Lon is exploding with relief at the prospect of getting rid of his rival for good, when the detective and Elmer's father enter, just after he has confessed to his sweethart that he killed a policeman. However, he is told that the cop in question was back on the job the next day.

William Beaudine has done a fine job of directing in this instance and Ralph Block has edited the picture into an exceptionally smooth running bit of continuity. To John J. Mescall must go credit for photographing the story in artistic manner. There are some extra fine bits of camera work, especially in the auto race scenes in the opening of the picture, the "riding the rods" flashes and the fight shots. Julien Josephson deserves the warmest praise of every spectator for writing this tale. Mr. Josephson is the man who wrote many of Charles Ray's best pictures. Mr. Landis jumps into the Ray-like hero of "Watch Your Step," as if "to the manner born."

We recommend this picture without fear of contradiction as being one of the best re- leased in the past several months. Goldwyn, by the way, is "Babe Ruthing" very con- sistently of late. Their pictures of recent date have all been box office home runs. "Watch Your Step" is no exception to this condition.

By Julien Josephson. Directed by William Beaudine. Continuity by Julien Josephson. Editor, Ralph Block. Photographed by John J. Mescall.

The Story—The plot tells about young Elmer Slocum who had served a jail term for speed- ing and on his first day of liberty reached a new speed of 85 miles an hour taking a doctor to an emergency call. Elmer wrecks his car. knocks down a policeman who he believes he has killed. He flees to a little western town and there falls in love with the daughter of the richest man in the village. Regarded with sus- picion by the girl's father and her other suitor. Elmer has the upper hand of them until he is ordered held a prisoner by a detective employed by his father. However, Elmer was not a murderer and the timely arrival of his father sets him free and he wins the girl.

Classification — A romantic rapid action comedy with some intensely melodramatic scenes in the way of auto races and fistic battles. A fine love story is interwoven into the plot.

Production Highlights—The opening auto race and subsequent wreck. The "riding the rods" episodes. The fistic battle between the hero and his rival. The excellent acting of the star and a new leading lady. The true to life rural scenes. The fine character types.

Exploitation Angles—Use a big racing auto in the downtown streets with the name "Watch Your Step" displayed big. Might get a smashed up car from a garage for use in your lobby. Tie up with street car companies by putting "Watch Your Step" signs on front of trolleys.

Drawing Power—Should go good anywhere anytime. The picture is "there." It has every- thing.

"The Silent Vow"

Vitagraph—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WHILE this picture comes as another sample of the Northwest Mounted for- mula, it carries a deal of melodramatic ex- ploits which because of their generous meas- ure of action keeps the spectator sufficiently interested. Many of the scenes are violent. In fact there are no fewer than twelve deaths but since these comprise the unruly element with one or two exceptions the patron will appreciate that they deserve their untimely end. It's a tale of a feud born when a rene- gade elopes with the hero's wife. Twenty year elapse, at the end of which time the lone- ly husband and father has entered the service as inspector. He is given to brooding over the injury done him and vengeance arrives when he is brought face to face with the inter- loper.

The latter is arrested but his sons come to the rescue and during the conflict the officer is killed. Hence it devolves upon his son, a corporal in the Mounted to get his man. There are some flaws in the story as far as making it convincing is concerned. It is hardly reasonable that the wronged husband could fail to locate his wife or the trespasser during the interim of twenty years, especially when they are living perhaps a half day's jour- ney on horseback from the post. Again the Mounted would know the inhabitants of the country for miles around. The remarkable feature of the production is the extraordinary double exposure work. Duncan as the youth is seen time and again passing in front and behind the chair in which he is seated as the father. It is positively uncanny.

Once the early scenes are planted the pic- ture develops into a man hunt. It develops a comedy touch not intended by the director when he is bound hand and foot in a shack by the river desperadoes. Seated at a nearby table is an eccentric inventor who has worked out an intricate electric scheme which con- trols the blasting operations used to dynamite fish from the river. Duncan picks up a heavy hammer with his teeth and hopping over to the table swings it between his jaws with enough force upon the head of the unsuspect- ing man to knock him completely out. This is a new stunt but it is so wholly unexpected and so impossible of execution unless one is trained for it that it will bring a laugh. The climax reveals a good old-fashioned fight be- tween the evil forces and the officer. He learns the identity of his mother who is placed in the scene rather conveniently. How- ever the interest is well sustained. The ro- mance keeps pace with the action after the third reel. Duncan has succeeded in collect- ing some effective shots, not a few of which are rich in color.

The Cast

Directed by William Duncan.

The Story—Man becomes inspector in mounted police when wife elopes. Years later his boy enters the service. The father learns the identity of his enemy and the latter's sons establish a feud. The youth starts on a man hunt and gets his man and also succeeds at romance.

Classification—Northwest Mounted drama with star playing dual role—that of father and son. Action pilots characters through melo- dramatic scenes. Some heart interest and the usual romance.

Production Highlights—The fight between the officer and his enemies. The blowing up of the river with dynamite. First rate scenic values. Meeting of youth and his mother.

Exploitation Angles—This being a story of the Mounted, it is easy to use the customary ex- ploitation. Snappy teasers, etc., would help. Stills showing action would draw them in. Fact that Duncan plays a dual role in spirited fashion.

Drawing Power—This one should draw well in all neighborhood houses, particularly where there is a daily change of bill. Where they like action in the rough, crowds will eat it up. Duncan has a following gained from putting plenty of spirit and punch into his work.

"The Man From Beyond"

Houdini Picture Corp.-State Rights—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A THRILLING melodrama, fantastic of theme and highly adventurous has reached the screen in "The Man From Beyond," written by Houdini and starring the well known vaudeville artist. It carries a climax which reminds you of the one staged by Griffith in "Way Down East." That is its big punch scene but this is not to say that the picture is deficient in thrills. Far from it. Indeed the feature depends upon elemental action, for that is Houdini's way.

As an author he has written himself a novel story—one which presents him as a man shipwrecked on an Arctic expedition a hundred years before and who is frozen in a solid cake of ice. Certainly this is a new situation and should be appreciated by picture-goers everywhere in a day when there is a scarcity of novelty. Scientists or explorers discover him and bring him back to civilization. But there is a fly in the ointment. Houdini does not notice the advance of time—showing no particular curiosity about the environment about him. However this is only a prelude to the grand climax. He is shown swimming the Niagara rapids to save the heroine whom he loves—a girl he believes to be the reincarnation of his sweetheart. He is swept along from one thrilling exploit to another and finishes clinging to a rock on the edge of the falls, the girl securely held in his other arm.

The star has put over other sensational stunts which include some up-and-at-'em fights. The production is well staged, the ice scenes being cleverly photographed, and the action progresses in rapid fashion. "The Man From Beyond" will be remembered for its river scene. It is an exciting moment and you are caught in a tight embrace of suspense. It is certain that the escape expert risked his life in staging these scenes. But that is an old trick to him. His power of bobbing up just a trifle the worse for wear after a hazardous adventure is a tribute to his uncanny ability to make his escape. The company consists of a first rate cast that includes Jane Connelly as the heroine.

Marie LeGrande	Nita Naldi

By Houdini. Scenario by Coolidge Streeter. Directed by Burton King. Photographed by Messrs. Ruby, Zucker, Fishbeck, Penrod, Dunmyer, Littlefield. Produced by Houdini Picture Corp.

The Story—Treats of man imprisoned in cake of ice for hundred years and returns to life looking for sweetheart of reincarnation. Develops into romance accompanied by melodramatic adventures. The hero is imprisoned in the Arctic and brought back to civilization by scientists.

Classification—Adventurous and fantastic melodramatic romance featuring hazardous exploits of Houdini the actor of mysterious feats.

Production Highlights—Fantastic nature of plot. The marvelous thrill when Houdini goes to rescue of girl in Niagara rapids. Cleverly photographed ice scene. Star's escape from insane asylum. The thrilling encounters. The fast-moving action. The excellent photography.

Exploitation Angles—Houdini's name is so well known to theatregoers that the mere mention of it will stimulate patronage. Should be exploited for its sensational thrills. Stills of the star. Paper—three, six and twenty-four sheets will acquaint patrons with thrills. Use billboards. But play up Houdini. Suggests an entertainer along his line if you can obtain him for a prologue.

Drawing Power—Houdini always drew a crowd in vaudeville. The mention of his name as star of this picture in which he performs hazardous exploits will draw them in. Best for towns and cities who have played Houdini in their vaudeville theatres. Good bet for down-town houses catering to transient clientele.

"Too Much Business"

Vitagraph—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

ONE of Earl Derr Biggers' "John Henry" stories has been translated for the screen and it makes a pleasing comedy. The character of the plot takes a mild slap at business efficiency—just the sort of plot which is favored by the Satevepost. There is enough substance in the idea to carry through six reels although much of the action could be speeded up for the sake of spontaneity. "Two Much Business" is different from most light comedies. For one thing it does not depend entirely upon romance, but sticks to its knitting, which is to expose the hokum of "big business."

You may be surprised to see Tully Marshall enacting the role of a crotchety business man. That he has a flair for comedy cannot be disputed. His walk and gestures, his hundred little mannerisms contribute a great deal in lending interest to the story. And a new comedian is flashed on the film horizon in Edward Horton who impersonates a "live" sales manager with creditable breeziness.

Diggers' plot strikes a new idea. The hero is in love with a girl who frowns upon romance. So he puts his love affair upon a strictly business foundation, taking out an option on her for thirty days and proving to her that he can double his salary within that period or drop out of the race for the love stakes. He is fired by the boss and opens up a hotel for babies. This is a novel touch and its whimsical appeal will delight most every type of spectator. The day nursery becomes highly profitable. There is a deal of complication to the plot because his rival is determined to ruin his novel venture. However he triumphs. The comedy is bright and interestingly and excellently interpreted. The direction is highly capable.

The Cast

John Henry Jackson	Edward Horton
Myra Dalton	Ethel Grey Terry
Amos Camby	Tully Marshall
Simon Stecker	John Steppling
Ray Gorham	Carl Gerard
Mrs. Camby	Elsa Lorimer
The Head Nurse	Helen Gilmore
Robert Gray	Mack Fenton
Officer 16	Tom Murray

By Earl Deer Biggers. Scenario by Ford I. Beebe. Directed by Jess Robbins. Photographed by Irving Reese.

The Story—Youth in business office is in love with secretary to employer who places business efficiency above romance. She will agree to marry him if he can double salary within stipulated time. He conducts a day nursery and makes a success of it. Wins back his job and triumphs in romance.

Classification—Romantic light comedy treating of business efficiency. Considerable fun poked at modern business methods.

Production Highlights—Work of Edward Horton and Tully Marshall. Comedy element of story. Novel theme. The baby scenes.

Exploitation Angles—Carries novelty which should be heavily exploited. The baby episodes will please the feminine fans. Title carries punch. Needs heavy exploitation.

Drawing Power—If this picture is properly exploited it should make money. Carries good title and plenty of humor. Will get over most everywhere except the factory districts.

"Gas, Oil and Water"

First National—4500 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

IT is beginning to appear as if Charles Ray is depending entirely upon hokum for the comedy appeal of his newest releases. The homespun values have been missing from "The Barnstormer" and "Gas, Oil and Water." Once having established himself as supreme in the delineation of "Back to the Soil" characterization, he has now attempted to get away from it all and enter the comedy school presided over by Buster Keaton. The new offering hasn't much to recommend it insofar as plot is concerned, and the action is largely conspicuous by its absence.

Time was when Charlie sounded the keynote of real, human comedy. That seemed to be in the days when he had an author like Julien Josephson to supply him with stories. Perhaps he is attempting too much—directing his features as well as starring in them. And he seems to be out of his element with the megaphone because he endeavors to dress up the ideas with exaggerated hokum. The first two or three reels of the new expression are given up to something akin to a walking contest. There is no happy incident—no flash of rich characterization, and the story being extended through five reels shows up its shortcomings. The picture is laid somewhere along the border. It seems that there is a group of bad men trying to put one over on the government. In fact they are charged with violating the neutrality laws by doing something. What this something is is left to one's imagination.

Ray is a secret service agent who opens a gasoline station near the scene of action and proceeds to get the evidence. Three reels pass by without any real incident. Then comes some action when the hero discovers the point where the neutrality violators pass through a house, auto and all, into another country. He hurries back to his "gas" station, summons help and the chase is on. The ringleader tries to escape in an auto with the girl. The agent dashes after him. When he comes abreast of the villain's machine, the girl jumps into the hero's car while an explosion sends the bad man and his auto down the embankment. Mr. Ray should get back into his rural stories without delay. But that demands an author who can supply him with genuine ideas.

The Cast

George Oliver Watson	Charles Ray
Henry Jones	Otto Hoffman
Susie	Charlotte Pierce
Hobart Rush	Robert Grey
Philip Ashton	William Carroll
"Beauty" Strang	Dick Southerland
Sanchez	Bert Offord
Whiskers	Whiskers Ray

By Richard Andrew. Directed by Charles Ray.

Photographed by George Rizard.

The Story—Tells of the attempts of Uncle Sam's secret service to clean up a bunch of smugglers on the Mexican border. There are some airplane scenes and some auto chases that are thrilling. The secret service man falls in love with the hotelkeeper's daughter. He discovers the gang—gets them and the girl.

Classification—Romantic detective melodrama with a lot of sleuthing.

Production Highlights—The discovery of the smugglers' hiding place. The airplane scenes. The race between the villain and the hero in autos. The jump of the girl from one machine to another. The explosion, wrecking the villain's car. Whiskers standing on his hind legs.

Exploitation Angles—The popularity of the star. Exploit his personality. The secret service idea. The Mexican atmosphere. Decorate the lobby with Mexican and Indian goods. Might tie-up with the gasoline stations in town with big signs on them.

Drawing Power—Because of the star's personal popularity this may draw, but they won't go away satisfied.

"The Man From Downing Street"

Vitagraph—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A MYSTERY melodrama fashioned from a long established formula is exposed in "The Man From Downing Street." Earle Williams, who is the star, has had similar stories a score of times if memory serves us right. The pattern is a complicated edition of the youthful pastime of "blind man's buff." The central idea is to catch a traitor who is plotting against the British government and the element of suspense is gained by taxing the spectator's deductive powers as to which party is guilty.

The star journeys to India disguised as an influential rajah. And his object is to locate the leak in the messages received at Downing Street, London. The onlooker is certain that he guesses the real culprit only to be thrown off the track time and again. The traitor is the least suspected one of the group and the accomplishment of the task of getting at the bottom of things builds an effective climax. It is good melodrama offered because it establishes nifty detective work on the part of the hero. The action transpires mostly in Delhi, India, and the scenes take up the social life of the British officers and their receptions to various Indian officials.

The star is garbed picturesquely in native costume and his work suggests that he understands the demands of the characterization. The director has given the picture an excellent production, the scenes being rich in atmosphere and marked by good taste. "The Man From Downing Street" is interesting despite the familiarity of these. The sponsors have involved the plot with first rate mystery and suspense. And after all wish such a story these elements must be dominant.

The Cast

Captain Robert Kent.....Earle Williams
Colonel Wentworth.....Charles Hill Mailes
Maharajah Jenan.....Boris Karloff
Doris Burnham.....Betty Ross Clarke
Major Burnham.....Henry Burrows
Norma Graves.....Kathryn Adams
Captain Graves.....Herbert Prior
Sarissa.....Eugenie Gilbert
Lieutenant Wyndham.....James Butler
Sir Edward Craig.....George Stanley

By Clyde Westover, Lottie Horner and Florine Williams. Directed by Edward Jose.

The Story—Treats of British spy work in India and government official is sent to the far east to locate the leak in the messages received at Downing street, London. Kent disguises himself in native garb and after a series of intrigues captures his man. He also captures a woman's love.

Classification — Romantic adventure story strong in mystery and intrigue. Treats of spy activities.

Production Highlights—The careful production. The work of the cast. The note of suspense ever dominant. The mystery element.

Exploitation Angles—This being a mystery melodrama patrons should be advised of its merits. Carries suspense. Timely story since India is brewing with revolutionary talk. Star should be played up in stills. Chance for atmosphere in prologue.

Drawing Power—Should go well in small houses and neighborhood theatres. Plot will entertain. Good exploitation will bring a crowd.

"Hell's River"

Irving Lesser-State Rights—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A VITAL and vivid document of the frozen North is released in "Hell's River," based upon James Oliver Curwood's story, "The God of Her People." Some may say that you cannot bring any new situations into the Northwest Mounted theme. But exhibitors may rest assured that this drama of the outposts of civilization presents several novel highlights. For one thing the story does not revolve around a man hunt. It is tense with action without relying upon such an obvious premise. Indeed it depends for its appeal—its strength upon its abundant note of romance—its heart interest and the fact that it features a dog in Rin Tin who is entitled to share honors with Strongheart of "Silent Call" fame.

The spectator is greeted to some awe-inspiring backgrounds which have been collcted from the Yosemite National Park during the winter season. Thus it offers exteriors which have never been used before. The interest is evenly divided between these locations and the drama of the elemental inhabitants. A fair dweller in the little French-Canadian post is looked upon with covetous eyes by a trader of wolfish character. Having a knowledge that her "father" (the girl is an orphan) is a fugitive from justice he pledges the man to give him the girl in marriage or suffer the penalty of the law. But she has looked with romantic eyes upon Pierre, the redcoat officer. He has mushed back to camp eager to share her company. And the pathos of the situation is caught when he discovers her the wife of this he-wolf. She cannot tell him for it means her father's arrest.

The picture mounts with a crescendo of suspense as the trapper, suspicious of the officer, goes to kill him. The padre informs the Mountie and the pursuit is on—over the trackless wastes. The redcoat catches up with him and a pitched battle takes place on the edge of a mountainous cliff. It is intensity itself to see the struggling figures fight for their lives—a vigorous man-to-man fight. Suddenly with a tigerish spring the huskie goes to the rescue and pushes his master's enemy over the precipice. The picture is vital with action, builds evenly and in a progressive fashion straight to its big punch. It is well provided with atmosphere and local color and always suggestive of the country in which it is laid. Irving Cummings enacts the part of the Mountie in acceptable romantic fashion, acting always with restraint and poise. Wallace Beery as usual contributes a cameo performance as the picturesque Gaspard. His villainy is superb. Eva Novak makes a charming heroine of the girl.

The Cast

Pierre of the R. N. W. M. P.....Irving Cummings
Gaspard, the Wolf.....Wallace Beery
Lopente.....Robert Klein
Sergeant McKenna.....Frank Whitson
Mabalia.....Eva Novak
Rin Tin.....By Himself

By James Oliver Curwood. Directed by Irving Cummings. Photography by A. Fried. Produced by Irving Cummings.

The Story—Mounted policeman returns from man hunt to discover his sweetheart the wife of a brutal scoundrel. The girl had married him because of the threat he held over her father to have him arrested. When the officer intercedes in her behalf, the husband gives battle. The pilot dog of the team jumps to the rescue of the red-coat and kills the villain. Romance triumphs.

Classification—Melodramatic romance featuring hero of the Mounted Police. Plenty of adventure, pathos, romance and sentiment—and not a few thrills. Good snow exteriors and a corking climax.

Production Highlights—The picturesque locations taken in Yosemite National Park. Great snow stuff. The fine work of Cummings, Beery and Miss Novak. To say nothing of Rin Tin, the dog. The fight on the edge of the cliff when the dog jumps to his master's defense. The suspense. The atmosphere. The different twist to an old theme.

Exploitation Angles—This picture carries a corking title which should be featured as typical of James Oliver Curwood and the frozen North. Author, star and other players should all be mentioned prominently. Also concentrate upon fine snow stuff collected from Yosemite National Park. Suggests a good ballyhoo and prologue.

Drawing Power—This will please them most everywhere. They will remark over the wonderfully picturesque exteriors. Star, Wallace Beery and Eva Novak assure patrons of good acting. Work of dog will please them. Should get over well in most any class of house. Good for all localities.

"Free Air"

W. W. Hodkinson—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Matthew A. Taylor)

A THOROUGHLY pleasant automobile story is "Free Air," and for genuine light entertainment, it is as good as they come. Sinclair Lewis' Saturday Evening Post tale was a good investment, whatever it cost. No one seems to have hit upon the idea of illustrating the trials and troubles of a young chauffuress who starts to cross the continent. It doesn't take much imagination to picture the wholesome comedy which will result. And it's all there. The hero runs a small garage in a hick town in Minnesota. He takes upon himself the task of helping the heroine and her father out of all the motorists' troubles, such as mud-holes, engine trouble, and desperadoes who ride on running boards. Incidentally there is another exploitation angle in "Free Air." Glacier National Park has here a better press agent than any railroad company's illustrated booklet. Never was such rich human comedy laid in such a picturesque locale. Many shots are as good in any scenic.

Mr. Lewis' story takes place entirely in that country which lies between Schoensten, Minnesota (wherever that may be) and Glacier National Park. "Milt," the garage keeper follows the big roadster in his little racer contemptuously known as "the bug." To keep his attentions from becoming too persistent, he is ordered to stop the Samaritan act. But Fate gives him another opportunity for a rescue and the roadster and "the bug" end up together in Glacier. The girl's fiance is there waiting for her. The desperado turns up again, and the swain proves yellow whereupon "Milt" delivers the final rescue and smooths the way for the honeymoon. The titles help matters along by delivering some good comedy touches.

The leading roles are played by Tom Douglas and Marjorie Seaman. Douglas may permit himself hopes of becoming a second Charles Ray. Miss Seaman is a typical wealthy American girl, and a pretty and attractive one. The direction catches the spirit of the thing and there are plenty of realistic touches. "Free Air" has no "message," but it hits the mark as entertainment.

The Cast

Milt Daggett.....Tom Douglas
Claire Boltwood.....Marjorie Seaman
Henry Boltwood.....George Pauncefort
Jeffrey Saxton.....Henry Sell
Minne Rauskekle.....Dorothy Allen
The Tramp.....Ben Hendricks, Jr.

Photography by Arold Sintzenich and George Freisinger. Directed by Myron M. Stearns. From the story by Sinclair Lewis. Produced by Outlook Photoplays, Inc.

The Story—Claire Daggett is a Brooklyn flapper who starts a trans-continental auto trip with her father. She gets as far as a small town in Minnesota when trouble starts in earnest. "Milt," a small town garage keeper, proves to be her saviour. He rescues her from mud, from a breakdown, and later from an escaping murderer. She dismisses him from following her in his small car, but Fate gives him his last opportunity to befriend her. Claire, at Glacier National Park, is met by her Brooklyn admirer. Milt has no chance to see her. But when the bandit turns up again, it is Milt and not the city man who saves her. Claire and Milt are married.

Classification—An automobile story falling in the comedy drama category. Plenty of action.

Production Highlights—The many details which any automobilist will appreciate. The rescue from the murderer. The scenic views of Glacier. The second rescue from the murderer, and the chase. The final destruction of the automobile and driver.

Exploitation Angles—A sure appeal to all motorists. Cars can be decorated with trans-continental banners. The name of the author and the fact that the story was a Saturday Evening Post story.

Drawing Power—Generally good everywhere, but especially so in the higher class houses whose patrons include motorists.

Double Exposure Cinematography a Most Exacting Science

Eternal Vigilance the Price of Accuracy in This Line of Activity

By GEORGES BENOIT

THE secret of all double exposure photography—beyond the employment of trick devices and methods of operation—can be expressed in just one word: exactitude. Eternal vigilance is the price of accuracy in this line of activity, as in any other strictly technical sphere. The fundamental caution in this type of photography—which has grown so increasingly popular within our art-industry of late—is to make sure that the camera is absolutely stable. Even the veriest novice can appreciate the importance of having his camera securely fixed, from the universal experience with hand cameras; how much more important is it, therefore, where you are photographing a moving object or group of objects! And when you are figuring on exposing your negative again—and in one case within my own experience, I exposed the same strip of negative forty-nine times—the deviation of a hundredth of an inch is fatal. It would mean the waste of perhaps a full week of labor. To ensure absolute stability, therefore, I use the fence around the camera and the cleats for the feet of the tripod, as do most other cinematographers. I have another device, which I believe is eminently more satisfactory than the iron tripod employed by several good men in our line—that is too heavy and cumbersome; my own instrument is a small jack, like an automobile jack used for raising a car. This I place on the tripod top-plate and thus I am enabled to hold the camera in an absolutely vise-like grip.

In the use of a travelling negative, where one strip of film is employed as a running mask to block out certain portions of the second unexposed strip, make sure that you have fixed your frame on the film exactly as you want it on the aperture plate, so that your synchronization will be correct. Of course, in the "vision" type of double exposure—i. e., where you are photographing a man, for example, and also showing a scene that is in his mind—the cinematographer must always keep his count, making careful notations of the count on which the vision enters onto the film and where the dissolve commences and finishes.

There is a unique "vision" employed in "The Masquerader," in that scene where Guy Bates Post, the star, as Chilcote, sees in his mind his comrades advance upon him from the rear, angrily pointing the finger of scorn at him for the way in which he has failed them at the crucial hour in the history of his political party. We employed a rather different device for this scene. We utilized a special kind of mirror placed in front of the camera, with the actors in the vision working behind the camera, so that they were revealed in the mirror. Many careful rehearsals were needed, not only for the timing of the action on the part of Mr. Post in the "straight" shot, so to speak, but also to get correctly the angles of the pointing fingers and of the faces of the crowd of accusers that appear in the vision. These had to be pointed accurately so that they all led in line toward the head of Post.

In this connection, I want to take the opportunity afforded me to speak a high and heartfelt tribute to the remarkable grasp of the technique of double exposures, as well as general filming, revealed by Mr. Post and by Richard Walton Tully, the producer. To him also, "The Masquerader" represented a film debut. Both of these eminent personages grasped this technique faster and more completely than

Unlimited Possibilities

Double exposure lends an enchantment to the motion picture which can not be duplicated in any other art. We will never reach the limit of its possibilities; new and wonderful effects are constantly being created. Mr. Benoit here relates in a most interesting manner some of the extremely unusual effects which he and his associates have initiated into their pictures.

Mr. Benoit is a past master of the art of double exposure cinematography; his latest efforts appearing in "The Masquerader." The title "the double exposure king" which he has been given, seems especially justifiable through his latest picture.

Electric Operator for Theatre Curtain Saves Time and Labor

Perfect Remote Control More Satisfactory Than Hand Operation

The motion picture industry has created a demand for a means by which theatre curtains can be operated from a remote point of control, preferably the booth of the machine operator. The Richards-Wilcox Manufacturing Company, Aurora, Illinois, has placed on the market a type of electric device for accomplishing this purpose which has been in satisfactory service in a number of theatres for about three years.

The R-W Electric theatre curtain operator does away with the necessity of having a man on the stage to operate the curtains at the end of each reel. The man in the booth has as perfect control of the curtains as though he were manipulating them by hand from the stage. By simply touching a button the curtains are set in motion to open or close.

The illustration, Fig. 1, page 2234, shows the relative positions of the different parts of the apparatus, which consists chiefly of an electric driving unit, a remote control system, hangers and track for supporting the curtain and a set of operating chain and cables. The main driving unit, which is generally located beneath the stage floor, consists of a specially built reversing electric motor connected through a set of reducing worm gearing to a main driving sprocket and chain. The gearing is enclosed in an oil tight case so that the gears are constantly lubricated.

The motor is controlled by push buttons which may be located at any convenient point in the theatre. It is customary to install one set of push buttons in the operator's booth and another set on the stage platform. Others may be located at any convenient points. The push button sets are made with three buttons to each unit, one of which controls the opening operations, another the closing operation and the third button will stop the entire apparatus at any point in either closing or opening movement. It is not necessary to hold the finger on the button while the curtain is in motion but is only necessary to push the desired button momentarily to energize the magnetic controller through which the motor receives its current.

A tripper located on the drive shaft automatically cuts out the electric current by means of limit switches at either the entirely open or entirely closed position of the curtains, preventing them from running too far.

A lever extending from the motor driving unit through the stage floor makes it possible to disconnect the motor from that point and manually operate the curtains by using the operating chain as a hand chain. The lever and driving unit are plainly shown in the line drawing, Fig. 2.

The illustration, Fig. 3, page 2234, shows the hangers and track from which the curtains are suspended. The hangers or carriers have ball bearing wheels which roll in an enclosed type track having hardwood runways to reduce the noise to a minimum. The curtain should be supported by hangers at intervals of 12 inches to 18 inches, depending upon the weight of

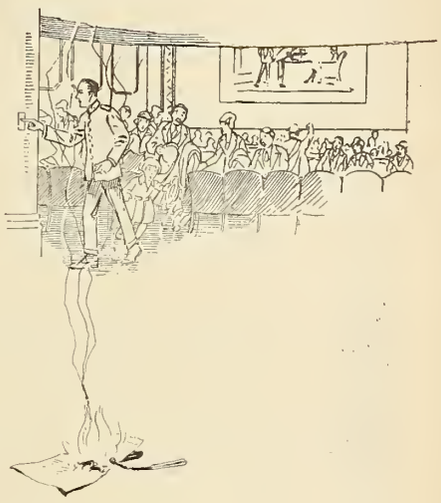
MAJOR FA SYSTEM TRADE MARK



Instant Light Prevents Panic!

A tiny blaze, the smell of smoke—ordinarily an incident of no importance—excites the crowd with the primitive instinct to flee from fire and the death-dealing stampede is on! An usher, carefully trained, touches a snap switch within easy reach and the darkened house is filled with a reassuring flood of light.

With a brief explanation the audience is back in their seats once more enjoying the show. The has had another demonstration and proved the wisdom of its installation.

With the Major System any or all of the lights controlled by the stage switchboard can be instantly thrown on from any desired number of points throughout the house. In addition you get the advantages of pre-selection, cumulative control, flashless, noiseless switch operation, one man control and minimum stage space. The Major stage lighting control apparatus cannot be injured, or do injury by careless meddling and can be locked against unauthorized handling with any combination of light on.

Write for "The Theatre Lighting Questionaire." Full particulars for equipping your house gladly supplied without cost or obligation.

Description New Motiograph Lamphouse, Arc Lamp, Striker and Feed

The Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company have now perfected their latest design of lamphouse, arc lamp, arc striker and feed, and have submitted the following detailed description of the merits and operation of this new apparatus:

Lamphouse

The new Motiograph Lamphouse is entirely a "Motiograph Design." It is very large and roomy, the measurements being 12½ inches wide, 30 inches high and 21 inches long. The Lamphouse is equipped with doors on both sides, these doors being backed up with heat arresters.

Also, there is a colored peep glass in each door, as well as arc reflector, so that the operator can determine the position of the arc at all times, from either side of the machine, without opening the lamphouse door.

The top of the lamphouse is of oval design, with chimney in center.

The front of the lamphouse is entirely covered with asbestos board.

In the center, on the right side of back part of lamphouse, is a pilot lamp, 110 volts, 25 watts.

The lamphouse is also equipped with the well-known Motiograph condenser mount, which is a special mount, an important feature of it being that it permits the quick change of condensers.

The lamphouse is made of 22-gauge sheet metal. The weight of the lamphouse and arc lamp combined is 90 pounds.

New Arc Lamp

The new DeLuxe type Motiograph arc lamp is very massive in size, and has been built on entirely new and well-tried principles.

The main screw rod for feeding the upper and lower carbons is extremely heavy and its movement controlled by a pair of hardened right angle gears. The upper and lower bearings for this main screw rod have a ball and thrust bearing fully protected from the carbon ash to insure ease in operation and protection against binding. Carbon adjustments are all on the lower carbon arm. This method also prevents binding and keeps the working parts as far away as possible from the heat and grit, which would be more greatly present were they located on the upper part of the lamp. In making the lower carbon the only one adjustable as to its relative position to the upper, insofar as the side swing and backward and forward positions are concerned, an ideal condition is brought about, for the top carbon, which carries the crater, remains fixed at all times and the act of adjusting or lining the carbons does not disturb the crater's relation to the condenser center.

Equipped with Arc Striker

Another strictly exclusive feature that this lamp is equipped with is the arc striker, which is a positive convenience and necessity. In operating the arc striker, the bottom carbon is brought upward until contact is made with the upper, and then lowered to its normal position. This is entirely different than feeding the carbons together in the old way. The bottom carbon arm operates, in this manner, entirely separate of the whole lamp. It is customary when striking the arc in a lamp not using an arc striker to feed the two carbons together. In doing this it is readily understood that the top carbon crater is moved out of line of the optical center; therefore, after the lamp has been lit and the proper arc gap obtained, it is necessary to adjust the entire lamp up or down, as the case may be, to line up the spot on aperture plate. With the arc striker this is entirely done away with, for the top carbon remains centered as if lamp was put out. Another feature of the arc striker is that in striking the arc the exact arc gap that was carried at the time the lamp was put out is automatically obtained when the arc is struck, regardless of whether it is ¼, ½, ¾ or 1 inch.

To facilitate quick trimming the DeLuxe Arc Lamp is equipped with a step-up gear arrangement carrying an auxiliary handle, separate from the regular feed handle. By separating the carbons with this auxiliary handle, the speed of separation of the carbon arms is increased four times. This is a great convenience, as it makes unnecessary the endless twisting of the slow speed feed handle, in order to get the carbon arms far enough apart for a new trim.

Side swing adjustment for the entire lamp carrying the swivel collar and rod is located at the lower part of the lamp, as well as the up and down adjustment for the entire lamp, keeping adjustable parts, as far as possible, away from the heat and grit of the carbon ash.

Mechanical Arc Feed

The New Motiograph DeLuxe Arc Feed is entirely mechanical when in operation. Carbon feeding is continuous. This is a big factor in keeping the burning crater free from intermittent disturbance and insures quiet burning of the lamp.

The rate of feed is adjustable, and with the proper carbon combination will operate on any amperage from 30 to 150. A separate motor is provided to operate feeding mechanism, which is mounted on the rear end of lamphouse, together with the revolving speed controlling elements. Attached to the speed changing handle is an indicating dial, by which the operator can readily tell the rate of feed. As an illustration: Suppose, at 75 amperes, the correct feed to appear on the indicating dial would be at figure 20, and at 90 amperes at figure 30, a notation can be made and the correct rate of feed can be set for either amperage even before the lamp is lit. This also applies to amperage within the range mentioned above.

The universal feed rod extends through the lamphouse and attached to the feed rod of the lamp on the inside, there being no unsightly

Mexican Girls Making Big Success in Theatre Equipment Field

The two young women shown in the photograph with Mr. Edward Earl, president of the Nicholas Power Company, are the Misses Adriana S. and Dolores L. Ehlers of the firm of A. & D. Ehlers, dealers in motion picture equipment, Mexico City, and exclusive distributors for Power's Projectors in Mexico.

These two young ladies, stopping at present at the Hotel Netherland, New York City, are successful business women and real "honest to goodness" projectionists and camera-women. They have been remarkably successful, but a brief history of the preparatory course they took before going into the supply business will show that they deserve all the success which has come to them.

In 1915 the Misses Ehlers came to this country, and with the exception of a few brief trips back to their home in Mexico, they remained here until 1919. During the intervening four years they devoted their time to the study of motion picture photography and motion picture projection. They first took up the study of photography and chemistry in Boston, and completed their studies in Washington in 1919 with a postgraduate course in art. They also devoted considerable time to the study of scientific and industrial motion pictures. They then took up motion picture projection in the same serious way, and spent two months in the factory of the Nicholas Power Company. At the end of that period they were able to take a Power's machine apart and put it together again. Having convinced the Nicholas Power Company of their earnestness and ability, they were appointed sole distributors for Fower's in Mexico. They have been very successful and have many important installations to their credit, one of these being the installation of Power's in Chapultepec Castle, the presidential palace in the City of Mexico.

To eradicate all remaining doubts regarding the manner in which the Misses Ehlers operate, it may be stated that when they sell a machine they also personally install it. They dress themselves in riding suits, which serve very well for working clothes, and the machine is set up ready to show films, all the work being done by these two young women without the aid of anyone but the porters to carry in the heavy parts. The Misses Ehlers are, of course, thoroughly competent projectionists.

The Misses Ehlers recently went to Tampico and took the film known as "Mexican Oil Fields," which has been highly commended by the newspapers of Mexico. This picture was recently shown to a gathering of well-known society people in the home of Ogden Mills, New York. It is in seven parts, shows the operation of the oil fields, the life of the residents and the beautiful scenery in the vicinity of Tampico.

Thoroughly in earnest and intensely enthusiastic about their work, the Misses Ehlers rise to supreme heights of enthusiasm when they discuss the future of their country and the possibilities of motion pictures in Mexico. They say that here is a country rapidly developing its tremendous natural resources, which has a population to whom the films offer a fascinating and inexpensive form of entertainment which is absolutely without competition in Mexico and other Latin-American countries.

Bartola Musical Instrument Co. Make Installations

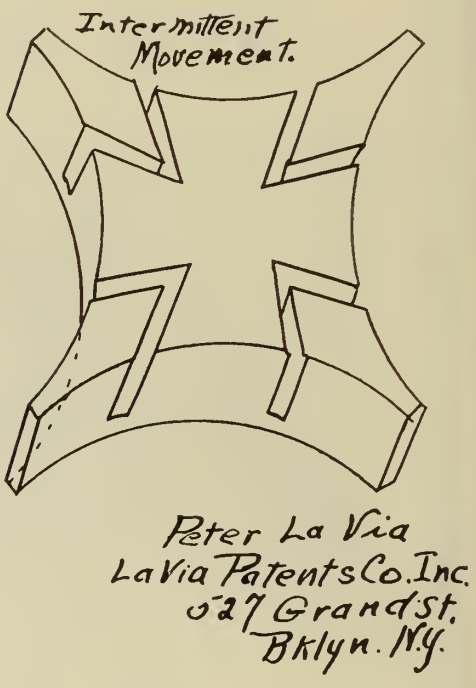
The Bartola Musical Instrument Company is putting the final touches on the installation of Barton organs in Saxe Brothers' new theatre at Kenosha, Wisconsin, which will open on March 14th, and in the new Dixon theatre, owned by L. G. Rorer, at Dixon, Illinois, which is scheduled to throw its doors open to the public on March 15th.

Both of these Barton organs are three manual instruments, with pipes installed on both sides of the proscenium arch, with special concrete sound boxes, and are orchestral organs of large size, beautiful tone and great musical possibilities.

Two other houses which soon will have large model Bartolas installed are, the Majestic theatre at Beloit, Wisconsin, of which T. E. Ellis is the owner, and the Liberty theatre, Chicago.

V Type Intermittent Movement

We recently received a letter from Mr. Peter La Via of the La Via Patent Company, Inc., who is interested in the design of projectors. Mr. La Via submitted a diagram of what he claims to be a new idea in the design of intermittent movements and gives the following explanation:



"Enclosed you will find a sketch of a new type of intermittent movement which I am submitting for your approval.

Four diamonds are formed upon the intermittent piece, it being accentuated by the pin of a Geneva Cam. The pin entering the nearest slot of the V and emerges from other side of the V, causing the intermittent piece to move ¼ of a revolution.

The advantages of this type of movement are that the speed of motion can be governed by the angle of the V slots and the wear on the same is less than upon other movements on account of cam pin entering one slot and emerging from other slot."

Very truly yours,

PETER LA VIA,

La Via Patents Co., Inc., 527 Grand street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

D. W. Griffith Commends Projection

D. W. Griffith, during his recent visit to Detroit, where his "Orphans of the Storm" was playing at the Adams theatre, one of the Kunsky houses, visited the Capitol theatre, where "Peacock Alley" was being shown, and declared that the projection was the most wonderful that he had seen in all of his travels.

He was so interested in the brilliancy and depth of the picture being thrown on the screen at this house, that he invited the Gish sisters, who were appearing in person at the Adams theatre, to the Capitol to see it, and the entire party visited the operating room and inspected the new Motiograph De Luxe projectors, which are installed there.

Mr. Griffith's comments on the equipment were very favorable and he reiterated his statement that the projection was the finest he had witnessed.

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

Bears the words "EASTMAN" "KODAK" —in black letters in the transparent film margin, as a means of positive identification, exactly as you see them in the section of film reproduced above.

If you see these same words in white on a black strip you have incontrovertible proof that they were so printed by the finisher to mislead, not stenciled by the manufacturer to identify, and that the stock is not Eastman.

Another Michigan Theatre Simplexized

With the opening of the new Century theatre, Dowagiac, Mich., another name has been added to the already long list of theatres using Simplex Projectors in the State of Michigan. Built at a cost of $100,000 and seating one thousand people, the new Century stands abreast with the other leading theatres of the State.

The main floor of the Century is approximately one hundred and twenty feet in length by sixty feet wide and is equipped with upholstered seats in the balcony, large comfortable wicker chairs have been installed. An eight-piece orchestra furnishes the music.

The projection room, which is quite large and well ventilated, contains two type "S" Simplex Projectors equipped with Snaplite lenses which were installed by the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Co. of Detroit. Mr. Ross Thayer, who has had many years experience as a projectionist, will have charge of the projection room equipment.

The L. E. Larkin Theatre Corporation, who are the owners of this model movie palace, also control the Beckwith theatre of the same city which is used for vaudeville and road shows.

Osgood & Osgood, Grand Rapids, Mich., were the architects and Frank Dyke, Holland, Mich., the contractor.

Liberty Motor of 17,000 Pound Plant Will Furnish 12,000 Amperes

After nearly two years of building and experimenting, Marshall Neilan's giant portable power plant has just been completed and will receive its initial operation in connection with the picturization of scenes for "Her Man."

The completion of this big generator marks the installation of the most modern power plant of its kind in the world. Unlike most of the power plants now in use in the production of motion pictures, the new Neilan plant is transported on its own power.

Electricity to the extent of 12,000 amperes can be generated by this plant through the use of a giant Liberty motor with a strength of 400 horse-power. This motor when running capacity consumes thirteen gallons of gasoline per hour, drawing from a gasoline tank with a capacity of 80 gallons.

The heavy outfit is propelled at a maximum speed of 35 miles an hour by an electric motor. In other words, the Liberty motor supplies the "juice" for the motor which runs the truck.

The entire job is enclosed in a specially designed body with drawing side curtains and nickel trimmings. When closed for travel it resembles a giant limousine. A special muffler arrangement places at a minimum the roar of the Liberty motor.

Various innovations have been successfully worked out in the erection of this plant by A. W. Harrison, who designed and built the generator for Mr. Neilan, with the assistance of Stanfield Thompson, a former Government engineer and expert on motors whom the producer engaged to work out his requirements in this job.

The entire plant is compact and complete in itself. It will be employed to generate the "juice" for all future Neilan productions and by reason of its great capacity will be able to take care of any demands necessary for the complete lighting of an entire studio. In fact, it will supply enough current to light four stage sets simultaneously.

Through its speedy transportation facilities and compactness the plant will prove of particular value for location work in communities where no current is available or where the current is of insufficient quantity to take care of the demands of motion picture work.

S. M. P. E. Spring Convention

The Society of Motion Picture Engineering are now perfecting the elaborate plans for the coming spring convention to be held at the Bellevue Hotel, Boston, Mass., May 1, 2, 3 and 4.

The program is promising every indication of a most interesting and successful meeting. It is expected that this convention will have a record-breaking attendance.

The following are a few of the papers which will be presented at this meeting:

Trick Photography—Mr. Alfred B. Hitchins, Ansco Company.

Constant Potential Generators for Motion Picture Projection Service—Mr. A. M. Candy, Westinghouse Company.

Preservation of Motion Picture Negatives—Mr. George Blair, Eastman Kodak Company.

Graininess in Motion Picture Negatives and Positives—Mr. A. C. Hardy and Mr. L. A. Jones, Eastman Kodak Company.

Some Uses of Aspherical Lenses in Motion Picture Projection—Dr. Herman Kellner, Bausch & Lomb Optical Company.

A Condenser for Mazda Lamp Projection, and The Ellintical Nest Reflecting Condenser—Mr. J. T. Beechland, General Electric Co. (West Lynn).

The Film Splicing Machine—Mr. J. H. McNabb, Bell and Howell.

Visual Education—Mr. Rowland Rogers, Picture Service Corporation.

Spirograph and Kinekrom Machines—Mr. Charles Urban, Urban Motion Picture Industries.

The Motion Picture of the Future and the Imaginary Equipment it Will Require—Mr. S. L. Rothafel, Capitol Theatre.

Color Photography—Dr. C. E. K. Mees, Eastman Kodak Company.

(Subject not submitted)—Mr. Alvin Wyckoff, Famous Players-Lasky.

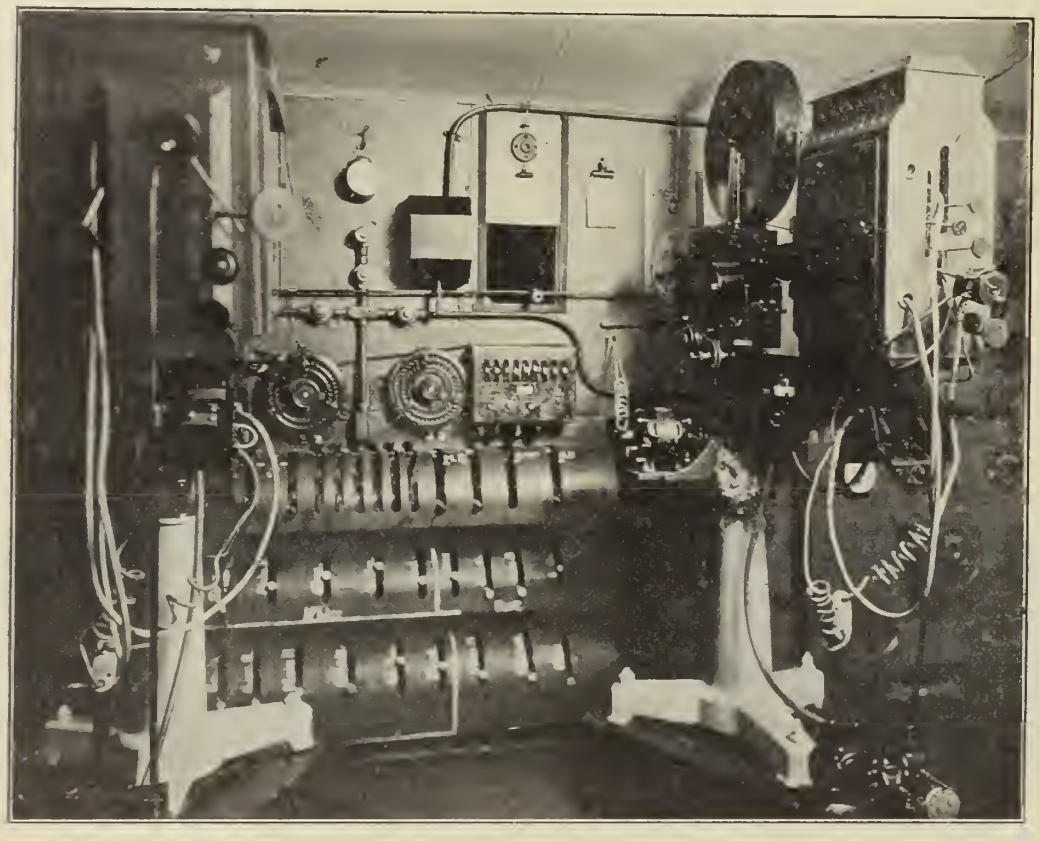
Dear Editor:

I am having a little trouble with one of my Simplex machines, or that is, I do not like the noise it makes. I have tried everything I know of to make it run more smoothly, but nothing seems to help it any. Tried changing intermittent, new shoes, new intermittent sprocket, new gate, new aperture plate, pulled out the spring so gate would come up closer and nothing seems to help it in any way. The picture is perfect so do not see why the machine should make more noise than other machines. The machine is an old type and has been repaired by the manufacturer some time ago.

Membership Buttons

We have just received the metal membership buttons which have been so consistently demanded by the members. Every brother should hop to it and get one of these, as they are a great improvement over the former celluloid type.

It is our desire to sell this button to the fellows for what they actually cost us. The price for one button is 25 cents. Any member sending us this amount in stamps or coin will be sent a button immediately.



The well equipped projection room of George Rissberger, Jr.

Would like to hear from any of you brothers, if you know what my trouble is. Enclosed find photograph of my booth. And think it is one of the best up-to-date booths for a theatre this size. It is not all in the photograph but the room is 10 ft. x 30 ft. and has everything a modern booth ought to have.

Hoping to hear from some of you brothers as to what my trouble is, I am,

Yours for better projection,
(Signed) George Rissberger, Jr.,
Liberty Theatre.

Replying to Brother Rissberger, it would seem that this trouble probably is due to removing the intermittent movement to put on a new sprocket and not replacing the movement back into the framing cam, according to the way it was ground in at the factory.

If Brother Rissberger will look on the intermittent gear No. 2 (part No. G-133-G), he will note an "O" mark on same as well as on the outer surface of the fly-wheel, and once these two gears are taken apart, they should be matched together as explained in the Simplex instruction book on Page 4, paragraph 3, before replacing the movement in the framing cam.

Noise is also caused by the gears becoming worn and causing what is known as back-lash when they are in motion.

The film will also cause noise, but as Brother Rissberger does not state just where the noise is coming from it is difficult to give a more definite answer.

We would advise that any Brothers using t Simplex machines might find it very helpful have on hand one of the instruction books p out by the Precision Machine Company.—Edit

Dear Editor:

It has been quite a while since I have writt to you and looking over the Motion Pictu News I see quite a few brother operators favor of the new buttons. I am in favor of too, and think it will be a good idea to get the now. I will send for mine as soon as you g them as I think it will be a great thing. M assistant belongs too and he will also get button when notified. We have shown he three times a week and all the films I receive are in good condition. In an item I read n long ago, it was shown where so many operato had so much trouble in setting their shutte Here's one way which will solve their problen as I can get no better results than this one. I "setting" or "timing" the revolving shutte it is necessary to bear in mind that regardless o type of shutter used, there is only one cut-o or main blade that is used in timing the shutte This blade is marked with the Simplex trad mark. Where an opaque type of shutter is use it is marked "Cut Off Blade" where Extralit shutter is used. This cut-off blade is used t shut off from the screen movement of the filn as it is pulled down into aperture position b the intermittent sprocket. The shutter is s "timed" that the cut off blade covers the aper ture opening while the downward movement i going on, and uncovers the aperture openin when the film has stopped moving and remain exposed for a brief instant at the aperture posi tion. In order to accomplish this end, it i necessary to set the shutter with the movement of the intermittent sprocket. The quickest an easiest way to make a general setting is to se the framing handle C-11 P.2, at center or ir neutral position. Move the shutter adjustin slide or block S 323 A P 2, by means of knob K-120 A-P2 so that sliding block is at a poin equal distance between the two stop pins ir center frame, between which pins the adjustin block operates. Now bear in mind that four teeth on intermittent sprocket represents one full move of any one of the four radii of the star wheel. Turn the fly wheel by hand and keep your eyes on the intermittent sprocket. Watch closely when it starts moving and when two teeth have moved downwards, stop turning and place shutter on shaft so that picture lens sets exactly in center of cut-off blade. Do not turn the machine over but loosen set screw on shaft then place the Simplex trade mark in center of lens and tighten set screw on shutter and if the position of the sprocket or the shutter has not been disturbed, it will be found that during the movements of the intermittent sprocket the lens is entirely covered by the cut-off blade and entirely uncovered when the sprocket is at rest. If there are white streaks below or above the lettering on the screen it can be eliminated if before setting shutter have adjusting block S-323-A, P.2, midway between the stop pins. This gives room to move either way so as to make white streaks disappear, and the ghost on the screen disappear.

I hope that this may be of use to some brother operators as I find the best way I can set the shutters on the machines I have.

Let's go, brother operators, and make projection 100%.

Dear Ed.:

I have not said much, but have followed the N. A. M. L. all the time and get much good information from it.

I remember when it was first started we were receiving some mighty bad film, but whenever there was a box that came with a N. A. M. L. label on it, I always found it in good condition. the N. A. M. L. did a world of good.

What I wish to say is the idea of Joseph Stull about changing the name to National Association for the Improvement of Projection. I have seen the name N. A. M. L. lose out, but the name "Improvement of Projection" will cover more than "Misframe League," as Stull says in his lettter, so I am for the new name.—N. A. I. P. Respectfully any other men I have ever worked with—either in this country or abroad; even more, they improved upon it! In fact, Mr. Tully—whose production genius on the stage is well known and who is the inventor of a number of stage devices and effects that he has incorporated into various of his theatrical shows—introduced a number of new stunts in the line of double exposure technique that I had hitherto thought impossible. Director James Young and art director Wilfred Buckland, who were associated with us on this picture, are, of course, recognized leaders in the film world, so it goes almost without saying that their assistance to me was absolutely invaluable. Yet even these two wizards exclaimed with surprise and pleasure when they beheld the "rushes" of certain double exposure shots that Mr. Tully had engineered.

Double Exposure Cinematography

In "The Masquerader" Post plays two roles—John Chilcote and John Loder—and these two characters appear together in many scenes. One stands out in my mind especially: Chilcote comes to Loder's apartment to make him a certain proposition. Loder opens the door for Chilcote, they talk at the door for a moment, then Loder points to a chair and Chilcote crosses absolutely in front of him to get to that chair. Here is a genuine innovation; to my mind it has never been accomplished with anything like the exactitude that will be seen in this film when it is revealed on the screens of the theatres. It is accomplished by a device never before employed, and it is entirely the product of Mr. Tully's inventive genius. Other scenes between Chilcote and Loder—both of whom are played all through the film by Mr. Post himself—show the two conversing together, handling various objects to each other, exchanging clothes, and meeting in various other physical encounters.

Of course, in double-exposure photography of an actor playing two roles, as in this case, practically all of the work is done with a special mat, or mats, for the aperture plate of the camera, cutting off part of the opening to screen the part where one of the characters is seen while you are photographing the other character. Of course, counting is essential in this connection, too, so that one character—for example—will speak in reply to the other only after the first has concluded his speech, and so on. The action, the talking, etc., must fit in all the way through the double-exposed scene.

In making mats, I have given up the metal ones used by most cinematographers. These involve a trip to the metal shop and take a long time to make; also, once made, they are hard to alter. I used black celluloid, which is much cheaper, much easier to handle, and which I can make myself in about a half hour instead of needing the two or three days' notice most cameramen require for the metal mats. In fact, during the filming of "The Masquerader," I often made the mat while Director Young was rehearsing the actors for the scene in which the mat would be needed.

One of the special attachments on my Debrie camera—like every experienced cinematographer, I have placed on my camera a number of special attachments that are not standard equipment—regulates the turns of the crank by a system of gears, so that instead of taking the usual eight pictures with each turn of the crank, I can take only four or one. This is a great aid in double exposure work, where I often use the four-pictures-to-a-turn attachment for slower erposure on a light background. Thus I secure a fuller photographic value; if I used the regulation eight-to-a-turn ratio, too much light would have already been introduced on the film during its first exposure.

Another Debrie attachment that I find very helpful in general, and especially in double exposure work, is that which permits the film to be reversed merely by turning the crank the wrong way; the old-fashioned method necessitates a trip to the dark room when you must rewind your film for the second take.

Still another great advantage of my camera is that I can see the entire action through the film while I am actually shooting; this is, of course, invaluable in double exposure photography. Once my camera has its magazine loaded with four hundred feet of raw stock, I need not touch it again until the magazine is exhausted. At all times, I can see exactly the lines of action and maintain the proper focus without opening the camera for inserting a ground glass.

And while I am "boosting" the Debrie—for I feel it is legitimate for an artisan to praise his tools honestly—I want to mention the fact that I have never had to use "x-back film" to avoid static, with its resulting increased cost in retaking scenes that have been spoiled by this cinematographic plague. I use straight negative always and I attribute the absence of any annoyance by static to the fact that the lesser friction of the Debrie removes any loophole for trouble of this nature.

To return to "The Masquerader"—one of the scenes shows Loder coming back to his lodgings in the London fog, traversing a long street and finally entering the doorway of his home. The scene was too short—although its importance required its presence in the film—and was a long shot, in addition, so that it would have been too expensive to build the big set which it would have required by the old-fashioned methods. We got around this difficulty by photographing a painting of the scene, which was two by three feet in size, and then employed a series of black hangings, taking up the entire length of one of the biggest stages at the United Studios, to show Post—as Loder—walking down the street seen in the painting and entering his house. This method is quite well known, but not employed as often as it should be, because of the conservative reluctance of many people to use anything new. Of course, this scheme can be employed only for long shots, followed by the erection of fractional sets for the necessary close-up shots of the characters in the scene. It involves, too, a thorough acquaintance with the method that can be the result only of a long study and much experimentation on the part of the cinematographer who attempts it. Then, too, there is a lot of work which he must do alone in preparation, in shooting the painting, in working out the proportions for his black backings used on the second shot, and in the development of the double-exposed scene which he must watch in person. But, where this method is feasible, it is a great saving—tremendous, in fact.

All of these methods here narrated—and several more which I cannot, naturally, divulge—have been employed by me in photographing Mr. Post in "The Masquerader." Some of them are more or less well known, others are comparative innovations and still others are absolutely startlingly revolutionary. These latter are due mostly to Producer Tully, ably assisted by Messrs. Young and Buckland. But all of them are feasible and all of them are artistic! In every case, they heighten the dramatic effect of the picture's narrative and the beauty of its scenes. Therein lies perhaps their greatest advantage, for their obviousness does not obtrude itself upon the beholder to the deriment of the story.

Earl W. Rossman Gives Interesting Talk on Africa

Earl W. Rossman, cinematographer, author and lecturer, in a travel talk on his recent expedition into Africa, given under the auspices of the United Society of Cinematographers at their meeting rooms last Monday night, remarked:

"Motion picture producers ought to issue a code book of foreign manners and customs for camera men who represent them in various parts of the world, if they would assure that peace of mind that is conducive to good photography."

Having nearly lost his life on several occasions, due to misinterpreting language signs, Rossman mentioned his experiences among the natives which proved highly interesting. Included among the many interesting scenes depicting life in tropical Africa, were many thrilling moments in shooting lions, rhinoceroses, hippos and buffaloes.

Mr. Rossman proved an entertaining talker and his brother members were highly pleased with the series of pictures which accompanied his lecture. An excellent supper closed the evening's entertainment.

This marks the first of the series of monthly lectures given under the auspices of the United Society of Cinematographers.

Next month Howard Chandler Christie, famous artist, has consented to present his views on "artistic composition as related to motion picture photography."

The organization is looking forward to another overflow meeting.

Pack Theatre Constructed in Asheville, N. C.

The largest independent motion picture theatre of one floor in the state of North Carolina the new Pack theatre, will have seating facilities for 1000 persons. Palms and greens are being installed in the arcade to give it the appearance of a palm garden. Refreshment stands, parlors and information booths will be placed in the arcade, the booths being provided for the convenience of tourists, Asheville being a noted resort. An attractive feature of this house is the marquee which extends over the street from the main entrance. Music will be provided by a large orchestra and by a pipe organ which is being installed.—KEENEY.

Capitol Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., Is Finely Decorated

A birthday present was handed to the city of Bridgeport, Conn., when the doors of the Capitol theatre were opened to the public on Washington's Birthday. The Capitol theatre is situated on one of the best sites on East Main Street, and was constructed by the Marsh Bros. Construction Co. of that city. The theatre is under the supervision of Mr. Percy P. Anderson, who is well known in the real estate business in Bridgeport. Mr. Anger, who is interested in a chain of theatres throughout the state of Connecticut, has been selected by Mr. Anderson to manage the Capitol, and is capable of fulfilling his duties in this capacity, owing to his many years of experience.

No expense has been spared in decorations. It is furnished throughout for the comfort of its patrons. The Capitol has a seating capacity of 1,000. The aisles and space between rows of seats are of unusual width, so that patrons can comfortably walk to their seats without interfering with one another.

The projection room has been constructed under the personal supervision of Mr. Louis Phillips, manager of the New Haven office of the Independent Movie Supply Co., 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City. Enough praise cannot be extended to Mr. Phillips for the services rendered in the construction of the operating room, which has been verified by a letter to the Independent Movie Supply Co. from Mr. Anderson, commending him for his personal interest in the matter.

Two of the latest improved type Power's Projectors, a General Electric Generator, and an IMSCO Superlite Screen have been installed by the Independent Movie Supply Co. This marks the second complete installation in Bridgeport made by this company within the past six weeks, the other installation being at Dawe's theatre, which opened on State Street.

Praise "Orphans of Storm"

Press Reviewers of Washington Laud Film at Opening in Rialto

WITH personal appearances by D. W. Griffith and the Misses Lillian and Dorothy Gish as added attractions, "Orphans of the Storm," Mr. Griffith's adaptation of "The Two Orphans," opened to capacity business at Moore's Rialto Theatre, Washington, D. C., won the unanimous approval of the newspaper reviewers, and kept right on drawing capacity crowds during its first two weeks run.

"Mr. Griffith has taken the old dust-covered melodrama, 'The Two Orphans,' and has made of it a living, appealing story, not of the eighteenth century alone, not of today alone, but of all times," says the reviewer for the Washington Post. "His great success as a director is due to his persuasiveness in bringing to the screen the realization of dreams; we would like to see the world as he makes it. Smoothness and directness, as usual, are characteristics of this Griffith photoplay and thrills abound."

"It is a powerful, sweeping production," says the critic for the Washington Herald, "a thing of vivid beauty, spectacular action, breathless suspense and stern theme that embraces all the various manifestations of Griffith's skill and makes 'Orphans of the Storm' one of the major works of this great master of camera-drama. In this production Mr. Griffith has taken several stories and woven them into a story that grips with a force that is well-nigh irresistible."

"This latest picture from the Griffith imagination is remarkable in its faithfulness in portraying revolutionary Paris with painstaking accuracy," says the review in the Washington Times. "Were there no plot or employment of suspense the settings themselves would be tremendously interesting for their splendor. The mob scenes are superior in their intensity and cohesiveness to anything so far produced.

ITEMS OF THE EXCHANGES AND THEATRES

MINNEAPOLIS

Motion picture exchanges of the city have been given two weeks to submit to the City Council committee on ordinances and legislation a plan for moving their film storage places out of the loop district or providing fireproof storage for the films. These orders were issued after considering an ordinance prepared at the suggestion of Fire Marshal Price and Building Inspector Houghton.

Plans are now under way, according to Theodore Hays, general manager of the Finkelstein and Ruben enterprises, who represented the film exchanges, to remove the hazard of faulty storage of films.

Following the resignation of Al Gillis as manager of the New Palace theatre, announcement is made of the appointment of C. Harry Preston as his successor. The New Palace is a Finkelstein and Ruben house and shows Shubert vaudeville and motion pictures.

Mr. Preston is well known in local circles. He came to the Twin Cities from Pittsburgh to become resident manager of the Capitol theatre at St. Paul when that house opened. During the present season he managed the New Garrick theatre. "Wallie" Decker, former manager of the New Lyric theatre before it was closed, will succeed Mr. Preston as manager of the New Garrick.

Newt Davis, well known local manager for Goldwyn has resigned, and is succeeded by W. K. Moss, Detroit film man. Mr. Davis has been associated with several distributing organizations since joining the sales staff of the Minneapolis Universal exchange in 1916.

The little town of Kenyon, Minn., defeated the attempts of so-called reformers to effect Sunday closing in a recent election when by a majority of 60 votes they voted to retain Sabbath amusements.

The election thwarted attempts of the Lutheran church to put over Sunday closing. It was believed the Kenyon affair was the first step of a concerted movement to establish Sunday closing at Fairbault and Zumbrota also.

However, with Kenyon favoring Sunday amusements the village of Fertile, Minn., in an election the same day, decided in favor of a Blue Sunday. By a vote of 223 to 64, Fertile citizens approved the Sunday closing ordinance.

Manager Frank Mantzke of the Minneapolis Releasing Corporation, has appointed Joseph M. Fieldman as sales manager. Mr. Fieldman is one of the oldest salesmen in point of service in the United States for he has seen 16 years experience in the industry, nine of which have been spent in this territory. He has been connected with 17 different film exchanges and has traveled in 34 states.

WESTERN NEW YORK

Buffalo exhibitors have been warned by Chief of Police John Burfeind that arrests will be made when children are allowed to enter theatres when under 16 years of age and when they are unescorted. The time for warning has passed says the chief in a message that has been sent to all precincts in the city. The chief declares that he has received many complaints that the ordinance governing being violated in all parts of the city.

The only theatre that can boast of a landing place for boat patrons has been discovered. It's the new Lamhert in Welland, Ont., where S. L. Lambert is building a wharf in the rear of the house for the convenience of patrons who come up the Welland canal in their boats to see the show. Park your boat right in the rear of the theatre will be a real attraction for the maritime customers.

J. H. Michael, manager of the Regent theatre in Buffalo is trying out vaudeville as an added attraction at his neighborhood picture theatre.

An excellent orchestra has been installed in the Central Park theatre, Buffalo, by Manager Billie West who has also brightened up the rear of the house with some spring wicker furniture.

Ossip Gabrilowitsch's rendition of a Chopin composition as given on the Steinway Duo-Art reproducing piano was a novelty on the bill at Shea's Hippodrome the past week.

Shea's Hippodrome has lost its concertmeister. Franz Wister has been given leave of absence to visit relatives in Germany.

A Rochester exhibitor found guilty of switching films was forced to deposit $1,000 with the Film Board of Trade in Buffalo. This $1,000 will be forfeited on the second offense. A Buffalo exhibitor is up on a similar charge, according to Henry W. Kahn, chairman of the film theft committee.

When Manager Arthur L. Skinner of the Victoria, Buffalo, put on the premiere of "Robinson Crusoe," he invited all the children of the city's orphan asylums to be his guests. Talk about "The Days of Real Sport!"

ST. LOUIS

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals has ruled for the defense in the suit of Charles G. Binderup against Pathe Exchange, Inc., and others. By a two to one vote, the judges held that the renting and leasing of film by the Omaha exchanges to Binderup and theatres served by his circuit was not interstate transactions and subsequently not under the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. Justice Garland and District Judge Trieber concurred in the findings. Justice Sanborn filed a dissenting opinion holding that the film sales were interstate. Binderup had asked for $240,051 damages under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

The Appellate Court in sustaining the Omaha Federal District Court which in June sustained a demurrer for the defense, held that the only way the plaintiff could get into the Federal Court was under the Sherman Act provided that the transactions complained of were in interstate commerce.

The court then reviewed the case and found that the Omaha exchanges obtained their film from New York and that the shipment ceased when the programs, films or advertising matter reached the Omaha exchanges. It concluded that the subsequent renting of the film to exhibitors in Nebraska by the Omaha exchanges were separate and distinct transactions and not part of the original shipment from New York City.

Binderup had charged that the defendants conspired to put him out of business and that they had refused to sell him film after finding him guilty of "trumped up charges." He claimed that this action had ruined his theatrical business.

St. Louis, Mo.—Father B. J. Krieger, C.SS.R., speaking at the Old Cathedral Lenten services here, charged that the movies had missed their mission by failing to properly tell the stories the world has to tell.

He contended that some films play up the sex appeal and portray the marriage state in a false light, placing passion and infidelity on a pedestal and holding the virtuous wife or husband up to ridicule.

He said that the movies should pay more attention to telling interesting stories of life in foreign countries and picture scenes and places that the average person can never hope to visit.

The Elite theatre, owned by John Farr, 1726 Park avenue, has been closed on orders of Director of Public Safety McKelvey. Building inspectors alleged that the place was in a dangerous condition and recommended it be closed until needed repairs can be made. They allege that the rear wall was in a weakened and dangerous condition and also that the roof and floor supports were in bad shape.

This is the second theatre closed by McKelvey recently. Last week he ordered the Eureka, 2001 East Ohear avenue, to stop operating.

THE SOUTHEAST

The Howard-Wells Amusement Company, of Wilmington, N. C., have taken a long time lease on Carolina Beach for the operation of its amusement devices. The main attractions besides the bathing, boating and fishing will be furnished by pictures and vaudeville attractions.

Ambitious plans are being formed for the first meeting of the Georgia Amusement Protective Association which is scheduled for Atlanta on June 5th.

R. J. Edenfield, the organizing secretary, will leave on an extended trip throughout the territory south of Atlanta and will personally visit every theatre in this territory in an effort to secure new members for the association and to work up interest in the coming convention at which it is hoped to have approximately one hundred theatres represented.

The Georgia Amusement Protective Association was first started about one year ago with about twenty-five theatres represented. The underlying principle was to have an organization with which to fight organized attacks on the screen and people of the screen and theatres. The men who attended the first meeting realized that to do this it would be necessary to repulse all attacks by some duly appointed representative of all the exhibitors which the proposed legislation might affect. At this meeting the following temporary officers were elected to serve until permanent officers are elected at the forthcoming meeting: President, William Oldknow, Y. Y. Freeman, treasurer; Lionel H. Keene, secretary, and R. J. Edenfield organizing secretary. A temporary executive committee was also appointed consisting of the above named officers together with Arthur Lucas, Joe Burton and Williard Patterson.

A new exchange has been established in Charlotte, N. C., by Fred Martin, former manager of the Southeastern in that city. It will be known as the Continental Pictures Corp., and will handle the biggest state right attractions that can be secured, the first being "Where Is My Wandering Boy?" Mr. Martin has also secured the franchise for the Carolinas for Second National Pictures releases.

CANADA

A social event of more than usual interest in the moving picture circles of Canada occurred at Montreal, Quebec, a few days ago, when the marriage took place of H. M. Thomas, general supervisor of theatres for the Famous Players Canadian Corporation and resident manager of the Capitol theatre, Montreal, to Miss Louise Leila Auger, daughter of Mrs. C. A. Whitmore of Toronto. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas left immediately after the ceremony for a honeymoon in the States after which they will reside in Montreal. The ceremony took place at the residence of Stewart P. Dunlop, Montreal, who is identified with the Famous Players Canadian Corporation. P. H. Auger, brother of the bride, is the advertising manager of the Toronto Mail and Empire, an important daily newspaper. The bride's mother and brother were present at the wedding.

Robert Scott has resigned his position as manager of the Vancouver, B. branch of Regal Films, Limited, to come Vancouver manager of the Canad Universal in succession to Louis Jac who has been promoted to the post manager of special productions for U versal in the Canadian West.

My Wife Eh!

what have you got to say-

UNJUSTLY accused of forcing unwelcome attention on the wife of the man you most admire and respect—

What would YOU do?

To tell the truth meant impeaching the honor of his superior's wife — hurting the girl he loved who believed in and loved his own brother, the real culprit—disgracing his brother whom he had sworn to protect and keep straight.

To remain silent admitted his guilt, his own dishonor and possible dismissal from the service to which he had dedicated his life. And more—it killed forever his hope for happiness with the girl he loved.

What would YOU do?

DON'T miss this powerful, enthralling drama of the great Northwest, the most picturesque, soul stirring story ever told of the romance, tragedy and adventure of the North.

By America's greatest story-teller, James Oliver Curwood, with flawless direction, and with the greatest galaxy of stars ever featured in one picture, "I Am the Law" marks a new epoch in photodramatic achievement. Don't miss it!

The Laughter Will Resound From Maine to California!

THE poor man's automobile has at last reached the screen! And with Wallie Reid in his greatest role to date, it forms the basis of one of the funniest comedies in all screen history. There's heart-interest in it too—and lots of thrills. The climax—the transcontinental race, is as exciting as anything you'll see in many a day. The great cast includes Theodore Roberts, Betty Francisco and Mary MacLaren.

When a Great Author Writes Directly for the Screen—

YOU can be assured of something entirely out of the ordinary, entirely original, full of genuine feeling and absorbing interest.

"The Ordeal" is the first original screen story by W. Somerset Maugham, author of "The Circle," "The Moon and Sixpence" and other successes. It was made under his personal supervision.

The character of the girl, as portrayed by Agnes Ayres, will live forever. The stirring scenes, the vital plot, will cling in your memory. When you see it you will realize what a screen story can be!

The notable cast includes Conrad Nagel, Clarence Burton, Edna Murphy, and Edward Sutherland.

Thomas Meighan

in "The Bachelor Daddy"

ONLY once in a while do you get a picture which is literally packed with the things that make box-office appeal.

You know what these things are—real comedy, real thrills, real romance and real heart-interest.

Unqualifiedly we say that "The Bachelor Daddy" has these elements in larger proportion than any picture in many months.

For comedy—there's Meighan's trip across the continent with five mischievous, lovable kiddies. For thrills, there are fights with bandits, hair-breadth rescues, battles in the mountains. And the romance between the hero and the girl (played by Leatrice Joy) is altogether satisfying.

And as for heart-interest—well, when you watch the big-hearted man "mother" the five appealing orphans, you will feel a lump in your throat, no matter how hard-boiled you are about "movie sentiment."

This is straight, honest fact. Play it up big, and your patrons will thank you for it!

"Even Surpasses 'Humoresque'"

This Is the Verdict of the New York Newspapers

"It even surpasses Fannie Hurst's now famous 'Humoresque.' It is a constant delight. As regards the other films that have flowed from Miss Hurst's prolific pen, it is so much better that a comparison would be worse than odious.

"'The Good Provider' represents the triumph of pantomime over print."

—New York Sun.

"Another 'Humoresque' at Rivoli. At the risk of annoying those who consider 'Humoresque' the last word in film production, we must confide that this seems quite as good, if not better.

"We forgot the audience and wept at Davidson with his incomprehensible family.

"Vera Gordon plays again a mother role—quite as perfect as her first. Cast are excellent. Here a bow to Frank Borzage, an inspired director. Beautifully mounted by Joseph Urban.

"This is one of the three films of the season which must under no circumstances be missed."

—New York Globe.

"THE GOOD PROVIDER"

WITH

VERA GORDON and DORE DAVIDSON

STORY BY FANNIE HURST; SCENARIO BY JOHN LYNCH; DIRECTED BY FRANK BORZAGE; SETTINGS BY JOSEPH URBAN.

"This newest play by Fannie Hurst might be considered a second chapter to that magnificent domestic drama, 'Humoresque.'"

—New York Journal.

"Something seems to tell us that we would be all wrong in pronouncing 'The Good Provider' a better picture than 'Humoresque,' so we shall compromise by saying that we liked it better.

"We did not know that William Collier, Jr., was such a good actor, nor that Vivienne Osborne was such a beauty.

"We give Frank Borzage due credit. The settings are by Joseph Urban; of course they are very fine."

—Harriette Underhill, N. Y. Tribune.

"At last the screen shows signs of becoming original. Has tingling human quality. The picture might be labelled 'Any Home—Any Family Argument.' Extremely natural handling given it by Frank Borzage. The beholder more interested than if it was his own family fracas.

"Often captions aren't needed, so well has this been conceived as a living picture rather than a moving picture.

"Miss Gordon and Mr. Davidson do so well they could be advertised as 'appearing in person—not a movie.' Davidson's pantomime speaks reels of subtitles for itself."

—New York Herald.

WILL you be able to show this additional profit item? Are you getting your share of our profits for the months of April and May?

WHEN Carl Laemmle announced that he had turned over all the Universal Exchanges to us for the months of April and May and that we were to receive the lion's share of the profits for these two months, we immediately decided to give a part of our profits to the exhibitors. The response has been wonderful. But remember, the bigger the business we do during April and May, the greater will be our profits and the larger your share. So don't hesitate—come in and see us. We've got a great lineup of pictures that will make money for you at the box office in addition to the cash you gather in on our very liberal offer.

Great Society Drama "The Mayor's Wife"
Directed by KENNETH WEBB

Kenneth Webb is now completing this production which we announce without reservation as the biggest and finest Betty Blythe star-production ever made.

This tremendously popular and beautiful girl has an overpoweringly big role in this nationally known emotional and society drama from the novel "The Mayor's Wife" by Anna Katherine Green.

Our Home Office can book in conjunction with a limited number of big first runs Miss Blythe and her splendid act for personal appearances. Such booking can be handled only through our New York Home Office.

We expect to be able to ship prints to our score of exchanges in the next two weeks. Arrange an immediate screening for this record-maker. It will be one of the pictures that will "save your life" this Spring when you "need big ones."

What More Critics Say

EXHIBITORS' HERALD: "Sisters" deserves special mention in the year's better pictures. Will please every right-minded, clean-living person. You feel good all through at having seen it.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: Restrained, beautiful and intensely real. Popular without being common. Its most dramatic moments have increased the power because they are subdued.

EXHIBITORS' TRADE REVIEW: "Sisters" should have a wide appeal. It gets to the very root of why so many marriages are failures. Seena Owen is splendid.

FILM DAILY tells of its being "convincing because of the splendid restraint of the players," calls it a "powerful message;" says the picture arouses "fine sympathy" and has strong "heart interest." It is also the only paper in the industry that thinks the picture too long.

NEW YORK WORLD: "Sisters" in its second week at the Cameo was not reviewed by us last week. It is not too late to say it is most interesting; a fine feature deserving success. The work of Seena Owen is excellent and the picture is told with great understanding.

NEWARK NEWS: "Sisters" at the Newark Strand is a natural and convincing picture. A vitalized, tense, sincere picture; well-developed excellently made and interesting to everyone.

HARRISON'S REPORTS: "Sisters" should please all. There is nothing offensive in the picture. The young sister's falling in love with the husband of her eldest sister is the natural outcome of past associations.

"A Triumph of Art and Invention"
—London Daily Sketch

Tributes from the press without a parallel since the beginning of motion pictures followed the distinguished success of the premier presentation of J. Stuart Blackton's "The Glorious Adventure" at the Royal Opera House, London:—

LONDON TIMES

"'The Glorious Adventure' must inevitably rank as one of the most impressive films that this country has yet seen. There is enough excitement to satisfy the most critical."

DAILY SKETCH

"Hundreds of people who tried to book seats at the last minute were disappointed. In the afternoon £5 were being offered for seats. So distinguished a gathering never went to see the pictures before."

DAILY MAIL

"'The Glorious Adventure' the first picture play to be made in natural colours, is of outstanding interest. Some of the colour effects are of great beauty. Lady Diana Manners in this colour photography looks very beautiful, and one may say with sincerity that she has scored a great success."

DAILY GRAPHIC

"Film production as we saw it last evening has advanced a stride. 'The Glorious Adventure' is a thousand oil paintings come to life."

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE

"The brilliantly successful presentation of 'The Glorious Adventure' at Covent Garden marks a big step forward in the progress of the kinema. To attract a first night audience of important people to see a film is in itself a new phase in connection with pictures."

DAILY NEWS

"Some wonderful effects have been produced by Mr. Stuart Blackton in his colour film, 'The Glorious Adventure,' and were deservedly cheered for their realistic appearance."

EVENING NEWS

"The picture is a great triumph for the producer Some of the scenes are of marvellous beauty. The film scores all along the line in the fire scenes. There was an ovation for the producer at the end such as Covent Garden has rarely seen."

MOVING PICTURE NEWS

"Achieves wonderful success and is a striking film production. Excellent acting in a new type of picture which will make a great box-office attraction."

THE BIOSCOPE

"The picture is an extraordinarily fine and interesting example of natural colour cinematography. There is scene after scene of lustrous richness and dazzling colour contrasts."

How to Sell "Fair Lady" to Your Public

The best picture made won't bring real big money to your box-office unless you tell your people what you've got. "Fair Lady" is a real picture. It will make big money for you if you tell your public how good it is, why it is good, and why they should see it.

PAPER—Sell this picture to your theatre territory with paper. Tell your story with posters. Bill your town so every man, woman and child will know about "Fair Lady," will talk about it, and make up their minds to see it.

LOBBY—Dress your lobby with 11x14 and 22x28 hand-colored display cards so that it will catch every person passing anywhere near and make him talk about it at his home, to his neighbors and his friends. The lobby cards issued with this production are exceptionally strong as attention attracters.

CLOTHES—Every woman everywhere can always be interested in handsome gowns and beautiful costumes. Use cutouts from the posters showing the gorgeous silver cloth wedding gown worn by the heroine in this picture. See that every woman in town hears about these last-minute dress styles.

WILL TELL you more about this picture next week.

The exhibitor and the merchant are in the same class. The one sells amusement; the other merchandise. When the exhibitor applies the merchant's selling principles to his picture it is sure to show in the box office.

The LYRADION Concert Grande

Using the Seabrook Amplifying Horn and Equipped with Four Stage Radio Receiving Set

Powerful enough to fill any theatre

Made also in smaller sizes

An added attraction

A money maker

A way to cut down expenses

Mutual Music Adds Radio to Its Plan

The first try out of the Radio equipped Lyradion Concert Grande was given at the Pennsylvania Hotel in New York on March 9th. Music played by Vincent Lopez' orchestra forty miles away was reproduced by the Lyradion in the ball room so loud and clear that 100 couples danced to it.

As a means of reproducing famous dance orchestras, the Lyradion has proved its worth in houses seating up to 2200 although smaller sizes are available.

The Lyradion Concert Grande offers a new attraction for your theatre—one that cannot fail to increase attendance and give you the advantage of being the first to offer public radio concerts in your city.

This instrument is built for theatre use exclusively—it is the only instrument on the market that is capable of reproducing a musical selection in the same volume and quality of tone that characterized its original recording.

In addition to radio, the Mutual Music plan offers your patrons the advantage of hearing the current record releases played under the most favorable circumstances—it hooks up your theatre to the tremendous amount of advertising that is constantly being bought by the phonograph record dealer.

Only one Lyradion Concert Grande will be placed in cities up to 200,000. Prompt action on your part is necessary if you want to be the first to introduce this new, popular and innovative service in your community.

Play the "feature" with your organ; use the Concert Grande as a phonograph during the "Comedy" and "News Reel"—receive broadcasted news and music CLEARLY whenever it is being sent.

The Lyradion is ready for delivery now—we will send you a complete report of installations made thus far and copies of all the advertising used in its introduction. Write or wire at our expense.

HOUDINI

In His Initial Photodrama for His Own Company

"The Man From Beyond"

Now Playing TIMES SQUARE THEATRE, New York

¶ "ONE OF THE MOST HAIR RAISING STUNTS EVER REFLECTED ON THE SCREEN. FOR REALISM AND SENSATIONAL THRILLS IT IS IN EVERY WAY SUPERIOR TO THE DRAMATIC RAPIDS SCENE IN 'WAY DOWN EAST.' THE CLIMAX . . . IS A BEAR, FOR IT FAIRLY THROWS YOU OUT OF YOUR SEAT."—Roger Ferri in Moving Picture World.

¶ "MOST THRILLING RESCUE SCENE EVER FILMED. . . . There is no fake about this. . . . It's a corker and well worth seeing. . . . Drew enthusiastic applause. . . . Accorded a hearty reception."—R. W. Baremore in Morning Telegraph.

¶ "Never a spectacle so impressive in its realistic fury as this Big Panorama. Minutes when one's breath came quick and short. Thrills and a romance as tempestuous as Niagara."—Evening Journal.

¶ "We think the water rescue scene in Houdini's new motion picture is one of the two most startling photoplay views of this kind ever made."—Quinn Martin in The World.

¶ "There are thrills, then a couple of thrills and then more thrills. Houdini is whirled to the edge of Niagara and saves the girl. . . . Will hold any audience spellbound."—The Evening World.

¶ "I quivered at the views of the couple battling in the rapids on the verge of the cataract and almost cheered when they made the crawl to safety."—Joseph Mulvaney in N. Y. American.

¶ "THE MAN FROM BEYOND" is a thriller. Mister Houdini, being the "master escaper" of the movies, belongs there . . . in the cinema drama, I mean . . . and if action is what you want, be a little go-getter and try his wares. Creepy stuff for you who take your movies with thrills attendant.—McElliott in Daily News.

¶ "As honestly exciting a moment as one could have, short of actually going over inside a barrel—a thrilling situation, FIT TO RANK WITH THE WATERFALL SCENE IN 'WAY DOWN EAST'."—N. Y. Herald.

¶ "Interesting stuff. . . . Fantastic conception."—N. Y. Times.

¶ "The weirdest, most uncanny, yet most fascinating picture ever presented. Houdini has outclassed his previous efforts in offering a peculiar type of screen material that possesses all the subtlety of 'Deception,' all the novelty of 'Dr. Caligari's Cabinet,' and all the mysticism of reincarnation described in the volumes of old masters. As a box office attraction this stirring drama will draw like a magnet."—Marion Russell in The Billboard.

¶ "A thrilling melodrama, fantastic of theme, and highly adventurous, has reached the screen in 'The Man From Beyond.' IT CARRIES A CLIMAX WHICH REMINDS YOU OF THE ONE STAGED BY GRIFFITH IN 'WAY DOWN EAST.' 'The Man From Beyond' will be remembered for its river scene. It is an exciting moment, and you are caught in a tight embrace of suspense."—Laurence Reid in Motion Picture News.

¶ "Houdini excells all his past accomplishments in his new screen play. Swims the Niagara rapids within a few inches of the Falls."—Evening Telegram.

¶ "One can safely wager that it is the most peculiar film now showing on Broadway. It is weird, it is interesting, and at times, startling. One of the most thrilling episodes ever screened."—Evening Post.

¶ "The most thrilling scene of the picture, and one which is worth seeing, is its closing passage in which Houdini swims through the Niagara River rapids to rescue the heroine. This was a strikingly daring feat, and one which was entirely genuine production, with both Houdini and the girl in question risking their lives. . . . Idea certainly a novel one."—The Evening Mail.

¶ "IT HAS A WHALE OF A PUNCH. Houdini does a sensational rescue of the heroine in the Niagara rapids, and it has a kick that would carry any audience. IT IS A VERITABLE WHALE OF A STUNT. It is a true thriller."—Variety.

¶ "The thrill is absolute, positive. THE ENDING IS A SMASH THAT MAY STAND OUT IN THE ANNALS OF FILM THRILLS—a battle in the waters of the Niagara River. Mr. Houdini's screen work is praiseworthy."—Exhibitors' Trade Review.

¶ "Nothing which he showed on the stage equalled the stunts he performed before the camera."—The Sun.

¶ "The pictures of the falls and of the rapids are remarkably fine. Rescue accomplished at great risk to Houdini and the girl."—Globe.

¶ "Houdini can do things that nobody else on earth can do, and some of these things are in his picture. The most thrilling thing he does is swim down the rapids and rescue a young woman who is about to go over Niagara Falls. There is no fake about this. Houdini actually does it."—Harriette Underhill in N. Y. Tribune.

In generations to come the present-day bootlegger will doubtless occupy the same picturesque position in fiction that Captain Kidd and his doughty adventurers did of old. Wid Gunning has taken time by the forelock, as the quotation encyclopedias have it, and named one of his most exciting and all-around fine pictures The Bootleggers. The title is enough to draw the crowds since home brew has a greater popular appeal than any other topic of the day. But in addition to this the production gets you from start to finish.

There is something in that brigand Jose Fernand which fires the imagination in spite of his glowering face. The hero, handsome Jack Seville, is a knight of knights. Helen Barnes is the most feminine of heroines as played by Norma Shearer. And if there are any thrills in shipwreck, aviation, wireless or the smuggling situation which Roy Sheldon has overlooked in directing the picture they must be unimportant. A fight over the precipice of the island, which never sees a sail, makes you sit forward in the orchestra seat and hold your breath. There are many shots of both sea narrative, the author tells the story of Jose whose evil designs hop girl, who is

"A History Making Day"

WILL H. HAYS, in his speech before the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, gave the message of his association to the exhibitors of the country.

Senator Walker replied for the exhibitors.

They pledged, then and there, a mutuality of interest. They pulled down the curtain on the past. They turned, right about face, and shoulder to shoulder, toward a common goal ahead.

Both are men who mean just what they say—no more, no less. Their pledges hold good. And what they said was applauded to the echo by the exhibitors present.

"This is a history-making day for this industry," said Senator Walker.

A few days previous Sydney Cohen in an address before the Association of Motion Picture Advertisers sounded the same clarion call.

He referred to the organization growth of the M. P. T. O. A. At last, said he, a strong and compact national organization has been achieved. And what he says is true. Sydney Cohen deserves a lot of credit for a big job and a tough job well done.

This organization today, said Mr. Cohen, stands upon a broadly constructive basis. The organization seeks the further development of the utility of the motion picture and the unity of the motion picture industry.

The M. P. T. O. A. will remain a distinct and self-contained organization. And Will H. Hays, it should be noted here, voiced this identical sentiment in his address.

But, said Mr. Cohen, the time has come when the branches of the industry should sit on opposite sides of the table and there thrash out their problems. Permanent committees should exist for the purpose and for concerted strength and action in all outside matters of defense and progression.

Certainly it would seem that this industry is about to emerge from its twilight zone of internal dissension; and that a clear and bright day stands abreast of it.

This is an all important era in this industry's history. Let no producer and no exhibitor mistake the fact. We have no patience whatever with any individual who does.

There are many economic troubles today. The future, at times, looks misty and the present day burden is heavy on many a pair of shoulders. There are big and tough industrial problems to solve this year.

But there's one supreme duty immediately before us—staring us straight in the face. It transcends mightily any economic problem facing anyone or any concern in this business.

It is—the cultivation, the attainment, and the maintainment of PUBLIC FAVOR.

We have got, first, to realize that this industry is a great, perhaps, the greatest of all public utilities. We don't publish books for a few, nor stage plays for a city, nor newspapers for a district.

We deal directly, intensively, daily with millions of American homes.

That is our unequalled appeal, that is our unequalled province—and that is our unequalled public.

You can't buck the American public—and you can't bunk it. You can't bluff or stall this huge responsibility. You can't confuse it with the responsibility of the producers of books, stage plays and newspapers. You are dealing with a new agent, an unique agent, and with the greatest of all agents, because it is feeding, and swaying the minds of young America, and the homes of the peoples of the world.

And we direct this message in particular at the heads of the largest producers and distributors of motion pictures.

If you don't know the responsibility, if you don't subordinate to it every other impulse—then you won't last.

For the motion picture is going on.

And, with a UNIFIED industry, we make our first real start.

Interest Widespread in Washington Meeting

Indications Are That Every State Will Be Represented at Session

ADVANCE reports at the offices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America indicate widespread interest in the annual convention of that body to be held at the New Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C., the week of May 8. According to these reports, owners of motion picture houses from practically every every state in the Union will be present.

Matters having more importance than usual to the interest of owners of movie houses will be up for discussion, and action will be taken on national and state legislation. Members of the organization have evidently come to a realization that concerted action on their part is necessary to combat measures against them, and consequently reservations are already numerous for convention week at the hotels of the National capital.

A careful canvas of the situation nationally and by states has been made and the need for extreme vigilance in caring for the theatre owner at capital centers will be emphasized. The censorship question will occupy a central place in the discussion. It is the hope of the association to curtail this movement until it is gradually eliminated in every state of the Union. Ways and means of accomplishing this will be thrashed out at different sessions.

Special attention will be given the censorship problem in Massachusetts. A referendum vote is to be taken there this fall on the proposal to create a censorship board or commission. Therefore, censorship will be directly up to the vote of the people.

Public service elements will also be given special consideration. This is one of the outstanding, definite elements of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and detailed attention will be accorded this subject both by a special committee and on the floor of the convention. The lines of public service will be specifically indicated and the ways and means of putting the same into practice pointed out.

A report from the National Public Service Committee will be one of the outstanding features of the conference. This report will be in book form and theatre men will be able to take the same home with them to form the basis for the Public Service work in the different sections of the country.

All theatre owners have received railroad certificates, which entitle them to fare and one-half from their homes to the convention and return. Every ticket agent in the United States has been served with a copy of this order by the railroad companies, and there will be no trouble experienced in securing these rate concessions by simply presenting the certificate to the ticket agent, it is announced.

The Washington Committee, acting in conjunction with the National Convention Committee, of which W. A. True of Hartford, Connecticut, is chairman, have made ample provisions for the accommodation of all. Arrangements have been made for several thousand rooms in the different hotels and these are obtainable at prices within the reach of all.

A number of prominent public officials and editors will address the convention and bring to the theatre owners the message of a combined newspaper and screen press, as well as illustrate in a definite way the elements of public service provided.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

THE fact that the amusement business fell off the large total of nearly $20,000,000 in February, as compared with the same month last year, is at first sight alarming.

We don't know, of course, what proportion of this slump is chargeable to motion pictures. We have every right to assume that most of the decrease is with the higher priced amusements, cabarets, etc.

We must also bear in mind the fact that February was one of the worst months the entire business world has seen since the period of war prosperity. It was a sort of inventory month. A breathing space, a stock taking, between the conclusion of 1921 and the new and better business outlook ahead.

We opine that March will show decidedly better figures.

Just the same, the outlook is one that calls for a lot of serious thinking.

An exhibitor gave us the other day a pretty good appraisal of the picture theatre situation. He said: "People are, of course, shopping for pictures as never before. We all know that. But even before they think about shopping, they are thinking today about spending money at all. I have stood in front of my theatre recently day after day and watched the people pass. I have studied their faces and the answer to me is very clear. They stop for an instant, look at the posters, give a quick glance at the photographs, hesitate for a moment, but only a moment, and then go on with a pleased expression because they have saved some change. That is the first big hurdle today for the public to clear. It is not a matter of shopping for pictures but that of spending any money at all."

At the T. O. C. C. luncheon Tuesday, Will Hays and Jimmie Walker met for the first time like two long-lost brothers. "I hope you heard my speech," said Will Hays. "I didn't hear enough of it," said Jimmie Walker. And then they clasped hands in regular fashion.

THAT was a telling point which Mr. Hays made about the investing public and the motion picture business. We hope it is clearly understood by every one in this business. "We must have," he said, "public favor, because this industry is one of the greatest public utilities in the history of the world. But in addition to this public favor, we must have the confidence of the investing public."

The railroads, steel, oil, automobiles—all the great industries are supported today by the investing public. The money comes directly from insurance companies and the banks, but it comes to the latter from savings of the people of the United States. These other big industries could not survive without this large general investment. Neither can this industry survive without it nor can it progress.

As a matter of fact probably the main trouble today with this business is lack of adequate working capital. Producers, distributors, exhibitors, all need banking help and in the future they will need it even more than today. This confidence of the public cannot be won unless pictures are put upon a higher plane and unless the industry at large is conducted with unity and dignity.

Senator Walker gave a body blow argument to censorship in New York City. "A certain crowd," said he, "wanted censorship. Now they've got it. It has been in operation long enough to prove itself. If censorship has been successful, why," he asked, "are children excluded from the theatres in New York State." Here is a paradox to which the industry would appreciate an answer.

When Will Hays went home to Sullivan, Ind., recently, he took some cowboy suits to his little boys. No sooner were they decked out than a loud altercation followed. "I want to be Bill Hart," yelled one, "and he won't let me." The matter was only settled by allowing the other to be Doug. Fairbanks.

"Times have changed in this country," said Mr. Hays. "When I was a boy we fought about who should be George Washington."

Miss Elsie Cohen is in New York representing the Hollandia Film Studios of Haarlem, Holland. She brought with her seven pictures to be placed in this market and has now decided to take back an American company to Holland.

UNDER the heading of "What Any Town Can Do for Better Films," Dr. Cocks of the National Board of Review, makes these tested suggestions in the last issue of "Film Progress," which we might add is a bulletin which every exhibitor should have at his right hand.

"Form a Better Films Committee representing the people of the whole town.

"Conduct a 'family night' in the theatre with 'selected' pictures for home-loving people; or

"Maintain a special young people's entertainment with 'selected' pictures once each week, making use of the public school, the teachers, and the young people; or

"Whenever they come to town, indorse 'selected' pictures for adults, the family or young people.

"Work consistently on town-wide plans to build up paid audiences in the theatres.

"Arrange with the exhibitor to have industrial, educational or Government pictures for older school children in the theatre.

"Get the newspaper to publish photoplay guides of the 'selected' lists of the National Committee for Better Films each month for the assistance of the townspeople.

"Introduce into the newspaper regularly indorsements of 'good' films a few days before they are shown in the theatre.

"Subscribe for the 'list of selected pictures' furnished by the National Committee for Better Films.

"Use 'Film Progress' for new and authoritative information of successful plans and of workers elsewhere.

"Affiliate with the National Committee.

"In all your work—COOPERATE WITH YOUR EXHIBITOR!"

Seaside, Oregon, boasts of a motion picture theatre without a box office.

B. J. Callahan remodelled his theatre front, tore out the ticket seller's cage and installed a ticket box so that persons could drop into it whatever money they thought the picture was worth on their way out.

Mr. Callahan reports his innovation to be a successful one.

"Why did I start? Because I had a decided slump in business last fall. I was losing money by keeping open after the summer tourist season slowed down. I hated to close for the winter. I liked the people and had confidence in them.

"I am now making more money than I did with the regular admission charge. People pay for what they get. When we show a poor picture the receipts fall down. When a good picture is shown the receipts double."

The Chicago Evening American published a color page in its Saturday, April 8th, edition called "A Little Journey

Through Chicago's Motion Picture Colony." Through illustrations and texts, it tells an interesting story of the film district from which come the many pictures people of the city see each day. Reprints have been sent to local exhibitors to be put in their theatre lobbies.

Such a large crowd gathered at the Ritz-Carlton last week to view the Selznick picture, "Reported Missing," with Owen Moore, that two exhibitions of the film were made necessary. "Reported Missing" received many rounds of applause. It is a rattling comedy drama with many novel twists, excellent sub-titles—in short, it is sure-fire entertainment. And that is just what is wanted today.

Much criticism of the prologue has been printed in the past few months—principally perhaps at the instigation of those who see in the atmospheric stage number something detrimental to their own interests.

To those who believe the prologue does not belong in the motion picture theatre, invitation is extended to visit the New York Mark Strand this week, for a view of the number which Managing Director Joseph Plunkett is presenting for "Pay Day."

A set piece showing a brick wall in construction, a back drop depicting a group of factory buildings, that has been used before in a different combination of properties, the Mark Strand quartette costumed as masons—or bricklayers to be exact—the chorus song from "The Burgomaster" where they dug up Old Peter Stuyvesant—another old time quartette number, "I'm So Tired," and Mr. Plunkett has provided perhaps the most pleasing prologue to be presented on Broadway this season. Mr. Plunkett's prologue for "Pay Day" may be taken as a model by every exhibitor in the United States who has a stage ten feet deep.

One of the most remarkable stories of how an exhibitor's interest in civic affairs has been a luscious dividend for his theatre is recorded in the annals of Norwalk, O., where William Felder, manager of the Gilger theatre, holds sway. Some time ago Manager Felder took the lead in a demonstration against the messy appearance of the streets and the never ending fluttering of scraps of paper carelessly tossed on the most convenient flagstone.

As leader of the movement he was expected to demonstrate his principles in a practical way and he did by supplying huge garbage cans along the principal streets. It was a considerable investment for Felder and his theatre but it has paid a handsome bonus.

As recognition of his goodly offices, the city allowed him to use the sides of these receptacles for advertising his shows and they are the most effective advertising mediums within 15 miles of Norwalk. The city looks out for these cans now and their maintenance and the collection of waste matter thrown over them. But in recognition of his useful offices Felder is allowed to post his one sheets almost any place he pleased.

IN the cycle of years which has brought the photoplay forward as a medium of entertainment, it has already established its traditions insofar as interpretative expression is concerned—giving it a ranking quite comparable to the stage as it is seen today. The players identified with the old school of the spoken drama—players like Joseph Jefferson, who created "Rip Van Winkle" and portrayed it continuously until his death, Sol Smith Russell, John McCullough, Edwin Forrest, Edwin Booth, James A. Herne and others of note, were famous for giving expression to some role as to make it indelibly woven into their personalities.

The screen is furnishing its audiences with just such a school. This is not to say that these players are only capable of creating the character which has founded their popularity and which has merited this appreciation. It is because they interpret their individual roles with so much humanness, sincerity, feeling, depth of understanding, inspiration and enthusiasm which makes their success so conspicuous. As a result they continue to play their parts. Why put them to other tasks when they do one thing so excellently? As well ask a dressmaker to make a pair of riding breeches. She probably could do it but the design would not add to her reputation.

We have with us William S. Hart, who will continue to furnish the screen with his exceptional westerner until retirement or death calls a halt. We also present Theodore Roberts, who has built up a popularity based upon his unique studies of "dear old dad." There is Wallace Beery, whose services for villainous exploitation are always in demand. And Robert McKim. Charles Ray comes forward as the delineator of country youth and Chaplin for his distinctive figures. Mary Pickford has reached her position through a superlative skill in interpreting a living symbol of a Greuze. Her girlish study has never been excelled. The list grows, but Vera Gordon deserves to be ranked among those who are carving a niche for individuality of expression. Her portrayal of the mother has won her instant recognition as an actress supreme in her role. These are only a few. There are many others who are contributing cameo performances. And some day we intend to add their names to the gallery.

THE discriminating picturegoer who follows the screen in search of novelty and failing to find it remarks to his neighbor that there is nothing new under the sun is certain to recommend the Christie comedy, "Cold Feet," as an offering worthy of patronage. He may have remarked to himself that the photoplay has become standardized—that it follows an orthodox design, relying upon the ancient and accepted order of patterns catalogued as "Northwest Mounted," "Pollyanna," "Cinderella," "Kentucky Feud," et al. They come in endless varieties but the general scheme is discernible in the background.

Will Rogers has found amusement in breaking the conventions insofar as features are concerned. Now comes Al Christie with a comic twist of the Northwest Mounted formula. This scheme cannot be kept up indefinitely, but intruding here and there in the output it serves as an antidote. Happy is that audience that looks for a surprise and finds it. The comedy pictures are furnishing these surprises nowadays. Christie, Lloyd, Chaplin, Keaton and Cook, are concocting new ideas regularly. They are not content to follow groove. They mix up their assortment, cutting the corners of the plate when the occasion demands and putting the hop on their delivery.

Christie's fling at the Mounted is a gem of satire. His ambition to give as careful a production to this two-reeler as is found in the feature picture shows that the comedy expression has advanced by leaps and bounds. Time was when these efforts were conceived just for fillers. Now the companies are sent out on location.

"Cold Feet" generates as fine an atmosphere as will be found in the best snow feature on any library shelf. Awe-inspiring are these exteriors. Winter's white mantle covers the landscape in every direction. And it is waist deep. There is sincerity of effort behind these comedies. And it is being appreciated by audiences.

Quiet, very quiet at the M. P. T. O. of A. headquarters this week. General Manager Moeller left for Washington, D. C., on Wednesday to attend to some Convention preliminaries. Sidney Cohen scheduled to reach Washington also this week from Parkersburg, W. Va., where he has been attending state convention. "'Movie Chats' going great and demand bigger every day," reports General Manager Moeller. "Convention preparations progressing satisfactorily; will take about ten more days to complete the program of activities contemplated for the big gathering."

New Spirit of Confidence Outgrowth of T. O. C. C. Luncheon

Hays Declares for New Order; Walker Praises Industry's Head

A BIG step toward cohesive and cooperative effort on the part of every branch of the industry to bury all past differences and embark on a solid betterment program was made when, on April 12, Will H. Hays, as guest of honor at a luncheon of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, and Senator James J. Walker mutually agreed "there are no yesterdays."

Figuratively Producer and Distributor on one side shook friendly hands with the Exhibitor on the other. Literally Hays and Walker, representing their various organizations, were instrumental in giving birth to a new feeling of confidence and a new spirit of cooperative purpose between the branches of the industry.

The meeting was opened by William Brandt, retiring president of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce. In his third annual report, said Mr. Brandt, he had asked for harmony between the three main branches of the industry so as to successfully fight the enemies without the industry. When he attended the dinner given to Mr. Hays by the Motion Picture Directors' Association and after he had heard Mr. Hays announce his platform, he decided that at last the industry had a point of contact. After the dinner he saw Mr. Hays and said: "I believe in you; I believe that we can have cooperation through you."

Mr. Brandt then introduced Mr. Hays. Mr. Hays referred immediately to the mutual problems of the industry. "I am valuable," said Mr. Hays, "only when I have a cause—spelled with a capital C. I believe that I have such a cause now; I know that I have.

"It meant a great deal to me to accept this position. I had to burn my bridges behind me—and abandon my past activities and change the entire course of my life plans. A proposition was made to me by the Motion Pictures Producers and Distributors on December 8th, last. I considered the matter until January 14th—considered it very deeply. I then laid the proposition before President Harding. It may interest you to know that on this occasion the President made his first statement to the press in which he used the personal pronoun. He said in brief: 'If this arrangement works out as is contemplated I cannot refuse to let you go; it is too great an opportunity for helpful public service to be refused.'

"I thought at that time that this position had great opportunities for public good; now I know it.

"What I want to do—what we all want to do is to go deep into this great problem before us; to learn it from the very bottom; to make, from time to time, helpful and progressive suggestions all toward the main objective which was laid down in the incorporation papers of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association, namely to foster the common interest of all those engaged in the motion picture industry by attaining and maintaining the highest possible moral and artistic standards of motion picture production.

"The exhibitor owns the screen; therefore, all progress toward our common end must start with the exhibitor. It is a great work; it demands the best efforts of all of us."

Mr. Hays compared the past feverish activity of this industry to a gold rush in which each man tramples upon others in his rush toward the goal. That is human nature. But today this industry is stable. The time has come when it must work out its problems across the table just as every other industry does.

"I bring everything I have to this task," said Mr. Hays. "First of all, there must be a strong exhibitor organization; that organization must always remain separate and distinct from any other organization in the business. It is the wish of my association that your organization grows stronger and stronger.

"This industry has advanced too far to remain longer in a twilight zone; there must be nothing under the table. Everything that all of us can do together is thoroughly demanded if we are to achieve the ideals we now have before us. If I were to give you a text I would take two letters in your corporate name—C C stand for Chamber of Commerce; they also stand for confidence and cooperation. We must first have confidence. Confidence between the members of each of our organizations and then confidence between the organizations themselves, one toward another. Then we must establish confidence between the entire industry and the public. In that way we can achieve cooperation not only among ourselves but with the public.

"I want to state here," said Mr. Hays, "that in advocating, as I do earnestly, the development of the educational picture I do not mean that this development shall come in any way that will be competitive with the amusement business.

"Censorship is incidental only to our work; it is not the main objective. As a matter of fact, censorship was never mentioned in the negotiations between the Producers and Distributors and myself. It is true that it is within the purview of our work but, in my opinion, it would be one of our least troubles. This country is fundamentally against censorship. Censorship will fail because we intend to and we shall remove the cause of censorship. We want public favor and we will get it when we deserve it. We want also the appreciation of the investing public so that the banks in their loans to theatres and in other legitimate channels of the industry may look upon this industry as they look upon that of steel, the railroads, etc.

"We must also go along together in a commercial way. You cannot tell any man how he should conduct his private business but because our interests are identical and mutual we can and must work out our problems sympathetically and understandingly.

"We cannot any longer bluff and stall. If we do that it is little short of a crime on our part. On the other hand, if we are in earnest we are engaged in the greatest possible service to the public today.

"We cannot dodge our responsibility and it is a huge one. There are the children of the country to consider. We must meet the challenge of the public that they have the right sort of entertainment.

"To this complete end I pledge my people."

Senator James J. Walker, who came in while Mr. Hays was speaking, was called to the Speakers' table by Mr. Hays. "Senator Walker," said Mr. Hays, "I hope you have heard what I said. I want to pledge you to this task." Continuing, Mr. Hays said: "There are no yesterdays in this industry. We must go ahead now with confidence and cooperation."

Senator Walker paid high tribute to Mr. Hays' ability as an organizer. "We of the Democratic party," said Senator Walker, "have reason to know what that ability is. The most wonderful thing," he continued, "that has happened to this industry, in my opinion, is that a leader in the Cabinet of the United States should see fit to leave his portfolio and come to us.

"The exhibitors have been chasing cooperation and they have had to fight in order to get peace. That very fighting has brought about the appointment of Mr. Hays.

"You cannot fail," said Senator Walker, addressing Mr. Hays, "because you won't let yourself fail and you won't let this project fail.

"I believe that we are now witnessing the last scene in this fight for peace between the exhibitors on one hand and the producers and distributors on the other.

Censorship Bill Not Enacted in Mississippi

Legislature Adjourns Without Taking Action Despite Urging of Reformers

THE Mississippi Legislature adjourned last week without enacting the censorship bill which had been vigorously urged by the reformers in that state. This marks the last of the winter's crop of legislatures before which film censorship measures were pending, and the industry is breathing a sigh of relief while preparing to meet the summer campaign in those states in which the legislatures will convene during the warm months.

The contest in Mississippi was a hard one. The industry encountered a well organized campaign for legalized screen control. The censorship bill was passed by the Senate; it was reported unfavorably, however, by the educational committee of the Mississippi House of Representatives.

Senator Love, author of the measure, tried hard to get recognition from the Speaker of the House for Representative Fishel, but was unable to secure this at the closing hours of the session and the measure died on the calendar.

The campaign on behalf of the industry was conducted by a committee composed of E. V. Richards of the Saenger Amusement Company, officials of the Southern Enterprises, Inc., and the Censorship Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, of which Gabriel L. Hess is chairman.

Other states in which censorship legislation failed of passage during the legislative sessions this year were South Carolina and Kentucky.

Censorship was thoroughly "panned" at the annual convention of the Indiana Indorsers of Photoplays at Indianapolis, April 4 and 5. A number of notables in the industry attended. The indorsers are a body of clubwomen interested in better films, who follow the policy of publishing broadcast their indorsement of good films and ignoring entirely the bad. They are credited with having been one of the chief factors in the defeat of all censorship bills at the last session of the Indiana Legislature.

Mrs. M. E. Robbins, corresponding secretary of the indorsers, said that the women in it are more convinced than ever that censorship can never be a success. The evils of censorship were the exclusive topic of one luncheon during the convention.

W. D. McGuire of New York, executive secretary of the National Board of Review, who spoke on "What Is the Matter with the Movies?" said that there are two broad evils in the situation:

1—Producers have not generally recognized that a thousand-dollar star in a ten-dollar play will not satisfy the public.

2—Too many reformers cry state censorship without realizing that forty-eight sets of censors, each with their own ideas of what is proper for the public to see, would do more harm than good by "cutting and expurgating at will in order to prove to the tax-paying public that they are earning their salaries."

G. W. Erdmann, special representative for Associated Producers, spoke on "Indorement vs. Censorship," telling the indorsers that the eyes of the film world are upon them and their idea.

Mrs. Fred L. Pettijohn of Indianapolis was elected president.

Monte Blue and Eugene O'Brien were guests of the indorsers and made speeches at some of the sessions.

Reformers Win in Springfield Closing Fight

Sunday Movies Are Being Hotly Contested in Many Different Parts of the Country

FOR the second time within the last three months, the indifference of voters and motion picture patrons of Springfield, Mo., resulted in the reformers of that city defeating a Sunday opening ordinance last week. A few weeks prior to this election, at which the fate of the ordinance was decided, more than 70 per cent of the voters of Springfield signed a petition, circulated in behalf of exhibitors, favoring Sunday shows.

But, as in a similar case three months ago, Springfield's broader minded class of citizens took it for granted that Sunday shows would be restored without their aid at the polls, while the reform faction, composed mostly of women, backed by ministers, worked night and day, circulating propaganda against Sunday opening. The vote for the Sunday opening ordinance was 3,550, while 6,396 reformers did what they believed their "sacred" duty at the polls.

Incidentally with the Springfield defeat, the first national anti-blue law conference ever held in the United States will be in St. Louis June 23, 24 and 25, the selection being prompted by the realization of the anti-blue law officials that Missouri will be the center of a bitter legislative fight this fall by both the Lord's Day Alliance and the International Reform Bureau. Missouri exhibitors are planning a tie-up with the anti-blue law organization in effort to defeat the reforms.

H. G. Brunner, mayor of the city of Mansfield, Ohio, recently replied to a letter from the president of the local Ministers' association with regard to Lenten closing of picture houses. The Ministers' Association had petitioned the mayor for such a closing, pointng out that this should be done for both moral and legal reasons. The mayor in his reply called attention to the fact that many of the petitioners enjoyed Sunday autoing, fishing and other pleasures, which reflected no more on the morals than did the movie houses.

Combatting the legal argument the mayor wrote that the operation of street cars was illegal on Sundays, as well as the sale of newspapers, cigars, ice cream and candy, and that none of these laws was enforced.

Sunday shows now prevail in Carthage, N. Y., the common council of that village having just passed an ordinance which allowed the houses to open for the first time on Sunday, April 9. There will be both afternoon and evening shows on Sunday, running from 2 to 5 and from 8 to 11 p. m.

A sensational development occurred in Denver in the trial of Ole M. Nelson, manager of the Majestic theatre, Grand Junction, and William Bell, manager of the Crystal, for alleged violation of the Colorado statutes, regulating the opening of theatres on Sunday, when Judge Miller discharged Sheriff Ducray from further service, on the ground that the court was satisfied he had showed undue bias and prejudice in the selection of jurors for the trial.

The Judge's action was taken following the submission of evidence, by the exhibitors' attorney, R. H. Walker, that Ducray was a regular attendant at the meetings of the blue-law crowd and that his jurymen were drawn exclusively from their ranks.

The blue-law fanatics in Grand Junction have openly announced their intention to spend a considerable sum of money to win their case, and have engaged expensive legal talent, including a former member of the State Supreme Court bench, to act as associate counsel to the District Attorney.

Minnesota Queries Hays; May Named "Exhibitors' Month"

M.P.T.O. Hold Business-like Convention in Minneapolis, April 10

ONE hundred and fifty members of the Minnesota Motion Picture Theatre Owners, affiliated with the M. P. T. O. of A., gathered at the Hotel Radisson, Minneapolis, Monday, April 10th, for a three days' convention. The session was made notable by the business-like efficiency with which matters were conducted and real constructive work accomplished.

The convention came to an enthusiastic close Wednesday with the re-election by acclamation of President W. A. Steffes, Vice-President; Theo. L. Hayes, Secretary; Fred Larkin, Treasurer; A. A. Caplan and the entire executive committee, with the addition of Joseph Friedman and Louis Reimer.

Of outstanding importance was the determination of the convention to inaugurate an exhibitors' month during May and authorizing President Steffes and the officers of the association to complete arrangements with Universal Film Company, Minneapolis exchange, and with Hodkinson film corporation whereby the producers mentioned will turn over a substantial percentage of their gross receipts in the Minneapolis territory to the Theatre Owner's organization, the theatre men in return pledging themselves to play as many Universal, Educational and Hodkinson pictures as possible during the month.

It was also determined to submit a questionnaire to Will H. Hays, head of the newly organized producers' and distributors' association, in an effort to obtain enlightenment as to his true position and how he proposes to function. The theatre owners in the preamble to the questions, which follow, declare that they welcome him to a place in the industry as they would anyone else who wishes to bring about an improvement in the industry, but believe that the public should be enlightened as to what his intentions are and also as to the fact that the exhibitors had nothing to do with his entry into the industry. A copy of the resolution and questionnaire will be furnished to the press of the country. The questions are:

"1—Do you represent the producer, and the exhibitor, or the producer alone?

"2—Do you intend to make an effort to bring about a curtailment of picture production?

"3—Do you intend to make an effort to eliminate extravagant competition on the part of the producers in the bidding for stars and the curtailment of waste that reflect greater rentals for exhibitors?

"4—Why have you so long deferred a public statement setting forth your position as related to the exhibitor?

"5—Do you represent all recognized producers? If not, what percentage and what companies do you represent?

"6—Do you propose to function for the producers as a whole or for a selected few?

"7—What constructive measure have you in mind to stabilize production, distribution and the industry?

"8—Have you the authority to relieve motion picture theatre owners from showing alleged objectionable pictures for which they have innocently contracted?

"9—Do you intend to cooperate with the national exhibitors' organization—the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America—in a united movement to improve conditions and bring about advancement of the industry?"

A telegram from Mr. Hays was received on the last day of the convention offering his best wishes and expressing the hope for complete confidence and fullest cooperation between all branches of the industry.

The encroachment of churches, schools and lodges on the field occupied by motion picture theatres had so alarmed Minnesota exhibitors that it was felt immediate and drastic steps must be taken to combat this menace if many theatres are to be saved. At request of the convention the Minneapolis exchange managers came on the floor in a body and after a full discussion were requested to refuse pictures to all but licensed picture theatres. One after another the exchange managers expressed themselves as personally favoring such policy. They, however, explained that it would be necessary to secure the approval of their home officers before taking final action. They are to report to the executive officers of the association as soon as possible.

President Steffes in his annual address attacked the present inequitable arrangement in the industry and pointing out the serious straits in which many theatres now are placed declared that the question of reduced film rentals is the most serious with which it is confronted. He predicted attempts to still further raise the price on pictures after July 1st and called on the exhibitors for aggressive action to prevent this. He made a savage attack on the recent appointment of R. C. Seery, of Chicago, as district manager of First National and brought the statement from Mr. Rubin, of Rubin and Finkelstein, that high handed methods would not be tolerated from Mr. Seery and that his appointment would not last if he did not give exhibitors fair treatment.

Following the final adjournment on Wednesday evening, after a session lasting from 11 A. M. to 7 P. M. without an intermission, an amateur show in which many exchange men and others connected with the industry participated, was staged at the Lyric theatre, proceeds being for the benefit of the organization.

All sessions were marked by a full and free discussion of various problems and much valuable information was gained by those at the meeting from this interchange of thought.

Immediately following adjournment, President Steffes left for Washington, where he is scheduled to confer with officers of the national organization on Friday morning.

Industry's Factions in Harmonious Spirit

"The exhibitor wants to cooperate. I know him well throughout this country and he is a man of intelligence, courage and determination. He wanted cooperation when business was good and he particularly wants it today. Before this he has had no Board of Appeal, no court to go to. He feels now that in Mr. Hays he has the right man in the right place for this purpose.

"The exhibitor expects a lot from you, Mr. Hays; he also knows that he must come to you with clean hands. He isn't going to think of the past, he is going to cooperate for the future.

"Censorship can be licked," said Senator Walker, "because it isn't honest. Those who wanted censorship in New York State have now got it. Having it in their hands and having full power why do they now find it necessary to keep children away from the theatres—why particularly, in the teeming East Side of New York where the theatre is most needed."

Marcus Loew made a ringing appeal for unity. To the exhibitors he said:

"Make Jimmy Walker in the exhibiting field what General Hays has been made in producing-distributing field. Each one of you should see, in Washington, that Walker does not leave you. See that he gets compensation for his services. I know he has not been paid by the national organization what he should have received.

"For God's sake, don't let Jimmy Walker leave you."

Cornelius N. Bliss made a brief address and the meeting was closed by President Landau of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce.

British Leaders All Welcome First National

Ralph Pugh Outlines New Organization Policies at London Inaugural Dinner

WITH the leaders of the British motion picture world as its guests, Associated First National Pictures, Ltd., gave an inaugural dinner in London at Prince's restaurant, Piccadilly, last month, at which the aims and policies of the new organization were outlined to the assemblage by Ralph Pugh, presiding officer of the dinner, and managing director of the company.

Such prominent film men graced the board as Sir William Jury, Colonel H. A. Browne, Colonel A. C. Bromhead of Gaumont's, Walter Wanger, J. Stuart Blackton, George Pearson, George Smith of Goldwyn, Ltd., Brooke Wilkinson of the British Board of Censors. The guests of honor were Sir William Jury, Sir Harry Brittain, M. P., Sir Charles Higham, M. P,. and Sir William Waterlow.

Other guests included G. Ball, H. J. Boam, Frank Hill, H. Hibbert, T. France, E. C. Peall, Castleton Knight, R. A. Thompson Mark Wolfe, J. Sheffield, C. Barton, W. S. Scott, T. A. Welsh, F. R. Goodwin, C. Topham, George Smith, A. Tilney J. Dart, F. Norman-Wright, R. Davis, J. R. Stephens, H. Pontefract, P. A. Walton, Col. H. A. Browne, C. A. Cohen, P. Phillipson, L. Denham, Barron Hargreaves, T. Herbert Kaye, E. W. Fredman, J. Reis, D. E. Roberts, R. C. Fielder, Charles Everett, S. F. Ditcham, R. C. Bromhead, Henry De Solla, J. W. Perry, W. Blake, Frank Smith, Low Warren, C. A. Kelley, E. E. Blake, of the Eastman Company, Capt. Davis, W. Thompson, A. J. Gale, A. S. Croughton.

Cable messages of goodwill were received during the evening from Norma and Constance Talmadge, Marshall Neilan, J. Schenck, Katherine MacDonald, B. P. Schulberg, and Louis B. Mayer.

Chairman Ralph Pugh, in his opening remarks, said: "We have invited members of every section of the industry because we realize that the support of everyone is not only desirable but necessary and although time is pressing I ask you to bear with me for two or three minutes while I explain to you the functions of the Associated First National Pictures of America.

"It is a combination of a number of exhibitors and an organization through which they produce their own pictures and distribute them to themselves. This organization has grown in the space of four years from 25 members to 3,500 on the recommendation of one exhibitor to another. Whether such an organization is possible in this country is a matter for time to prove. I personally am of strong belief that ultimately such a organization will exist in the United Kingdom.

"There are two characteristics which the First National Circuit of America have to their credit. They do not profess to be able to take all their requirements from their own organization, but leave themselves free to augment them from whatever source they can. The producers are also free to dispose of their pictures elsewhere if they cannot come to terms with the Exhibitors' Circuit.

"The reasons why Associated First National are able to promise that they will carry on, in conjunction with fellow members of the industry, work recently commenced, with the object of improving trade conditions, are these: We declare firstly that all pictures will bear the Censor's certificate at trade shows. Secondly, we do not propose to take a single booking until the picture has been trade shown. Thirdly, we believe in booking every picture on its merits. This is a policy which follows that already approved of by every section of the trade."

Theatre Owners to Ban "Leech" Pictures

ONE of the most important subjects taken up for consideration at the meeting of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce last Tuesday, was a communication from Thomas H. Ince, asking the co-operation of that organization to eliminate the unfair competition of "leech" pictures.

Mr. Ince's communication resulted in a resolution being unanimously passed, which provides for a very drastic regulation, appointing a committee of three, whose purpose it shall be to receive complaints against "leech" pictures that are resurrected because of the popularity of a new production of a similar title.

Upon receiving complaints, this committee will immediately make proper investigation and having found the complaint justified, will issue a sweeping order to prohibit the seven hundred theatre members of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, from showing the picture in question.

West Virginia Theatre Owners Convention Pledges Support to Hays

MOTION picture theatre owners of the State of West Virginia at a meeting held Wednesday at Parkersburg went on record in a resoultion endorsing Will H. Hays, and offering their co-operation to him, as well as expressing the hope that this union of forces would be effective in setting aside many of the abuses now within the industry.

The meeting was an unusally interesting one, with addresses being made by Sidney S. Cohen, national president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; M. J. O'Toole, chairman of the Public Service Committee, and others.

Fayette Smoot of Parkersburg presided at the session and made an interesting report of the work of the last year. He urged all those present to attend the Washington convention next month. He also reviewed the successful efforts of the West Virginia Theatre Owners in preventing the enactment of a censorship measure in West Virginia.

National President Cohen urged the need for co-operation of all branches of the industry in an effort to meet the moves of those who persist in attacking the business. He also called special attention to the coming Washington convention and said that moves would be made there which would materially advance the theatre owners and elevate and dignify all divisions of the industry.

O'Toole's address dealt with legislative affairs and public service. He told of the work being done along these lines in the national Congress and the different States.

E. H. Tipton of Charleston was elected state president, and J. P. McGrew, executive secretary.

Miss Bert Parker has established offices in the State Building, New York City, where she will continue to buy for the foreign market. Miss Parker is well known in the motion picture industry.

Cohen Predicts Harmony; Condemns National Advertising

M.P.T.O.A. Leader Tells Advertisers Press Books Aid Big Fellow Only

MIRRORING the general get-together drift of the various branches of the industry, Sydney S. Cohen's address before the A. M. P. A. on April 6 has assumed added significance in that the national president of the M. P. T. O. A. predicted the co-operative, business like attitude on the part of the various factions of the business which became a fact a few days later when Will H. Hays and Senator James J. Walker made their causes one toward a common goal of harmony.

Stating that it was time all branches of the industry began working together, and that soon all would be sitting at the same table threshing out differences and working toward the same ends, Mr. Cohen, properly considered the official mouthpiece of the state and national M. P. T. O. organizations, indicated that much of the acknowledged misunderstandings between producer and exhibitor were in a fair way to be wiped out. His hearers took his words to mean that the M. P. T. O. A. stands ready to cooperate with Will Hays and the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

In the course of his address Mr. Cohen spoke on matters in which the A. M. P. A. is directly interested. In a friendly way he advised his hearers that there was room for improvement in their advertising methods. Mr. Cohen criticised the gaudy press book and expressed the belief that most press books did not fulfil their legitimate mission. He told the A. M. P. A. that what the exhibitor wants is exploitation aids minus adjectives and bunk, and that anything that did not give the exhibitor this sort of help was a waste of money. Going further on the subject of press books, Mr. Cohen stated that in his opinion they were too largely compiled for the use of the first run exhibitor who really was less in need of assistance than his brother of the smaller towns, since most big theatres have their own publicity departments and all the facilities with which to work in properly presenting their attractions to the public.

He was especially outspoken in criticism of the growing practice of producers to go in for national advertising, advancing the belief that none of the national mediums were of real value to the exhibitor in selling any particular picture to the public and explained his reasons for such deductions. The only thing which Mr. Cohen would concede to national advertising was the probability that it sold trade marks to the exhibitor to a more or less degree.

Instead of spending money on national advertising, he recommended that the producers cooperate with the newspapers and the exhibitors on local displays. He also advised that exhibitors cooperate and as an example of the excellent results to be obtained by such action cited the experience of a number of Bronx, New York, theatres, where Mr. Cohen has several houses, in connection with the day and date showings of "Ten Nights in a Barroom."

Since this stunt had been put over, which had been without producer aid, Mr. Cohen stated, that a number of companies had offered to go in with the Bronx exhibitors on similar campaigns. He thought this idea would soon be a general policy.

The trade papers came in for some attention from Mr. Cohen. After complimenting the press for their editorial policies, he then stated that in his opinion some of the papers had in the past devoted too much time and space to the politics of the industry and too little to their true function, that of giving information and service to the trade.

Waste and extravagance in the industry was condemned by the exhibitor leader in no uncertain terms. "The entire industry is lopsided," said Mr. Cohen. "It is geared too high; there is too much waste; too much extravagance."

His address consumed the better part of an hour and covered a number of angles of particular interest to his audience. He called the A. M. P. A. the brains of the industry and expressed the opinion that their remuneration, however much it was, was too little.

His reference to some of the producers, however, was not so complimentary. As an example of what he termed "bunk" in connection with the selling of pictures he cited the practice of sending extravagant telegrams to exhibitors in the hope of impressing someone of the superlative value of a feature.

Broadway runs come in for a panning at Mr. Cohen's hands. He stated that pictures showing a lockout from any theatre on Broadway, "didn't mean anything."

After the completion of his talk, the assembled A. M. P. A.'s and their guest informally discussed advertising and the particular parts of Mr. Cohen's address that had had direct reference to their daily work, at some length.

It was generally agreed that the day had been a most profitable one for the whole industry.

Serious Tariff Menace Likely Avoided

THE decision by the Senate Finance Committee to make no change in the existing rate of duty on finished foreign motion pictures removes a danger which would have been disastrous to the motion picture industry in this country.

News from Washington that the present duty on foreign pictures will remain has been enthusiastically received by the producers and distributors, who have cooperated with Chairman Saul E. Rogers of the special Taxation Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in opposing the 30 per cent. ad varolem duty originally provided for in the Fordney Bill, which passed the House of Representatives, but has been now turned down by the Senate Finance Committee.

There is little doubt in Washington that the action of the Senate Finance Committee will be affirmed by the Senate and by the Finance Committee, composed of representatives of both the Senate and the House.

Canadian Distributors in Amalgamation

Announcement was made at Montreal, Quebec, on April 8, that Specialty Film Import, Limited, is to be amalgamated with Regal Films, Limited, Toronto, the large Canadian film distributing organization. The latter has submitted a contract agreement to take over the Specialty company, it is stated, the deal involving a sum in the neighborhood of $200,000. It is also intimated that other film exchanges in Canada are to be absorbed by Regal Films, Limited.

Von Stroheim Preparing New Production

After a surcease of several months from the preparation and development of "Foolish Wives," Erich von Stroheim has determined upon a new story of his own and is rapidly putting it into form at Universal City.

This composition has been the crystallization of several months of thought and planning, and so far he is unwilling to give out anything in regard to the character or nature of the story. He will start shooting within a month.

Morris Honored Upon Sailing

Sam E. Morris, who as recently announced becomes president of Select Pictures, Inc., with headquarters in England, was tendered a dinner April 8 by New York friends before his departure for abroad with his wife and son. There were about 75 present, including officials of Selznick. Morris was presented with a gold pen knife.

Wire Briefs from Coast

HIRAM ABRAMS, Denis O'Brien; H. T. Banzhoff, D. W. Griffith's attorney; Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, Mary and Charlotte Pickford, the Board of Directors of United Artists, are holding their annual meeting this week. The present officers of the organization are expected to be re-elected.

Business conferences principally respecting the Oriental sales plan will take up most of the time at the sessions.

Sol Lesser and his associates have concluded negotiations for Elinor Glyn to write a story of life in Hollywood, under the title "The Eyes of Truth." Monte Katterjohn will write the screen play for the same production within a month, for release as a special.

Charley Christie is leaving for New York this week to complete arrangements for Al Christie's European trip of eight weeks. The latter will sail May 13. Al will be accompanied by Harry Edwards, production manager, and Frank R. Conklin of the scenario staff.

The Screen Writers' Guild has elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Frank E. Woods; vice-president, Marion Fairfax; secretary, Lucien Hubbard; treasurer, Elmer Harris. Executive Board: Thompson Buchanan, Waldemar Young, Eugene Presbrey, Jeanie MacPherson, Mary O'Connor, Al Cohn and Milton Schwartz. Council: William C. De Mille, Charles Chaplin, Rupert Hughes, June Mathis, Peter B. Kyne, Jeanie MacPherson, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Perley Poore, Sheehan Buelah, Marie Dix and Bert Levino.

N. Y. Educational Film Bill Signing Due Soon

The New York State Motion Picture Censorship Commission's bill, commonly referred to at the State Capitol as the Lusk-Clayton bill, is still in the hands of Governor Miller, but will probably be signed this week.

The bill is intended to assist the commission in determining what constitutes an educational film and the attitude which the commission will take in reference to the fee charged for licensing. The Governor has until April 17 to act on all thirty-day measures.

Smaller N. Y. Houses Start Reduced Prices

Some of the motion picture theatres in New York state are starting to reduce admission prices, believing that they will be the gainers in the long run.

Fred P. Elliott, owner of the Clinton Square Theatre in Albany, N. Y., has started the ball rolling in his city with 20-cent top prices for the evening shows, a reduction of seven cents per person.

In Watertown, N. Y., the Olympic Theatre, one of the "Nate" Robbins group, playing all big features, will reduce prices from 33 cents to 22 cents on April 17.

Neilan Plans a Vacation Before Resuming

Much speculation and many rumors have been printed concerning Marshall Neilan's future activities, now that he is working on "Her Man," his last production under his present contract with Associated First National Pictures.

In a statement issued to the trade papers, Neilan said: "Upon completion of 'Her Man,' I plan to take a vacation. I may make a trip to Europe, but not to produce, as has been reported. It has been my desire to go abroad for years, and if I can find the time to do this before starting on future productions I shall do so.

"With 'Fools First' finished and 'Her Man' nearing completion, we are well ahead of our producing schedule, so that it will be possible to take my first vacation since the inauguration of my producing company and the picturization of 'The River's End,' my initial independent production."

Eight New Companies Launched in N. Y.

Eight motion picture companies incorporated in New York state during the past week, according to the papers filed in the Secretary of State's office. These companies reveal a total capitalization of $93,000. With one exception, all of them will locate in the metropolis. The new concerns include the following.

Frederick Producing Co., Inc., $10,000, Albert H. Woods, Martin Herman and M. A. Kohn, New York; Douglas Motion Picture Corporation, $60,000, M. D. Kendall, Guy D. Russell, Mable Strauss Jones, New York; Prairie Pictures, Inc., $7,000, N. M. Birk, New York; L. L. Mayer, L. K. Mayer, Brooklyn; Dependable Pictures Corporation, $5,000, Morris and Norman E. Kohn, Joseph Brandt, New York; Atlantic Enterprises, $500, T. Earl Larsen, H. G. Kosch and Max Cohen, New York; Sunset Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., $5,000, C. E. Isaacs, Alfred Worshop and William N. Hechheimer, New York; Brooks Productions, $5,000, Walter Brooks, A. F. Scibilia, George A. McCormick, New York; Affiliated Theatres of Olean, $500, Charles X. Bordonaro, Donald M. Dusenbury, Olean; Nikitas Dipson, Batavia.

Churches Losing Ground in Film Showings

Springfield, Ill., motion picture exhibitors are slowly winning in their fight against the showing of free motion pictures in the churches of the city. The churches are having a difficult time in getting suitable photoplays, and it looks as though they will be compelled to abandon their showings.

Burns Wins Promotion in Power Company

Edward Earl, president of the Nicholas Power Company, announces that at the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Nicholas Power Company, held April 4, S. R. Burns was elected a director of the company, and at a subsequent meeting held the same day he was elected secretary. Burns has been with the company seven years.

New Distributing Unit Open in Canada

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Walter E. Greene and F. B. Warren of the formation and immediate operation of a powerful five-office distributing company in the Dominion of Canada under the name of the Canadian Releasing Corporation, Limited, headed by J. P. O'Loghlin, formerly general manager of Regal Films, Ltd., and more recently vice president and director of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd. (the Canadian Pathe).

International Film Service Co.'s production, "Sisters," has been selected as the first production for release in Canada.

Evidence of the activity of the American Releasing Corporation in extending its sales organization beyond the borders of North America is found in the announcement of World-Wide Pictures as the marketing medium and company brand name or trade-mark for the unification of all of the productions released by American in this country when they are introduced into all other countries except the Dominion of Canada—where Canadian Releasing Corporation has been organized by J. P. O'Loghlin and associates.

Arbuckle Acquitted on Third Trial

After but a few minutes' deliberation, the jury trying Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle on a charge of manslaughter growing out of the death of Virginia Rappe, actress, in the comedian's apartment in the St. Francis Hotel, San Francisco, returned a verdict of "not guilty" on Wednesday, April 12.

No ballot was necessary, it is understood, the eight men and four women comprising the jury rendering their decision after retiring to the jury room, by a rising vote.

The comedian, according to newspaper reports, was almost overcome with joy. After thanking the jurors, he retired to his residence and with his wife, known to the screen as Minta Durfee, his counsel and a few close friends, dined and planned his future moves.

Newspaper reports quote Arbuckle as stating he would probably direct some pictures before again returning to the screen as a star. He is expected to return to Los Angeles within a few days.

J. C. Cutting Is Appointed Editor of Selznick News

David O. Selznick, vice-president of Selznick Pictures Corporation, has appointed J. C. Cutting to succeed Lewis Allen Browne as editor of Selznick News. Mr. Cutting will also assume some of the duties Tamar Lane fulfilled in the Selznick publicity department, as Mr. Lane has gone to Hollywood in the capacity of studio publicist for Myron Selznick.

Mr. Cutting received his early newspaper training in Boston and also on the New York Herald. Later he became associated with the Press Publishing Company—the New York World.

Huge Amalgamation on West Coast Joins R-C and United Facilities

Transaction the Largest of Kind in History of Motion Pictures

THE most tremendous transaction of its kind in the history of the motion picture industry was concluded in Hollywood Tuesday after a week of negotiation, when the R-C Pictures Corporation added to its already vast scenic ramifications the entire material production resources of the adjoining property, the United Studios, Inc.

This deal gives to the R-C organization access to the grounds of the United Studio for the staging of its future productions and opens to it every facility of that great plant which has a direct bearing on the staging of a picture play. It represents an amalgamation of resources which is conservatively placed at $12,000,000.

By this pooling of ground space and resources the domain of the R-C stronghold is extended to a total of fifty-six acres, or twenty-two average city blocks, and its assets in stock sets and units, in furniture and other so-called "props," of life on the screen, and in costumes are multiplied at least tenfold.

P. A. Powers, the new controlling factor in the affairs of the Robertson-Cole organization, now known as the R-C Pictures Corporation, engineered the deal after daily conferences for the past week with M. C. Levee, president of the United Studios. ...

Work will commence in the course of the week on a big portal to connect the two plants, which in combination have frontage of 1,000 feet on Gower Street and 1,560 on Melrose Avenue.

"No more compact and complete motion picture studio than ours is to be found anywhere," said Mr. Powers, in commenting on the deal, "yet I foresee such considerable increase in our activities in the immediate future that expansion and amplification of our plant and its resources cannot be avoided. We will now be able to accommodate twenty and more producing units where in the past a half dozen companies would have strained our facilities."

The United Studios until recently known as Brunton's, have a ground space of forty acres and are reputed to possess the most extensive working equipment in the industry. R-C's acreage runs to slightly over sixteen. It is the most recent studio to be erected in the world's film capital and is called a model of convenience and beauty. Both plants are famous for their floriculture as well.

An idea of the magnitude of the deal is gained when figures representing the new assets just acquired by R-C are marshalled for inspection. Stock sets and units running into the hundreds are placed at the disposal of the Powers institution. This, as to modern American interiors and exteriors, includes everything for a screen visualization of church, club, court, hotel, homes, hovels, schools, office, etc. Then there are foreign sets, including streets of cosmopolitan centers which carry one to Paris, Geneva, Sebastapol, Tokio, Honolulu and Shanghai, and rustic scenes that include a Russian village such as one might find on the Volga or dotting the steppes as they sweep toward the Ural mountains.

In the array of set pieces one finds all ramifications of architecture, including chateau, cottages, mansions, palaces, fortifications, etc.

Then there are storerooms bewildering in their multiplicity of units, such as stained glass windows, pilasters, columns, fireplaces, niches, doors, windows and window seats, representing for the most part the output of the mills and finishing shops on the grounds. An estimate places these units at 350.

Of furniture, there are innumerable character pieces of every period. Tables of every description alone are sufficient to fill a floor in a big furniture house. Nine hundred chairs of every type, including such patterns as Italian, Renaissance, Louis XIV, Jacobean, Louis Quinze, Hepplewhite, Sheraton, Pompeiian, Span' Umbrian, English and Gothic, are made available for R-C productions.

Possibilities in interior embellishment are enhanced through access to the United's drapery department, which inventories $50,000 alone in valences, lambrequins, curtains, portieres and the like.

This phase of stagecraft will find further latitude in resort to the famous United collection of oriental rugs, and the accessibility of $25,000 in lighting fixtures, including every means of illumination.

The big staff shop on the United lot, with its artists and sculptors, where statues, busts, friezes, pillars and other work counterfeiting concrete and stone is modelled in plaster, is another ramification of the enlarged prop department.

Formal and informal gardens, long the pride of the big sister studio of R-C, with their garden seats, rustic and marble benches, fountains and ponds and arboreal retreats, will provide R-C productions with a greater variety of romantic backgrounds, while the big smithy on that lot will double the present R-C capacity for iron work so essential in the erection of big sets.

The immense Brunton water tank, which is in the shape of a T and has a capacity of 680,000 gallons, is included in the deal.

Aquamarine photography is another of the many-sided uses to which this artificial lake can be put, and by mechanical manipulation a transition from duck pond to ocean waves is possible on short notice.

The United storm, rain, lightning and wind making equipment also will reinforce the R-C apparatus of that description.

Another rich vein tapped by R-C in its acquisition of effects is a wardrobe sufficient to clothe a thousand people at one time.

A bizarre nucleus of this collection of costumes, declared easily to be the most comprehensive owned by a studio, is R-C's famous "Kismet" collection, which includes the sartorial equipment of the original stage production with Otis Skinner, after which the ampler screen wardrobe was modelled. There are baskets brimming with turbans, hampers of real Turkish slippers with the scimiterlike points; sashes, Arabian swords, batik silk tunics, harem skirts and pantaloons, a chest full of strings of oriental beads and other ornamentation—1,800 pieces in all, which are sufficient to clothe 350 people and represent an investment of $18,000.

Further enriching this atelier of far-flung modes is the special cabinet of Pauline Frederick's wardrobe, which remains as a heritage to the R-C organization with the return of that star to the speaking stage.

Saultstemarie Company Asks News Support

THE following telegram to Motion Picture News from F. J. Buchanan, secretary - treasurer of Saultstemarie Films, Ltd., of Sault Ste Marie, Ontario, is self-explanatory:

"Saultstemarie Films, Ltd., by unanimous vote, requests Motion Picture News to officially represent them to the trade. This company intends producing pictures with a purpose; stories of struggle and triumph. The first production, 'The Rapids,' is a vital endeavor of a practical dreamer brought to a triumphant conclusion, and tempered by love of a splendid type of womanhood.

"The damaging effect Rudyard Kipling's poem, 'Our Lady of the Snows,' which gave to the world a false impression of Canada's verdant beauty, will be overcome by such Summer-time productions, as 'The Rapids' and others of like nature to follow.

"May we be sure of your splendid cooperation in the mingling of truth with dramatic entertainment in order that no false motives may go before the picture fans of the world."

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE.

Louis Jacobs, formerly with New York's Universal exchange, and more recently manager of Universal's Vancouver exchange, has been rewarded for his excellent work by his appointment as one of the staff of "Foolish Wives" special sales force and has been spending several days with Ralph Proctor preparing himself for work on this big picture in the St. Louis district. Mr. Proctor reports that "Foolish Wives" will open at the Pantheon, Senate and Tivoli for a week's run on April 16th and will be seen the following week in thirty Chicago theatres and the week after that in thirty-four. This feature has now been booked into practically all key cities in the territory, and indications are that its booking record will be phenomenal.

Charles L. Glett has arrived at the offices of W. W. Hodkinson in Chicago to take over his duties as special representative of Kempson Pictures Corporation in Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. Reissues of many of the popular successes of Alice Brady, Clara Kimball Young, Norma and Constance Talmadge, Elaine Hammerstein, and Robert Warwick will be distributed by the Kempson organization. Mr. Glett states that all prints will be new, and a complete line of paper and lobby material will also be furnished. The Hodkinson exchange will handle the physical distribution of these releases for Kempson Pictures.

Wid Gunning was a Chicago visitor last week, making his headquarters at Wid Gunning, Inc., Exchange.

The recent refusal of Police Chief Fitzmorris to grant a permit for the exhibition of "Dregs of the City," a picture depicting the pitfalls which await a young girl in Chicago, and featuring Police Woman Alice Clement, has been upheld by the Appellate Court. A. L. Gottlieb, owner of the picture, had instituted court action, following the ruling of the police chief, in the Circuit Court, which ruled that the picture might be shown. The case then went to the Appellate Court where the decision reversed the ruling of the lower court.

Howard G. Phinney, for several years a commercial salesman, is a new recruit to the motion picture business, having joined Universal's Chicago exchange sales staff.

The Empress at Decatur, Illinois, has inaugurated a motion picture policy and will offer its program at pre-war prices; children ten cents and adults eighteen cents. This house, which is operated by Hyman and Levy, had been run as a vaudeville theatre for many years. Paramount and First National features will be among those shown.

Herman Stern, Universal's district manager, with headquarters in Chicago, is on a trip to Kansas City and St. Louis exchanges. George Levine, Universal's Milwaukee manager, spent a couple of days in conference with Manager Stern before the latter left Chicago.

Manager Clyde Eckhardt, of Fox Film Corporation, has returned after a flying trip to New York and this week left for Minneapolis where he will visit Manager Tarbell of that exchange, and hold a sales conference with the staff.

It is reported that Elgin, Illinois, is to have another motion picture house, A. C. Muntz and Charles L. Garrison having purchased a site on which a two thousand seat house will be erected.

Maurice Hellman, who recently took over the former Reelcraft Exchanges in Chicago, Milwaukee and Wisconsin, as announced in these columns, states that there is no connection between the present company and the former Reelcraft Pictures Corporation. The holding company for the new Reelcraft Distribution Corporation is H. & S. Pictures, Inc., and Samuel Spitzer, treasurer, and J. Spitzer, secretary, are associated with Mr. Hellman, who is president and general manager in the H. & S. Company. J. C. Parish will have charge of the Reelcraft branch, located at 109 West Maryland, Indianapolis, and L. A. Anger will be Milwaukee manager with headquarters in the Toy Building. Henry Ellman and J. Cohen are members of Manager Hellman's Chicago sales staff. It is probable that within the next few months Mr. Hellman will open up four other exchanges in the territaory between Chicago and Pittsburgh.

District Manager R. C. Seery, of First National, is spending several days in Minneapolis, where he went on company business.

Louis Laemmle, who has been confined to his home for the last three weeks with a severe attack of neuritis, has been reported as very much better and it is hoped he will be able to be back at the office this week.

J. F. Lyons, laboratory technical expert for First National, is spending a fortnight at the Rothacker Chicago laboratory. He expects to go to the coast within the next few weeks. Lyons is an old timer in the film field; twelve years ago he went to work for Miles Brothers on 14th Street, New York. Then he was with the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company. He has been a First National man two years.

More than twenty thousand entrants submitted scenarios in the Chicago Daily News-Goldwyn Scenario Contest, which has been won by Winifred Kimball, of Apalachicola, Florida. The prize was ten thousand dollars and the title of the scenario "Broken Chains." Ten other writers won prizes of one thousand dollars each and twenty were awarded third prizes of five hundred dollars each. The winning scenario has been sent to Culver City, where the Goldwyn staff will prepare it for directors.

Dan Barton of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company and O. F. Spahr, general manager of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, manufacturers of the Motiograph projectors, were among the Chicagoans attending the Minnesota Motion Picture Theatre Owners Convention at Minneapolis this week.

J. Charles David, 2nd, advertising and publicity director of Arrow is in Chicago in connection with the exploitation of "Ten Nights in a Bar Room," which will have its premier showing here at Barbee's Loop theatre, opening Easter Sunday. This feature will open on the same day at the Alhambra in Toledo where John Lowell, the star, will make a personal appearance. Mr. David expects to remain in Chicago for two or three weeks to supervise the exploitation of the production in central west key centers.

Brunhild & Young Enterprises have removed to new quarters, and are now occupying offices on the second floor of 752 S. Wabash avenue. Julius Lamm, managing director, is in charge of these headquarters.

Dave Dubin is covering the principal towns throughout the state for Educational. He has been working in the city for some time past.

Manager Plough, of Robertson-Cole, has put Benny Edelman on his sales staff. Benny, who resigned from the local Goldwyn exchange to accept the new position will cover the key cities of the state for the R-C organization.

Lester Sturm, of the Fox organization, has been temporarily transferred to the Milwaukee office.

Manager Clyde Eckhardt, of Fox Film Corporation, has returned from Minneapolis, where he put on a sales drive. He brings word that our old friend, E. F. Tarbell, who is now manager of Fox's Minneapolis office, is recovering from a severe automobile accident, which kept him confined to his home for three weeks. Skidding of his automobile on a wet street was the cause of the accident, which almost proved fatal.

Joe Rhode, of Kenosha, president of the Wisconsin Motion Picture Theatre Owners, was a Chicago visitor this week. He reports his organization is very much interested in the theatre owners national convention, and that he will head a large delegation from Wisconsin, which will attend the Washington meeting.

The first print of Russell Productions, Inc., new feature, "Boomerang Justice," reached Chicago last week and was run off for W. D. Russell at the Rothacker Laboratory projection room. Mr. Russell, and one or two others who had the opportunity of seeing it, are more than pleased with this feature, which they declare is even a better picture than Russel's Production "Shadows of Conscience," which has proved a real box office success. Russell has assembled a splendid cast for "Boomerang Justice," which includes George Larkin, Virginia Warwick, Fritzi Ridgeway, Karl Silvera, Earl Metcalf, Al Ferguson and others equally well known.
niversary of the opening of Barbee's Loop theatre and Manager Barbee has booked "Smilin'

Next week will be the second an- Through," starring Norma Talmadge as the feature for this gala week, Miss Talmadge having been the first star to appear on the screen at Barbee's in "She Loves and She Lies," with which the house opened.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, arrived in Chicago last Saturday from the coast where he has been visiting Universal City and remained until Tuesday before continuing his journey to New York.

Clyde Elliot Enterprises has moved its offices to 808 South Wabash avenue, having taken space with the American Releasing Corporation.

Sales Manager Larsen of Russels Productions is making an extensive trip throughout eastern and south eastern territory in the interest of his concern's output. It is understood that the Russels will have some important new feature pictures ready for release at an early date.

Activities of Exchange Managers, Exhibitors, Salesmen and Others

Buffalo

THE big news of the week along Film Row was the resignation of A. W. Moses as manager of the R-C Pictures corporation exchange and the coming to Buffalo of Earl Kramer, formerly with Select at Albany, as his successor. Mr. Moses, however, did not remain long inactive, for at the end of the week M. A. Chase, district manager for Universal engaged his services. He will be sales representative in the Albany district for the present.

O. T. Schroeppel, one of the veterans of the local film business, who has been out of the industry for several weeks, has returned to Film Row as head of the booking department at the Fox exchange. Otto is well known to exhibitors in western New York. He was formerly with Universal, Vitagraph and Realart. He has been connected with General Theatres Corporation as manager of one of their theatres. Film men will be glad to hear that he is back in harness again. Branch Manager Charlie Johnston considers himself lucky to get Mr. Schroeppel and declares that it is another step toward making the office force 100 per cent efficient. The Fox exchange, by the way, is going to put up a new building opposite the Film Building in north Pearl Street. It will be a two-story structure. General offices, inspection and shipping departments will be on the ground floor while the office of District Manager Clayton P. Sheehan and the poster department will be on the second floor. It is expected to enter the new exchange about September 1.

Buffalo exchange men will be interested to know that Henry E. Wilkinson, formerly Buffalo Realart manager, is now special representative for Century Comedies. Henry, since leaving Buffalo, has been with Arthur S. Kane.

Sydney Samson has closed 35 subsequent runs on "School Days" in the city of Buffalo. The Regent and Piccadilly in Rochester have booked the production and are putting on big exploitation campaigns in connection with the feature. Work has started on the new Grand & Warner film exchange in Franklin Street, near the Warner Building. United Artists will share space with Grand & Warner. Mr. Samson announces that the new Amendola theatre in Niagara Falls will show all the Grand & Warner short subjects. Harris Lumberg is booking for this new house, which opens Saturday, April 15. Fred M. Zimmerman recently presented "School Days," at his Avondale theatre in North Tonawanda with a fine prologue and exploitation campaign.

Pen Sketches

A. R. Nininger

PRESIDENT ARTHUR S. KANE has just announced the appointment of A. R. Nininger to have charge of Associated Exhibitors important branch offices in Atlanta, Ga. Mr. Nininger is equipped for the duties of his new post by twenty-two years' successful experience in theatrical and motion picture work. The first ten years, beginning in 1900, were devoted to service for various dramatic and opera companies.

In 1910 Mr. Nininger entered the picture industry, and for a time operated theatres for Campbell & Winch with headquarters in El Paso, Tex. Later he went to San Antonio, where he opened the Wigwam theatre for the same firm. In 1912 Mr. Nininger went to Georgia and for two years operated theatres in that state.

Mr. Nininger's work in the distributing end of the business began in 1914, when he became a salesman for Pathe Exchange, Inc. After two and a half years with that company, he served successfully two years with Vitagraph, and one season with Fox, joining then the Consolidated Film Company in the handling of Universal Pictures. He remained with that firm until his appointment to the Atlanta office of Associated Exhibitors.

A. G. STOLTE, acting manager of the Des Moines theatre, Des Moines, Iowa, is one of the nine men selected by First National as winners of the biggest business during First National week. During the two weeks that he is being entertained by First National in California, in either June or August, and by the studios which make First National pictures, Mr. Stolte will be known as a "dollar a week" man, receiving that salary at the Des Moines office.

Mr. Stolte had twelve stunts on for First National week, one, a puzzle prize in which First National stars were cut up and pasted together again, run in cooperation with the Des Moines Evening Tribune. He was selected as the head man in his class of those managing theatres of 1,000 to 2,500 seating capacity.

A letter of greeting has been received from the Mayor of Los Angeles:

"Kindly receive these expressions of the pleasure of our city over the news of your proposed visit. The proverbial western hospitality is assured you on your arrival in Los Angeles."

Mr. Stolte plans to visit his mother in Seattle, Washington, while he is in the west.

George Williams, office manager at Niagara Pictures corporation, is planning a big screening party on "Mr. Pim Passes By," the next release of Second National Pictures, which his company is distributing in western New York. Ernest Fisher has returned from a very successful two weeks' trip to the Adirondack and southern Tier country.

Henry W. Kahn, Metro manager, honored the exhibitors of Syracuse and Rochester with his presence last week and the exhibitors in turn honored Henry with some fat contracts.

E. J. Hayes, First National manager, who is staging a "Clean Up" campaign, reports that the opening week of the drive tacked up the largest business in the history of the office.

A. V. Mack, Pathe pilot, announces that he will open the publicity drive on "Go Get 'Em Hutch," with a kite flying contest which will be open to all boys 15 years of age and under. Jim Bailey has booked this serial for first run at Keith's theatre. As proof that the serial is coming into its own, Mr. Mack announces that all records on this type of picture were smashed when 60 contracts on serials were closed last week. Al Teschmacher, booker, and Jack Thomson, Association Exhibitors' representative, have both purchased homes in Buffalo. Business must be approaching normalcy. J. E. Storey, general representative for Pathe has been in Buffalo conferring with Mr. Mack about equipment for the new local office at 505-509 Pearl Street. Mr. Storey left Buffalo for Detroit. Basil Brady is now talking about a new "short subject." It's a baby girl and weighs ten pounds. Mr. Mack is planning to give a radio address on motion pictures from the broadcasting station in the McCarthy Bros. & Ford store. This should be good! Viola Peck, booking clerk, "the Tettrazini of Film Row," sang at Lowe's State last Sunday and was given an ovation.

W. L. Merrill has been succeeded at the local Wid Gunning office by Paul Barron, formerly manager of the Midland theatre, Syracuse. Mr. Barron is well known in Buffalo, having been connected with Select and other exchanges. Mr. Merrill has returned to New York.

Gerald M. Farley has succeeded Joe Daly as office manager at the Hodkinson exchange. Mr. Farley has been a member of the sales staff. Sales Manager Tom Brady and his pal Archie Moses motored to Rochester one day last week.

Harold Hughes has resigned as a member of the Goldwyn sales staff. This office has signed up a large number of its attractions at Shea's Hippodrome. Otto Siegel is working night and day "cleaning up" in the city.

Manager Anthony of Vitagraph was in Auburn last week. No he was not in prison. Just went down to meet exhibitors in the town and sign up "The Sheik's Wife."

First National Exchanges

WILLIAM J. HEENAN, manager of the Philadelphia First National exchange, was the guest of honor of the Philadelphia Exchangemen's Association at a dinner on the evening of March 17th at the Arcadia Cafe. It was one of the most exclusive affairs of the organization and every member except one was present. The absentee sent regrets from a sick bed.

Mr. Heenan was presented with a solid gold fountain pen by his fellow managers as a token of their regard.

E. R. Coffin, director of publicity of the Omaha First National exchange, effected an extraordinary tie-up with the First National Bank of Omaha in putting over First National Week. He obtained the consent of officials of the bank to put advertising matter for "Polly of the Follies" and "Penrod" in the windows of the institution, which is situated at the principal corner of the downtown section. Hand-painted easels called the attention of the public to the attractions, stating "whether in banking or amusement, First National means something."

Manager Alperson has appointed L. J. Winn his assistant manager. Winn is a very able young man and well known throughout the territory.

J. S. Ambrose and Harry H. Weinberg are recent recruits to the sales force and are making their maiden trips for First National.

Clarence E. Pippin, recently put in charge of the new Philadelphia exploitation department, is recovering from a siege of illness which attacked him as he was in the throes of a campaign in lower Delaware. It was necessary for him to go to a hospital for a slight operation.

M. E. Cory, who carries the First National banner in the Northern California territory, is credited with a remarkable achievement in booking the Victor theatre, Oak Park, Cal., for a solid month. The house, which observed its seventh anniversary in March, makes five changes a week, but it offered First National attractions every day during the month.

Atlanta

CORRINE GRIFFITH paid a visit to Atlanta last Wednesday, and no one would have been the wiser had not a certain young reporter been thoroughly on his job and recognized the Charming Corrine. She was on her way to Charleston, S. C., to film exteriors on a forthcoming production and stopped off in Atlanta to change trains—and also to renew acquaintance with the city as she had previously lived here for a year.

Manager Geo. E. Schmidt, of the Strand, is back on the job after an illness of several weeks.

T. Latt Brown, formerly of Asheville, N. C., spent several days in Atlanta last week on his way to New Orleans, where he is to take over the office management of Hodkinson.

Charles Schwerin, of Arrow Film Corp. of New York, was in Atlanta a few days last week.

W. R. Fergusson has returned to the New York offices of Goldwyn, after a highly successful trip through Georgia and Florida putting over exceptionally good exploitation stunts on "Theodora."

Eltabran Film Company is moving into better and larger quarters in the Hirsch Building.

Abe Warner, one of the famous Warner Brothers, is in Atlanta for a few days, en route to the coast, where he will supervise productions now in progress.

Frank Miller, of Augusta, Phil Gersdorf of Macon, and Fred Kent of Asheville, spent a few days in Aalanta this week visiting exchanges.

Dan Roberts, formerly manager of the Springer Opera House, Columbus, Ga., has been given charge of the Grand, Columbus, and E. C. Kingman, formerly of Gaffney, S. C., goes to the Rialto, with supervision of theatres for Columbus.

Hugh Cardoza, veteran newspaperman and showman, has been appointed by Associated First National as exploitation representative in this territory.

Emory Rylander, manager of the Rylander Theatre, Americus, Georgia, is having a radio receiving outfit installed in his theatre. The set will be equipped with a magna vox attachment of sufficient strength as to make radio messages received audible throughout the auditorium, which is the largest in Americus.

Baltimore

ALMORE & HOMAND, INC., have moved into their new 4-story home at 240 Fallsway, which was constructed by George Repp. Negotiations are in progress to lease the entire second story to the Maryland Board of Review. Other tenants to date are Universal, Pathe and Merit exchanges.

Outstanding points in equipment of the new structure are two fireproof vaults with racks of 1,000-reel capacity each.

Local 181, Motion Picture Projectionists' Union, has circularized the Eastern section homes as the result of the Cluster and Novelty Theatre employing non-union projectionists. The circulars called patrons' attention to five theatres within a 10-block area embracing the Cluster and Novelty as employing members of the local. John Winn, who was with the Cluster for many years, and William Whitmore, who worked at the Novelty, were the men whose services were dispensed with.

After battling in vain for years to be a success in the theatrical world the Playhouse, formerly the Colonial and Blancy's, has been sold for $63,500 and is to be converted into a business place.

J. E. Fowler, formerly of the Reed Building, 11 South Gay Street, has packed up all the belongings of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association and taken new and attractive quarters in the Haefele Building, 228 North Gay Street. Miss Minnie Elton, office assistant, was glimpsed the other day buying fixtures, while Eli Goldstein, who wields an expert hammer on anything from "Over the Hill" to one-reel westerners, was making the corridors ring.

Formerly of the Federal Film Service of Washington, Joseph B. Walsh has associated himself as manager and salesman with Dr. Layman R. Porter in the conduct of the Co-Operative Film Exchange of the Haefele Building. "Joe's" good nature is not at all unusual; it simply is a characteristic of a fat man.

Speaking of nifty tricks, Edwin J. Wyatt, 340 North Charles Street, representing Graphoscope, pulled a real one. He was screening "The Soul of Man," handled in this territory by the National Film Corporation, in the presence of Maurice Lesnar, president of the National, and Joseph Blechman at Blechman's Picture Garden when reel No. 4 caught fire. Closing his portmanteau, Wyatt carried the flaming 1,000 feet of reel to an alleyway, where it burned itself out, without one of the 300 spectators in the theatre even suspecting the danger. Wyatt's hand was slightly burned, and the loss was $40 for the reel and dealer's cost of the machine.

The annual election of officers of the Musical Union resulted as follows: Shepard S. Pearson, president; William Freitag, vice-president; Edgar W. Hunt, recording secretary; Marh A. Welch, financial secretary, and Paul I. Grossi, treasurer. The executive committee was named as comprising Oscar Apple, Charles Brunner, Sr., Fred A. Kummell, Joseph W. Lasky, Daniel Michel, Emile S. Odend'hal and William Stuckey. financial committee members are Arthur M. Anderson, Lazarus H. Fisher and Nelson C. Kratz. Convention delegates named are Mr. Pearson, Henry Maers and Paul I. Grossi.

Albany

THE Pioneer Film Corporation closed its branch office. The company opened offices last June, E. F. Johnson having been in charge since January.

The Educational Film Company announced that it had leased new offices on Broadway in that city and would move from its present quarters on May 1. J. H. Morgan is manager of the Albany branch.

Earl Cramer has been succeeded by D. R. Blythe as manager of the Select Film Company's branch, Mr. Cramer having accepted a position with the Robertson Cole office in Buffalo. Previous to coming to Albany Mr. Blythe had been employed by the American Releasing Corporation in Pittsburgh and also by Realart.

Frank V. Bruner of New York has succeeded James Loughborough as manager of Pathe's branch. Mr. Bruner has been with Pathe for about four years, serving in a number of ways, having at one time been manager of the company's house organ, and up to recently as manager of the employes' stock department.

Kansas City

THE latest addition to the sales force of the Crescent-Federated Kansas City office is C. A. Maddox, former assistant manager of the Kansas City Vitagraph office and manager of the Vitagraph office at Oklahoma City. He will cover the Western Missouri territory for Crescent-Federated. Mr. Maddox always has been known as a "student" of the square deal theory.

Here's an exhibitor that deserves the croix de guerre.

With Burlington, Kas., stricken from disasters of a great flood last week, J. J. Newcomb did not discontinue to operate his Newks theatre, but hastily effected a tie-up with the local newspaper and arranged for beneficial performances for distracted citizens. The newspaper furnished the advertising, Mr. Newcomb the show.

It would be a difficult task to convince Burlington citizens that horns sprout from the "dome" of an exhibitor.

Under the supervision of "Curley" Calvert, manager of the Universal Kansas City office, a baseball club, composed of persons in all departments of the film industry in Kansas City, will be organized. Not even a restriction on sex has been made, a special invitation having been extended to all stenographers — especially good looking ones.

Samuel Harding, owner of the Liberty and Doric theatres, Kansas City, has "initiated" what seems to be a plausible policy for maintaining theatre operation on a profitable basis during the hot months of summer. Mr. Harding has "Robinson Crusoe," a Universal serial, for his Doric theatre, which will be the first serial ever shown in that house.

Among the changes in ownership and management of theatres in the Kansas City territory during the last week are: Perkins theatre, Holton, Kas., sold by J. W. Wendell to G. H. Koch; Star theatre, Phillipsburg, Kas., sold by R. V. Kingery to S. H. Blair; Palace theatre, Springfield, Mo., sold by H. L. Horn to J. G. Hodges.

George Love, owner of Love's theatre, one of the better class of negro motion picture theatres in Kansas City, committed suicide last week. No reason for the act could be advanced by relatives of Mr. Love, his financial condition having been said to be good, while he always had enjoyed good health.

Frank L. Newman, owner of the Newman theatre, Kansas City, has just completed two weeks of the most lively business in the past several months. A chorus of thirty, composed of local talent, in conjunction with "Polly of the Follies," drew capacity crowds week before last, while the personal appearance of Wesley Barry, who received a landslide of publicity, along with "The World's Champion," packed them in for another record week last week.

Warner Brothers and Their Advertising on "Your Best Friend"

In the advertising section of this week's issue will be found two pages devoted to Warner Brothers latest feature, "Your Best Friend."

The reader will note that this advertising is not a mere announcement that a picture of this title is available but on the contrary relates in a comprehensive way the views of the Warner Brothers' advertising department as to how the feature should be put over and what accessories have been prepared for your use in bringing about this result.

Advertising of this sort is something that Motion Picture News has been advocating for a considerable period. It has become imperative that the producer and the exhibitor work in closer harmony and nothing will bring about such a relationship more completely than an honest attempt on the part of the producer to assist his customers in making money.

Warner Brothers' space in this week's issue is a big step in the right direction and may be taken as an indication that soon the advertising pages of the Motion Picture trade paper will be of equal value to the exhibitor as the editorial columns. All of which is something that is actually accomplished in other trade fields.

Ballyhoo on "Determination" used by L. W. Barclay, manager of the Nemo theatre, Johnstown, Pa.

Wright's "Saturday Night" Campaign Is Right

One of the most elaborate exploitation programs yet put over in the city of Seattle was successfully engineered by Manager H. B. Wright of the Strand Theatre, and members of the Paramount branch staff, a few weeks ago for a two weeks' run of "Saturday Night."

The picture was advertised several weeks ahead in newspapers and on the billboards. A five-minute trailer was run at the Strand the previous week, with the auto wreck scene as a climax.

When the run began, Manager Wright tied up with the Seattle laundries and for two weeks the town was flooded with "Saturday Night." Each laundry in the city enclosed in each package they delivered during the entire two weeks a slip saying "Send it to the Laundry. See Saturday Night." Thousands of slips were distributed directly into homes in this way.

During the first week of the run, a big downtown parade was put across. All laundries declared a half holiday, and every laundry delivery wagon was in line, decorated and bearing a sign advertising "Saturday Night." The Strand Theatre and Paramount office both had several elaborately decorated floats in line. The parade was headed by the Acting Mayor and Chief of Police of Seattle, the first time the city officially took a part in such a parade. Laundry wagons kept the signs on all during the run of the picture.

Hardware stores, drug stores and other downtown business firms had specially decorated window display tie-ups.

Trademark Tie-up Cooley's Stunt for "Her Husband's Trademark"

C. D. COOLEY, General Manager of the Consolidated Amusement Co., of Tampa, Fla., put over a full-page tie up with local merchants for the showing of "Her Husband's Trademark," at his Victory Theatre.

The title of the picture furnished the inspiration, and he worked out the page to draw attention to the "Trademark" feature in each ad. First he called attention to the fact that "Her Husband's Trademark" was a good picture, because it bore the "Trademark" of a firm who stood for merit and worth. Then in each ad. the attention was called to the reader of the value of the trademark of the advertiser.

In the center of the page was a large ad. on the picture, using one of the big cuts furnished by the producers. It made a very striking page and was used in both of the daily papers.

More "Just Around the Corner" Double Trucks

"Just Around the Corner" is another title that was born for double-trucks.

Manager and Assistant Manager respectively, Julius K. Johnson and August Herman, of the Rialto theatre, Omaha, Nebr., landed fifteen merchants for the two-page flash in The Omaha Bee.

During the engagement the managers secured the services of Mme. Sturkow-Ryder, one of the most noted pianists in the country, and she borrowed an Apollo piano from one of the leading music stores. The latter was so pleased they took a half-page ad to tell Omaha that it was one of their pianos Mme. Ryder was playing during the run of "Just Around the Corner."

Lobby display arranged by F. M. Hamberger for the showing of "The Flower of the North" at the Circle theatre, Portland, Ore.

Exhaustive "Penrod" Campaign Put Over at Milwaukee

The exploitation campaign on "Penrod" at the Strand theatre, Milwaukee, was such that few people of the city remained unaware of the engagement or the personal appearance of Wesley Barry, in connection with the showing.

One paper published the star's letter accepting the invitation to come to Milwaukee. Another featured the welcome arranged for him.

A large department store advertised a special sale of "Penrod" books and organized an Esphenhains Boys' Club. Every child purchasing a book became a member automatically and was allowed a ten per cent. discount on further purchases at the store. A cut of Freckles Barry and his pals in "Penrod" was used with the advertisement.

Another paper, that had been running a contest on orange recipes, took advantage of Freckles presence to make him the judge of the contest and ran stories from day to day announcing just when he would pick the winners. All the newspapers combined in putting over Manager Weisfeldt's idea of staging a prologue in which Freckles would enact, on the stage, the same scenes that he had made in the picture. The boys' circus was chosen, because of its possibilties and the fact that it would require a lot of extras—a corking chance for exploitation. The papers all played up the fact that Freckles Barry needed boys to act with him. Manager Weisfeldt co-operated with the stores that featured the announcement in their display advertising by making their emporium centers for the selection of these buckskin aspirants.

Lobby decorations on "Peacock Alley" used by the Trianon th eatre, New Orleans, one of the Saenger Amusement Co. string

This attractive lobby display for "Come On Over" was originated by Loew's State theatre, Sale Lake City.

Western Union Gives Gleichman Boost on "Fool's Paradise"

Theodore Kosloff, Dorothy Dalton and Mildred Harris sent such big telegrams to Detroit that Western Union stuck them in the window.

Each telegram was about six feet high and three and a half feet long and carried a message from the stars apropos the showing of "Fool's Paradise" at Phil Gleichman's Broadway-Strand theatre. There was also a kind line in each message about the value of Western Union service.

These messages were hand-drawn on beaverboard resembling a Western Union blank.

Attractive "Come On Over" Lobby at Salt Lake City

LOEW'S State theatre, Salt Lake City, built a very attractive lobby display for "Come On Over" when this picture played a recent engagement the centre of the lobby on a line with at the State.

In front of the box office standing in the sidewalk was a large cut-out, as shown in the accompanying cut.

Standing on top of the box office was a three-foot Statue of Liberty enlightening the world. Two arches were constructed, one end of each resting on the box office and the other on the side arch of the entrance. One arch bore the words "Come on" and the other one "Over," the title of the picture. These two arches were plentifully decorated with shamrocks. Small Irish flags were strung on a wire clear across the entrance. Shamrocks were painted on the glass doors leading into the auditomium and the lobby contained specially built and decorated frames.

Fool's Paradise Builds for "Bride's Play"

Manager Bill Duncan of the Plaza Theatre, Sioux Falls, Iowa, pulled a ten-strike when he converted his audience for "The Bride's Play" into a jury of 1,000 for "Fool's Paradise."

He announced in a newspaper ad that persons who saw the last performance of "The Bride's Play" could remain in their seats and "Fool's Paradise," which was to begin its run the following Sunday, would be shown.

The jury thus impanelled was asked to review "Fool's Paradise." This stunt put over both pictures with a bang. It not only brought up the final showing of the first picture but started the new bill off with a lot of publicity. The thousand, a capacity of the house, were sure to talk a lot about the free performance.

Lyric of Cincinnati Ties Up With Dog Show

An effective tie-up of "Thunderclap" with the annual dog show was executed by the management of the Lyric theatre, Cincinnati, at very small expense.

A cut-out of an Irish setter measuring about six inches from nose to tail-tip was the feature upon which the bit of publicity was based. The dog was printed in brown on one side and a bright red on the other. The brown side bore this: "Wm. Fox presents 'Thunderclap' at the Lyric theatre, March 5. It's a doggone show." The reverse side announced, "Dog Show. Music Hall."

Ten thousand of these attractive cut-outs were distributed about the city and at the exhibition rooms of the show.

Explaining by cut the prologue which E. R. Rogers, managing director of the Tivoli theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., originated for "Hail the Woman" and presented under the title of "Dance of the Hours."

These illustrations explain the accompanying story relative to the prologue number for "Polly of the Follies," presented by Frank L. Newman, managing director of the Newman theatre, Kansas City.

Clever Line and a False Front Idea from Canada

The Orpheus Theatre, Halifax, Nova Scotia, has indulged in a British line of humor that has possibilities for American use.

In exploiting pictures recently the lobby to the theatre was boarded up with the entrance divided. Over the top of the wall board ran this text:

For pleasure you'll say it's the peek o' the week.

On each of the four uprights was the day of the week which comprised the four-day run of the picture.

Many Creston Ladies Enter "Wonderful Thing" Contest

A contest on "The Wonderful Thing" was a wonderful thing for Manager Metzger and the Strand theatre, Creston, Ia.

Ladies who entered this newspaper contest were promised a prize of ten tickets, which was the total cost for interesting 200 women who wrote letters on the most wonderful thing in their life.

The campaign lined up a number of window displays, ranging from phonographs and bread to electrical appliances, each one being advertised as the most wonderful thing in its line.

Lobby display and ballyhoo used by the Euclid theatre, Cleveland, as exploitation on "The Mistress of the World"

Newman Theatre Stages Elaborate Prologue Number

NEWMAN'S Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., entertained Polly and the Follies—all of them—during the run of "Polly of the Follies." Not only did the theatre entertain the frolicsome crowd, but a special Pullman labelled "Newman's" brought them right upon the stage four times a day in one of the most tuneful prologues ever seen at the Kansas City house.

Of course after the train had reached its station the girls alighted and after the train had traveled on, they did their singing and dancing act for the benefit of the audience.

In addition to being one of the most elaborate acts ever put on at Newman's it pleased by its element of surprise and ingenuity.

Miller Rings Bell with "Mistress of World" Lobby

"The Mistress of the World," when it played a two-day engagement at the Rialto theatre, Augusta, Ga., proved once again that it is not the expense of the exploitation that counts, but the real ingenuity of the plan. Manager Frank Miller rang the bell again with his lobby on this much heralded picture.

The facade of the Rialto is white, and against this the screaming crimson back-ground of a white lettered twenty-four sheet fairly shrieked for attention. Beneath, the main lobby held the attention, once caught.

Long strips of oil-cloth, shining white, had been lettered with Chinese signs, extolling the virtues of the picture, in Chinese fashion. Strips of these alternated with framed panels of exquisitely embroidered silk borrowed from a Chinese shop in the neighborhood, and with a few long frames of stills from the picture. The walls of the lobby were completely hidden in this manner.

The box-office was half concealed behind wider strips of oil-cloth, lettered, and two festoons of beautiful silk Chinese lanterns, electrically lighted, formed the only illumination of the lobby by night. A lobby frame, in imitation of the well-known lacquered screens which are so much a part of Chinese life, held some effective stills from the picture, and these were backed by a bit of red and white striped awning, making the whole stand out more effectively.

Then, too, the Hearst Sunday American of Atlanta carried a full-page ad in their magazine section of this picture, and Mr. Miller made excellent use of this.

Red Lined Extra Used by Capitol of Youngstown

The overlined extra newspaper as exploitation for a picture was used successfully in connection with the showing of "Over the Hill," playing recently at the Capitol Theatre, Youngstown, O.

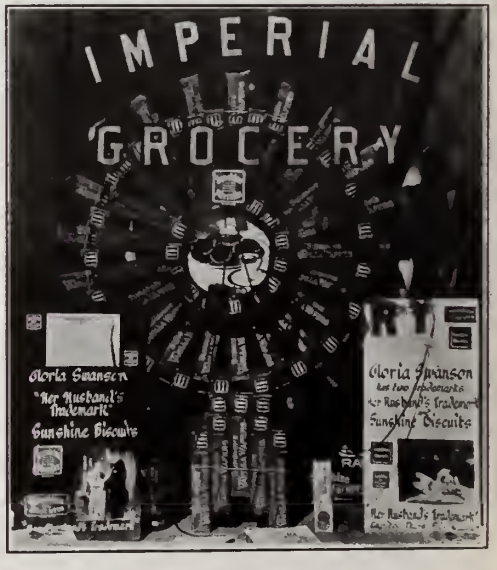
The stunt was put over by the Cleveland Fox exchange. The Capitol is a new theatre and the overlined extra was a new stunt in Youngstown, so the campaign went over big.

Fine Lobby Front on "Forever" Used by Cooley

A lobby display that reflected the atmosphere of the picture was devised by Manager C. D. Cooley of the Strand theatre, Tampa, Fla., for "Forever" or "Peter Ibbetson."

Lattice work encased the entire front of the theatre. This lattice work was covered with wild roses, brilliant in hue, with large baskets of roses hanging in the arch opening. Behind the lattice work were concealed flood lights of a soft pink color. On the two arch openings on either side of the box office, were cut out heads of the stars. The entire effect was one of Springtime and coincided with the peach blossom scenes in the picture.

Inside the theatre the bracket lights were of a soft pink hue, with vases placed on them, in which were orange blossoms; thus the atmosphere of the theatre was in keeping with the love scenes in the story running through the entire picture.



Window display, one of 37, used by the Capitol theatre, Great Falls, Mont., on "Her Husband's Trademark"

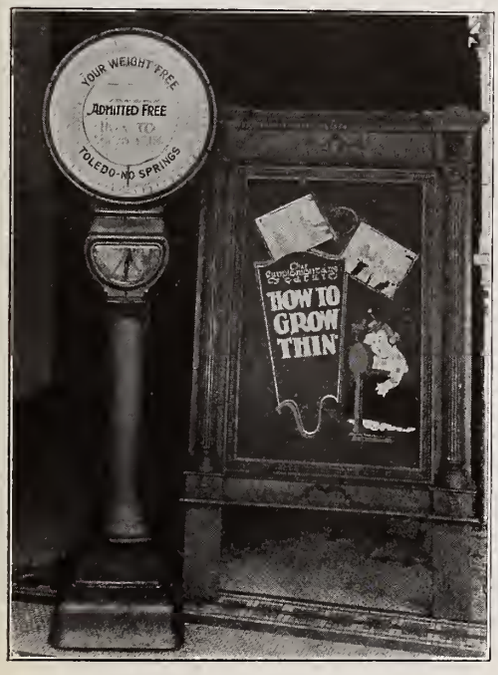
This lobby display on "The Queen of Sheba" is the work of Manager Lewis Rooner of the Lyric theatre, Camden, N. J.

Rialto, Columbus, Ga. Exploits "Way Down East"

For the engagement of "Way Down East" at the Rialto theatre, Columbus, Ga., Managers Watson and Johnson personally originated and constructed a lobby display of wonderful pulling power.

Blue lights were used in the shadow box to correspond with the snow scene, and the entire box was illuminated with small frosted lights. Above this shadow box was mounted on a wooden frame a twenty-four sheet of the ice-scene from the picture.

Besides this exploitation a ballyhoo stunt was used to very good advantage. The managers secured a huge tractor from a local auto dealer, dressed it up to represent a farm scene with the different characters in the picture on it. This was done to represent the other side of the picture as the lobby was the snow and ice scene.



Exploitation stunt for "How to Grow Thin," Educational's one-reel novelty, put over by the Strand theatre, Milwaukee.

Arcade Theatre Uses Atmospheric Lobby on "Forever"

AS EXPLOITATION for "Forever" playing recently at the Arcade theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., Manager Albert Hill built an attractive lobby display.

There were drops on either side of the lobby painted to represent an old fashioned wall and in the background was a painted house. In front of the lobby Mr. Hill built an archway of the same material, this being the entrance to the garden.

Over both entrances lattice work arbors with running vines completed the middle section. In the center of the lobby was a summer house with vines around it. Apple blossoms were everywhere giving the atmosphere of spring.

Published Newspaper as "Saturday Night" Exploitation

The Rivoli Theatre, La Crosse, Wis., recently published a newspaper called The Saturday Night, same being exploitation for his showing of "Saturday Night." The sheet was four pages in size and was made up like a regular daily, featuring the double wedding of a chauffeur and an heiress and a wash-woman and an heir as the feature story—the point of the scenario.

This paper was inserted in the La Crosse Tribune free of charge and insured a 10,000 circulation. The whole stunt cost $100, which was paid for by fourteen merchants in town who took a double-truck in the inside pages of The Saturday Night. It cost each merchant a little more than $7.15 each.

Anticipating a rush on his box office from this stunt, Mr. Duncan began to speculate on something new in the way of presentation. He hit on a fashion show and tied up some of his fourteen colleagues in the double-truck. He saved them the expense of models by procuring six society girls to display the gowns. This meant added publicity and talk.

Brooklyn Mark Strand Stages Annual Music Festival

The annual spring music and dance festival of the Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre was observed last week, a Neapolitan music and dance presentation being the outstanding feature with its mixed quartette, operatic singers and dancers.

Night on the Bay of Naples with sunset lights at first and the night lights of the city later made a pretty motif for the scenic set which had a marine tone. The principals were in Neapolitan festive dress. The number opened with the mixed quartette singing, "Funiculi, Funicula," which was followed by Frederick Jagel, tenor, singing, "O Sole Mio." Mme. Talma and Michael Nicholoff, well-known solo dancers, then portrayed "Tarentella." Florence Mulholland, contralto, sang "Addio Napoli," with the mixed quartette and dancers appearing in the concluding number, which was "Santa Lucia."

The Neapolitan number was part of a series of musical presentations arranged by Managing Director Edward L. Hyman and called, "Pages from Musical History."

This attractive lobby front on "Hail the Woman" was designed by the Metropolitan, Atlanta, Ga.

This lobby display for "A Sailor Made Man" is by C. M. Watson, manager of the Grand theatre, Columbus, Ga.

Johnson Puts on "Song of Life" Prologue

Taking his cue from no less a person than William Shakespeare, Manager Johnson of the Luna theatre, Lafayette, Ind., put over a unique prologue when he played "The Song of Life."

The stage was arranged so that two dark curtains hid the screen from the audience. From between the portals there emerged a young woman garbed in spotless white robes, carrying a pair of scales. One side of the scales bore a pair of beautifully dressed dolls in dancing posture. The other side showed an overbalancing set of small dishes, embodying the theme of the picture in the contrast between luxury and drudgery.

Following the custom of Shakespearean plays the character in the stage name of "Chorus" spoke to the audience saying:

"To some wives life is just a 'drama of dishes.' They grow old, bent and gray by eternal washing. Their salon is the kitchen, their perpetual pursuit the dishpan. While favored and gifted butterflies flitter through life feasting upon ambrosia and dancing to the accompaniment of the Pipes of Pan, these drudging moths with clipped wings hear only one song. It is their 'Song of Life,' the rattle and clash of dishes.

"It is with such a woman that our present story is concerned. The theme is the tragedy of her discontent. The climax is the redemption and triumph of motherhood."

With the final words the organ, which had been playing softly, burst into full volume as the curtains parted and the screen flashed the opening scenes of "The Song of Life."

Snipers Work for Fame Only

MANAGER BILL DUNCAN of the Plaza theatre, Sioux City, Ia., talked three of the prettiest society girls in town to put up his "Fool's Paradise" stands. They hopped into the bill posters truck, and did the job in four places.

Mr. Duncan dropped a casual hint to the newspapers which sent photographers out to the locations. All the papers ran the photographs showing full details of the Paramount 24-sheet.

Novelty "Sailor Made Man" Lobby Used by Grimes

AT an outlay of $12.75 Manager C. B. Grimes of the Belvedere theatre, Tuscaloosa, Ala., built a most attractive lobby display for "A Sailor Made Man."

A special folding display board was arranged in the lobby and atop of this was displayed a miniature steel battleship, which was borrowed at a cost of three passes, and adjusted on a blue paper ocean. A spark apparatus had the effect of a ship wireless.

Burns' "Come On Over" Display Makes Big Hit

FRANK H. BURNS, manager of exploitation for the Orlando Enterprises, Orlando, Fla., put over some excellent stuff on the recent showing of "Come On Over." Cut-outs of Colleen Moore were made and around this group of cut-outs a lattice work was built. This was later painted white.

The whole lobby was then draped in green, with plenty of decorations in the shape of green shamrocks. A large number of the home-made shamrocks were also stuck to the various mirrors in the theatre.

The whole made a very attractive display that brought the Irish atmosphere of the picture in excellent shape.

Coffin Puts "Smilin' Through" Over by Radio

The popularity of the radio phone in Omaha was a psychological time for splendid exploitation on "Smilin' Through" last week at the Strand theatre in that city.

With newspapers devoting increased space to the radio in general, and particular feature stories appearing in the press on the market reports being spread broadcast through the middle west from a radio phone in the Omaha Grain Exchange Building, E. R. Coffin, exploitation representative for First National in that city, and Harry Watts, manager of the Strand theatre, hit upon a novel plan of proclaiming the attraction of "Smilin' Through" to the radio fans within listening distance.

Mr. Coffin talked his message on "Smilin' Through" via the Grain Exchange radio phone. Newspapers ran feature stories on the stunt, together with interviews from various radio fans who listened in on Coffin's propaganda speech.

Explaining by cut the exploitation stunts which H. B. Clark, manager of the Majestic theatre, Memphis, Tenn., used when "Three Live Ghosts" played his theatre

Here is a window display on "Penrod" which Byron F. Moore, manager of the Capitol theatre, Clinton, Ind., arranged as exploitation for the showing of this picture

Patterson's Want Ad Stunt Garners Much Publicity

Because he inserted a teaser want ad in the daily papers offering $50 reward for the recovery of a lost German police dog, Manager W. C. Patterson of the Metropolitan Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., reaped an enviable harvest of publicity for his showing of "The Silent Call."

With the idea of simply creating newspaper interest and furnishing the excuse for a legitimate story in the news columns—which he got—Patterson started his idea. He had no inkling that more than two dozen Atlantans would write offering clues as to how the dog could be found. Some even wrote in announcing the discovery and removal of a dead police dog and expressing the hope that it did not belong to the advertiser.

The hardest hit person was Captain William Kaliska who was certain he knew the whereabouts of the dog and had already figured out the uses to which he would put the reward. When he learned the truth of the matter he protested. The newspapers got hold of the matter and played it up humorously. Result: Additional publicity for "The Silent Call."

Stage setting on "My Boy" prologue presented by the Branford theatre, Newark

Branford, Newark, Originates Fine "The Barnstormer" Prologue

AN appropriate prologue for "The Barnstormer" was one of the features of the recent engagement of this picture at the Branford theatre, Newark, N. J.

The scene opened in front of a back drop showing the outside of a small town theatre. Two young ladies, obviously stranded by the unannounced departure of the show's manager, constitute themselves into a committee of ways and means, the means for the ways of getting back home being apparently hopeless.

A messenger boy hurries down the aisle of the house, refusing to be stopped by the usher. He has a message for the young ladies, he shouts. It develops that it is an offer to do an act at the Branford. While the girls retire behind stage the messenger boy sings a solo. At the conclusion of the song the drop is raised, revealing a stage set in translucent colors. The girls come out in Spanish costumes and the brief prologue finishes with a duet and dance.

As enacted at the Branford theatre this number won striking favor with the audience for its impromptu atmosphere and the ready harmony with the theme of the feature picture.

"Hail the Woman" Mis-spelled Word Stunt Used with Success

In addition to arranging a double truck newspaper tie-up with the products of local dealers, the Princess theatre, Eagle Grove, Ia., used the mis-spelled word stunt to arouse interest for its showing of "Hail the Woman."

Two pages of co-operative advertising is a big thing for a city like Eagle Grove, Ia., but when the Princess followed it up by offering ten prizes of two tickets each for the correct list of mis-spelled words in the two pages, the citizens just swallowed it up.

Local Masons Aid in Putting Over "Molly O"

Geo. W. Bailey, manager of the Victoria theatre, and D. M. Bain, exploitation and advertising manager for the Howard-Wells Amusement Company, Wilmington, N. C., put "Molly-O" over to good business recently, using hook-ups as the greater part of their exploitation. Mr. Bailey arranged with the Sepa Grotto of the local Masonic order for a benefit. They arranged for approximately 100 windows in which "Molly-O" advertising was displayed, stating that tickets were for sale inside. He also displayed about 100 large "Molly-O" hearts in his lobby, suspended from the ceiling by light cord. Mr. Bain arranged for window displays and tie-ups with "Molly-O" candy, silks, hats, shoes and other national "Molly-O" products.

Excellent "Foolish Wives" Campaign

Newark Star-Eagle and Local Merchants Help Goodwin Theatre Put Over Picture

ONE of the most thorough and attention-getting advertising tie-ups ever made for a picture recently was put over in co-operation with the Newark Star-Eagle during the run of "Foolish Wives" at the Goodwin theatre, Newark. Maude George, one of the principals in the picture, was engaged for a novel shopping tour through Newark's leading shops. She shopped costumed as she appeared in "Foolish Wives," white wig and all.

In advance of this shopping tour, a special three page section, contributed by Newark merchants, ran in the Newark Star-Eagle. In this section a marvelous flash of Miss George, "Foolish Wives" and the Goodwin theatre was displayed prominently throughout with cuts and an eight column banner across the top.

This was followed by the schedule of her tour, etc. On the day of the event she visited the various shops according to schedule and at each and every stop motion pictures were made of her entering or leaving the store. A still cameraman was also on hand and he took shots of Miss George and the merchants.

At noon she was tendered a luncheon at the Berwick Hotel by the manager and his staff. Every store or shop had a prominent window display and she received many trophies of appreciation by the merchants.

At night she made two personal appearances at the theatre and was received by Mayor Briedenback and his staff, who made her a witness at a private wedding held in the Mayor's office.

The motion pictures made of the stunt were shown at the theatre the following week, bringing many to the theatre who had either met the star or who were photographed with her during some stage of her tour.

One week later, the Star-Eagle ran another full page following, using stills made of the tour in the various ads purchased for the special follow-up section. All in all the stunt enjoyed two weeks publicity.

Marc Lachmann, exploitation representative of the Universal Film Company, is responsible for the Newark Star-Eagle event.

Uses Steam Racer and Stencil to Sell "Watch Your Step"

K. C. MANNY, manager of the Meralta Theatre, a Los Angeles suburban house, put "Watch Your Step" over big by means of two unique exploitation stunts at very little cost. Obtaining an old steam automobile, with a record of 180 miles an hour, he placed it in the lobby. Running a wire from an ordinary electric socket to a buzzer placed under the hood of the machine, he obtained the suggestion, which was further heightened by a mounted six-sheet hung directly over the automobile, and a row of stills stretched from stem to stern of the "old boat."

Taking advantage of the possibilities of the title, Mr. Manny had a stencil made reading "Watch Your Step" and lettered the sidewalks within a radius of half a dozen blocks of the theatre, in addition to stencilling the title on the automobile. Three sheets, one sheets and colored enlargements, obtained from the exchange, added color to the lobby display.

Elaborate "Fool's Paradise" Prologue Presented by Grombacher

Ray Grombacher, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Spokane, Wash., gave "Fool's Paradise" a big exploitation campaign and an artistic presentation.

Mr. Grombacher's exploitation among other stunts included a window display in the Music Shop next door, in which the song "Somewhere in Naples," some live alligators (little fellows) and appropriate billing on the picture were featured.

The prologue is best explained by the accompanying cut. The gondola shown moved across the stage, which was lighted in blue with a spot light on the singers. A gauze was used in front of the act and the song "Somewhere in Naples" was featured.

Following the song number a Mexican street scene was used, which closed the prologue number.

Ray Grombacher's "Fool's Paradise" prologue as related in the accompanying story concerning the presentation of this picture at the Liberty theatre, Spokane

This cut shows two of the recent lobby displays arranged by A. C. Stalcup, manager of the Princess theatre, Eastland, Texas. The "Rent Free" lobby is of beaver board and painted to represent brick. Cut-outs of two boxers in a miniature ring were used for "The Leather Pushers" episode

Stages Boxing Match as Interlude to "World's Champion"

What he called an interlogue was the presentation stunt for "The World's Champion" was the stunt which Managing Director Sid Grauman of Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles, pulled in connection with the showing of this feature. At the point in the picture where Reid is seen battling for the championship of the world, the film was flashed off, the screen arose, and on the illuminated stage which appeared, there stood a bona fide prize ring—in which two boxers in the flesh were pounding away at each other. Around the ring were assembled a score or more of spectators, cheering for their respecitve pugilists. In fact, their cheers were heard a moment before the screen was pulled up. After a minute or so of the milling, one of the fighters went down for the count. The referee had scarcely reached the stroke of ten when the screen descended and the fight scenes of the picture proper were resumed. The entire interlogue did not durate two minutes.

The perambulating bill board which the Strand theatre, Waverly, Mass., used to exploit "The Duke of Chimney Butte" is shown in the above illustration.

Another "Old Oaken Bucket" Display as Suggested by Title

As suggested by the title, a lobby display carrying out the "Old Oaken Bucket" idea was arranged by F. J. Miller, manager of the Rialto theatre, Augusta, Ga. An old rope, an old bucket covered with moss, and a "prop" well surrounded by honeysuckle vines and blossoms proved very effective and attracted wide attention.

Kiddies Matinee, a Bramford "My Boy" Lure

D. J. Shepherd, managing director, A. Gordon Reid, production manager, and M. J. Cullen, publicity director, constituting the advisory board of the Branford Theatre, Newark, N. J., laid out an extensive advertising campaign for the showing of "My Boy."

A kiddies' matinee was the lure that worked up interest for the opening day. Thousands of throwaways were distributed throughout the public schools and each principal was allotted 20 tickets to be given away to the winners of contests held at the various schools. This ranged from essays to declamations. At the same time, Uncle George, who runs a children's page in the Newark Ledger, was given 20 tickets which were awarded to the writers of the best letters as to why they wanted to see Jackie Coogan.

Every paper in town covered the opening and the publicity, accelerated by the interest of the children, made itself thereafter.

For a prologue, A. Gordon Reid conceived the idea of the deck of a ship with Little Miss Edna Fenton, dressed as Jackie, singing: "If You Like Me As I Like You" and the theme of this song was also made the theme of the picture in the orchestration. It also served as a means for successful and artistic tie ups with music dealers.

The sky line was represented by a blue cyclarama, with set rows for the water ripples. Small boats were used on the water to give a skyline perspective and a sunset off stage added a colorful touch. Life preservers, coils of rope and cabins provided a realistic atmosphere to the scene which was suggested by the opening reel of "My Boy."

Offer Free Tickets to Those Who Solve Puzzle

The Wilson theatre, Rupert, Idaho, took an ad in the Minidoka County News, offering two tickets to anyone who could solve this puzzle.

1. Bet her orders too
2. A red ace will
3. O can they tell
4. I am Ida Novres
5. Then mama is hog
6. Race "Lady Bi"

A rearrangement of these crazy sentences spells the name of a Paramount star. The answers are: 1. Theodore Roberts, 2. Wallace Reid, 3. Ethel Clayton, 4. Marion Davies, 5. Thomas Meighan, and 6, Alice Brady.

Red Bank, New Jersey Town, Tries Out Window Displays

When George G. Roop, manager of the Palace theatre, Red Bank, N. J., wanted to spread himself on "The Mistress of the World," he went to Stork's Music Store, and it took very little persuasion to secure the two prominent windows.

This store is on the most prominent corner in the city, and windows being a new form of exploitation in Red Bank, there was only one result to Mr. Roop's idea—the best outside publicity ever given a picture in Red Bank.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The World's Champion—
Best attraction in several months. Shown in conjunction with personal appearance of Wesley Barry and did a capacity business for a week. (Middle West.)

A light but agreeable picture which drew well. (Middle West.)

Wallace Reid always popular at this house. Went over big. (Middle West.)

Exit the Vamp—
Good picture for average house. Generally liked. Appeal especially to women. Business was just fair. (Middle West.)

The Dancin' Fool—
Fair business. Stunt of special admission to those of height of Bebe Daniels or Wallace Reid. Good comedy feature. (Middle West.)

Moran of the Lady Letty—
Well advertised this one went over for capacity business for most of a week run. (East.)

Bought and Paid For—
Everyone liked it. One of best of the year. Good receipts for week. (Middle West.)

Mistress of the World—
This picture played to excellent business. (South.)

The Lane That Had No Turning—
Fine picture. Might have done better with a bigger star. (Middle West.)

Boomerang Bill—
Good entertainment and fine box office receipts. (West.)

Travelin' On—
Fairly good picture. Box office value fair. (West.)

Her Husband's Trademark—
Business very satisfactory. Well dressed feature with Miss Swanson in more appealing role than generally. Plot rather slight. (Middle West.)

Six Best Cellars—
On second run the picture did good business. Business in general improving right along but could be better. (Middle West.)

The Green Temptation—
A real box office attraction. Played to good business for week. (Middle West.)

An effective display for "The Sheik's Wife" as used by Lafayette Square Theatre, Buffalo

An attractive lay-out designed by the Clemmer Theatre, Seattle

FIRST NATIONAL

A Question of Honor—
Melodrama that is exciting enough but did not pull in much business. May have been the fine weather. Have no other reason. Star not so popular perhaps.

Despite strong competition, this one attracted a good attendance for a week's run. (Middle West.)

Polly of the Follies—
Business good. Some division of opinion on feature but generally quite satisfactory. A dancing feature contest on Wednesday was one of the best stunts ever put on. Fine girls who were splendid dancers won biggest applause ever accorded a contest. (Middle West.)

Smilin' Through—
Second week held up big. Public still raving about it. (Middle West.)

The Silent Call—
Tenth week and is still going big. (West.)

Pay Day—
A dandy with some new comedy effects that won appreciation from those who'd never been Chaplin fans. Only complaint was that it was too short. (Middle West.)

METRO

Turn to the Right—
One of the best ever. Receipts dandy. (East.)

Went over big. Fine picture and big box office value. (West.)

Glass Houses—
Pleased mightily, Miss Dana being especially well liked hereabouts. Receipts first class. (East.)

The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse—
Played to big business during two weeks' run at popular prices. (Middle West.)

Fighting Mad—
A Texas version of "The Three Musketeers" and should do well wherever westerns are popular. Especially appreciated by those who have seen the "Musketeers." Business good. (Middle West.)

Peacock Alley—
Lots of pep and thrills and pleased generally. Mae Murray a favorite. Good crowds. (Middle West.)

REALART

A Game Chicken—
Bebe Daniels is always certain of good houses here. This production was no exception, as it did a good week's business. (Middle West.)

Bebe Daniels a prime favorite at this house which accounted for satisfactory business in unusually fine weather which kept patrons "out in the air." (East.)

Divided opinion. Some thought it a funny feature and others were as strongly dissatisfied. Business pretty good, however. (Middle West.)

The Furnace—
On second run satisfactory business. Well done picture of society life. (Middle West.)

The Heart Specialist—
Very good feature. Business fine. (West.)

Proved a popular selection and heard much favorable comment. Receipts were satisfactory. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

Wild Honey—
Priscilla Dean is popular here and the picture played to good crowds for a week. (Middle West.)

Went over big. Priscilla Dean has many admirers here and the picture drew well all week. (Middle West.)

The Dangerous Little Demon—
Fine production which brought good business. (West.)

Reputation—
Business not very good on second showing. People discouraged by tragedy in it, I guess. Pleasant weather had effect too. (Middle West.)

Man to Man—
Good entertainment and fine business. (West.)

FOX

Shame—
A good picture and box office attraction. Held for second week. (Middle West.)

Business fair. Picture seemed to appeal to those who did see it. (East.)

Iron to Gold—
Business was fair. Feature not entirely satisfactory. (Middle West.)

A Stage Romance—
An excellent picture, which only drew fairly well. (Middle West.)

GOLDWYN

The Invisible Power—
A good program picture. No fault to find with this picture which won much favorable comment. Business only fair, however. (Middle West.)

Be My Wife—
This one went over fine. Great business. (West.)

PATHE

The Isle of Zorda—
Fairly good picture. Business better than usual. (West.)

Woman Wake Up—
Fair entertainment. Business fair. (West.)

AMERICAN RELEASING

Cardigan—
Good picture which went over big at this house. Holding it for second week. (Middle West.)

With extraordinary exploitation, this went over big. Tells fine story. (Middle West.)

HODKINSON

Cameron of the Royal Mounted—
Good outdoor picture. Did fair business for one week. (Middle West.)

VITAGRAPH

Flower of the North—
Good picture and good box office value. (West.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

The Barricade—
This one was shown in conjunction with a special added attraction, Eugene Dennis, psychic wonder girl of Kansas, and did a capacity business for a week. It is difficult to determine where the dividing line in drawing power should be. (Middle West.)

STATE RIGHTS

School Days—
Went over better than expected this time of year. Receipts pleasing. (East.)

A sure-fire box office attraction. Wesley Barry is a good drawing card and we did big business for week. (Middle West.)

Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight—
Truly a splendid picture and we did excellent business. Holding it over for second week. (Middle West.)

The Splendid Lie—
Just an average picture and we did fair business. (Middle West.)

Determination—
Fair with receipts about the same. (East.)

What No Woman Knows—
Attracted less than average business. Story not up to standard of other Clara Kimball Young offerings. (East.)

So This Is Arizona—
It rained and they stayed home and it was nice weather and they stayed outdoors. Good western feature. Fair business. (Middle West.)

The Story of "The Prodigal Judge" is too big and fine and vital to adequately summarize in the small space of an advertisement, therefore good taste causes us to refrain. We would merely say the production is record size and follows the novel closely.

TERRITORIAL SALES AND PURCHASES

In the Independent Field

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

Brandt Points Importance of Serial Pictures

THAT the serial of today is relatively of greater importance and commands greater recognition and box-office returns than at any other period in the history of the industry is brought out in the text of a special statement prepared by Joe Brandt, well known in the independent distributing field and at present the motivating power in the affairs of the Star Serial Corporation, producers of "Cap'n Kidd," first of a series of independently-produced Eddie Polo chapter-plays.

It is Brandt's contention that the chapter-play today enjoys wider circulation on the screens of the world than at any other time in the past. And Brandt goes further by saying that the serial of today has become as important a part of the average motion picture theatre as the feature, comedy or news-weekly.

New Bill Makes Brandt Picture Timely

Interesting proof of the contention of Joe Brandt and Bert Adler, head of Art Brand Production, Inc., that a good picture is always a good picture, and a picture based on a theme of universal interest is always timely comes with word of the passing of a new bill in this country known as "The Enoch Arden Bill."

The passing of this bill follows almost immediately upon the announcement made by Brandt and Adler that they were offering, through their new company, a feature called "The Fatal Marriage," a revival of the D. W. Griffith production "Enoch Arden," in which Lillian Gish and Wallace Reid are starred.

Fan News Reel Proves Success for Cohn

According to the New York Federated Exchange, Screen Snapshots, "the fan news reel" which Jack Cohn is producing with Louis Lewyn for Federated distribution, is proving a success.

The new issue, number 24, is now nearing completion and contains names such as Constance, Norma and Natalie Talmadge, Buster Keaton, Herbert Rawlinson, Estelle Taylor, Betty Compton, Mary Miles Minter, Eileen Percy, Charles Ray, Antonio Moreno and Rosemary Theby.

"Innocent Cheat" Ready

Dr. Shallenberger Predicts Success for Arrow's Latest Production

THE Arrow Film Corporation is most enthusiastic concerning their shortly-to-be-released Ben Wilson production "The Innocent Cheat," which Dr. Shallenberger, president of Arrow and a singularly keen judge of picture values, has announced as the legitimate successor to the tremendously successful "Ten Night in a Barroom."

"There is every reason to believe," said Dr. Shallenberger in a recent interview, "that 'The Innocent Cheat' will do all that 'Ten Nights in a Barroom' did—and more. In all my years in the motion picture industry I've never had a picture 'get' me the way this one did. I give it as my firm belief that by his handling of a tricky story Ben Wilson establishes himself definitely in the front rank of present-day directors. And Roy Stewart and Kathleen Kirkham, the featured players, have helped by their splendid artistry and intelligence to creat a picture that will endure for a very long time.

"The Innocent Cheat" is motivated by the two biggest forces in the world—the love of a strong man for a woman and the love of a mother for her child.

Lesser Pledges Classics

"Oliver Twist," With Jackie Coogan, First of an Exceptional Series

SOL LESSER, vice-president of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., and producer of motion pictures, has elaborate plans for future productions, his first of which will be "Oliver Twist." Lesser thinks the industry is in dire need of big productions and it is his intention to provide them, at least once a year, and oftener if possible.

It is Lesser's plan to create a thorough organization to carry out his ideals for big cinema productions. For "Oliver Twist," in which Jackie Coogan will be the star, Jack Coogan, Sr., will be in constant touch with Jackie's work, but he has practically turned over the complete task of direction to Frank Lloyd. Coogan will thus be the more valuable in mapping out future activities for Jackie.

Lloyd, who has charge of the "Oliver Twist" production, is a student of Dickens and a man with a long string of successes to his credit.

Lesser has been one of the most successful men in the film industry and his knowledge of the building of a complete organization is responsible for much of his success. In his pledge to create worth while pictures he is doubtless sincere, and a number of so-called super productions will probably result.

Burr Follows Advice of Ancient Philosopher

"AT the present time," said C. C. Burr, president of the Affiliated Distributors, Incorporated, "when it seems that every one in the motion picture industry is crying 'wolf!' it might be well to heed the advice of an ancient philosopher who said, 'If thou wouldst achieve success learn what the masses are doing, then goest thou and do otherwise.' The time to buy is when every one desires to sell, and the logical time to produce pictures is when other producers are curtailing their productions. This is why when most producers seem anxious to get rid of their studios I have just acquired one, the Glendale Studio, Long Island. I am also going in for the production of pictures without regard to what other producers are doing. Once the public gets a knowledge of what real good independent pictures mean, they will flock to them like children to a circus parade."

Dolores Cassinelli Due in New Picture

Major F. H. LaGuardia, legal adviser for Dolores Cassinelli, Inc., announces that the final cutting and titling of "Challenge" the first independent production starring the beautiful Italian actress will be finished this week. The picture will run about six reels and has been eight weeks in the making.

Marvellous outdoor scenery mingles with a story of dramatic appeal and heart interest. The title is derived from the theme of the story which depicts the challenge between two women, in love with the same man and two men rivals for the hand of the same woman.

Under the direction of Tom Terriss, the story has been given an extremely careful production. In addition to directing the picture, Terriss wrote the story and did most of the titling.

The cast is small but includes names that are well known to film followers. In addition to Dolores Cassinelli, the players include: Rod La Roque, Sacia DeMooers, Walter Richman, Frank Norcross and James Jennings.

Trade showings of the picture will be given as soon as it has been put into finished form.

Gompers Is Interviewed for Movie Chats

JUDGE GARY'S exclusive interview which appears in the Official Urban Movie Chats of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, out this week, won such hearty commendation from the executives and officials of the M. P. T. O. A. when they reviewed it before release, that the idea will be continued.

This is the first time the motion picture has been used to broadcast a message from leading men of the country and in the next issue of the Official Urban Movie Chats the other side of the story will be given, inasmuch as Samuel Gompers, president of the American Fedreation of Labor, is the man interviewed.

In the interview, Mr. Gompers says:

"Americans can prosper and be a nation of eager producers only if freedom for all her people is maintained.

"Restoration of prosperity depends upon fair, honest and honorable dealing with the millions of American wage-earners."

These interviews will be a regular feature of the Official Urban Movie Chats of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and from time to time leaders in many fields will be interviewed.

Mass Approval Best Censor

Warner Points Out Value of Pictures and Fallacy of Censor Boards

HARRY M. WARNER, producer of many screen plays, notably Ex-Ambassador Gerard's sensational expose of German intrigue, "My Four Years in Germany," believes that the future of the motion picture depends on mass approval and not upon the whims and fancies of a censor board.

"The motion picture is one of America's greatest constructive forces," contends Mr. Warner. "No one can deny the increasing benefits derived from the screen. Today schools and colleges have taken up motion pictures seriously, and are teaching their scholars by the aid of the picture machine. The future of the motion picture depends on mass approval, and not on the whims and fancy of a few people calling themselves censors.

"The followers of the motion picture really projected this great monument of entertainment and instruction. Their love inspired it. Their attendance helped to build it to its present growth. Present and future will share in its benefits, and future generations will profit by its instructive power.

"Every wholesome, entertaining and instructive motion picture is a tribute to cinema glory. Every comedy and every drama helps to inculcate love of life, encourage American product, and establish a better citizenship.

"There isn't a country in the world that has more motion picture fans than America. Motion pictures have come to stay. They bring the happenings of the world to the doorstep of every picture patron and are unparalleled as a medium for the transmission of worth while ideas.

"If producers aim at something noble and inspiring and succeed in it, they generally find that they have succeeded not in that alone. They have succeeded also in eradicating prejudices which beset every form of society. They have succeeded in stirring the whole intellect of the country about the fundamental questions of censorship affecting society, and in this process the completely settled state of society and censorship — intellectual and moral stagnation — will be saved for a long time.

"Though our best efforts may often seem wasted and lost, nothing coming of them that can be pointed to and distinctly identified as a definite gain to humanity, though this may happen one time in a hundred, the result of the one time may be so great and dazzling that we had dared never to hope for it, and should have regarded those who predicted it to us as foolish, imbecilic humans living beyond the bonds of mental sanity.

"The great American motion picture has not as yet arrived, but it will come if the motion picture public will take the reins in their own hands and not allow a few to tell them what they are to see."

"I Am the Law" Popular

Foreign Rights and Six Territories Sold Without Showing

THAT independent buyers in the motion picture industry feel confident that Edwin Carewe's special "I Am the Law," which will be released through Affiliated Distributors, Inc., will prove one of the big pictures of 1922 is evidenced by the fact that the entire foreign rights in the production and the rights for six territories in the United States were sold before any of the buyers had seen a foot of film.

Director Carewe shot the last scenes only a couple of weeks ago, and since that time has been working night and day cutting, titling and assembling it.

Warner Brothers made a flattering offer for the foreign rights of "I Am the Law," which President Burr has accepted. They expressed themselves as satisfied with the ability of Carewe and with the high calibre of the cast of players.

Western Pennsylvania and Ohio territories were sold to Joseph Skirboll, the First National Exchange man in the western Pennsylvania territory. J. F. Cubberley, the First National Exchange man in Minneapolis, bid in his territory on "I Am the Law," and M. A. Klausner, of the Mountain States Film Attractions, has secured the picture for the Denver and Seattle territories. The Indianapolis territory was bought by the H. Lieber Company, the First National Franchise holder of that territory

In every case the only guide these buyers had as to what might be expected from "I Am the Law" was the reputation of Director Carewe, the quality of the cast, and complete confidence in Burr and Affiliated Distributors, Inc.

In the case of independent productions it has been necessary in the past to market them strictly on their merits after screen examination. It is doubtful if there has been another instance in the motion picture industry where an independent production has been sold to state right buyers without first giving a screening.

New Hallroom Comedy Is Nearing Completion

"Better Late Than Never" is the name of the newest of the Percy and Ferdie Hallroom Comedies which is nearing completion on the West Coast, according to Producer Harry Cohn.

Noel Smith directed the picture, which is now in course of final editing for Federated distribution.

Sunset Productions Signs Famous Cowboy Star

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made by Anthony Xydias, president and general manager of the Sunset Productions, of the signing of Jack Hoxie, the cowboy star, to make a series of eight western super-features, for the State Rights market.

The first of the new series, "Barb-Wire," from the pen of William Lester and Marin Sais, is nearing completion at the Sunset Studios, under the direction of Frank Grandon.

Supporting Hoxie in "Barb-Wire" are Jean Porter, Joe McDermott, William Lester, James Welch, Olah Norman, Bert Lindley, and Bill Ryno.

Prizma Color Subjects Contracts Renewed

Renewal of contracts for handling Prizma color short subjects for the ensuing year has been completed during the past two weeks between Prizma, Incorporated and Commonwealth Film Corporation, New York; Nu-Art Pictures Corporation, Buffalo; Co-operative Film Exchange, San Francisco; Specialty Film Company, Dallas, Texas; F. & R. Film Company, Inc., Minneapolis, Minn., and Motion Picture Corp., Boston.

Reports from various distributors of Prizma color subjects received to April 1st indicate an increase of business for the first three months of the year in spite of conditions affecting the black and white short subject market in most parts of the country.

First Run Houses Book "Torchy's Frame-Up"

"Torchy's Frame-Up," featuring Johnny Hines and playing at the Brooklyn Strand this week in conjunction with a revival of "Humoresque," bids fair to establish a first run comedy booking that will be difficult to equal. Since it's premiere at the Criterion theatre about six weeks ago where it was shown for two weeks, "Torchy's Frame-Up" has been consistently booked in only the first run houses throughout the country.

Di Lorenzo Leaves for Trip to Coast

Joe Di Lorenzo, president of Di Lorenzo, Inc., left this week on a comprehensive sales trip in behalf of the "Big Boy" Guinn Williams' series of six features now being produced on the coast by the Frederick Herbst Productions, and released to the independent market by Di Lorenzo, Inc.

Di Lorenzo will probably be gone about six weeks, and on his return will bring back with him the second of the "Big Boy" Williams series, titled "The Trail of Hate," which has just been completed under the direction of W. Hughes Curran.

Teaching Etiquette New Movie Feature

In the next issue of Official Urban Movie Chats of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America there will be a section devoted to etiquette. The demonstrator is Miss Marguerite Walz, of Philadelphia, an authority on social etiquette. She demonstrates to a girl reporter how a woman should properly receive a guest, the correct way to enter and to leave a room, how to walk and sit and stand—seemingly little things, but all the same, things which bother all of us when company comes.

Correct social manners are what everybody wishes to master and Official Urban Movie Chats will teach them from week to week. The best authorities on social etiquette will personally appear and show exactly how, for instance, a girl should walk across the street with a man, how a man should help a girl board a street car, how one should sit comfortably and correctly, why a girl should never cross her legs when sitting down.

Wisconsin Rights Bought for Arrow Pictures

The Arrow Film Corporation announces the consummation of a contract with the Kay-Bee Distributing Company, Inc., Milwaukee, Wis., Walter A. Baier, president, whereby the Baier organization secures for the State of Wisconsin the following pictures: "Back to Yellow Jacket" and "A Motion to Adjourn"; two Peter B. Kyne productions; a new series of six five-reel productions starring Jack Hoxie; a series of four feature productions, starring Neva Gerber; the new Arrow Special, "The Innocent Cheat"; and the Ann Little production, "Chain Lightning."

Prison Inmates Approve Arrow Picture

D. D. Dickerson, the general manager of the Progress Film Company, which is marketing the Arrow releases in the state of Michigan, arranged a showing of James Oliver Curwood's "Girl from Porcupine," for the inmates of the Michigan State Prison. The picture "went over" big as attested in a letter received by Mr. Dickerson from the Rev. William F. Hopp, the chaplain of the prison.

"Bring Him In," New Miller Picture

"Bring Him In" is the title selected for the Charles Miller production which was filmed at Port Henry on the working title "The Long, Long Trail." Director Miller finished shooting the picture a few days ago, and is now engaged in cutting, titling and assembling it.

His own daughter, Doris Miller, played the leading female role. The balance of the cast included Earl Fox, Harry Lee, Frank Losee, Charles Mackey and Frank Burton.

Rapf Leaves for Coast

Will Produce Four Pictures for Warner Bros. Distribution

HARRY RAPF, the producer of "Why Girls Leave Home," Gus Edwards' "School Days," and the latest Vera Gordon picture, "Your Best Friend," being distributed by Warner Brothers, is en route to the Warner west coast studios to produce four forthcoming Rapf productions, it is announced.

Rapf's production schedule includes "From Rags to Riches," with Wesley Barry, which will be started on or about May 1, "Little Heroes of the Street," also featuring the freckle-faced star, "Brass," Charles G. Norris' sensational novel of marriage and divorce, and "Main street," Sinclair Lewis' vivid photographic novel of small town trials and tribulations.

"My future productions, which will be distributed by Warner Brothers," said Rapf, "will embrace every quality for success. They will be produced not only from an artistic standpoint, but primarily from a box-office angle. In this respect the four pictures will contain as much if not more exploitation possibilities as is being obtained with the Warner current attractions.

"For the entire series of four productions I will engage only the best available screen talent, principally those players best suited to portray the various roles in the stories. It is my intention also to set a new precedent in the production of popular stories. By this I mean that my production schedule will embrace every feature for efficiency, in addition to consulting the authors of the stories. I am pursuing this method with the two Barry features and the Norris and Lewis novels."

The first Barry story, "From Rags to Riches," was written by Will Night, who directed the three current Warner attractions, and Walter De Leon. "Little Heroes of the Street" was written by Edmund Goulding. Rapf expects to complete the four productions by September 1, after which he will return east.

Booking "Wandering Boy"

Equity Picture Will Be Afforded Three First Runs in Territory

EQUITY'S "Where Is My Wandering Boy To-Night" will be afforded three big first runs in the Ohio territory, according to word received at the Equity home office from Harry Charnes, who purchased this territory from the B. F. Zeidman-Equity feature.

As already announced, "My Wandering Boy" will open at the Allen theatre in Cleveland on April 16th, having been booked by S. Barrett McCormick for a week's run. On the same date the feature will open for a week's run at the Lyric theatre in Cincinnati, and on April 30th the Alhambra theatre at Toledo, Ohio, will run "My Wandering Boy" for one week.

In each of these cities the picture will be preceded by a big exploitation campaign and will also be given special presentation.

In addition to these first run bookings reported by Charnas, Equity is in receipt of announcements from other franchise holders, all of which report a number of bookings on the feature. Exhibitors throughout the country, confident that the public is now anxious to receive clean, heart-interest melodrama, have fallen in line, and as a result "My Wandering Boy" will be assured an unusually wire circulation.

The enthusiasm of the territorial buyers is amply proven by the special exploitation aids which they are issuing on the feature, announces Equity. In almost every case the exchanges are issuing exploitation novelties as well as using the many aids provided them by Equity.

"Bull" Montana Now a Star

"A Ladies' Man" Produced by Hunt Stromberg Completed During Week

BULL MONTANA'S first starring comedy, "A Ladies' Man," produced by Hunt Stromberg, with a supporting cast including Clarie McDowell, Charles Mailes, "Snitz" Edwards, Myrtle Lind, Frank Kingsley, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Chuck Reisner and Master Dinky Dean Reisner, was completed this week, following a five-week production schedule at the Hollywood Studios on the West Coast.

Cutting and editing of the novel attraction, which is to be released in three reels as a "comedy special attraction," is now in progress, under the direction of Del Andrews.

"A Ladies' Man," written and personally directed by Hunt Stromberg, with Chuck Reisner as associate director and "gag man," is reported to constitute a comedy production unlike anything heretofore seen upon the silver sheet.

Releasing arrangements for the Bull Montana comedies have been withheld by Stromberg pending the completion of editing of "A Ladies' Man," when one of several national distributing offers now under consideration will be closed.

Production on the second comedy special, under the working title of "Lowry from the Bowery," is to begin on April 15. Stories for future Montana pictures are under preparation by Stromberg's personal production staff.

Werner Plans Runs for "Mother Eternal"

Negotiations for a representative run of "Mother Eternal" in the territory comprising Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois are being made by Sam Werner, who has signed up his exchanges in St. Louis to handle Ivan Abramson's Graphic Film Corporation Product.

Werner, who is general manager of the Federated Film Exchange of St. Louis and president of the United Film Service of St. Louis, is to add the newly organized St. Louis branch of the Graphic Film Exchanges, Inc., to his list of activities and will handle Graphic's entire output for his territory.

"Mother Eternal," Abramson's vehicle for Vivian Martin, will be the first of the Graphic productions which Werner will handle under the new distribution plan. Preparations are under way for good exploitation of the picture in the St. Louis territory.

"Mothers' Day," which falls on May 14th, will be the medium for special exploitation in all of the new Graphic Film Exchanges who are distributing the picture in their territories.

Barthelmess' Next Film to Be "The Bond Boy"

Charles H. Duell, president of Inspiration Pictures, which is starring Richard Barthelmess in a series of special productions for First National release, announces that Barthelmess' next starring vehicle will be "The Bond Boy," a story by George Washington Ogden, who is famous as an author of stirring fiction. "The Bond Boy" follows "Sonny," which was adapted to the screen by Francis Marion from the play by George V. Hobart.

Henry King, who directed Mr. Barthelmess in "Tol'able David," "The Seventh Day" and "Sonny," will direct this picture, the filming of which will begin the last of this month.

"Your Best Friend" Is Shown at Central

The latest Vera Gordon picture, "Your Best Friend," a Harry Rapf production distributed by Warner Brothers, took possession of the Central theatre, New York, on April 9, for a two week's run.

The decision to show the Gordon film at the Central theatre was made following the many laudatory comments of the trade press, it is said.

"Your Best Friend," is said to tell the story of a widow who is thrown into the maelstrom of two socially ambitious women, one, her daughter-in-law and the other the mother of the latter. How the widow finally redeems a gay and reckless household from the follies of selfish indulgence is declared to form the basis of an engrossing photodrama.

In the cast supporting Miss Gordon are Belle Bennett, Dore Davidson, Harry Benham, Marie Mason and Stanley Price.

Scene from "Sonny," Richard Barthelmess's third production for First National release.

Houdini's Latest Offers Numerous Thrills

Houdini's first photoplay drama for his own company, "The Man From Beyond," in which Houdini appears in the title role, is now showing at the Times Square Theatre, New York, where it had its premier. The critics, both in the daily newspapers and in the trade journals, approved the picture.

While the production as a whole came in for meritorious mention, the rescue scene at the brink of Niagara Falls, wherein Houdini, after a perilous swim through the rapids, saves the girl just as she is about to be dashed over the Falls, is conceded by the critics to be the greatest scene of its kind ever filmed.

Following the New York showing of "The Man From Beyond," Houdini has agreed to appear in person in conjunction with the picture in a limited number of key cities, after which the production will be state righted.

Minneapolis Exhibitors Buy "Wandering Boy"

"Where is My Wandering Boy Tonight," the B. F. Zeidman-Equity picture, will be in the hands of Rubin and Finkelstein, Minneapolis exhibitors, for the Minnesota, North and South Dakota territories. This sale was consummated recently by Louis Baum, sales manager of Equity and the R. and F. interests.

Rubin and Finkelstein are in control of a string of theatres throughout this territory.

"Torchy's Shoes" Promises Unusual Features

Aside from it's highly amusing story, the latest Johnny Hines comedy, titled "Torchy's Shoes," now being filmed at C. C. Burr's new Glendale studio, will contain a wealth of splendidly conceived interior and exterior sets that should make this latest "Torchy" one of the best attractions placed on the market this year.

Johnny Hines is particularly elated with his new surroundings, for the enlarged studio facilities will be the means of giving the inimitable "Torchy" greater opportunities to make use of his comedy versatilities.

Zierler Acquires Picture

Purchases Rights to Feature Film, "Life's Greatest Question"

SAM ZIERLER, president of the Commonwealth Film Corporatnon of New York, announces the acquisition of the Quality Film Production, Inc. feature, "Life's Greatest Question." Commonwealth it is announced, has purchased from the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, which is distributing the feature, New York and Northern New Jersey rights.

"Life's Greatest Question," produced by Joe Brandt and George H. Davis, directed by Harry Revier, and starring Roy Stewart, with Louise Lovely and Dorothy Valegra, is, according to Zierler, one of the strongest of the features he has lined up. He announces that he is planning a special campaign to launch it immediately.

For this reason, all possible speed was put through on the matter of delivery of prints to Commonwealth, and immediately thereafter Zierler declared himself especially pleased with the feature itself and the quick consummation of details in arranging the deal.

"We have just received our prints of 'Life's Greatest Question' and I want to tell you how enthusiastic we are over this feature," Mr. Zierler wrote to C. B. C. "It has everything that a good picture should have." Zierler's acquisition of "Life's Greatest Question" follows the great success with which Commonwealth has been meeting, in handling "The Heart of the North," the preceding Quality production of the Northwest, in which Roy Stewart is also featured with Louise Lovely and which Harry Revier directed.

"Yankee Doodle, Jr.," Ideas

Title Lends Itself to Numerous Successful Exploitation Angles

M. J. BURNSIDE, producer and distributor of "Yankee Doodle Jr.," has informed the trade press that he is desirous of informing motion picture exhibitors and state right buyers of the exploitation possibilities with "Yankee Doodle Jr."

Paul Gray, exploitation director, announced this week the completion of all advertising accessories that will be used on "Yankee Doodle Jr."

Red, white and blue "Yankee Doodle Jr." hats are patterned after the hat that the mythical "Uncle Sam" wears in all of his pictures. A feather that will be given away with each hat is printed in red, white and blue, and is imprinted with this phrase. "You will be tickled to death with 'Yankee Doodle Jr.'"

A pasteboard pistol that makes a loud cracking noise will be another one of the exploitation aids.

"George M. Cohan canes" with an American flag at the top will be given to the kiddies during the week of the showing.

Polo Serial for State Rights Release

Characterizing as a gross untruth any rumors or statements which even hinted that "Cap'n Kidd," first of a series of independently-produced serials, was to be sold outright to a national distributor and released to exhibitors through national exchange system, Joe Brandt, President of the Star Serial Corporation, distributors of the Polo serial product, this week definitely set at rest such rumors, and, more than ever, emphasized the fact that "Cap'n Kidd" was to be state-righted to independent exchangemen all over the country.

"Determination" Is Still Proving Popular

In addition to the large number of first run houses and circuits which have been announced, the Lee-Bradford Corporation has arranged the following bookings for "Determination":

Eight days at the Woods theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., opening April 1st; one week at Shubert's Academy of Music, Baltimore, Md., opening April 3rd.

Directly after the showing at the Academy of Music, Mr. Whitehurst has arranged to run "Determination" in one of his best houses in Baltimore.

Arrangements have been made to open "Determination" in the New England States in E. F. Albee's Victoria Theatre, Providence, Rhode Island, beginning May 29th for a week's run.

There are several additional contracts pending which will be announced shortly.

United Film Productions Enters the Field

With Tefft Johnson as the president and the director general, a new film corporation has entered the field under the name of the United Film Productions, Inc., with offices at 220 West 42nd street, New York City. James L. Givan is the vice president and Samuel Efrus, one of the pioneers in the industry, the secretary and treasurer.

It is the intention of the company to specialize in feature productions of the highest type only. Preparations are now under way for the first production.

Dillon, Now a Producer, Finds Scripts Plentiful

"Now that I am finally ensconsed in the ranks of the independent picture producers, I find myself surrounded on all sides by scripts—scenarios of all description—and judging from the rate they continue to pour in from the city and country writers every mother's son and daughter throughout the land seems to be writing for the films."

Thus spoke Edward Dillon, who for the past ten years has been directing stories for everybody else but himself, and now is turning out his own pictures that will be released under the auspices of the Genius Film Productions, Inc. Dillon is completing his first subject, which will likely be christened "A Lady by Luck."

Hamilton Series Sold in New Territories

McGovern and Agler announce that the series of two-reel Westerns featuring Shorty Hamilton, which they are releasing on the State Right market, have been sold in four more territories: H. C. Simeral & Co., of Pittsburgh, for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Federated Film Exchange, of Kansas City, for Kansas and Western Missouri; Screen Art Pictures, of Philadelphia, for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey; Federated Film Exchange of Omaha, for Iowa and Nebraska.

Two New Territories Buy Warner Picture

Two more territorial deals were consummated this week by Harry M. Warner for the latest Harry Rapf production, "Your Best Friend," starring Vera Gordon, it is announced.

E. G. Tunstall, Tri-State Film Exchange, Minneapolis, has purchased the exclusive territorial rights for Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and Upper Penninsula of Michigan and Wisconsin. S. Schultz & Screenart Pictures Corp., Boston, have secured the New England states.

"Put and Take" Proves Winner in "Cincy"

Another of the Percy and Ferdie Hallroom Comedies, "Put and Take," was a feature on the program of the Lyric theatre in Cincinnati last week. Report comes from the Standard Film Service Company which is handling these two-reelers in that territory, that it went over big.

Jessen's Studio News by Wire

UNIVERSAL

The east has been engaged to support Hoot Gibson in "Trimmed and Burning." It will include Patsy Ruth Miller, Alfred Hollingsworth, Fred Kohler, Otto Hoffman, Dick La Reno and Hugh Southerland. Harry Pollard will direct.

Jack Conway, who four years ago directed Herbert Rawlinson in his first feature production, "Come Through," which was highly successful, is to remake that film with the same star. The continuity is now being prepared. Rawlinson has just completed "Black Bag" under the direction of Stewart Paton.

Hobart Henley has finished the latest Marie Prevost subject, "Her Night of Nights." Miss Prevost is next to play in, "Never Mind Tomorrow."

William Worthington has completed, "Out of the Silent North" with Frank Mayo. He will next film, "Afraid to Fight," from the original by Leet Renick Brown.

Tod Browning is using 800 people in "Under Two Flags" scenes.

The "Buffalo Bill" serial has been finished and "With Stanley in Africa" is in the thirteenth episode. The "Robinson Crusoe" troupe is also on the thirteenth episode.

Molly Malone is playing the lead for Reginald Denny in the mounted police short subject, "Jaws of Steel."

Four Jewel specials are in preparation for production: Fanny Hurst's "Oats for the Woman"; Booth Tarkington's "The Flirt," all star; "The Suburban," Charles T. Dazey's melodrama, all star: and Stroheim begins production within ten days, with Mary Philbin playing the lead.

GOLDWYN

UNITED STUDIOS

Lloyd Hamilton and Jack White units have completed the Current Series Comedies for Educational. Their contract has been renewed and they will start production of a new series shortly.

A radio transmission outfit of the type used by United States Radio stations is being installed on the deck set at the United Studios for Allan Holubar's "Hurricane's Gal."

Richard Walton Tully has received from a Persian silk merchant material for the costumes to be used in "The Masquerader."

"Mr. Pim Passes By" Filmed

Photoplay Version of Famous Stage Drama Due for an Early Release

"MR. PIM PASSES BY," photoplay version of the famous stage drama, is announced as an early release by Second National Pictures Corporation. Out of an unusually large cast for a society and human interest drama of this type, the following are featured in the production: Peggy Hyland, Maudie Dunham, Campbell Gullan, Henry Kendall, George Marden, Wyndham Guise and Tom Reynolds. All of these have played star parts and enacted leading roles in other super specials and future productions, it is said.

The engaging story of "Mr. Pim Passes By" has been exploited, and still is prominent before the public in several ways. It was launched as a stage drama, enjoying extended and successful runs in New York and London, later making decided hits in other cities of the United States and British dominions. At present road companies are playing to large audiences here and abroad.

The second phase in the career of "Mr. Pim" and his passing was the super-production of the A. A. Milne play as a photodrama, now ready for release by Second National, but in the meantime plans were formed and carried out for the novelization of the Milne play. The book was brought out last month, and is said to be attracting widespread attention.

The photodrama is said to be replete with delightfully surprising occurrences and quaintly humorous situations. It deals with the love affairs of young people and the absent mindedness of a middle aged scientist, whose remarkable mind retains clear impressions of events in his life, but is prone to become confused in regard to time and circumstance. The result is a series of complications at once tensely dramatic and exeeedingly funny.

Salesman EnthusesOver Carewe Production

C. C. Burr, president of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., received the following telegram from Lester Scott, special sales representative of the organization, regarding Edwin Carewe's independent special just screened, "I Am the Law":

"My judgment is that picture is beautifully photographed, excellently acted, well directed, intense melodrama, extremely gripping, with several genuine thrills. Will thoroughly please audience and satisfy the most critical. Carewe is leaving Monday with sample print. Domestic negative completely matched, footage about 6,600 feet. Don't advise cutting."

PICKFORD-FAIRBANKS STUDIO

The big sets for the thirteenth century spectacle in which Fairbanks plays the role of Robin Hood, have been completed, and the big scenes requiring one thousand people are being shot this week.

Frank D. Ormston has been engaged as art director for the Pickford company. He is laying plans for "Tess of the Storm Country."

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY

Joseph Henaberry and the troupe filming "The Man Unconquerable," starring Jack Holt, are working at Balboa Beach for the pearl fishing scenes. The picture is an adaptation by Julien Josephson from the original by Hamilton Smith. Sylvia Breamer leads the cast with Clarence Burton, Jean Debriac and Edward Stevens.

Betty Compson with Director Phillip Rosen and the company is leaving for San Francisco for aboard-ship episodes.

Sam Woods will complete "Her Gilded Cage" this week. At its conclusion Gloria Swanson will leave immediately for a trip to Europe.

Dorothy Dalton is on her way east for a two weeks vacation. Upon her return she will play in "The Siren Call," under the direction of Irvin Willat.

Milton Sills and Wanda Hawley will be principals in the George Melford production, "Burning Sands," adapted by Olga Printzlau from the Arthur Weigall novel.

FOX

Jack Ford is directing an all-star subject suggested by the poem, The Village Blacksmith. The screen play title is, "Kentucky Days," by Paul Sloan. The cast includes Tom Santschi, Tully Marshall, Virginia Valli, Bessie Love, Pat Moore, Dave Butler, George Hackathorn, Caroline Rankin, Lonn Poff and Gordon Griffith.

Edward Sedgwick has been engaged to direct Tom Mix in "The Gun Fanner." Barbara Bedford has the leading feminine role.

Tom Buckingham is directing a series of Western pictures.

Emmett Flynn will finish shooting "A Fool There Was" this week. Members of the Chicago Grand Opera troupe here took part in the Venetian scenes made Saturday.

Harry Beaumont will again direct Shirley Mason. The subject of her next picture has not yet been announced.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

New Paramount Picture Is Well Received

PARAMOUNT has apparently put over another comedy ten-strike in James Cruze's all-star special production, "Is Matrimony a Failure?" if reports from Los Angeles, where the picture had its premiere at Grauman's Theatre, Sunday, April 2, are any criterion.

In a telegram received from Jerome Beatty by S. R. Kent at the Paramount home office, Mr. Beatty said:

"Edwin Schallert in The Los Angeles Times says this morning in reviewing 'Is Matrimony a Failure?': 'It is the best combination of amusing people and clever direction that has been seen on the screen since our old friend Hector learned to say bow-wow."

Richard Travers Back on Screen Shortly

Richard Travers, one of the handful of popular leading men in the years "before the war," is going to execute a "come-back" in "The Love Nest," the Wray Physioc Production to be released shortly through the Gunning organization. Mr. Travers appeared in many of the old-time successes put out under the Essanay and Fox banners.

Although at the height of his screen career at the time that the war broke out, Travers enlisted and saw three years of active service abroad. He was wounded and it took a year in a hospital to put him on his feet again. In "The Love Nest" Mr. Travers appears opposite Jean Scott, late of Belasco's "Kiki" company. Those who have seen the picture declare Travers is as good as he ever was and "is back on the screen to stay."

International Cast in "Nero"

New William Fox Picture Hailed as "Most Stupendous Ever Made"

IN a statement issued this week from the Fox Film headquarters in New York are disclosed for the first time many of the details concerning the William Fox production, "Nero," which is styled by officials of that organization as "the most stupendous screen production ever made."

"While most of the scenes in 'Nero' were photographed in Rome and its vicinity, some were taken near Naples and in the Alps," the Fox statement reads in part. "Those members of the Fox expedition who have already returned to this country declare that for natural beauty the backgrounds used in 'Nero' never have been surpassed. In addition to the many historic buildings and places shown, the Fox organization built an entire city on the outskirts of Rome, only to destroy it."

The cast is "a truly international one." Jacques Gretillat of the Theatre Odeon, who plays the role of Nero, is one of the most popular actors in France. He was recently engaged to support Sarah Bernhardt in "La Gloire." Paulette is also another favorite of Paris who plays a leading role in "Nero." Violet Mersereau represents the American screen in the cast. Edy Darclea heads a long list of prominent screen stars who appear in this picture. Alexander Salvini, a member of the famous Salvini family of actors, is also cast in a prominent role.

The Fox offices in Italy were in command of J. Gordon Edwards, who directed the production. Virginia Tracy supplied the screen story of "Nero." The expedition was under the general supervision of Abraham Carlos, for many years representative of the Fox organization on the continent of Europe. John D. Braddon was the technical editor. Harry Plimpton was in charge of the photography. It is stated that more than 125,000 feet of film was exposed before the completion of the production.

Current Paramount Issues

"Bought and Paid For" and Pola Negri Picture Set for April 16

TWO Paramount pictures, William de Mille's production, "Bought and Paid For," with Jack Holt and Agnes Ayres, and Pola Negri in the UFA production, "The Devil's Pawn," are announced for release April 18 by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

George Broadhurst's play, "Bought and Paid For," generally regarded as the most thrilling of modern melodramas of married life, is said to have been admirably adapted for the screen by Clara Beranger, scenarist of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," "Miss Lulu Bett" and other highly successful Paramount pictures. The direction was handled with the skill which might be expected from William de Mille, who is a specialist in this type of photoplay.

The picture is a literal translation of the stage play, which ran to nearly 500 performances in its original New York engagement and was recently revived with conspicuous success. Miss Ayres as Virginia Blaine and Jack Holt as Robert Stafford, her husband, are admirably cast. Walter Hiers, in the role of Virginia's impoverished brother-in-law, gives a delightful touch of comedy, and Leah Wyant, George Kuwa, Bernice Frank and Ethel Wales complete a most satisfactory cast.

In the Pola Negri picture, "The Devil's Pawn," the famous European star has another modern dramatic role which, Paramount asserts, will establish her more firmly than ever as an emotional actress of first prominence.

The story is a screen adaptation of the famous play, "The Yellow Ticket," by John Brennert and John Kraly. In the original American version Florence Reed scored probably the greatest triumph of her stage career. Harry Liedtke appears opposite Miss Negri in the role of a medical student and many of Europe's foremost screen artists are seen in the supporting parts.

New Head in Hodkinson Washington Exchange

Harold A. Gillespie, formerly manager for A. H. Fisher Features, Inc., has been engaged as office manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Exchange in Washington, according to an announcement issued from the Hodkinson offices recently.

Pollard New Director for Hoot Gibson

HARRY POLLARD, who has topped off an exceptionally fine record as a director in the moving picture business with the sensationally successful "Leather Pushers" series, has been engaged by Universal to direct a five-reel feature at Universal City. Just before he left for the East, Carl Laemmle assigned Pollard to direct Hoot Gibson, Western star.

The vehicle selected is Hapsburg Liebe's Collier's story, "Trimmed and Burning."

The cast includes Patsy Ruth Miller, Alfred Hollingsworth, Fred Kohler, Dick LaReno, R. Hugh Sutherland and Otto Hoffman.

"The Prodigal Judge" on Honor List

In her list of "the best photoplays of March," Mae Tinee, motion picture critic of the Chicago Tribune, includes Vitagraph's "The Prodigal Judge." Miss Tinee awarded second place to this picture in her list of "ten favorites." She writes:

"'The Prodigal Judge' features Maclyn Arbuckle and is a clever character study of a lovable old reprobate who had been a great man in his time. He becomes a greater man than he was through the conquering of himself under the prod of love and trust from an unexpected quarter.

"There's a simplicity and charm about 'The Prodigal Judge' that makes it a 'best' picture."

Special Representative for Century Is Named

JULIUS STERN, president of Century Film Corporation, has been looking for a long time for a man capable of handling the exhibiting as well as the distributing end of pictures. In the appointment of Henry Wilkinson he believes he has solved the problem. Mr. Wilkinson will tour about 150 key cities in the interests of Century comedies shown at first run theatres. He will help properly exploit the four principal Century Comedy units Baby Peggy, Brownie the Wonder Dog, Lee Moran and Harry Sweet.

Wilkinson has had extensive motion picture experience. He was the former Realart manager at Buffalo and afterward Pittsburgh. He left the exchange position to take over the managership of the Olympic theatre in Pittsburgh, and after he made a success of this Arthur S. Kane, formerly with Realart, induced him to accept an executive position with the sales organization of the Charles Ray pictures. His first stop in the interest of Century Comedies is Chicago, where he will stay several weeks.

Watterson R. Rothacker, Chicago practical picture producer, has received word of history's nearest-to-the-North-Pole movie show. It was on Victoria Island, hundreds of miles beyond the Arctic Circle. The films and portable projection equipment were carried 300 miles by dog sled. The Esquimos were at first frightened, thinking the shadow figures were ghosts. The program was a "warm" one—three pictures visualizing the American coal, sulphur and asbestos industries, which were produced by the Rothacker Film Co. in co-operation with the United States Bureau of Mines.

Another Zane Grey Story for Goldwyn Release

Benjamin B. Hampton's second contribution to the Goldwyn program, released in the same group as "When Romance Rides," is a thrilling adaptation of another story by the same author, Zane Grey. At present it is called "Golden Dreams," but this title may be changed before the picture reaches the theatres.

Three directors were associated with Hampton in the making of this production, Jean Hersholt, Gus Peterson and C. O. Rush, and they utilize with fine effect a large company of actors, supplemented by a whole circus of wild animals.

Claire Adams, who also carries the leading role in "When Romance Rides," portrays the heroine.

Selznick's April Releases

Owen Moore and Eugene O'Brien Vehicles and Talmadge Revivals

SELECT EXCHANGES, now under the general management of John S. Woody, will have four Selznick pictures for distribution during April—an Owen Moore and Eugene O'Brien original and revivals of Norma and Constance Talmadge features, constituting a foursome of attractions from which much is to be expected. The Owen Moore release is of first importance in that it returns this star to the screen in a new picture, after a lapse of several months.

"Reported Missing," starring Mr. Moore, has April 5 as its release date; April 10 brings Norma Talmadge in "The Safety Curtain;" April 20, Eugene O'Brien in "Channing of the Northwest," and April 30 Constance Talmadge in "Experimental Marriage." The first public showing of "Reported Missing" was given at the Ritz, evening of April 7, before an invited audience.

Eugene O'Brien figures in "The Safety Curtain" as Norma Talmadge's leading man and is also the star of "Channing of the Northwest." "The Safety Curtain" is one of the pictures Lewis J. Selznick produced at the time he was making the Talmadge girls screen stars, and the Constance Talmadge revival, "Experimental Marriage," enters the same class. Harrison Ford is leading man for Constance. "Channing of the Northwest" presents O'Brien in the role of an officer in the Canadian Mounted Police. Norma Shearer is the leading woman.

A Whitman Bennett Series

Betty Blythe Signed by Producer to Star in Four Special Features

ANNOUNCEMENT is made that Whitman Bennett has exercised his option on the services of Betty Blythe, and has signed the erstwhile "Queen of Sheba" and the present "Fair Lady" to play the stellar roles in a series of at least four special productions to be made under Whitman Bennett's personal supervision during the next twelve months.

The exact channel through which these productions will be released is not disclosed in the report, but it is officially stated that three advantageous releasing proposals are being considered and the fact that the contract with Miss Blythe becomes effective May 1st, and that the first picture of the series will probably be started not later than May 30th may be taken as evidence that releasing facilities are not troubling the producer.

Regarding the subjects to be filmed and the quality of the production, Mr. Bennett says that he has found material for twenty pictures suitable for Miss Blythe and that the first four, tentatively selected, are society dramas of exceptional melodramatic qualities and strong feminine appeal. Two of these subjects have already been put into scenario form by Dorothy Farnum, and elaborate scenic dressings have been prepared by Elsa Lopez. An elaborate advertising and publicity campaign is also reported to have been laid out for the new series.

"Oh Promise Me" Wins Legion Support

"Oh, Promise Me!" a recent Educational release of the Christie Comedy Series, featuring Neal Burns, and which was made with the cooperation of the Hollywood Post of the American Legion, is attracting an unusual amount of attention for a two-reel comedy throughout the country, especially from Legion men and their friends.

All disabled veterans of the World War, both in and out of hospitals, were invited guests of the California Theatre in Los Angeles at the first showing.

The Post War Service League, an organization of Hollywood women, who are assisting ex-service men, furnished automobiles to transport the wounded veterans to the theatre.

"Loves of Pharaoh" in Eighth Week of Run

"The Loves of Pharaoh," the Paramount feature produced by Ernest Lubitsch and featuring Emil Jannings, Dagny Servaes and Harry Liedtke, has entered upon the eighth week of its engagement at the New York Criterion theatre, thus equalling the run of George Fitzmaurice's "Peter Ibbetson" at the same theatre.

"The Loves of Pharaoh" has been tentatively set for release on the Paramount schedule in August.

Foreign Rights Sold on Gunning Releases

AN indication of the rapid improvement in the film foreign distribution field comes from the offices of the Apollo Trading Corporation. Within twenty-four hours after Apollo had announced it had taken over exclusive foreign handling of Gunning pictures, it sold for what is reported to be a record figure, the South American, West Indian and Mexican rights on "What Do Men Want?" and "The Blot," two Lois Weber productions; and on "White Hands," the Max Graf production starring Hobart Bosworth. The purchaser was Chester E. Sawyer of 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York.

Gladys Walton Picture Cast Completed

A cast has been engaged by Universal for Gladys Walton's forthcoming starring vehicle. "The Trouper," a comedy-drama tale of stage life concerning a wardrobe slavey.

Jack Perrin will play opposite the star. Other well known members of the cast are Thomas Holding, Kathleen O'Connor, Roscoe Karns Tom D. Guise, Mary True, Mary Philbin and Florence D. Lee.

Harry Harris, who has directed Miss Walton in several previous successes, will direct "The Trouper." A. P. Younger wrote the story.

Wilson Will Supervise "Broken Chains"

Abraham Lehr, vice-president in charge of production at the Goldwyn studios, where "Broken Chains," winner of the first prize in the Chicago Daily News contest, will be produced, has assigned Carey Wilson, associate editor of the Goldwyn studios, to supervise the production.

The prize-winning tale has a gripping theme, and an adequate production is promised.

Newspapers Using "The Rosary" as Serial

Newspapers from every section of the country are reported asking for exclusive rights for publication, in their territory, of the fictionized story of "The Rosary," the Selig-Rork production that is being released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. The fictionized version of this story, woven around the theme of "The Rosary," has been prepared by Scoop Conlon so as to run for eight successive days in serial form. Exclusive publication rights are being offered to one newspaper in each territory.

Within the short space of less than a week, more than 35 papers have accepted this story as a medium for interesting their readers and stimulating circulation.

"The Sheik" Breaks Repeat Booking Record

What is said to be a record for repeat bookings within a brief period of time has been established by George Melford's Paramount production, "The Sheik," in the Chicago territory. The Howard theatre on the dividing line between Chicago and Evanston played the picture for four days to capacity audiences. The Hoyburn theatre in Evanston followed in for two days. Meanwhile the Star, also in Evanston, had booked the picture second-run on the Hoyburn for one day, playing it January 18 to hold-out business. The Hoyburn booked the picture again, playing it April 3rd, but again all of the people wanting to see the film could not be accommodated. And so the Hoyburn booked it again for April 22nd, making this the picture's third engagement in Evanston and the fourth in the territory in less than three months.

Lasky Starts Filming "The Siren Call"

The work of filming the important scenes for the Irvin Willat production, "The Siren Call," the Paramount picture in which Dorothy Dalton will play the leading role, starts at the Lasky studio April 17. In the meantime, some snow scenes have already been taken on location at Huntington Lake, Cal., which is virtually virgin soil for pictures.

Miss Dalton is now in New York but will return to Hollywood in a few days for the actual start of the picture.

"The Old Nest" Ideal for Mother's Day

An ideal picture for showing in every motion picture theatre in the country during the week in which falls Mother's Day—the week beginning Sunday, May 14—is Goldwyn's production of Rupert Hughes' heart-gripping story of home, "The Old Nest."

Taking advantage of this fact, Goldwyn has started an advertising campaign to induce first-run theatres to book "The Old Nest" for return showing for Mother's Day Week.

New Pathe Playlet Series

Second Group Is Announced for Weekly Release Starting May 14

THAT public taste inclines strongly toward condensed action and the shorter feature forms, Pathe claims is fully demonstrated by the avidity with which exhibitors have accepted the series of Pathe Playlets issued during the last three months. It is a fortunate development of the short subject policy upon which Pathe concentrated nearly two years ago. These favorite features with celebrated stars and supporting casts, reduced in length to three reels without sacrifice of any part of their interest or dramatic appeal, have made a record so favorable that a second series of fifteen Pathe Playlets is announced for weekly release beginning May 14th. The following list is presented together with the release dates:

May 14—"The Ruler of the Road," starring Frank Keenan; May 21—"The Cry of the Weak," starring Fannie Ward; May 28—"A Daughter of the West," starring Baby Marie Osborne and directed by William Bertram; July 30—"Twenty-One," starring Bryant Washburn in the story by George Randolph Chester; June 11—"Carolyn of the Corners," starring Bessie Love in a story from the book by Ruth Belmore Endicott, directed by Robert Thornby; June 18—"The Silver Girl," starring Frank Keenan; June 26—"A Japanese Nightingale," starring Fannie Ward; July 2—"The Ghost of the Rancho," starring Bryant Washburn; July 9—"A Little Diplomat," starring Baby Marie Osborne in the story by Emma Bell Clifton, directed by Stuart Paton; July 16—"Todd of the Times," starring Frank Keenan; July 23—"Arms and the Woman," starring Mary Nash; June 4th—"Kidder & Ko.," starring Bryant Washburn; August 6—"A Little Sister of Everybody," starring Bessie Love; "August 13—"Captain Kiddo," starring Baby Marie Osborne; and August 20—"Our Better Selves," starring Fannie Ward.

New Series of Westerns

Universal Outlines Specials Which Will Feature Denny and Santschi

ANNOUNCEMENT was made at the Universal offices this week of a departure from the usual two-reel western release which the company has been offering for the last year. The two-reel western brand has been definitely established as a widely used release and exhibitors are now demanding definite stars and a definite number of pictures which they can depend upon.

For that reason it has been decided to release Tom Santschi in eight two-reel western pictures and Reginald Denny in another series. In neither case is any attempt to be made to make the stories of a series character, such as the Cyclone Smith series or the Leather Pushers series. A wide diversity of subjects and stories will be developed for both stars, although all of them will be western in character.

Tom Santschi has been placed under the direction of Robert North Bradbury. Reginald Denny will be under the direction of Nat Ross.

The new regime will start May 20th, when Tom Santschi's first release, "A Guilty Cause," will be offered. This picture is already in the exchanges, so that exhibitors will be able to size up the series from the first release.

It is planned to alternate the Denny and Santschi pictures. The first Denny picture will be released on May 27th, and is nearly completed at Universal City, under the working title of "The Outlaw."

"Gold Plated" Getting Finishing Touches

Under the working title of "Gold Plated" the first of the Edward Dillon Specials to be produced by Dillon under the banner of the Genius Film Productions, is getting its finishing touches.

The cast is an all-popularity one. Florence Dixon, the leading woman has appeared in other pictures but is best remembered by her comely features being used in a number of big national advertising campaigns.

In addition to Miss Dixon there appears: E. K. Lincoln, Cyril Chadwick, Hedda Hopper, Julia Swayne Gordon, Margaret Seddon, Maude Turner Gordon, Charles Hammond, Richard Carlyle, James Harrison and Emily Fitzroy.

The picture, which will be the first of four subjects yearly that Dillon will produce, will be released late in the spring.

Sol Lesser Due in East for Conference

Sol Lesser, vice-president of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., and one of the big guns behind the production of Jackie Coogan's pictures, is enroute to New York City where he plans to confer with Associated First National officials on various details of the picture industry pertaining to the west coast.

Chief among these is the distribution of Jackie Coogan's latest photoproduction "Trouble," which is now completed and ready for release. According to Lesser "Trouble" is a typical Coogan picture, full five reel length and a worthy offering to follow up the tremendous success enjoyed by "Peck's Bad Boy" and the "My Boy" attractions.

"Four Horsemen" Breaks Record in San Diego

Exhibition as a first-run attraction in three downtown theatres, five weeks' total run, at top or advanced prices, is the record of the Rex Ingram production for Metro of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" in San Diego, Calif.

The picture played the Spreckles theatre first for two weeks; afterwards at the Rialto for another fortnight; and still later at the Plaza for a week. "Business remarkable, with waiting lines up to closing day," was the wire Plaza sent to Metro's Los Angeles exchange upon the completion of the run.

Stanley Circuit Books Gunning Series

The Stanley Circuit, of Pennsylvania, has booked the entire Entertainment Series of ten pictures released through the Gunning organization, it is announced by Ricord Gradwell, managing director of the organization. Mr. Ricord declares that this latest addition to the list of circuits which have signed up for the whole series of box-office, entertaining features, "is further evidence of the all-around appeal and attractiveness of the series."

"Timber Queen" to Be Mid-Summer Issue

Pathe has arranged to release its new Ruth Roland serial in the middle of July. This decision was made, according to the Pathe statement, because "The Timber Queen" is an ideal attraction to offset the customary hot weather slump that proves so depressing to the box-office. Many of the scenes are laid in the ice-fields of Alaska, and the local color of the North realistically presented is declared by the Pathe headquarters to be "cooling in itself."

A strong cast of players has been chosen to surround the serial star in her new vehicle. Bruce Gordon, formerly a star under J. Stuart Blackton, is seen in the hero role of Don Mackay, the masculine lead. Val Paul is the principal "heavy," assisted by Frank Lackteen, seen in previous serials of the star, and Leo Willis, also a chapter veteran. Among others who take prominent roles in the chapter play are Bull Montana, Al Ferguson, Otto Freez and Chris Linton.

Completing Cast for Chas. Ray Picture

With but one or two exceptions Charles Ray has completed the cast for "The Tailor Made Man," his first super-production for United Artists release. Mr. Ray, naturally, will play the role of the hero, John Paul Bart, while Ethel Grandin has been selected for the part of Tanya Huber. Thomas Ricketts takes the part of Anton Huber. Others in the cast are Victor Potel as Peter; Douglas Gerrard as Dr. Sonntag; Stanton Heck as Abraham Nathan; Fred Thomson as Mr. Stanlaw; Kate Lester as Mrs. Stanlaw; Jacqueline Logan as Corinne Stanlaw; Frank Butler as Theodore Jellicot; Nelle Peck Saunders as Kitty Dupuy; Charlotte Pierce as Bessie Dupuy; Frederick Vroom as Harley Stannard; Thomas Jefferson as Gerald Whitcomb; Henry Barrows as Hobart Sears; Eddie Gribbon as Russell; with other roles taken by Fred Sullivan, S. J. Bingham, Frank Stockdale, Aileen Manning and John McCullam.

"High Fliers" Aviator "Lands on Mars"

The trials of an aviator whose machine runs away with him to unheard of altitudes and finally lands him on the planet Mars is the theme of "High Fliers," Harry Sweet's latest Century Comedy directed by Alf Goulding.

Little Johnny Fox the newest child recruit to the ranks of Century appears as Harry Sweet's mechanician.

Ready for Camera Work on Pickford Picture

Charles Rosher, photographer for Mary Pickford, has arrived in Los Angeles to begin work on Miss Pickford's next picture, "Tess of the Storm Country," locations for which are now being selected by John S. Robertson, director. The scenario for "Tess of the Storm Country is being prepared by E. Loyd Sheldon, well-known scenario writer.

8 New Goldwyn Pictures

Diversified Group, Ready Soon, Will Cover All Photo Play Angles

PERHAPS not in its history has Goldwyn Pictures Corporation released such a diversified group of pictures as the eight photoplays included in its fourth group of fifth year pictures, prints of which will soon be in all of the Goldwyn branch exchanges. In the list will be found pictures whose chief appeal is romance, mystery, adventure, comedy, farce, drama and melodrama.

The eight pictures are: "Yellow Men and Gold," an adventure story of hidden treasure, by Gouverneur Morris; "The Wall Flower," written and directed by Rupert Hughes; "The Dust Flower," Basil King's first contribution to the screen since his famous "Earthbound;" "When Romance Rides," Benjamin B. Hampton's film adaptation of Zane Grey's novel, "Wildfire;" "Always the Woman," Betty Compson's own production, starring herself, made for Goldwyn release; "Golden Dreams," another Benjamin B. Hampton picturization of a Zane Grey novel; "Mr. Barnes of New York," from Archibald Clavering Gunter's famous old novel, starring Tom Moore, and "Head Over Heels," a lively farce starring Mabel Normand.

"Yellow Men and Gold" is another Gouverneur Morris film, and it is an adventure tale pure and simple, with melodramatic punches and thrills and permeated with Morris's flair for character drawing. Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix are featured in the photoplay. Others in the cast are Henry Barrows, Rosemary Theby, Richard Tucker, Fred Kohler, Henry T. Hebert, William Moran, Goro Kino, George King, William A. Carroll and R. T. Frazier. Irving Willat was especially engaged by Goldwyn to direct this picture.

"Dollar Devils" Completed

First of Victor Schertzinger's Series for Gunning in East Soon

"DOLLAR DEVILS," the first of four Victor Schertzinger special productions to be distributed by Wid Gunning, Inc., has been completed, and a print of it is expected in the East in a short while.

Those who have seen the picture in its completed state in Los Angeles declare that it is another "Miracle Man," which Wid Gunning also produced in association with George Loane Tucker. Joe Dowling, who played a prominent part in "The Miracle Man" has the leading role in "Dollar Devils."

Others in the all-star cast with him are Cullen Landis, the Universal and Goldwyn player; Hallam Cooley, who has played lead parts with Mary Pickford and in Universal and Paramount productions; Andrew Arbuckle, who has been seen in Metro, Ince-Triangle, Artcraft, Pickford and Hampton pictures; and Eva Novak, another member of a talented screen family.

Joe Dowling, after "Dollar Devils" was finished, declared it was his greatest part since "The Miracle Man," and said that the whole production rivalled that famous hit. "There is no character outside of 'The Miracle Man' that I like to play so well, and that I am sure will appeal so much to the public," he said. "It is a strong, human-interest story, with plenty of heart pull, kindly humor, atmosphere, and strong dramatic situations. It has everything a picture should have—that simple power and mass appeal that made 'The Miracle Man' an outstanding success."

Fairbanks Starts New Film

Next Picture to Reveal Romance of Mediaeval English Chivalry

FROM the romance of adventure as typified by the Gascon D'Artagnan in "The Three Musketeers" to the romance of English chivalry in the twelfth century is the step being taken by Douglas Fairbanks in his new photoplay, work on which is under full speed at his new Hollywood studio.

Fairbanks long has wanted to do early English romance. While "The Mark of Zorro" was full of villains and villainy, dash and spirit, and "The Three Musketeers" full of poetry, swash-buckling, French intrigue and dramatic beauty, Mr. Fairbanks was not content to stop there. He wanted robust, full-blooded, healthy and rollicking romance. His instincts led him to the period of the Crusades. There he caught fleeting glimpses of Richard, the Lion-hearted, of Robin Hood and his Sherwood Forest, of Nottingham—of all those pictured and stories and almost legendary giants of the times, and to himself he said:

"We will do a new romance, so full of the spirit of the twelfth century that no one watching it can remember that he is prosy or dull, or that his life is a monotony of small events, or that he lives in the day of the flivver and the vacuum cleaner. We will start from the bottom to build romance."

And so the new picture was conceived and preliminaries started which has kept a score or so of experts busy for a considerable period, delving into literary sources, constructing the screen story, and designing historical sets for the new production. The new sets are said to surpass anything ever seen on the screen for sheer beauty.

"Midnight Call" Story with Human Theme

"The Midnight Call" is announced by R-C as a picture with a real human theme. This Emory Johnson production was recently completed. The cast is all-star including such names as John Walker, Ella Hall, Claire McDowell and Ralph Lewis, but it is the gripping story which will be the special feature of the production.

"We have come to the day," states Mr. Johnson, "when the public is demanding consistent, human stories. We do not believe that the American people want to see only pictures of the ultra-rich. Our characters in 'The Midnight Call' are simple folk—belonging to the great American middle class. The drama and comedy of their lives will reflect the emotions of the great majority of picturegoers. The biggest successes have not been the pictures with the biggest sets—but they have been the pictures with the most human stories."

"Silas Marner" Is Set for April 30 Issue

Associated Exhibitors announces the release of its newest production. "Silas Marner," April 30th, the event marking an important addition to the long list of literary masterpieces that have found their way to the screen.

"Silas Marner" is declared to possess all the qualities necessary to a picture of assured box-office value. To begin with, the name is one to conjure with wherever the works of George Eliot are read, of course, is everywhere that the English language is known. School teachers will be prompt to recognize this subject, presented in pictured form, as admirably suited to the needs of classes in English literature.

Laemmle Appoints Far East Representative

Upon the recommendation of James V. Bryson, Export Manager for Universal, and who recently returned from a long stay in Australasia, Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, has appointed Tom R. Richards, of Sydney, Australia, as his personal representative in the Far East.

Richards is now enroute for Java, where he will spend most of this year studying moving picture conditions in that country. Prior to his engagement by Universal, he was the circuit manager of the Union Theatres, handling most of the prominent theatres in Australia.

South Australia House Books Successes

The York theatre, the newest addition to the amusement world of Adelaide, South Australia, has met with singular success since its opening last November. It has handled First National attractions. Opening with "A Midnight Bell," a First National attraction starring Charles Ray, the management has discovered that this brand of pictures always insures capacity houses, owing to their popularity with the fans.

Special Showing for "Smilin' Through"

NORMA TALMADGE'S latest starring vehicle for First National release, "Smilin' Through," was presented in a special showing on the evening of April 5th at the Wurlitzer Hall, New York City, before a select audience. Chaplin's "Pay Day" was also on the program. Individual opinions expressed by many in the audience paid high tributes to the picture as one with a delightful story, superb costuming and setting, and splendid acting by the star and the members of her supporting cast.

The First National home-office announces a national campaign of exploitation and publicity in behalf of this production. A song bearing the same title as that of the picture has been written by Arthur A. Penn. M. Witmark and Sons are the publishers. The Witmark organization arranged for window displays on the picture and the song in 1,000 stores throughout the country. The song was also placed on phonograph records by the leading phonograph companies. Pianola records have also been made. The song was recently broadcasted by wireless from the New York and Chicago stations of the Radio Phone Co.

"A Pasteboard Crown" April 16 Release

"A Pasteboard Crown," out April 16th, Playgoers Pictures current release, is declared by its sponsors not only to tell a far more than ordinarily good story of life behind the scenes but to possess the additional virtue of being authoritative. It is adapted from the novel by Clara Morris, for nearly two generations an actress popular with the American public, and there would seem to be no person in the world better qualified to lead the layman back in the wings and reveal the mysteries of that enchanting life.

"A Pasteboard Crown" is a Travers Vale production, directed by Mr. Vale himself. It is in five reels. Evelyn Greeley has the role of the girl who secks a career and carvcs her way to—what? Robert Elliott plays the part of the actor-producer who exercises a commanding influence on the life of the ambitious young woman.

Julius Stern, President of Century Company

In the April 8 issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS it was incorrectly reported from Chicago that Julius Stern was the head of the Sunshine Comedies, instead of the Century Film Corp. The error was in connection with the item which had to do with Henry E. Wilkinson, personal representative of Stern.

Educational Week Forecast

Prediction Made New Record for Short-Subject Showings Is Due

THAT a new record in the number of short-subject showings will be set during Educational Pictures Week, April 16th to 23rd, is the prediction made by officials of Educational Films Corporation. From the number of bookings received it is judged that "the 100 per cent. representation in the theatres on this continent," sought for by the Educational exchanges, will be very closely approached, if not actually attained. In a statement issued during the week, Educational emphasizes the special co-operation with exhibitors undertaken by the company to insure the success of the week's campaign.

"Educational has gone to great lengths to co-operate with the exhibitors in the presentation of Educational Pictures during this week. Special one-sheets have been given gratis to these theatres, and many exhibitors have posted their towns with these one-sheets, calling special attention to their programs for this week and linking up closely with Educational's national advertising campaign. A forceful broadside, setting forth a complete review of Educational's recent releases giving brief sketches on each series of pictures and offering a number of suggestions for short subject programs has been sent to every exhibitor in the United States and Canada.

"The response from the exhibitors of the continent that is reported from every one of our branch offices assures us that the week of April 16-23 will not only be the biggest event in the history of Educational Film Exchanges, but will be a red letter week in the matter of short subjects for a long time to come," said E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, in discussing this week the final arrangements for the observation of Educational Pictures Week.

"Educational Pictures must come up to the highest standard of quality—consistently, week after week. But that is not all. The exhibitor must have every co-operation possible in making these pictures more acceptable to his patrons. We want him to know that Educational will be just as eager to co-operate with him every week of the coming year as it is this week, and with the unusually fine product which we have planned for the year this co-operation will make short-subjects more to him than they have ever been before."

First National Units Busy

Neilan Starts New Subject; Mabel Normand Vehicle Nearly Finished

DESPITE the advent of spring and the approach of the dog days, no slow-down is evident in the independent studios where productions for Associated First National relcase are made. In fact, seldom in their history have these producing units been busier than at prescnt.

Having completed "Fools First," based on the Saturday Evening Post story by Hugh McNair Kahler, Marshall Neilan is now shooting the first scenes of "Her Man," in which Matt Moore plays the leading role—that of an eccentric small town newspaperman. Others in the cast are Tom Wilson, Leatrice Joy, Raymond Griffith and George Barnum.

Under the direction of F. Richard Jones, the creator of "Molly O," the filming of Mabel Normand's new photoplay, "Suzanna," is rapidly approaching completion at the Sennett studios. "Suzanna" is a plot with Spanish atmosphere, and some of the final scenes will be taken in Mexico.

Thomas H. Ince's "The Brotherhood of Hate" comedy, directed by Lambert Hillyer, is now filming exteriors, with the work proceeding on schedule. Lloyd Hughes, Marguerite de la Motte, Frank Keenan and Edward Burns head the all-star cast.

"Snow Stuff" is going to be a feature of the next Buster Keaton comedy, the frozen-faced laugh-maker and his company having spent several weeks in Northern California where the congealed aqua pura abounds. Buster, whose current offering is "Cops," is keeping the title of the next one a deep secret.

Allen Holubar is approaching the finalc of "The Soul Seeker," in which Dorothy Phillips is starred. Much is expected of this production, which is declared to be a novelty. Most of the scencs werc taken on board an ocean liner, with Miss Phillips taking the role of an untamed child of the sea, ruling the crew of the vessel she owns, with an iron hand.

Katherine MacDonald has completed "Heroes and Husbands," and is now engaged on filming "The Woman Conquers."

Stallings Acquires New Universal Units

Charles P. Stallings, appointed a new unit production manager at Universal City after serving as location manager, has acquired three units.

The first units assigned to him was a Frank Mayo's company directed by William Worthington, making Drago's "Out of the Silent North." The company has just returned from Truckee, where snow scenes were made.

Two other units have been added. One is Hoot Gibson's next vehicle, "Trimmed and Burning" by Hapsburg Liebe.

The other is directed by Nat Ross and will make two reel Northwest mounted police stories, the first of which is "The Red Rider." Reginald Denny, star of the Universal-Jewel super two reelcr, "The Leather Pushers," will star. Nat Ross is a new Universal director.

R-C to Present Harry Carey in Specials

HARRY CAREY will continue in big special productions under the R-C banner, announces that company, which recently signed the popular Western actor for a series of pictures.

"We believe that we have a real winner in Harry Carey," states R-C Pictures, "and that we will be able to give the exhibitors a series of big special productions, able to compete with any brand on the market. Carey nas grown up with pictures and he has outgrown the mediocre type of Western as surely as the theatres have outgrown their nickelodion days. We will not be satisfied to supply exhibitors with average program features. Every Carey production under the R-C banner will be a big production, worthy of special exploitation and special presentation."

The new R-C star will be directed in his new series of pictures by Robert Thornby. It was Mr. Thornby who directed Carey in "The Fox," one of his biggest successes. Under Jesse D. Hampton he directed "Half a Chance" and "That Girl Montana," and for Pathe. "The Magnificent Brute," "The Blazing Trail" and "The Fox."

Press Reviewer Lauds "For Land's Sake"

One of the most favorable reviews ever printed in a newspaper about a short comedy is that which appeared in the Daily Planet of Chatham, Ontario, recently on a Jack White Production in the Educational-Mermaid Comedy Series, "For Land's Sake."

"If you want to laugh and laugh as you never did before go to the Princess theatre either today or tomorrow," says the critic of the Planet. "Forget about the bad water and the city assessors and drop into the little King Street theatre and laugh until you 'bust.' Without a shadow of doubt, 'For Land's Sake,' a 1922 Mermaid Comedy, is the best this writer has seen.

"As a rule comedies don't phizz on me but this one caught me right in the funny bone. If 'For Land's Sake' is a sample of what thc Mermaid company is going to give the public in this year of grace 1922 the Ontario Government is going to get rich with amusement taxes. 'For Land's Sake' is not only a scream but also a thriller."

"Intrigue" on the D. P. Howells Schedule

On page 2218 of the April 15th issue of Motion Picture News, the picture titled "Intrigue" was incorrectly designated as an "S. R. Levinson" feature. "Intrigue" is found on the David P. Howells schedule, and is not a Levinson picture.

Florence Vidor Sets Record

Booking Contracts for "Woman, Wake Up," Tribute to Star

FLORENCE VIDOR has established a new record for Associated Exhibitors. Officials of that organization declare that the demand for booking contracts for "Woman, Wake Up," since its release a month ago, has exceeded that ever made for any other Associated Exhibitors feature in a similar period.

These numerous bookings are the more notable because "Woman, Wake Up" is Miss Vidor's first starring vehicle. It is true enough that thousands had acclaimed this player worthy of stellar position before such recognition was given her officially, but the fact remains that the demand which was to prove a record-breaker came when she was yet to be seen in her first picture, from which she might gain whatever of added prestige comes from the description, "star."

In the first month of the run of "Woman, Wake Up" the picture was booked by first-run theatres in twenty-two Associated Exhibitors exchange cities.

The Florence Vidor feature began a week's run in John H. Kunsky's Madison theatre, in Detroit, April 9th; completed a week's engagement at Pantages', Salt Lake City, Wednesday; played the Majestic Amusement Company's Majestic, Tulsa, Okla., Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, and in the same week ran for two days each in the Empire, Montgomery, Ala., and the Grand, Columbus, Ga., both houses on the Lynch circuit. It also continued its round of the Loew circuit in Greater New York, playing Loew's 116th Street, Monday; the Victory, Monday and Tuesday, and the Forty-second Street Thursday.

During the week of April 16th the picture will be the feature attraction in R. C. Clemmer's Clemmer theatre, Spokane, and I. Libson's Family theatre, Cincinnati, and it is booked also for runs in I. J. Hoffman's Capitol, Ansonia, Conn.; the Fulton, Mr. Mertens, manager, Jersey City; the Tivoli, of the Lynch circuit, Chattanooga, Tenn., and T. S. Scott's Scott theatre, Jacksonville, Ill. It is to be shown in Loew's Colonial, Brooklyn, Wednesday.

"A Doll's House" Not "High Brow" Film

Charles Bryant, who directed Nazimova's screen adaption of Henrik Ibsen's "A Doll's House," released by United Artists, has the following to say about the popular appeal of this production:

"At first exhibitors were frightened at the name 'Ibsen' and were inclined to believe that 'A Doll's House' was a 'high-brow' play beyond the capacity of the average picture patron to thoroughly enjoy. But they quickly found, in the public response to the picture, that 'A Doll's House' was sheer entertainment, a thrilling story and packed with all those elements of suspense that go to make real drama, whether it be spoken or merely seen. Indeed, the picture version, suppressing the 'speeches' has a tendency to concentrate attention on the action and on the terrific conflict that goes on in the hearts of the inhabitants of Nora's 'Doll's House.' On the stage, 'the play's the thing;' on the screen it is the story that counts, and Ibsen is found to be one of the master story-tellers of the age, working in materials of vital truth and every-day experience."

Scenes for Fox Film Taken Aboard Liner

Passengers on the big steamship Yale, plying between Los Angeles and San Francisco, recently got more thrills than they expected, for they were "in the pictures." An all-star cast from the William Fox studios has been filming scenes on deck for the new "A Fool There Was," now in the making, under the direction of Emmett J. Flynn.

The company includes Irene Rich, Marjorie Daw, Lewis Stone, Mahlon Hamilton, William V. Mong, Wallace MacDonald, Harry Lonsdale, Estelle Taylor, who plays the famed vampire, and many others.

"Four Horsemen" Will Soon Have Played in Almost Every Country

THE Metro headquarters reports that within a short time "The Four Horsemen" will have had showings in every country of the world. The big special has already opened in Paris and is now showing in the Vaudeville theatre of the French capital. The picture will shortly be presented before audiences in Madrid, Milan, London, and Rome. Even "Germany is asking for it despite its anti-Prussian theme," declares the report from the Metro home-office. "The Four Horsemen" will open in Mexico City in May and in Australasia probably within a few months. Chinese and Japanese translators are beginning preliminary flourishes of their pens for the first sub-titles. Russia seems to be the only country in which a demand for a showing of the picture does not exist.

Sir William Jury, of Jury Imperial Pictures, Ltd., expects to close negotiations within the next fortnight for the Pavilion theatre, in London, for an indefinitely long exhibition of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

Roy Chandler, representing Chipman, Ltd., has arranged for the opening in Madrid of the Ingram masterpiece early in April, and later for its exhibition in Rome and Milan, and in the larger cities of Portugal, Jugo-Slavia, Greece, Rumania, Turkey and Bulgaria.

In the first half of May "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" will be seen in Mexico City, where a year or so ago Senor Ibanez received one of the most enthusiastic popular receptions ever accorded a visitor. South American presentations will follow soon after the Mexican.

"An anomalous demand is that of Germany," declares the Metro statement. "Teutonic theatrical promoters have been most zealous in their efforts to obtain exhibitors' rights to 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse.' This is taken by Metro as an indication of the popular revulsion against war by the masses of the German people."

One-Reel Novelty for R-C

"Starland Revue" to Be Released Every Second Week; First April 30

FOLLOWING its announcement last week that it would release the series of Hy Mayer Travelaughs, R-C Pictures this week names another short subject release. Commencing April 30th, R-C will issue every second week a single reel novelty, produced by Jack Cohn, to be known as "Starland Revue." This subject is described by R-C as being entirely different from any reel at present offered to exhibitors.

It will correspond to the theatrical section of the national magazines. Its object is to bring to the picture-goers intimate views of stage stars and scenes from plays. Not only will the biggest actors of today be shown, but big scenes from Broadway successes will be illustrated on the screen. In addition back-stage life, a subject always fascinating to the showmen, will be shown.

"We are taking advantage of the great interest of the American people in stage life and stage people," stated Mr. Cohn. "The public is never tired of seeing scenes of back-stage life. We are going ahead with this series and filming people who are nationally known as the leading exponents of the American stage."

R-C Pictures believes that in offering Starland Revue, they are affording the exhibitor with a novelty that is far more than a filler. It is a subject that can be exploited as a definite attraction declares the R-C home-office. All the heroes and heroines of the American drama will be brought forth for an introduction. In the first subject, for instance, Otis Skinner is seen making-up for his role in "Blood and Sand," and a dramatic scene from the play is depicted. Richard Bennett enacts a little human comedy with his wife and two children in his home.

Fifteen subjects will comprise the series of Hy Mayer Travelaughs which will be released by R-C Pictures, the first being issued April 23rd. Travelaughs will be issued every second week, alternating with Starland Revue.

Canadian Plans Ready for Rothacker O. K.

Watterson R. Rothacker starts back from the Coast April 12. When he returns to Chicago he will find waiting for him the report of A. L. Parker, whom he dispatched to Canada in connection with the proposed Canadian Rothacker laboratory, where prints would be made from American negatives for the Dominion trade and for export to British possessions offering preferential duties. Toronto has been tentatively decided upon as a site, although Parker was instructed to investigate the possibilities of Ottawa and Montreal. The head of the Rothacker Enterprises sails for Europe in the spring to start construction on a London Rothacker plant.

Record Lenten Bookings for "Behold the Man"

Exhibitors, pastors of churches, heads of community centers and organizations devoted to the betterment of motion pictures are all united in the warmest commendation of Pathe's production, "Behold the Man," the screen story of the Life of Christ shown in natural colors. Its bookings for Lent and Easter have established a new record, declares Pathe.

Fox Announces Human Interest Special

IN the big array of special productions to be issued by the Fox Film Corporation next season is a "great American family picture" that William Fox believes excels his famous "Over the Hill." The new picture is titled "The Town That Forgot God." It is described to be another human interest tale with wonderful heart pull, and was directed by Harry Millarde, who directed "Over the Hill."

The theme deals with the question of hypocrisy and the neglect of spiritual things, and is said to be a realistic picturization of the biblical proverb, "as ye sow, so shall ye reap." Eight months were spent by Millarde on the production at the New York studios of Fox and at Fort Lee, N. J., where an entire village was built for spectacular flood scenes.

Topical Writers Laud Film

Add Their Praise to That of Press Critics on Seeing "Gypsy Passion"

WHAT the New York press reviewers said of Vitagraph's "Gypsy Passion" upon its recent presentation at the Mark Strand theatre was published in last week's issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Their verdicts came as a matter of course and professional routine. But when writers concerned with more general comment on arts than specific criticisms of motion pictures deviate from their customary line of discussion to praise a picture and laud the acting of its leading player, the situation is a significant one. This is what happened with regards to "Gypsy Passion" and the work of its star, Madame Rejane.

Writes Heywood Broun in his "It Seems to Me" column in the New York World: "When Rejane smiles her great crooked smile it seems important. There is in it an emphasis beyond the range of pretty women. Something has happened. We have seen more than a smile. A mask has been lit and vitalized by an emotion."

And James Whittaker in his column on news and views, in writing of the controversy between certain theatrical producers and the Rev. John Roach Straton, says:

"The experts—with whom I wish humbly to disagree—agreed that the acting of the late Mme. Rejane is impressive as recorded by one film in which it is chemically preserved for posterity, but lacking in a quality known as camera technique. The film is called 'Gypsy Passion' for the American trade. * * * Most of the views of Madame Rejane in 'Gypsy Passion' are full length. When she acts, she acts all over. The film ends with her death at the shrine of a miracle-working saint in Brittany. She dies with her boots on, and the boots are on the film. As the great veteran actress sank in a moral ecstasy of religious fervor (passionate in every inch of her body, and not in one foot or face alone) a sob arose in my throat. If this bit of master pantomine is to be rejected for a technicality by the movies, it can be accepted gratefully for the permanent files of the theatre, which is not dead from the neck down."

George Fawcett Joins Lasky Stock Company

A notable addition to the Lasky studio stock company was made this week by Jesse L. Lasky who announced the signing of George Fawcett to a year's contract to play in Paramount pictures. Mr. Fawcett left for Hollywood this week.

Mr. Fawcett is one of the best known character actors on the screen. His stage career began more than thirty years ago and since then he has interpreted hundreds of character roles both on the stage and in pictures.

Pathe's Releases for Week of April 23rd

ANNOUNCEMENT comes from the Pathe Exchange, Inc., that the strong collection of short-subject features and the one serial episode scheduled for release the week of April 23d will be fortified by the next Pathe Playlet, "The Mysterious Client," starring Irene Castle.

"The Runaway Car" is the title of the third episode of the new Pathe serial, "Go-Get-'Em Hutch," starring Charles Hutchison. "Bride and Gloom" is the current re-issued one-reel comedy starring Harold Lloyd. "The Wicked Cat" is the latest animated cartoon of the series of "Aesop's Film Fables." "Full O' Pep" is the title or the current Hal Roach comedy featuring "Snub" Pollard.

Pathe Review, No. 152, includes "Photographic Gems," an unusual photographic study that can be secured by the camera; "Toss, Tumble and Twirl," and an acrobatic novelty photographed by the Pathe Slow-Motion Camera; and "Sou'east from Saldauha," which gives a few thrilling moments with the whalers of South Africa.

Kane Announces Contract for Six Pictures

ARTHUR S. KANE announces the closing of a contract by Associated Exhibitors with Associated Authors Productions, Inc., for the release of six pictures to be produced by the latter organization. Associated Authors Productions was formed recently with John Howard Carr as president; Alicia Collins, vice-president, and A. Raymond Gallo, secretary and treasurer.

The new company has business headquarters in Boston, but production work will be carried on at Orlando, Fla., where studios are now being built. It is expected that the first picture to be filmed, "The Man-Hater," from the novel by George Allen England, will be ready for delivery by August 1st. The selection of the director and the cast is yet to be announced.

Fox Circuit Books Two Universal Features

Charles Rosenzweig, sales manager of Universal's New York exchange, reports booking of the two recent Universal Jewel productions, "Wild Honey" and "Man to Man" over the Fox circuit. "Wild Honey" is a photo-drama of South Africa starring Priscilla Dean and directed by Wesley Ruggles. "Man to Man" is Harry Carey's latest super-western photo-play, and was directed by Stuart Paton.

The showing of these two features over the Fox circuit will include presentations in the Audubon, the Academy, the Jamaica, the Albemarle, the Star, the Crotona, the Nemo and the Jap theatres, in and around New York City, for runs of three and four days.

These runs will follow closely upon the showing of the same pictures in the Loew circuit, where they have been booked for a total of 170 days run, as announced last week.

Special Showing for Owen Moore Vehicle

Myron Selznick staged a special showing of "Reported Missing" at the grand ball room of the Ritz on the evening of April 7. This is the Owen Moore feature, directed by Henry Lehrman, which will bring Moore back to the screen after several months' absence. Following the showing there was dancing to round out the evening's entertainment. The guests included showmen, newspaper people and friends of all concerned in turning out the feature.

U. B. O. Engages "Fair Lady" for 22 Houses

Because of the demonstrated box-office value of Rex Beach's latest photoplay, "Fair Lady," a Whitman Bennett production for United Artists release, this picture has been booked by the U. B. O. organization for all its twenty-two houses.

"Surpasses 'Humoresque'"

So Say N. Y. Reviewers Concerning Fannie Hurst's "Good Provider"

COMMENTING upon the initial presentation of "The Good Provider," a Cosmopolitan Production, from the pen of Fannie Hurst and directed by Frank Borzage. New York reviewers declared the picture to be better than "Humoresque," Cosmopolitan's gold medal winner, created by the same author and director. "The Good Provider" is played by much the same cast that appeared in "Humoresque," including Vera Gordon. Dore Davidson and Miriam Battista.

The "Globe" said: "At the risk of annoying those who consider "Humoresque" the last word in film production we must confide that this seems quite as good if not better. Perhaps because its theme revolves about Dore Davidson. Vera Gordon plays the mother role quite as perfect as her first. After reels of cheap exploitation called 'mother-stuff' the genuine thrill is here. It is one of the three films of the season which must, under no circumstances, be missed."

The "Sun": "'The Good Provider' at the Rivoli this week is one of the best 'sob stories' that has as yet made their way to the screen. It even surpasses her now famous 'Humoresque' as an entertainment. As regards the other films that have flowed from Miss Hurst's prolific pen it is so much better that a comparison would be worse than odious.

"'The Good Provider' represents the triumph of pantomime over print."

The "Herald": "At last the screen shows signs of becoming original. Has tingling human quality. Rivets the attention. The humor fits like an old shoe. A living picture rather than a moving picture. Miss Gordon and Mr. Davidson do so well they could be advertised as appearing 'in person,' not in a movie. Davidson's pantomime speaks reels of sub-titles for itself."

Harriet Underhill in "The Tribune": "We enjoyed every moment of it. Long in heart interest. Something seems to tell us that we would be all wrong in pronouncing 'The Good Provider' a better picture than 'Humoresque' so we shall compromise by saying that we liked it better."

Grauman Books More Century Comedies

Century comedies have been given frequent position on the program of Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles, and Century officials see in this fact strong testimony for the box-office value of these pictures. Sid Grauman's bookings began with "Chums," in which Baby Peggie and Brownie appeared, and followed with "Peggy Behave" and "Mutts." Grauman's latest Century bookings are "Henpecked," starring Lee Moran, and "Some Class," featuring Brownie. These comedies have come in for their share of advertising and exploitation by Grauman, as it is his belief that "a good comedy on the bill often draws as big an audience as the feature."

Song Tie-Up for "The Sheik of Araby"

A carefully planned tie-up with Watterson, Berlin and Snyder, publishers of the song hit, "The Sheik of Araby," will assure wide exploitation to the R-C Pictures of the same name, announces that company.

"The Sheik of Araby" is a revival of the H. B. Warner feature, "The Man who Turned White." It is a story of the Sahara with the star playing a dual role.

The exploitation material now being prepared by R-C Pictures will emphasize the tie-up with the song and the record, and the catch-line "Get the song, hear the record, see the picture," will be used extensively.

Playgoers Will Handle Noble Johnson Film

John C. Ragland announced this week the signing of a contract by Playgoers Pictures with the Western Photoplay Corporation of Los Angeles, for the distribution of the Western feature, "Tracks." This picture is a Noble Johnson production in six reels, from the story by Mark Noble. Joseph Franz directed the production and the featured players are Noble Johnson, Bill Patton and Beatrice Burnham.

Georges Carpentier Will Appear as Star

GEORGES CARPENTIER is to appear as a film star under the direction of J. Stuart Blackton in England. The production will be made by Blackton in association with Allen Thomas and Alexander Bird and work on it will soon be started in London.

The French pugilist has just signed the contract, the negotiations having been conducted by Andrew Soutar.

Distribution will be in the hands of Thomas and Bird who have formed The National Super Productions for this purpose.

The film presenting Carpentier will precede the next Stuart Blackton super-production featuring Lady Diana Manners, which will be started later in the summer.

Gets Exclusive Views of Prince Friederich

Selznick News 1028-C features exclusive pictures of Prince Eitel Friedrich, son of the ex-Kaiser, who is now in retirement. The Prince, who now lives in Potsdam, Germany, has steadfastly refused to pose for news films and a Selznick News cameraman had to exercise his ingenuity to secure the scenes, which were snapped as the Prince was busy at spring planting in his garden.

Reviews of Latest Short Subject Releases

"The Opossum"

(Adventures of Bill and Bob Series-Pathe)

BILL and Bob the young explorers, woodsmen, and nimrods, have a deal of excitement watching the cunning of the opossum—or 'possum as the animal is called by anyone who has ever gone a-hunting. The boys have an Airedale with them and he picks up the scent which takes him to the animal, treed in yonder branches. His capture is easy, but the boys have some fun watching him play dead. The animal comes to life in a cautious manner and makes his escape. The second exploit is humorous to a degree as well as instructive in that it teaches a lesson in good sportsmanship. A flock of ducks are shot as they swim on the pond. A duck-shooter hoves into sight and advises them that it isn't fair play to shoot them except when they are in flight. The two adventures are thoroughly entertaining.—Length, 2 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Mysterious Client"

(Pathe—Three Reels)

Reissued as a three-reel playlet, yet incorporating the elements of mystery, adventure and romance in condensed form, "The Mysterious Client" offers Irene Castle as the star, surrounded by a cast capable of delivering a picture play of feature length. Miss Castle's support includes such players as Warner Oland, Milton Sills, Caesar Gravina and others, and in order to include all the action necessary to tell the story, it has been necessary to make the picture "snappy" and keep something doing every foot of the way.

The story is one about the daughter of a rich man, who determines to marry a man, not a name, and having found a suitable prospect, puts a young attorney to the test. He is not found wanting, believes in her at all hazards and tells her before he finds he has been the victim of a plot, that he loves her, even if she is the villainess he has sometimes had cause to believe.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Urban Movie Chat No. 12"

(Urban-Hodkinson—One Reel)

THIS number opens with a novel note, a motion picture interview with Judge Elbert H. Gary, head of the U. S. Steel Corporation, concerning present business conditions. This is followed by instructive views of gold mining in Idaho. How juvenile Texas handles its bucking and balky burros lends an amus touch to the reel. Where is the lady not interested in the question of "permanent waves." In this subject milady is introduced to the operation of the latest acquired electrical device of the "beauty parlor," and shown the results, too. We believe there's an opportunity for some live exploitation here. "Americanizing the 100 per cent. American" is an interesting series of views teaching what the Government is doing for the education of the young American Indian. The "Natural History" department shows how ravens may become delightful pets. We predict that the culminating scene of Mr. Raven teasing Tillie, the housemaid, is going to win a genuine laugh. Current interest, amusement and instruction mark this number.—EDMOND F. SUPPLE.

Pathe Review No. 152

The ability of the Japanese to excel in the art of tumbling or acrobatic stunts has long been acknowledged. Just why these lithe boys are so able in this direction is illustrated in the "Toss, Tumble and Twirl" exhibits, a part of the Pathe Review, done with the standard and also with the slow motion camera, to point out the way it is done. There is one particularly good part of it, two Japs performing one of their difficult feats on one side of the screen in normal rapid motion, while on the other side of the screen their moves are seen by slow motion. The review includes also a few interesting shots showing the actual capture of a giant whale, by whalers of South Africa, concluded with a psychological test, entitled "Measuring Brain Fower," and a color view of Kairwan, Tunis, the Sacred City of the Arabs.

Also the Pathe Screen Study, "Honey Makers," in one reel, is both educating and entertaining, showing the remarkable bravery of the professional bee keeper, who handles thousands of the diligent insects without fear of getting "stung," filling his hat with bees, calling for the descriptive title "Bees in His Bonnet." This reel could be used advantageously as an educational.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Fair Enough"

Christie Comedy—Two Reels—Released Through Educational

ONE idea is the basis of this comedy, and while it is a good idea, it becomes overworked at the end. This is the sole reason why the comedy does not maintain its high pitch to the very end. The idea is that of two people who are trying to break into jail, since each believes the other a crook. The girl has been arrested for speeding; the man for inadvertently helping a crook to escape. Both, however, admit daring and bold robberies. The girl is freed and tries to get back to prison by further speeding around the jail. When she is finally arrested, it is the young man who is now freed. He gets himself arrested, but now the girl has gone. This happens fully three times. And it does not carry the same zest as it did in the beginning.

Dorothy Devore and Earle Rodney are the leads, the former sweetly coquettish and the latter as debonair as usual. The titles get a few good laughs. Direction is by Tom Brierley.—Matthew A. Taylor.

"Cold Feet"

(Christie Comedy-Educational—Two Reels)

IT'S about time that a burlesque of the Northwest Mounted reached the screen. Certainly Christie has started something. Now that they are at it, why not follow up with a "take-off" of Cinderella or Pollyanna or dear, old mother who has been shedding copious tears over the conduct of her children? "Cold Feet" is a remarkable comedy from a scenic standpoint. We have no recollection of seeing finer snow stuff in a feature which exploited the vast open spaces. This exceptional background makes an inspiring picture—one which is rich in nature's handiwork. Mind you, the snow is waist deep and it takes a deal of hard work on the part of the players to get over the ground.

The idea gathers substance from a wealthy father endeavoring to discourage his daughter's taste for stories of the Mounted and who conjures up in her imagination an ideal lover as one who wears the redcoat and whose slogan is "get your man." The girl arrives at her father's camp in the frozen north—the victim of a frame-up. It has been planned that his employees must discourage her in every manner possible. Consequently one is made up as an Indian guide, another as a "hefty" villain who must kidnap her, a third, the shortest of the group, as a Mountie. The idea is if she sees him she will be disillusioned. The conspirators meet her train and she is guided over the trackless wastes to a broken-down shack half-buried in the snow. A girl employee is in the plot to burlesque the forsaken and thoroughly ruined heroine. And four other tricksters are used to masquerade as wolves.

A few hunters spying the "wolves" shoot with intent to kill, and a real bear enters the hut and scatters the plotters. The scheme is working well even with all these inconveniences until a genuine Mountie appears on the scene and administers punishment to the arch villain and his dwarf-like henchman. As a result the girl's romantic imagination vindicates her beau ideal. The two lovers are last seen standing chest deep in the snow. "Cold Feet" is an exceptional comedy, rich in burlesque, eloquent in its pictorial appeal and a sure-fire box-office bet. Viora Daniels is the star. We said it. Al Christie has started something.—LAURENCE REID.

Ancient Customs of Egypt

(Kineto Review No. 107—One Reel)

THIS subject shows in an interesting and instructive series of views how methods of agriculture, boat-building, and pottery, centuries old in point of time, still remain in active operation despite the improved processes of modern industry. Methods of irrigation that belong to the B. C. epoch of history are presented in conjunction with views of the Assuan Dam, a remarkable feat of British engineering, which releases 350,000 cubic feet of water per second for irrigation purposes. The contrast is a striking one. Ancient methods of boat-building and pottery, still extant, are also shown.

The strange dances and fighting tactics of the Bisharins, nomads of the Nubian desert, inject a novel and amusing note into this subject. The reel closes with a view of the Salt Lake in the Libyan desert.—EDMOND F. SUPPLE.

"Full o' Pep"

(Roach-Pollard Comedy—Pathe)

This is one the interested readers regarding scientific discoveries will like, even though it extracts fun from the popular monkey gland operation, with Snub Pollard the aspiring health hunter.

Snub induces the operating physician to perform an operation, a satire on the current use of monkey glands. Snub aspires for the hand of Marie Mosquini, and Eddie Baker is in the way. Eddie lives through an operation for goat glands, and when the two are convalescent they get together, one with the cunning of a monkey the other, the kicking qualities of a goat. This introduces Snub's well known acrobatic ability, which he is obliged to summon in order to win out, monkey glands notwithstanding. One reel of rapid fun.—LILLIAN GALE.

FEATURE REVIEWS

"Sisters"

American Releasing Corporation—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

THE film version of "Sisters" is unique in that it follows the novel from which it was adapted, with unusual accuracy, also account of the triple love interest upon which the story is based, supplying likely situations, without becoming unduly submerged in overdone romance. Interesting, indeed, are the portrayals of the true-to-life characters often found in the comfortable American family; father devoted to his profession, vain, selfish and pretty younger sister; strong, purposeful, boyish and unselfish older one.

Having provided sufficiently for his daughters, as well as for his niece, another young lady who made her permanent home with them, the doctor continued to work upon his scientific researches until a serious illness robbed the girls of their paternal protection. Meanwhile, the niece had acquired a semi-scrupulous lawyer-husband, who learned of a personal loan his wife's father had made the doctor long ago, and who induced her to put in a claim against the estate in the absence of proof that the money had ever been repaid. This claim, upon the reading of the will, left the daughters not as well provided for as anticipated. The older one shouldered all responsibility, the younger having become engaged upon her eighteenth birthday to a hard working, if possibly unromantic lumberman, terminating in a hasty marriage.

Months after the younger sister's marriage, another young man, constant visitor and old friend of family, stated his intention of going away in an attempt to forget a woman he had loved, married to another. This man, the object of the worth-while devotion of the single sister, was as unconscious of her love for him, as the married sister was of his love for another man's wife. Many months later, upon his return, he proposed a loveless marriage to prevent further loneliness of both.

Ultimately, trouble in lumbercamp, where the pretty, dissatisfied wife passed unhappy days. Persistent quarrels, followed by separation and returning of the wife to the old home, occupied by the other sister and her husband. Unconscious that she was the woman who had caused the mental turmoil, her sister also failing to realize that the "woman" of the past was her own sister, the three continued to live their lives until the disappointed man felt return of the desire for his wfe's sister, proposed an elopement which was under way when the unselfish sister and deserted wife interfered only to protect the sister. About the same time, the young lumberman, severely injured, awakened the knowledge of a wife's love for her husband and a husband's love for a worth-while wife, all being properly united, in the end.

Comedy relief, for this otherwise rather depressing drama of life, is supplied by characters of negro servants. Pictorially, the production is well done.

The Cast

Alix Strickland.....Seena Owen
Cherry Strickland.....Gladys Leslie
Anne Little.....Mildred Arden
Peter Joyce.....Matt Moore
Martin Lloyd.....Joe King
Dr. Strickland.....Tom Guise
Justin Little.....Robert Schable
Colored Mammy.....Frances Grant
Colored Man Servant.....Fred Miller

By Kathleen Norris. Scenario by E. Lloyd Sheldon. Directed by Albert Capellani.

The Story—One man loves vain, selfish girl, who, while very young, marries lumber worker. Disappointed lover goes away, returns to marry the older sister. Eventually, persistent desire for first prompts him to propose elopement. Wife then finds husband in love with her sister, and the sister about to disgrace all concerned. Intricate plot of how the unselfish disposition of one rights all the family wrongs in the end.

Production Highlights—Character study, with view to prove the might of right. Realistic scenes in lumber camp. Scene where wife interrupts husband's proposed elopement with her younger married sister.

Classification—Romantic drama based upon whether a man should ever marry a woman he does not love, even though the woman he loves is seemingly lost to him forever. Offers question to every spectator, "What would you have done in the deserted wife's predicament?"

Exploitation Angles—Cast of favorite players, story adapted from widely read book by popular author. Difficult and not impossible situations developing in every day family life.

"Money to Burn"

Fox—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

FRENZIED finance mixed up with a little romantic paprika serves as the latest recipe for William Russell. It doesn't take any imagination to discover that the title finds its expression in the manner the hero has accumulated his wealth. Carrying the name of Lucky Garrity indicates right off the start that whatever he touches turns into gold. In fact he was born with the proverbial silver spoon in his mouth. He is a financial wizard. And guess where he made his roll. Wall Street is right. The picture is not burdened with much plot. In fact it presents a series of pleasant incidents, releasing a little romantic adventure and a bit of play with the ticker.

The youth has become satiated with high life. So he decides to invest in a country estate out on Long Island. He is no sooner settled than the love interest is introduced in the personality of a countess who has deserted her husband practically at the altar because of his improverished financial condition. The young man forgets the ticker—the lambs and bulls. There are greater riches to be found in playing for the love stakes. But the girl being interested in him urges him to return to the Street and fight his enemies. He succeeds as usual and upon the count's death the way is clear to take up romance with a vengeance.

The story is so simple of theme that the director may be excused for not attempting to introduce any novel incident. However, he might have added a sequence or two when the young Crocsus returned to the battleground. Too much is left to the imagination here. "Money to Burn" is not the vital type of story one has been accustomed to see with Russell as star. It is light, though fairly breezy. The titles are in a pleasant vein and bolster up the plot with the necessary humor. The picture is an adaptation of a story by Sewell Ford and is directed by Rowland V. Lee. The star enacts his role with creditable dash and his support is competent.

The Cast

Lucky Garrity.....William Russell
Countess Vecchi.....Sylvia Breamer
Ted Powell.....Hallam Cooley
Eppings.....Harvey Clark
Count Vecchi.....Otto Matieson

By Sewell Ford. Directed by Rowland V. Lee. Produced by Fox.

The Story—Lucky youth gifted with knack for accumulating wealth. Obtains fortune in Wall Street, but becomes satiated with business. Invests in country estate and falls in love with neighbor, a countess. She succeeds in having him return to his business and frustrate his enemies. When her worthless husband dies romance triumphs.

Classification—Romance revolving around frenzied finance. Hero tires of tickers, etc., and plays for love stakes. Some conflict and a goodly share of romance. Comedy in titles.

Production Highlights—There are no conspicuous highlights in this production. It is well done for type of story, however. Star does good work, although he seems to be miscast. The comedy titles. The romantic note dominant throughout.

Exploitation Angles—Title carries value for exploitation. Fake dollar bills may be used for an advertising scheme. These may also be distributed in shop windows. Story of Wall Street might be played up. Also versatility of star, who gets away from his westerns for a brief time. Needs peppy exploitation.

Drawing Power—This is not a world-beater for big houses. Carries sufficient pep to please the average crowd who patronize the neighborhood house. Breezy romance and peppy hero and comedy titles will please them. Good for most localities which feature daily change of program.

"The Bootleggers"

Wid Gunning—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT certainly is a piece of good showmanship to cash in on the selling qualities of such a title as adorns this production. The bootlegging enterprise is brewing and distilling itself into an enterprise which will soon have to be labeled Big Business. There is a world of suggestion in such a title. It conveys the idea of unadulterated melodrama—of conflict, hate, jealousy, mystery, surprise and exciting adventure. And this thought is brought home from the introductory sequence. If the story had nothing to recommend it the title would act as a magnet in drawing a crowd. And the offering as a result should play to packed houses.

There is enough thrill and action packed away in its six reels to satisfy the most jaded of spectators. What if some of its melodrama strains credulity? That is to be expected. The point is the author and director found it to advantage for the sake of adventure and romance to cram it full of elemental conflict and picturesque detail. And the result speaks for itself. The author reads his daily paper. He has omitted nothing in the scheme to catch the desperate bootlegger. The aerial patrol is utilized in the complicated pattern. You see the colorful smuggler and his bootlegging sweetheart. You look upon the heroine as she is coveted by the villain. The girls are lured aboard a yacht ostensibly for a cruise. And the action is off. The heroine escapes the clutches of the fiend and sends a wireless which is picked up by her fiance, a revenue officer, who uses the air lanes to catch the violators of the Volstead act. A storm arises and the boat is tossed up on a desert island. The aviator is also forced to land and in a pitched battle he overpowers his enemy.

The story is suggestive of the melodramatic adventure found in evading this new amendment to the constitution. As such it is entirely within its element. It is colorful, often exciting and packs a healthy punch. One must overlook its conveniences here and there and wait only for the suspense. For it carries that precious ingredient in abundance. Norma Shearer makes a striking heroine and portrays the role with splendid spirit and sincerity. Paul Panzer is a picturesque villain and succeeds in being thor-

The Cast

Jack Seville.....Walter Miller
Jose Fernand.....Paul W. Panzer
The Hermit.....Jules Cowles
Olive Wood.....Hazel Flint
Helen Barnes.....Norma Shearer
Alice Barnes.....Jane Allyn
Mrs. Murphy.....Lucia Backus Seger

By Thomas F. Fallon. Scenario by Thomas F. Fallon. Directed by Roy Sheldon.

The Story—Bootlegger has feminine accomplice and owns a yacht. Lures heroine aboard, ostensibly to take a cruise. She learns his true nature. Gets into the wireless room and summons aid from her sweetheart, a revenue officer who belongs to an aerial patrol. The latter arrives when the boat is cast upon a desert island and punishes the enemy.

Classification — Melodramatic adventurous story of bootlegging activities which takes characters over the deep waters and tosses them up on desert isle. Plenty of action and suspense and exciting adventure.

Production Highlights—Work of Norma Shearer as heroine and picturesque portrayal by Paul Panzer as arch villain. The scene when he lures girl aboard his yacht. Her summoning of aid. The rescue by hero, who gets her radio message as he sails the sky in an aerial patrol. The desert isle scene. The final conflict when the villain is overpowered.

Exploitation Angles—Picture possesses a corking title, which will get the business. Needs advertising, however. Circus stunts would help. Hiring three or four rough individuals, who might be dressed up like moonshiners, and having them patrol the streets will attract attention. Lobby can be made up to represent a moonshine hut with stills, etc., for atmosphere.

Drawing Power—Good for downtown houses and most every locality that likes adventurous action. Title is a humdinger and will attract attention everywhere. Flayed up for its exciting adventure will draw them in. Circus exploitation will help. Best for houses catering to a transient trade.

"Border Scouts"

Releasing Arrangements to Be Announced—State Rights—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

AN excellent picture has been made for the juvenile mind which will stimulate a healthy desire to serve the country and which will also inspire boyish minds to conduct themselves as ideal Americans and gentlemen is released in "Border Scouts," made by Lieut. Bert Hall Pictures Corporation and which will be distributed in the state rights market, releasing arrangements to be announced at some future date. The picture is presented with Lieut. Bert Hall, the aviator, as sponsor and he has surrounded himself with a group of Scouts camping near the Mexican border in Texas.

A prologue is introduced which acquaints the spectator with boy scout activities—their methods of conduct, deportment, etc. This acts in giving the subsequent story a sound value as well as some propaganda benefit. The plot takes up the conflict between the scouts and a group of Mexican raiders, the action centering upon the boys outwitting the bandits and saying the property of the Americans. The detail depicts how the boys go about their various tasks—their ability to adapt themselves to every situation. Deportment, manliness, first aid treatment, willingness to perform labors without fees and similar ideas are exploited in such a manner as to fit perfectly into the scheme of the plot without making it resemble a study of propaganda.

"Border Scouts" is adapted from "Lone Star Patrol" and is a great box-office attraction for the youth of the land. Those exhibitors who book it can pack their houses with exploitation of the proper kind. Played up for its beneficial influence upon the boys and featured for special matinees will act as a magnet in drawing the breadwinners and defenders of the home of the future. There is no romance, but a deal of healthy, human, boyish fun and enthusiasm. It is not a picture for the grown-ups if they are searching for entertainment. But how the boys will like it—especially those who belong to the scouts.

Sheriff Britton.....Charles Thurston
Ranger Allen.....A. J. Vollman
Dr. Brown.....Frances Powers

By Gordon Stuart. Scenario by Frances Powers. Directed by Lieut. Bert Hall. Photographed by Paul Eagler. Produced by Lieut. Bert Hall Pictures Corp.

The Story—Treats of activities of Boy Scouts with considerable exploitation of their campaign. Plot proper tells of Boy Scout who becomes aviator and how he induces a number of Scouts to visit his uncle's ranch in Texas and combat Mexican raiders. Boys capture the enemy and prove themselves heroes.

Classification—Story of Boy Scout campaigning, introducing a prologue of their ideas, duties, etc. Plot proper takes up conflict of Scouts with Mexican raiders. Some exciting action. Real atmosphere.

Production Highlights—Story value in acting as stimulus in recruiting boys to the Boy Scouts. Good atmosphere. Action a-plenty. Fine work of boys in cast. Good detail which concerns methods of Scouts.

Exploitation Angles—Should be exploited for its value in stimulating recruits for Boy Scouts. Work of boys as potential soldiers and as amateur actors. Exhibitors should enlist services of patriotic organizations. Matinee for boys.

"Reported Missing"

Selznick—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IF there is one picture which deserves the tribute of "something out of the ordinary" that picture is "Reported Missing," accurately described by Selznick as its greatest achievement. Henry Lehrman, who wrote and directed this melodramatic comedy, has been given free rein to add to the gayety of a nation. And he has contributed a feature which will be talked about for its adventurous action, its novel gags, its subtle and broad humor, its quaint characterization, its development toward a climax which carries explosive qualities and its overwehlming suspense. This compelling element causes the spectator to grip the arms of his seat despite the fact that th incidents and gags are charged with humor. Even though you wonder if Owen Moore, "shanghaied" by his enemy, will ever see land again, you laugh over his embarrassing moments.

The star plays the part of a quiet, unobtrusive chap addicted to idleness and a fondness for liquor. He is always the gentleman. His top hat adorns his head throughout. The idea is a satirical fling at serious melodrama with the author and director punctuating the humor with just enough balancing drama to give it substance. The hero holds an option upon a fleet of merchant vessels—a fleet much desired by a cunning Oriental. Owen takes life and his possessions lightly until the girl provokes him to carve his niche in the world. When he threatens to become serious he is "shanhaied" along with the girl. Here it is that Lehrman says "Let's Go!" Fun and excitement are running neck and neck. There is Owen in the hands of a crew of vicious cutthroats. And here comes the faithful valet in a rowboat paddling the waves for dear life.

There is action a-plenty aboard this schooner. For one thing the commissary department is soon emptied. And the skipper shoves the hearty eaters into the briny deep if they take more than their allowance. Money has been spent to make these sequences genuine. The scenes, atmosphere and properties are the real thing. A storm arises which brings more suspense. And the humor is immense as you follow the hero's adventures and the valet's trouble in singing his dying swan song, "Nearer My God to The," at the organ, the while a veritable Niagara engulfs him. The climax introduces an exciting auto pursuit and the rescue of the heroine who has been brought ashore and hidden in the intricate chambers of the Jap's villa. A hydroplane is employed to give chase to the Oriental's fast motor boat. And the sailors are called upon to help the hero in his distress. It is a healthy melee—a battle royal. Daggers, knives, fists, revolvers are used in combatting the enemy. You are laughing one minute and catching your breath the next.

The titles are genuinely funny and are contributions by humorists associated with New York dailies. Indeed Selznick has not overlooked one department to give the feature a thoroughness of production. The cast is highly efficient. Owen Moore will have to share honors with Tom Wilson whose blackface portrayal and whose antics indicate a born clown.

The Cast

Richard Boyd.....Owen Moore
Pauline Blake.....Pauline Gordon
Sam.....Tom Wilson
J. Young.....Togo Yamomoto

By Henry Lehrman. Scenario by Lewis Allen Browne. Directed by Henry Lehrman. Photographed by Jules Cronjager. Titles by H. I. Phillips, Jed Medbury, Will B. Johnstone, E. V. Durling and Tom Bret. Produced by Selznick.

The Story—Treats of wealthy young wastrel who is inspired to go to work by girl with whom he is in love. When he proceeds to take up option, his enemies have him "shanghaied." Girl accompanies him and his valet is faithful enough to follow. After series of hazardous exploits youth returns and rescues sweetheart from Jap.

Classification — Romantic comedy releasing considerable high jinks aboard a schooner on the high seas. Plenty of adventurous action, which is balanced with melodrama comedy. Carries exciting climax.

Production Highlights — Work of Owen Moore and Tom Wilson as blackface comedian. The comedy situations rich in new gags. The atmosphere. The exciting moments aboard schooner. The abundant comedy values. The scintillating titles contributed by humorists of New York dailies. The climax when sailors from warship rescue hero and heroine from wily Orientals.

Exploitation Angles—Picture possesses enough high lights to feature in an extensive campaign. Title carries value. Owen Moore's ability to express humor. The schooner and life on deck, which can be worked out in an elaborate prologue. Picture big enough to put over in as sensational a manner as possible. Quartette dressed in sailor attire singing sea chanties.

Drawing Power—This one will go like a house afire once it is gotten over with the public. First audience will spread the report that it is a winner. Title can be exploited to limit

"When Romance Rides"

Hampton-Goldwyn—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE are enough favorite ingredients gathered together for this feature to make it a highly interesting story if it carried a plot which furnished sufficient surprise and highlights of situation and climax. Zane Grey's "Wildfire" may be entertaining fiction between the covers of the book but transferred to the screen and released under the title "When Romance Rides" it suggests an old-fashioned story filled with obvious sequences and so carefully planted that you can anticipate the action far in advance.

The characters are sharply defined. On one side is the villain, booted and spurred, who has as his henchman, a demented roustabout. On the other is the heroine and hero, the latter appearing so conveniently to circumvent the evildoers as to make the direction appear equally old-fashioned. The plot concerns a horse race and before it is executed you see the steed owned by the girl's father "doped" by the gamblers. The hero is discovered by the heroine as he lies unconscious in the hills after giving chase to the fractious colt he has named Wildfire. The result is the horse is trained to carry a rider, and the day of the race, the girl, flying her fathers' colors, brings him under the wire a winner. This race may disappoint those who expect to see a fashionable gathering with a track on the order of Saratoga. It is really a rodeo show.

The story ends with this sequence, but to carry it to feature length, the villains exploit themselves further. The half-wit kidnaps the girl and takes her up into the mountains where she is rescued by the hero. And the picture is over. The detail is too well defined. It is not a feature of suggestion. However on its credit side is an adequate race, a wonderful dog, some juvenile appeal, a capable cast, colorful atmosphere, and charming backgrounds. The comedy relief furnished by a medicine faker does not offer much humor. The offering carries a nifty title and, with its action always in the foreground, is likely to get over. Certainly it contains exploitation possibilities.

The Cast

By Zane Grey. Directed by Benjamin B. Hampton, assisted by Elliot Howe, Jean Hersholt and Charles Rush. Produced by Benjamin B. Hampton.

The Story—Treats of a race horse who is captured wild by hero and ridden by heroine when her steed is "doped" by gamblers who have placed money on rival horse. These gamblers are enemies of her father. Girl is kidnapped and rescued by hero.

Classification—Romantic drama featuring race horse who wins the race with heroine as jockey. Some melodrama and plenty of romance.

Production Highlights—The horse incidents. The race. The colorful dog who proves his devotion. The scene when hero captures wild horse. His rescue of heroine. The charming exteriors.

Exploitation Angles—Exploited for fame of author and fact that it is race horse story will draw a crowd. Title will act as magnet. Provides opportunities for circus prologue and sensational advertising. Suggests teaser campaign based upon the horse.

Drawing Power—This picture will be liked for its atmosphere and locations. Horse scenes, the race and the dog will win friends. Enough action to please them. Good for most any locality. Story will satisfy even if it is obvious and well planted.

"The Woman He Married"

Mayer-Associated First National

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

THIS one is different. That is, while "The Woman He Married" is another story about New York's idle rich, a striving artist's model and a successful artist, yet it is told in a different manner with some new twists, which take a firm hold on the interest, carried to the end. The picture being exceptionally well directed, also, furnishes the star and her splendid supporting cast an opportunity to appear to best advantage.

The leading character, portrayed by Anita Stewart, is that of a girl possessed of beauty and equal quantity of brains. Foresight and a strong instinct toward the right of way enable her to commercialize her beauty and at the same time retain a self respect commanding the attentions of men in "the upper classes." Among these is a youngster, just out of college, the son of a very rich man who had fitted his offspring for society and "position in life" if not in business. The ambitions of the son to enjoy life, however, singled down to a burning desire of making the beautiful artist's model his wife. Eventually he wins and assigns her the task of making a man out of him. His father's sudden return from abroad, where news of the marriage had reached him, leads to a misunderstanding between father and son, especially when the son refuses to forsake his lawfully wedded wife because his father threatens to discontinue his liberal allowance. When poverty came in at the window, in this case, love did not fly out, but developed into a deeper one, along with the characters of the married couple. Intent upon his son's release, however, the father planned to misinform him about the wife's integrity, resulting in a miserable failure, bordering upon tragedy, involving the good name of a young sister, daughter of the irate father. Willing to be charged with murder rather than stain the family name, "the woman he married" saves the family honor and wins the permanent gratitude and love of the man who had misunderstood her.

The story involves many interesting characters not above outlined, all well drawn and convincing. Interiors, lavish in representing the artist's studio and home of the rich man, add to realism and weight of an altogether satisfactory production. It is thoroughly clean, evidencing the use of good material wherever necessary, and supplied with refreshing sub-titles of considerable humor. Good general appeal and splendidly constructed.

The Cast

Natalie Lane	Anita Stewart
Roderick Warren	Darrel Foss
Byrne Travers	Donald MacDonald
Andrew Warren	William Conklin
Mimi	Shannon Day
Muriel Warren	Charlotte Pierce
Richard Steel	Charles Belcher
Yosi	Frank Tokunaga

By Herbert Bashford. Directed by Fred Niblo. Produced by Louis B. Mayer. Distributed by First National.

The Story—Son of rich man in love with artist's model. Induces her to marry him, sacrificing allowance relied upon from father for support. Endeavors to write a play and having been fitted for society, not for business, when play is rejected cannot find employment. Unwelcome daughter-in-law saves trying situation and family honor, winning irate father over.

Production Highlights—Fine acting of entire cast, superior work done by Miss Stewart. Scene of evident murder and unjust accusation of young husband, who believed in his wife, with all appearances against her. The interiors of the artist's studio.

Exploitation Angles—Society drama with possibility of lavish interiors, the life lead by a successful artist, the results of selfishness upon the part of an unreasonable parent. Cast each popular in own right. Direction by Fred Niblo, whose pictures are consistent successes.

Drawing Power—Sure to draw followers of Anita Stewart, who may see her as the beautiful, sacrificing and worth-while wife of the son of the idle rich. A chance to show what a woman who has earned her way may do to assist the son or daughter of a man whose money can buy everything but happiness.

"Love's Masquerade"

Selznick—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WHILE Edward J. Montagne has not fashioned anything novel of theme and characterization in his story "Love's Masquerade," nevertheless his skill at situation and climax, uncovered in many screen plays, is brought forth here in terms that spell interesting entertainment. The outstanding quality of the picture is its measure of suspense offered in the opening reels. Inasmuch as the plot revolves around a variation of an innocent suspect of murder it stands to reason that he will command the utmost sympathy for his tragic predicament. Indeed, the hero is drawn with a sympathetic touch and when his trustful nature encourages him to be involved in a domestic affair, it is quite natural that he would be suspected of the crime when the husband is murdered.

The action switches to a small fishing village whither the young man had journeyed to forget the shadow in his life. He falls in love with a native girl and a wedding ceremony is anticipated when the murdered victim's wife appears on the scene and frustrates his marital scheme. She even turns him over to the police for the crime. The heroine, being disillusioned, pledges herself to another. Eventually the hero's innocence is established and a reconciliation is effected.

Summarizing this plot one can see that it is a variation on a tried and true theme. But that is nothing against it. On the contrary, it is a credit to Messrs. Montagne and Earle that they have kept it alive with interesting moments and carried the spectator along on a wave of suspense for a goodly share of the footage. The latter reels are not so forceful, but they serve in clarifying the atmosphere. In the cast are Conway Tearle, who plays his role with his customary restraint, and Winifred Westover, who portrays the village girl with sufficient animation. The picture has been admirably mounted and it contains enough dramatic possibilities to intrigue the mind of the average spectator.

The Cast

Russell Carrington	Conway Tearle
Dorothy Wheeler	Winifred Westover
Rita Norwood	Florence Billings
Herbert Norwood	Robert Ellis
Sly Sam	Danny Hays
Newspaper Reporter	Arthur Housman
Ross Gunther	Robert Schabel

By Edward J. Montagne. Scenario by Edward J. Montagne. Directed by William P. S. Earle. Produced by Selznick.

The Story—Sympathetic young man gets involved in domestic affair and as husband is murdered, youth is suspected of crime. Flees to fishing village, falls in love and is about to marry when wife of murdered victim appears and has him arrested. After complications his innocence is established and the youthful lovers find happiness.

Classification—Melodramatic romance based upon an innocent suspect of murder. Hero establishes his innocence after suspensive moments.

Production Highlights—The production. The suspense of the early scenes as hero is suspected of murder. The moment when the victim's wife locates him and has him arrested. The capable work of Conway Tearle. The story interest.

"The Sleep Walker"

Realart-Paramount—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

WITH the trend of the times in both the legitimate theatre and on the movie screen toward the melodramatic, Realart Pictures, with Constance Binney as the star in "The Sleep Walker," has hit upon a theme and offers a production that is well worth while.

It is melodrama that is not too mellow, but at the same time it is more or less replete with thrills, not of the usual wild nature, but which at the same time afford plenty of anxiety to the audience regarding the welfare of the star.

In the hands of Miss Binney the somewhat difficult role is capably portrayed, particularly in the scenes which involve sleep-walking. Throughout the picture Miss Binney is as attractive as usual. The scene where in her sleep-walking she rescues the child from a narrow ledge outside of the window of one of the top floors of a fashionable hotel is particularly hair raising and provides thrill enough for any one picture.

Doubtless much of the success of Miss Binney in the role is due to the splendid direction of Edward Le Saint, whose capable work is apparent from start to finish.

The sets are elaborate, the photography, particularly good, and every detail worked out to splendid advantage.

In the supporting cast Florence Roberts as the mother, who is harassed by the blackmailer, does exceptionally good work which is on a par with the art she displayed in past years on the legitimate stage.

Jack Mulhall, as Phillip Carruthers, who plays opposite Miss Binney, does good work and immediately wins the sympathy of his audience, both for his acting and the character of the role.

Bertram Grassby in the part of the blackmailer is rather inclined to be too melodramatic, but all in all the production is somewhat exceptional in that it confines itself entirely to the more high class melodrama.

The Cast

Doris Dumond.....Constance Binney
Phillip Carruthers.....Jack Mulhall
Sister Ursula.....Edythe Chapman
Mrs. Fabian Dumond.....Florence Roberts
Ambrose Hammond.....Bertram Grassby
Mrs. Langley.....Cleo Ridgely
Mary Langley.....Winifred Edwards

By Aubrey Stauffer. Scenario by Wells Hastings. Directed by Edward Le Saint. Produced by Realart.

The Story—Concerns a young girl, reared in a convent, who is afflicted with sleepwalking. She returns home to find her mother harassed by a scheming blackmailer. The heroine has a wealthy acquaintance and she is temporarily disillusioned when she sees him caressing a pretty widow who is making a play for his money. Worried and distrait, the habit of sleepwalking returns to the girl and she walks to room of blackmailer and searches for papers. She is dismissed from hotel when discovered. Later she rescues little girl while sleepwalking, and the habit squares her with management. The blackmailer's scheme is frustrated by the young millionaire.

Classification — Romantic drama featuring heroine, whose habit of sleepwalking brings her a deal of trouble and embarrassment. Some conflict and plenty of romance and intrigue.

Production Highlights—Careful production, suggesting good taste in every department. Work of Constance Binney. Scene when she walks in sleep and encounters trouble with management of hotel. Scene when she rescues girl from danger. Suspense of situations when heroine endangers herself with perilous adventures.

Exploitation Angles—Postcard and letter campaign, coupled with snappy teaser and program advertising will stimulate patronage for picture. Novelty of characterization will delight audience. Live wire stories will help if placed properly in papers so as to attract attention. Title suggests a novel scheme of advertising.

Drawing Power—Novel story will draw in select neighborhood. Carries enough intrigue and adventure to please crowds in localities where action is featured. Should get over most everywhere.

"The Madness of Love"

Wid-Gunning—5000 Feet

(Reviewed by Eugene Carlton)

THE much over-worked phrase, "an old story with a new twist," is brought uniquely to the fore in "The Madness of Love." Thousands of true lovers have been forced to go to sea and leave distracted maidens on shore, while equally as many lovers have triumphantly returned—but, never quite the same as it is portrayed in this picture, which is a 100 to 1 shot to excite the sympathy and interest of the hardened movie fan. As far as continuity, settings and technique are concerned, the production could not be improved upon. If there is any weakness it lies in the fact that the principal trend of the story is too much of a "revamp" of plots tried and true.

The theme is enveloped in the traditional atmosphere of sea life, the action hinging around two rival ship owners, one of whom desires to prevent the marriage of his nephew to the daughter of his rival. The human interest element abounds, while the temporary fate which is dealt the heroine following the forced departure of her lover is a certain producer of handkerchiefs among feminine members of audiences. Produced on the Maine coast, the natural settings in the picture are supreme and to Wray Physioc belongs just commendation for his splendid work in the direction of the production.

The Cast

Mary Anne Strong.....Jean Scott
Captain James Strong.....Charles Craig
Sim Calloway.....Bernard Siegal
David Calloway.....Willard Cooley
Ben Tompkins.....Ivan Christie
Dr. Abel Hanks.....Richard Lee

Produced and written by Wray Physioc.

The Story—A ship owner unscrupulously has gotten away most of the fleet of a rival ship owner, who had married the girl they both loved. The nephew of the unscrupulous one is in love with the daughter of the ship owner who has lost his fleet. The unscrupulous owner has his nephew sent away on a ship, telling the daughter of his rival that his nephew died at sea, whereupon the daughter loses her mind. The owner who has lost his ships is just about to reap vengeance upon his rival when the nephew returns, the girl's mind is restored and the unscrupulous ship owner is accidentally locked in his basement and goes mad.

Classification—Mostly a story of romance and love, spiced with plenty of human interest angles.

Production Highlights—Natural out-door settings; pathetic scenes of girl searching for lover along coast and climax, when lover returns in time to restore the mind of the girl.

Exploitation Angles—An opportunity for a contest is offered. Have patrons write short articles on the question: "Have parents the right to come between lovers?" Then have prize winning article published.

Drawing Power—Being told in a simple, yet interesting, manner, the picture should appeal to patrons of both the large and small houses, although it perhaps is best adapted to the neighborhood theatre. Plenty of advertising is needed and special emphasis should be placed on exploitation.

"The Crimson Challenge"

Paramount—5041 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

IT will surprise a lot of people to see Dorothy Dalton playing the Bill Hart, Tom Mix type of role. Gone are the honky-tonk days for the time being. Instead you notice her versatile talent in a new direction. The star, attired in regular he-man breeches, sweater and top piece and with two lead pumpers girdled about her waist line, and astride a spirited bronc makes a picture which will bring her an increasing popularity. Miss Dalton possesses such a positive personality that the role of heroine is easy for her. A fighting she-woman.

"The Crimson Challenge" is an adaptation of Vingie Roe's novel, "Tharon of Lost Valley," a western story that's a trifle removed from the well beaten path. Scenically it is one of the finest pictures seen in many a day. There are some shots that resemble masterpieces of the artist's brush. Paul Powell presided at the megaphone and to him must be given credit for putting the big scenes over with a real punch. Beulah Marie Dix has worked the plot into a swift-running, closely-connected story. The production abounds in big moments. There are some fine cattle rustling scenes interspersed with a few stirring horse races. The star's climb into the clouds up a mountain side to rescue the hero, her several meetings with the villain and her final killing of the man who shot her father in the back—these are episodes which pack first rate action and suspense.

There is another dramatic scene when, following the bunk trial in which the bad man gets a divorce from his wife, he kills her small brother and then warns the town he is coming back and clean them out. He returns but gets a hot reception. The thrill follows in the big race between the girl and the bad man. The star is called upon to work hard in this feature. She shows that she is an accomplished horsewoman and a real rival of Annie Oakley. A good cast is found in her support with Frank Campeau expressing villainy in his polished style. The others are good types. Inasmuch as the picture was made in the land of the coyote, the settings are unusually realistic. "The Crimson Challenge" will be popular.

The Cast

Tharon Last.....Dorothy Dalton
Billy.....Jack Mower
Buck Courtrey.....Frank Campeau
Ellen Courtrey.....Irene Hunt
Jim Last.....Will R. Walling
Clive.....Howard Ralston
Black Bart.....Clarence Burton
Wylackie.....George Field
Anita.....Mrs. Dark Cloud
Conford.....Fred Huntly

By Vingie Roe. Directed by Paul Powell. Photographed by Harry Perry. Scenario by Beulah Marie Dix.

The Story—In Lost Valley, which is "governed" by Buck Courtrey, cattle thief and a regular bad man. Tharon Last, daughter of a rancher, is the idol of the settlers. Buck covets her, and one day, in a quarrel, slays her father. Tharon vows vengeance. She carries out a promise exacted by her father on his death bed that she will become the best shot in the valley. Her adventures in "getting" Buck form the rest of the action. There is a charming romance woven through the plot.

Classification—A romantic Western melodrama with a hard-riding, two-gunned heroine.

Production Highlights—The fine Western settings. The good acting of the star and her supporting players. The melodramatic scenes, including some real gun battles, horse racing and cattle rustling. Miss Dalton's refreshingly original role. Excellent Western types.

Exploitation Angles—A two-gunned woman heroine. The great out-of-doors. The star's popularity. Book tie-up on author's works.

"The Infidel"

First National—5377 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles B. Larkin)

A POPULAR, talented star,, a famous author and a noted director have contributed to making "The Infidel" one of the best pictures of recent months. It has the most interesting story ever given a MacDonald production. Its settings, many of which are laid in the South Sea Isles, are gems of scenic beauty—many of them being highly spectacular, especially those dealing with the typhoon, the uprising of the natives, the attack by the U. S. cruiser, the dances in the Nabob's palace, the battle between the villain and the hero aboard a schooner. In fact this film is filled with more dramatic situations than are usually found in a half dozen average program pictures. "The Infidel" makes up for some past MacDonald features. Here Katherine proves that she can "emote" with the best of them.

The action starts off with a bang. There's a realistic storm at sea, with its resultant destruction on land. Following the typhoon comes the "rescue" and introduction of the heroine, an unbeliever who acts as the tool for the villain in his plot to ruin a rival and gain control of the copra trade on the island. However the heroine is thrown in contact with kind hearted missionaries and natives. She falls in love with the man whom she nearly ruined and circumstances change her viewpoint on whether or not there is One who controls all things.

Those who have become jaded with the rush of ordinary pictures will find "The Infidel" a relief. .It's "different." The picture shows little padding and unlike former vehicles it does not take up much footage in giving us closeups of Miss MacDonald. The star, in fact, is very busy in almost every scene of the picture.

All the types in the pictures have been well chosen. The supporting cast is unusually good and the photography and direction are practically flawless. Robert Ellis as Cyrus Flint. has the leading male role and does well with its exacting demands. Joseph

J. Dowling of "The Miracle Man" fame has a similar role in "The Infidel." He is a missionary, who discovers that the girl who is plotting the ruin of his young friend is no other person than his own daughter. Melbourne MacDowell makes Bully Haynes a repulsive person. Others in the cast who deserve mention are Barbara Tennant, Boris Karloff and Charles Force.

We want to emphasize that "The Infidel" is a picture of action. There's something doing every moment. It might be mentioned that it's a good picture to release at this time to bolster up the well known summer slump. Affording numerous angles for exploitation it is a picture that can "be put over."

Chunky.....Charles Force

By Charles A. Logue. Directed by James Young. Produced by B. P. Schulberg. Distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

The Story—Lola Daintry, an actress, who is deprived of a job through the interference of an over zealous preacher and whose father, also a preacher, drove her mother from home with his cruelties, hates all mankind. And so when Bully Haynes enlists her co-operation in "showing up" the missionaries on the South Sea Island of Menang she accepts the proposition, believing it will be sweet revenge. However, she does not know that Bully only wants to use her as a tool with which to gain control of the copra trade from his rival, Cyrus Flint. Coming ashore in a lifeboat, Lola poses as a castaway, but in the events which follow she gains a different impression of the missionaries, ceases to be an infidel and falls in love with the man she tried to ruin.

Classification—A dramatic romance of the South Sea isles. Filled with tense scenes and featuring some fine acting.

Production Highlights—The beauty of the star. The opening typhoon scenes. The burning of the native village. The attack by the gunboat and the landing of the marines. The dance scenes in the Nabob's temple. The fistic encounters aboard the boat at night. The uprising of the natives. The fine settings and excellent photography.

Exploitation Angles—Turn the lobby into a South Sea island scene. Get the co-operation of the Marines. The beauty of the star. Play up the melodramatic action and the big scenes. You can use superlatives here safely.

Drawing Power—Any house should do business with this feature if it is properly exploited. The more exploitation the more the business should be the rule with "The Infidel."

"A Good Provider"

Cosmopolitan-Paramount—6 Reels

(Reviewed by J. S. Dickerson)

VERA GORDON, Dore Davidson, Fannie Hurst and Frank Borzage, all of "Humoresque" fame, have come through again in "A Good Provider." Here is a picture that will hand most everyone a real laugh, be good for an occasional tear, and as a combination of heart interest stuff domestic drama and Jewish humor, stand as a land mark for many a day.

It is a very human and plausible picture that has been evolved from Miss Hurst's equally human and plausible story. The principal characters are a small town Jewish merchant, his wife, their two children and the daughter's lover. The picture picks them up when the merchant is a "greenhorn" struggling to get a start in the land of his adoption by peddling drygoods from a wagon. You see the family when they begin housekeeping in a tumble down old house and you get a glimpse of their modest success in the mercantile business as the years go by. The peddler's wagon becomes a store. The children grow up and become ambitious. So it is that in time the merchant is induced to move to New York where they live at an expensive hotel, that the son and daughter may have their chance. But the little business in a commuting town will not stand the strain of such lavish expenditures and the time comes when the merchant is at the point of bankruptcy. But the crash does not come, for the whole family get back to earth when they are told the situation, and with the prospective son-in-law's money, they start over again.

Vera Gordon as the mother of course delivers once again a characterization of dramatic beauty and infinite depth but it is Dore Davidson as the merchant who carries off the honors. Here is the old fashioned Jewish merchant of the small towns to the life. He is the impetuous, excitable "papa" that "Abe" was in "Potash and Perlmutter." He fights with his children and for them when the times get hard. He is typical of the clan as they were a few years ago; people who had come to America to make a home and money and who worked hard to do it.

The cast secured to support Mr. Davidson and Miss Gordon, the former is certainly ento equal credit, are great types and excellent players.

Mr. Borzage has made his picture with a fine understanding of audience appeal, and never is there a false note. We suspect that the titles are mainly from Miss Hurst's story but at any rate they are perfection. Nowhere has the Jewish character and characteristics been so finely drawn. "A Good Provider" provides fine entertainment.

The Cast

Story by Fannie Hurst. Scenario by John Lynch. Directed by Frank Borzage. Produced by Cosmopolitan Productions.

The Story—Jewish family in a commuters' town outside New York move to the city that their children may have their chance. The little business will not stand the expenditures attendant on this venture and bankruptcy is in prospect. Disheartened the merchant plans to commit suicide and thus provide for his family with his life insurance. However, the daughter's prospective husband comes to the rescue with new capital and they all go back to the little village and the modest business.

Classification—Domestic comedy drama of the troubles and joys of a Jewish family presented as in "Humoresque" and "Potash and Perlmutter."

Production Highlights—The humor of the scenes and the subtitles. The atmosphere of the whole production. Acting of Dore Davidson and Vera Gordon. The richness and beauty of the hotel apartment scenes.

Exploitation Angles—Vera Gordon, Dore Davidson, Fannie Hurst and Frank Borzage as director of "Humoresque." The story as a whole. The production from the angles of detail and the richness of the stage settings in certain scenes.

Drawing Power—Especially desirable in big cities with a Jewish population, but will appeal to the small towns, too, because it presents a type of Jewish merchant with which every one is familiar.

"Is Matrimony a Failure?"

Paramount—5800 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles B. Larkin)

HERE is a feature that will contribute to the gayety of nations. It's a sure-fire hit. When a bunch of hard-boiled reviewers sit in a cell-like screening room and laugh their heads off at a picture, it must be diverting. This picture is off the beaten path. It has a number of novel situations, many of which have never before been offered on the screen. Of course, one expects a good picture when it has such surroundings as this one. In the first place it is a version of Leo Ditrichstein's adaptation of the play by Oscar Blumenthal and Gustav Kadelburg. James Cruze presided at the small end of the megaphone. Walter Woods put it in scenario form. Karl Brown turned the crank, while the cast is absolutely perfect as representing the types desired in this merry melange of marital mixups.

T. Roy Barnes, Lois Wilson, Lila Lee and Walter Hiers are the featured players, but Tully Marshall, Zasu Pitts, Otis Harlan, Sylvia Ashton, Lillian Leighton and Arthur Hoyt, not forgetting Billy Gonder as the policeman, are all fine in their respective roles.

An original piece of business introduced is that where Barnes whistling for is sweetheart's dog to carry a message to her, buys the animal and various other which assemble a feast of weiners. From that moment until the end whenever the hero appears in the town, he is trailed by every canine resident for miles around. They even follow him to the marriage license clerk's window. Some "hot dogs" even try to get out of the butcher's when the hero whistles. Another amusing incident is that in which Tully Marshall, as the irate Pater familias, in pursuit of the elopers finds a huge tree has been thrown across his path up the mountain side. He starts in to chop it in half. When he has finished and is hauling the trunk off the road with his car as the motive power, the elopers dash down the hill and through the opening he has made. The scenes at the silver wedding feast are funny, while the situations at Bald Knob Lodge, where the elopers "try" to spend their honeymoon, will make an Eskimo snicker. In fact space prohibits enumerating all the "blues destroying" moments. Everyone will enjoy the many household incidents pictured here in realistic manner.

The settings, both interiors and exteriors, are good. The photography is flawless, the acting really entertaining. Mr. Barnes is a "find" in the role of Arthur Haviland. Adolphe Menjou as the law student is typical of the class—know more about law than the chief justice of the United States. Miss Lee and Miss Wilson are as attractive as ever and both have important roles.

The Cast

Arthur Haviland.....T. Roy Barnes
Margaret Saxby.....Lila Lee
Mabel Hoyt.....Lois Wilson
Jack Hoyt.....Walter Hiers
Mrs. Wilbur.....ZaSu Pitts
Mr. Wilbur.....Arthur Hoyt
Martha Saxby.....Lillian Leighton
Amos Saxby.....Tully Marshall
Dudley King.....Adolphe Menjou
Mrs. Pearson.....Sylvia Ashton
Mr. Pearson.....Otis Harlan
Pop Skinner.....Charles Ogle
Mrs. Skinner.....Ethel Wales
Bank president.....Sydney Bracey
Policeman.....William Gonder
Maid.....Lottie Williams
Silas Spencer.....Dan Mason
The Chief.....W. H. Brown
Marriage License Clerk.....Robert Brower

By Oscar Blumenthal and Gustave Kadelburg. Scenario by Walter Woods from Leo Ditrichstein's adaptation of the play. Directed by James Cruze. Photographed by Karl Brown.

The Story: Sets forth the hilarious adventures of a young couple who elope, of a half dozen old married folks who suddenly find they are not married at all and of a youthful "legal light" who causes the mixup.

Classification: High class comedy of "wedded bliss" with a superlative cast and effervescent humor.

Production Highlights: Fine cast. The large number of unique situations. The laughs in every scene. T. Roy Barnes. The Silver Wedding party. The Honeymoon fun at Bald Knob Lodge. The household incidents in the various homes of the principals. The excellent direction.

Selecting a Suitable Screen for the Motion Picture Theatre

A Most Important Part of the Equipment of Which Little Is Known

While it is true that the light source, projection machine, film and the like have long received the closest of study, the subject of screens has been neglected. That is to say, there is very little general knowledge in circulation today concerning screens. When we stop to consider the importance of the screen to the motion picture theatre, it certainly warrants serious consideration.

We may compare the screen to a canvas upon which the artist paints a picture. We could hardly expect a masterpiece, no matter who the artist, if the picture was painted on some substance that absorbed all the life and color. Similarly, we cannot expect to show good pictures on a screen which absorbs detail and depth. To secure high-grade projection it becomes necessary to have a good screen which will bring forth the finished picture. The screen is at the center of attraction during the entire show, excepting perhaps the time required for the prologue. Let us, then, be thoroughly impressed with the importance of this part of the theatre equipment and choose our screens with great care.

Types of Screens

Screens can be classified under two general headings, the reflecting and diffusing types. These two classes have entirely different characteristics and consequently serve best under entirely different conditions. It is difficult, however, to classify some screens under either of these headings, as they combine some of the qualities of both these types.

The diffusing quality of a screen throws the reflected light in all directions. For instance, if we stood looking very nearly edgewise at the screen we would find considerable light reflected in our direction. This would enable us to see a picture at this extreme angle.

However, if instead of this screen, a highly reflecting type of screen was substituted, probably the surface would then appear very nearly black if observed from the same position.

The reflector screen is somewhat siimlar to a mirror in that it reflects most of the light back through a definite angle. Both types have their uses, and great care should be taken in selecting the screen best suited for the theatre.

Your Particular Theatre

The selection of the screen best suited for your particular theatre involves a problem that should be subjected to intelligent study. The many factors that enter into this problem, such as the seating arrangement, position of the projection room, balcony and the like, must be given their due consideration to insure satisfactory results. The size of picture for the individual house should receive especial attention as a poor decision in this matter may well prove a decided detriment to the box office reieipts.

It is advantageous to use the screen that will reflect the light back through an angle where it will be most useful. Nevertheless, we must not lose sight of the fact that the audience seated in the front side section demands consideration.

Texture and Color of the Screen

A screen surface finished in a heavy, coarse texture tends to illuminate detail. This is only noticeable when the picture is observed at very close range. When a screen is observed from some distance the texture is of small importance.

Through recent developments it has become necessary to consider the color of the screen. Roughly speaking, there are now three kinds of projected light, that from the high intensity arc, the common arc and the Mazda lamp. Each has a more or less color distinction. It follows that a screen can be selected to aid in securing the best resultant reflected color from each of the above. We would not select a dazzling white screen for the high intensity arc, whereas this same screen might prove very satisfactory with the Mazda lamp projection. The light from the Mazda lamp has a yellowish tinge. Thus by the proper selection of color tone for the screen we may aid in securing a pleasing light to the audience.

Borders and Shadow Boxes

It is becoming common practice to surround the screen with some kind of a framework or border. Shadow boxes are often employed for this purpose.

There are several advantages to such arrangements provided they are properly employed. A plain border or shadow box offsets the picture and gives it a neat uniform surrounding; some settings being so designed as to give a sense of greater distance from the observer to the screen.

However, there is a tendency to border the picture with either a jet black material or paint. While this does aid in making the picture appear brighter, there is danger of causing a sensation of glare through this contrast, as it is difficult for the eye to observe two objects at the same time if they vary to an extreme degree in the light they reflect. Here we would have such a case; a brightly illuminated screen offset by a jet black border. It has been found that a medium dark gray, such as a soft gray velvet, serves best for this purpose.

The Effect of Stray Light on the Screen

A very common cause for pictures appearing gray and hazy is through stray light falling on the screen. Great care should be taken in excluding all light from the screen excepting that projected from the booth. A streak of light falling on the screen from a partly closed window or from some unshielded electric light will cause a loss of depth and detail in the picture. Precautions in this matter may very materially improve the picture.

Distortion of the Picture

Repeated attempts have been made to secure a screen that would present the objects in the picture in their natural proportions when observed from any position. If these attempts had proved successful the audience sitting in the front side seats of the theatre would enjoy the picture as much as those in the center of the house. However, the writer is acquainted with no screen that eliminates distortion of the picture.

When we observe the picture from a front side position in the theatre, that is, through a large angle, the screen appears to be much narrower than it is actually. Yet all the figures in the picture are projected on this apparently narrow screen. Therefore, it follows that the figures must

Composite of the Most Modern Features in World Theatre

Omaha's New Palace Seats 2500; Building Costs 1,500,000 Dollars

A composite of all the new features in modern theatre building is incorporated in the new World Theatre in Omaha which opened its doors to the public on April 15.

The palace of photoplay and Pantages vaudeville is located at Fifteenth and Douglas streets in the middle of "theatre row" and stands out in prominence in the business section of the city like the Temple of Zeus in ancient Athens. Estimated cost of the entire property is $1,500,000. The seating capacity is 2,500, including the reclining lounge seats in the loges. The World Realty Company which operates the Sun, Moon and Muse theatres in Omaha operates the new World Theatre with Harry Goldberg managing director, Arthur A. Frudenfeld manager, and Nathan N. Frudenfeld publicity director.

Howard C. Crane and R. S. M. Wilde, both of Detroit, Mich., were the architects, James Black Company of Omaha and St. Louis constructed the building, while the Nelson Decorating Company of Chicago, completed the interior art work. The theatre is of concrete skeleton, steel structure for the ceiling and is finished in terra cotta, adorned with tall Gothic columns and decorative canopy.

Entering the auditorium of the new World Theatre, one is impressed with a solemnity of beauty and grandeur; the color scheme of turquoise blue and gold striking the eye while an appealing harmony of lights reflect from the prosecenium, the walls and dome. One feels like a fairy in a garden of wealth and flowers in the World Theatre with its rare chandeliers bespeaking richness in design and a dome of hammered bronze, gold and silver leaf attracting ardent attention.

The lower floor contains 900 seats finished in turquoise blue and gold plush; also there are 350 lounge seats in the loges of the mezzanine floor and 1,250 seats in the balcony. A remarkable view of the stage may be had even from the extreme remote corners of the balcony.

Arthur A. Frudenfeld, manager, who has 15 years experience to his credit

The loges contain reclining seats within railings on the mezzanine floor. The walls bespeak new art in mural decorations. Friezes of the muses of art, music, poetry, dance and drama adorn the upper parts of the auditorium walls, while draperies of turquoise blue and gold lend appealing attraction to the eye. The stage is spacious enough for any sort of play, the hangings and scenics having been supplied by the Sosman-Landis Scenic Company of Chicago. Comfort facilities are featured by a ladies' smoking room, to be known as the "Egyptian Room," really an innovation in the Middle West. The room opens from the mezzanine floor and is rich in draperies, color design and comfort facilities for Milady. Smoking tables, reclining lounges together with a counter of gold tips, perfumed and "round" cigarettes are at Milady's comfort; all provided the public doesn't enter a further objection, the management stated.

Another ladies' rest room of Japanese effect is located on the balcony floor. Two men's rest rooms, one finished in English hunting style, the other in plain design, are also provided.

The equipment of the new World Theatre is of the latest in theatre manufacture. The heating and cooling systems are in one, designed by C. H. Brown of Cleveland. Heating of the theatre is by warm air, whisked through galvanized iron chambers by fans and heated by steam coils, then blown into the theatre through concealed openings about the upper walls and ceiling. Cooling system operates similarly without the heat from the steam coils. Ventilation is by means of suction fans drawing the foul air through air chambers in the floor.

A Hope-Wurlitzer organ is the feature of musical entertainment in the new World Theatre, the tones filling the spacious auditorium through openings in the ceiling and upper walls. Floor covering throughout with plush carpet of turquoise blue and gold. Ticket office equipment is the latest in ticket selling devices of the Simplex brand, and supplied by the St. Louis Automatic Ticket Device Company.

An intercommunicating 'phone system was installed by Western Electric.

Sob Stuff or Laughter!

You are in the business of selling emotion—they come to laugh, cry, sympathize or rage at or with your pictures—don't you realize you need the music to fit the emotions of your audiences? Making the heart glad with rollicking tunes, keeping step with marching men, the twitter of birds in the forest depths, the soft caressing of a mother's hands—these are tasks for music—real theatre music.

The Barton Orchestral Organ easily supplies it—gives it to you—beautiful volumes of soul stirring melody in so many variations that it never tires. The marvelous Barton Divided Manual, exclusive with the Barton, is largely responsible.

You can get more profits with a Barton for less cost. The first payment is small, the terms easy and the whole cost much less than you would believe possible. Write today.

jection equipment, finished in blue and gold. Three machines, one stereopticon and two spotlights make up this installation equipment, together with four concealed spotlights from the balcony.

Distance of throw is 122 feet to a gold fibre screen supplied by the Sosman-Landis Scenic Company of Chicago. Snap-Lite lenses are on the Motiograph machines. Three-phase Wagner Rotary converters are used to supply direct current. General Electric high tension arcs are also used.

The entire lighting system of the new World Theatre was arranged by O. A. Hansen, head of the projection force of the World, Sun, Moon and Muse theatres. Lights, fixtures of rare and costly designs, were supplied by the Victor S. Pearlman Company of Chicago. Lighting of the exterior of the building will be done from concealed reflectors on the canopy casting vari-colored hues all over the building. A huge electric sign that may be seen from a distance of five miles has been constructed on top of the new theatre. The switchboard was supplied by the Mutual Switchboard Company of Chicago. Plastic work in the new theatre was done by the Decorative Supply Company of Chicago.

Prevention against fire in the World Theatre is declared 100 per cent perfect with easy exits from all parts of the house. Dressing rooms in the new theatre are done in the latest design with shower baths and quick access to the stage.

Popular prices will prevail, 30 cents for general admission on afternoons, and 50 cents at night.—

Frank G. Hall to Open First "Dollar Top" Theatre for Jersey City

Establishing procedents in the theatrical field is no new stunt for Frank G. Hall, one of the best known showmen in the metropolitan district and now after a year's absence from the "glare of the Broad White Way" he comes forth and puts over a new one.

On April 17th, he will open to the public of Jersey City his new million dollar State theatre on the Hudson Boulevard, opposite the Elk's Club, which will be the first community owned theatre financed through a membership plan built in this country.

A little over a year ago Mr. Hall went to Jersey City practically a total stranger with an idea of providing the community with playhouses and entertainment upon a plane commensurate with the city's progress, intelligence and refined tastes.

It was not long before Mr. Hall's infectious enthusiasm over his project, his untiring efforts and unquestioned ability attracted a group of conservative business men to share with him the launching of his membership plan, which he termed "The Success of a New Idea." This plan provided for a membership of 1,000 heads of representative families in the community to be passed upon and elected to life membership by a Board of Governors.

Besides becoming stockholders in the corporation these thousand members are to be entitled to free admission for the balance of their lives to the theatres controlled by the company.

That Mr. Hall's abstract idea of a year ago and his invitation to the public spirited citizens

"Navy Standard"

The Navy Department has drawn up rigid specifications for linoleum to be used on the decks of battleships. Naturally, a linoleum that conforms to these exacting Navy requirements, and that will endure under the terrific wear imposed by Navy service, is exactly the type of floor-covering needed in the theatre.

All so-called battleship linoleum is not made according to Navy specifications. To be absolutely certain you are getting genuine battleship linoleum, made according to Navy standard, you should insist on Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum.

Motion Picture Exhibitors tell us—

DURING the past year we have asked motion picture exhibitors all over the United States what they demand in a theatre floor-covering. Here, in condensed form, are their opinions:

"Theatre floors must be extremely durable to withstand the heavy, daily traffic, up and down the aisles, through the corridors, etc."

"Floor-coverings must be quiet underfoot so that people walking about and looking for seats will not disturb those already seated."

"They must be easily and inexpensively cleaned to keep down overhead expenses."

"Must be durable?"—Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum is manufactured in strict accordance with the standards set by the U. S. Navy—made to withstand such terrific, grinding wear as is given the decks of battleships.

"Quiet underfoot?"—"Easy and inexpensive to clean?"—As cork is its main ingredient, Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum is comfortably quiet to walk on—pleasantly resilient under foot. Its smooth, sanitary surface can be cleaned in a jiffy by a few whisks of a damp mop. It comes in three colors—attractive shades of terra cotta, brown and green.

No other linoleum so fully meets the requirements of motion picture floors as does Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum. It will pay you to insist upon the genuine.

Gold-Seal Cork Carpet

Some exhibitors, who desire absolutely soundproof floors, prefer Gold-Seal Cork Carpet. This efficient floor-covering is very durable and as velvety quiet underfoot as a woven rug. Made in 6 attractive shades.

of Jersey City to join him in the development of his idea met with immediate response and approbation is best evidenced in the concrete, by the magnificent structure, the State Theatre to be opened within the next two weeks.

Many innovations in the matter of construction are promised which will make the "State" rank with the foremost theatres in the country.

The seating capacity will be about three thousand and Mr. Hall announces that "one-dollar top" will be charged for the attractions which makes the State the first "dollar-top" theatre in Jersey City.

Besides being managing director of the State Theatre on the Boulevard Mr. Hall is the managing director of the successful U. S. Theatre, Hoboken, N. J., president of the State Theatres Corporation, which company owns the State Theatre and is going to build the new Capitol on Monticello Avenue, Jersey City; president of the Ritz Theatres Corporation, now operating the Ritz Theatre on Central Avenue, Jersey City; and president of the Capitol Theatre Amusement Co., which company is building the State-Capitol Twin Theatres at Union Hill, N. J., said to be the largest theatre property in the world and the first "twin theatres" in the country.

Construction has already started on the twin theatres, which were also financed through the membership plan and it is calculated to have these two houses ready for opening by Labor Day.

With the theatres already built and in operation under his control and those that are now under construction and which will be under the Hall management, Frank G. Hall has acquired, built and financed in less than one year a circuit of theatres in New Jersey that will not only be unequalled in joint of structural beauty and grandeur by any other circuit of theatres in the country but one that will be a decided factor to be reckoned with in the matter of booking.

The policy of the Hall theatres will be high class "Big Time" vaudeville and "first run" feature photoplays.

Miami, Florida, Claims New Studio

The most compact and complete studio that the state of Florida boasts of is that of the Brush Photoplays which is located five miles just outside Miami on the famous Ta-Miami Trail. The studio is the property of William B. Brush, late of Los Angeles, where he was connected as production manager with Thomas H. Ince.

The Lyric theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio, was purchased by MacMahon and Jackson, when it was operating under the name of the Majestic Opera House, converting it into an up-to-date vaudeville and picture house. The photographs show the great improvement of placing lobby display cases and mirrors into which are fastened electric fixtures. The lobby display cases were furnished by Libman-Spanjer Corp.

New Quarters Result of Big Business

Here's one indication of the return of good business: a theatre supply company, namely the Howells Cinema Equipment Corp., finds the present and future so promising as to move their quarters into a very prominent and much larger space. Joe Hornstein, president of this supply house, will now transact his rapidly growing business from the first and second floors on the corner at 740 Seventh Avenue and 40th Street, New York City. This location is several times larger than the former premises on the eleventh floor of 729 Seventh Avenue and also has the decided advantage of a corner location providing an enormous window display. "Joe" has now expanded his activities into the wholesale distribution of Westinghouse radio equipment with marked success having shown great foresight in laying in a heavy stock of this equipment while it was obtainable. Therefore he now has the distinction of being one of the very few distributors who can meet the present demands. "Joe" further informs us that he has two large store rooms in the Manhattan Supply Building, where he keeps on hand for immediate delivery both a complete supply of theatre and radio equipment.

Frank A. Hall of the World theatre

While the attitude of many supply dealers toward the business outlook is pessimistic, it has been proven through this particular example along with others that the dealer who keeps his eye open for every opportunity is pulling through this depression in first-rate shape.

Additional Claims for New Model of Power's G. E. High Intensity

The General Electric Company, cooperating with the Nicholas Power Company, has recently made several improvements in the Power's G. E. High Intensity Arc Lamp.

The accompanying illustrations show two views of the new model. The two cooling heads, formerly used on the ends of the positive and negative carriages, have been eliminated, as it was found that the large amount of cooling surface heretofore provided was not required.

One of the main features of the new model is the ingenious arrangement for conducting the current to the positive carbons. This is accomplished by means of two heavy contact shoes, marked "H" in Figure 1, made of solid nickel and cast in one piece with their respective supporting arms. The contact shoes grip the carbons on both sides, the gripping pressure being maintained by means of a heavy spring made of a special heat resisting alloy placed on the lower end of the supporting arms which have a lever action. The entire positive assembly is mountcd on a flexible support so that the contact shoes float on the end of the positive upper carbon and any eccentricity in the carbons cannot produce a binding action. The design of the new contact shoes is such that there can be no accumulation of carbon dust and a perfect contact is at all times maintained.

Another important innovation is the extention of the negative carbon carriage, which will permit of utilizing another inch of the negative carbon. A shield of heavy asbestos composition "G" is mounted on the upper end of the negative assembly and protects the metal parts from the heat of the arc.

The rear end of the positive clamp has been provided with an additional out-board bearing in order to give more support to the carbon feed tube. This bearing insures a smoother operation of the positive carbon feed and rotating mechanism and lightens the load on the motor.

An important change has also been made in the carbon specifications. A ⅜" diameter cored "Silvertip" high intensity carbon 9" long is specified for the negative instead of the uncoated carbon formerly used. The use of a coated negative carbon permits the current to be conducted to the lower end of the carbon as in the regular carbon arc lamp, and eliminates the use of a contact shoe which was the cause of most of the difficulties formerly experienced with the Power's G. E. lamps in the past.

A fact which many who are otherwise familiar with these lamps may not know is that although they are designed for operation on direct current, it is possible to operate the lamp successfully on alternating current. In case of emergency, either an elternating current compensarc or similar device is used for reducing the voltage of the A. C. line to a proper value. For emergency A. C. operation, the best results are obtained with the 75 ampere lamp operated on from 60 to 65 amperes at about 35 to 40 volts A. C. When operated on alternating current, the motor which is designed for direct current only must be cut out of the circuit. In order to do this with the least delay, a snap switch is provided on the lamphouse.

The improved Power's G. E. High Intensity Lamp has been thoroughly tested in the laboratories of the General Electric Company under actual operating conditions and the two first models received have been in successful operation for several months in one of the Broadway theatres.

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

Bears the words "EASTMAN" "KODAK" —in black letters in the transparent film margin, as a means of positive identification, exactly as you see them in the section of film reproduced above.

If you see these same words in white on a black strip you have incontrovertible proof that they were so printed by the finisher to mislead, not stenciled by the manufacturer to identify, and that the stock is not Eastman.

National Anti-Misframe League Forum

Dear Editor: Will write to you and tell you that the League is a fine thing. I got in some very bad films and used all of the labels up. Would like to have some more. All of the bad films came from one company. It was Famous Players-Lasky. In the Denver territory I sure A-1 them.

Am sending a rough drawing of the rewind cabinet I have built. It may interest others. It is very handy and you can do all of the repairing on it. Plenty of room.

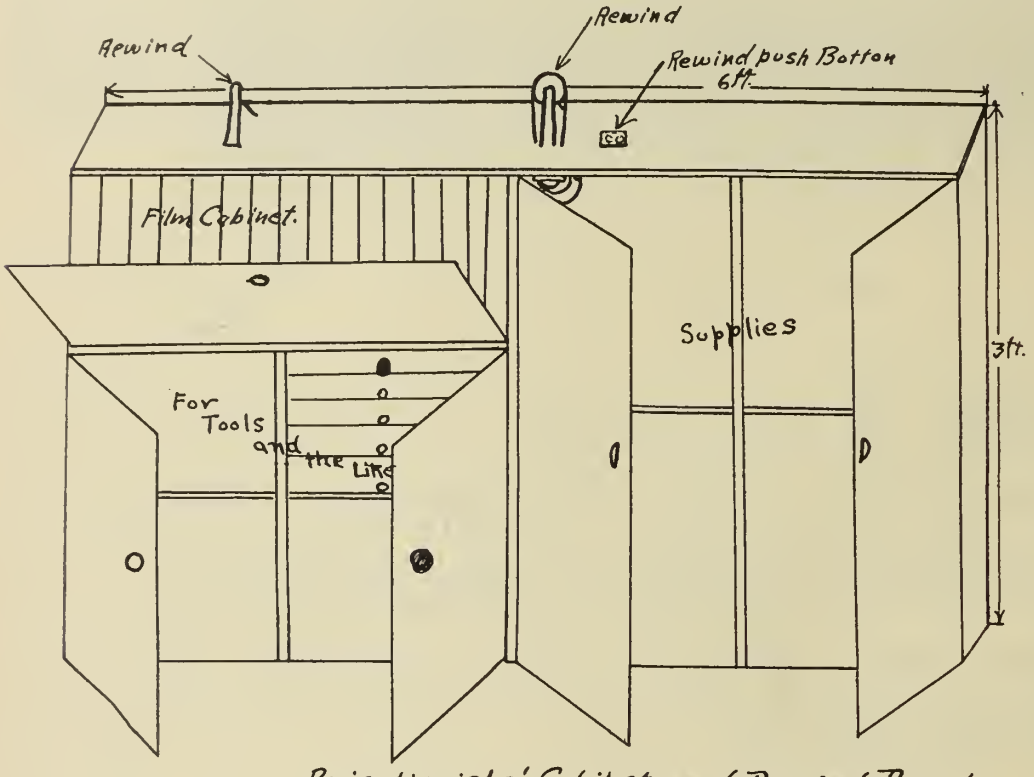
We have received the mental membership buttons which have been so consistently demanded by the members. Every brother should hop to it and get one of these, as they are a great improvement over the former celluloid type.

It is our desire to sell this button to the fellows for what they actually cost us. The price for one button is 25 cents. Any member sending us this amount in stamps or coin will be sent a button immediately.



Projectionists' Cabinet and Rewind Bench

Gentlemen:

I have been putting it off long enough. I am sending my application for membership to-day.

I think it is one of the best that has ever been introduced; it benefits all parties concerned in motion picture business. If all the boys will get together and work for each other's benefit, the motion picture business will become more or less a pleasure, instead of a misery.

I have always done my best to put the films which I used in as good condition as possible before shipping it out even if it went back to the exchange who sent it out. I have worked an hour lots of times locating and mending one misframe. I don't think I have ever sent one out without making sure it was right in every way. I have never put any signals on any film and I do not intend to do so. This causes lots of annoyance to the public as well as the next operator who has to deal with it.

I received a film once with instructions inside the case stating they were in first-class shape, but I did not consider this satisfactory, for my policy is to know by self inspection, so I found four pins and ten or twelve patches that were too heavy and thick with old cement to run through a machine without jumping and maybe causing a break. This bunch of films came from what is considered a first-class theatre. I cannot understand why any one would rewind a film and pronounce it perfect, in such condition; it is liable to cause a fire and burn a theatre down and maybe kill several people.

I failed to inspect a film one time that was sent out from one exchange due to the lack of time, as the train was late in delivering them to our town, and there was a pin which was missed in the inspection of them; it caused quite a fire, but as the magazines were tight it did not get into them and burned all that wound around the sprockets, which made quite a fire; when the manager came up I was unconscious on the floor from the smoke which I inhaled, and the fumes of pyrene which I used to check the fire. He being an operator himself went on with the show and there was very little excitement in the theatre. A fire is exciting to any one but I have never quit a machine on this account. If there is a chance to save the film or machine that is my business to do so.

I have been operating about two years; learned under my manager, who is an expert on most everything pertaining to films and machines and operating same.

I could tell lots of experiences, but will save it for further and later writings, which I intend doing frequently.

Yours for better projection.
Oasis Theatre.
Walter Dupuy.

Dear Editor:

Here comes another letter. I suppose you think I am going to keep you busy.

I am going to describe our projection room. Our booth is 9 feet by 12 feet. We have two Powers 6B Type E machines. The tension on the film and on the take-up is very loose. We use 110 volts A. C. current, 60 amperes to the arc and secure very good results. Our throw is 80 feet; we use a 4¾ E. F. lens made by the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company. The rewind is motor driven fixed with a loose belt so as to keep the film from getting too much speed when the reel gets full.

There are three port holes in the front of the booth. They are 12 inches by 12 inches. Located over these port holes are fire shutters fixed with a cord leading to the rewind table. There is a master link directly over the rewind table which all of the lines are fastened to. Each line has its individual fuse appear of less than their actual width though they still remain their original height. Thus the pictures appear out of proportion, or, as it is commonly termed, distorted. Very often the screen itself is blamed for this distortion. However, the only remedy for this trouble is to increase the distance from the front seats to the screen, as this lessens the angle through which the screen is observed.

Selecting the Screen

The Size of Screen to Use

"How large should the new screen be for my theatre?" This question is very frequently heard and, usually, it receives a great variety of answers.

A poor selection in the size of screen best suited for the theatre may prove a drawback to the box office receipts. This is particularly the case with screens too large for the house. Pictures that are extremely large for the theatre may prove very annoying to the audience, especially those in the front section.

A person seated only a short distance from a large picture has difficulty in following all the action taking place on the screen. The eye can only see objects included in a relatively small angle. Therefore, it is necessary, if observing a large picture at close range, to continuously cast the eyes to various directions in order to include the entire screen. The observer will find it much easier to follow the action if he increases his distance from the screen or if the picture itself is made smaller. Eye fatigue will be reduced, helping to eliminate one of the causes of headaches. The tendency toward unsteadiness and flicker is much more noticeable in large pictures.

Another advantage of using a moderate size picture and placing it well back from the audience is that coarseness of detail in the picture will be reduced. Small defects are very noticeable when magnified to an extreme degree.

When choosing the correct size of screen for the theatre, the front, center and back of the house must be considered. It is well to select a screen that will give a moderate picture from the center of the house. If it is impossible to place the screen well back from the front seats, then this front section should be slightly favored by reducing the size of the screen. While from the extreme rear of the house a large picture would appear in proportion, however, the smaller picture will prove satisfactory. It is necessary to compromise, allowing the audience in all parts of the house an enjoyable picture.

Care and Maintenance

Very often a good screen is installed in a theatre and because it showed to advantage when first used it receives no further attention. Screens become soiled and dusty and require cleaning at certain intervals. Therefore, it is advisable to refer to the screen manufacturers for their instructions. Quite often the mistake is made of indiscriminately wiping off a screen. This may cause it to appear streaked.

Some screens depreciate in their original reflective qualities more rapidly than others. It is good practice to compare the screen in the theatre with new samples of screen. From this comparison it is possible to estimate when a screen has served its useful life.

Many Advantages of Mexican Studio

An up-to-date Mexican studio which is completely equipped on the style of the latest American studios, is reported as doing a good business. During the last year five large pictures have been made, the latest of which is to be released in this country.

Besides the many advantages of the studio itself, there are a great number of natural benefits to be derived from its location. Within a radius of thirty miles of this studio can be found tropical vegetation, mountainous country, general rough country, Spanish atmosphere, race tracks, bull fight rings and the like.

Sunshine is an article more abundant than in any other part of the world. It is a well-known fact that Mexico City, in which this studio is situated, is gifted with the maximum amount of light which proves a most economical and convenient feature.

G. Camus, owner, has been an ardent student of American methods and is expected to be in New York City about the middle of this month. His office will be located at 220 West 42nd Street, New York City.

DEAR EDITOR:

With interest I have been reading the N. A. M. L. for some time and think it is the very thing for the motion picture industry.

I have been an operator for the last three years and took a deep interest in my work from the very beginning. Here in Oklahoma the film exchanges and operators have been very careful with the film, in fact, I have received very few bad prints. I am operating a Motiograph and a Powers 6A and get the best picture possible. My throw is only 71 feet.

Inclosed you will find my application in the N. A. M. L. Trusting it will be accepted,

Very truly yours,
SEARCY HOLLAND.

The Blue Bird Theatre, Mangum, Okla.

DEAR EDITOR:

Please send particulars in regard to the N. A. M. L., as I would like to become a member of it. Have been reading a great deal about it in the NEWS, but it doesn't state how much it costs or anything. I have been an operator about twelve years. I always send a film out in as good shape as I receive it, and most of the time better. For sometimes I get films that I have to work on over an hour before I can get a decent show out of it, but never less. It won't hurt anything to be a member of the League. I have only been working here a short time and came from Iowa, so send me full details.

Very truly,
D. F. GLANCY.

Colonial Theatre, Jasper, Ala.

All that is necessary for you to do to become a member is to fill in the N. A. M. L. blank found in the back of MOTION PICTURE NEWS with your name and address, the name and address of the theatre where you are employed and the manager's name. Upon receipt of this information you will be enrolled in the society in due course. The membership button costs 25c., upon receipt of which amount, either in coin or stamps, a button will be sent you. Here's hoping you will soon become a member!

DEAR EDITOR:

Perhaps you will be surprised to hear from me as I did not write you ever since I joined the N. A. M. L., but then I did not have anything to write about, but still I'm keeping my pledge to the society of which I appreciate very much to be a member.

Now to come to a few points in discussion. About the bronze buttons, my opinion is to go to it and if they're ready let me know. Also about the film reports on each show . I think that's a great idea.

I would like to know where I could buy a slide showing that I am a member of the N. A. M. L. Please send me some labels as I am about all out of them.

I am keeping up my work in best of ability of my seven years' experience permits me. I have two Powers 6B machines which I keep in the best of condition. I am a constant reader of the NEWS and very much interested in the Projectionist's page, as I think a person never knows too much. Please let me hear from you.

Sincerely,
FRANK DOMONKAS.

DEAR EDITOR:

I see in the NEWS where you are sending out a N. A. M. L. button. Will be glad to give 25c. for one of them.

I like the League fine and I want to tell you I get some bad films. I have two Powers 6A machines.

Will write you a long letter next time.

Yours truly,
G. I. THOMAS.

Salt Lake Theatre Supply Opens Theatre

A new motion picture theatre was opened at 44 Exchange Place in Salt Lake City, Utah, with a special matinee, at which showing representatives of theatres in the intermountain territory, local film exchanges and members of the press were the invited guests of the Salt Lake Theatre Supply Company, the owners. The place is a theatre in miniature and its construction and equipment, completed under the supervision of Manager Samuel I. Levin, marks a distinct step forward in the methods of handling theatrical equipment and supplies. The house has complete equipment for the display of any size or variety of film with the same projection and lighting effects that would be available in a large modern theatre. The equipment includes a miniature stage with proscenium arch, the usual wings and all the appurtenances necessary for conducting a motion picture show. Music is provided by the latest type of photoplayer, a marvel in the furnishing of the correct musical effect.—HUNT.

Music and the Picture

New Metropolitan Baritone Is Noted Screen Player

The recent announcement that Michael Bohnen has signed a contract with the Metropolitan Opera Company to sing leading baritone roles at the Metropolitan next season is of special interest to exhibitors who will play "The Mistress of the World" productions.

Mr. Bohnen plays "Benson" in "The Mistress of the World," which calls upon him to perform all sorts of daring and dangerous exploits.

A Russian by birth, Bohnen has sung in all the leading capitals of Europe. He possesses a rich, powerful voice, distinguished by the deep, gnarled quality that is a characteristic of Russian singers everywhere. One of his most successful roles is that of Scarpia in "Tosca," and at the Berlin Opera he was cast in the leading role in "The City of the Dead," which recently caused a sensation in Europe and has since been presented at the Metropolitan in New York, serving as the vehicle for the American debut of Mme. Jeritza, the Viennese soprano.

Audiences Must Learn Technique Says London Times

An audience has its technique to learn quite as much as the artist, says The London Times. Technique is only a convenient word for "what you may take for granted," and it comes from practice. When all the crimes of this unmusical nation are reckoned up and cast in the balance, this, the fact that for a generation at least they did practice seriously, should be thrown into the opposite scale. Any one who despairs of the republic of music might take a glance at the "Diary of Viscount Percival," where the interest centres in and stops at anecdotes of Handel and Bononcini, without a pulse beating any the quicker for anything they wrote—at least not audibly.

Music Weeks Meet with Public Favor

Eighty Cities in United States Have Held City-Wide Demonstrations

NEARLY eighty cities distributed throughout the United States have already held Music Week and scores of others are planning them for the near future. New York was the first city to inaugurate the movement on a large scale, as it has many other things musical, but the great city-wide musical demonstration has spread with such rapidity and has taken root in so many places that it already might be called a national institution. San Francisco, Los Angeles, Dallas, Denver, Detroit, Washington, D. C., St. Louis, Peoria, Portland, Ore., Seattle Little Rock, Sacramento and Youngtown have already held Music Weeks and other cities including Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Toledo and many smaller places are planning them for the near future.

Music Week is apparently as well adapted to the small cities as the large ones, for the interest aroused is as great in cities of all sizes. The participation includes so many elements in the city's life that the enthusiasm generated is so spontaneous that we must be convinced that it has very decidedly struck a popular chord.

While there are many spectacular features connected with Music Week, it is not spectacular in its essence. It is sort of an awakening of the musical consciousness of the people and an opportunity of self expression.

The growth of the Music Week movement has resembled the progress of those things destined to become the customs and institution of a country advancing with measured gait but firm and steady step from city to city, taking root as an annual event wherever it has once been adopted and accompanied by that interchange of ideas and cumulative development which characterize those voluntary activities which really serve the public and which the public takes to its heart.

Just what a Music Week is has been variously defined. In some cities it is referred to as "a community effort to emphasize the value of music." In others it is described as "a widely scattered, widely varied but well organized and simultaneous demonstration in honor of music," or more briefly, "a tribute to music in which everybody has a part." The exact wording matters little. It may appear on official programs and in the mayors' proclamations that often announce the observance, and its main purpose is to remind the town of the aim underlying what is going on. That aim is similar practically everywhere, and the success with which it is carried out depends upon the public-spirited efforts of those in charge of the organization work. The object is always to get as much cooperation and participation as possible not only from the musical elements but also from those not directly connected with music—civic, religious, educational, industrial, etc., etc.—to the end that Music Week may be a real city-wide demonstration bringing the message of music to every man, woman and child and impressing upon the consciousness of the public the benefits to be derived from music and the need for its greater utilization in every phase of life.

Otto H. Kahn is honorary chairman of New York's Third Music Week Committee, as he has been of the two preceding. C. M. Tremaine, director of the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music is the active chairman and Miss Isabel Lowden is director. The membership of the general committee includes many of the most distinguished men in the city and there are thirty-five special committees representing the important musical organizations and a wide variety of interests outside musical circles. The Special Committee for the Motion Picture Theatres is headed by Hugo Risenfeld and the other members are Frank Stewart Adams, V. C. Cooper, Carl Edouarde, Michael P. Kruger, Joseph Littau, Ernst Luz, Erno Rapee, Olois Reiser, Frederick Stahlberg and Victor Wagner.

Judging from the responses which have thus far been received by the committee and from the participation during the two previous years more than 2,000 different organizations and groups will take part in this year's demonstration. They will include churches, public and private schools, colleges, women's clubs, musical societies, stores and factories, libraries, hotels, theatres and motion picture houses.

A movement which is so completely meeting the popular approval and arousing such widespread public interest must naturally interest the motion picture theatre owners and we strongly recommend that they take a conspicuous part in the participation in those cities in which Music Weeks are being held. There is strong indication that the movement may be national and the same week observed simultaneously throughout the country. Full information can be obtained from the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music, 105 West 40th Street, New York.

Coliseum Orchestra Seattle's Pride

Sunday Concerts Big Feature in the Musical Life of the City

ONE of the largest organizations of its kind on the Pacific Coast, and an important factor in the musical life and progress of the city of Seattle is Manager Frank Steffy's Coliseum Theatre Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Conductor Arthur Kay.

The orchestra is composed of over forty pieces, including practically every instrument used in the largest symphony orchestras in the country.

A great part of Mr. Steffy's time and interest has been devoted to the musical part of the Coliseum's programs since his affiliation with the house over four years ago. Since that time he has attracted music lovers to the theatre by his exceptional orchestras, and the Coliseum is widely known and recognized as "Seattle's Symphony Center."

Mr. Kay has been directing the present organization for over a year.

Aside from furnishing an accompaniment for the feature pictures and specialities, the orchestra renders a concert selection at each afternoon and evening performance. Mr. Kay often arranges his concert numbers to correspond to the type of picture being shown. Holiday occasions also call for novelty musical offerings.

Each Sunday morning from 12:30 to 1:30 a special symphony concert of classical and popular numbers is played. There is no extra charge to the public for this concert. A selected soloist usually appears at each of these weekly events, rendering either vocal or instrumental selections.

For the past few weeks the Coliseum has been conducting an elaborate musical contest. Any musical, fraternal or social organization is eligible to enter, and the winner will receive a prize of $500 from the Coliseum. The organizations each select a program to be played by the orchestra at one of the Sunday concerts, and the program that attracts the largest audience will be judged the winner.

In connection with the orchestra, the Coliseum maintains a completely equipped musical library. This library aids materially in the selection and presentation of concerts, prologues and specialties.

The accompanying photograph shows the entire orchestra, including Arthur Kay, conductor. Frank Steffy, manager of the Coliseum, stands at Mr. Kay's right.

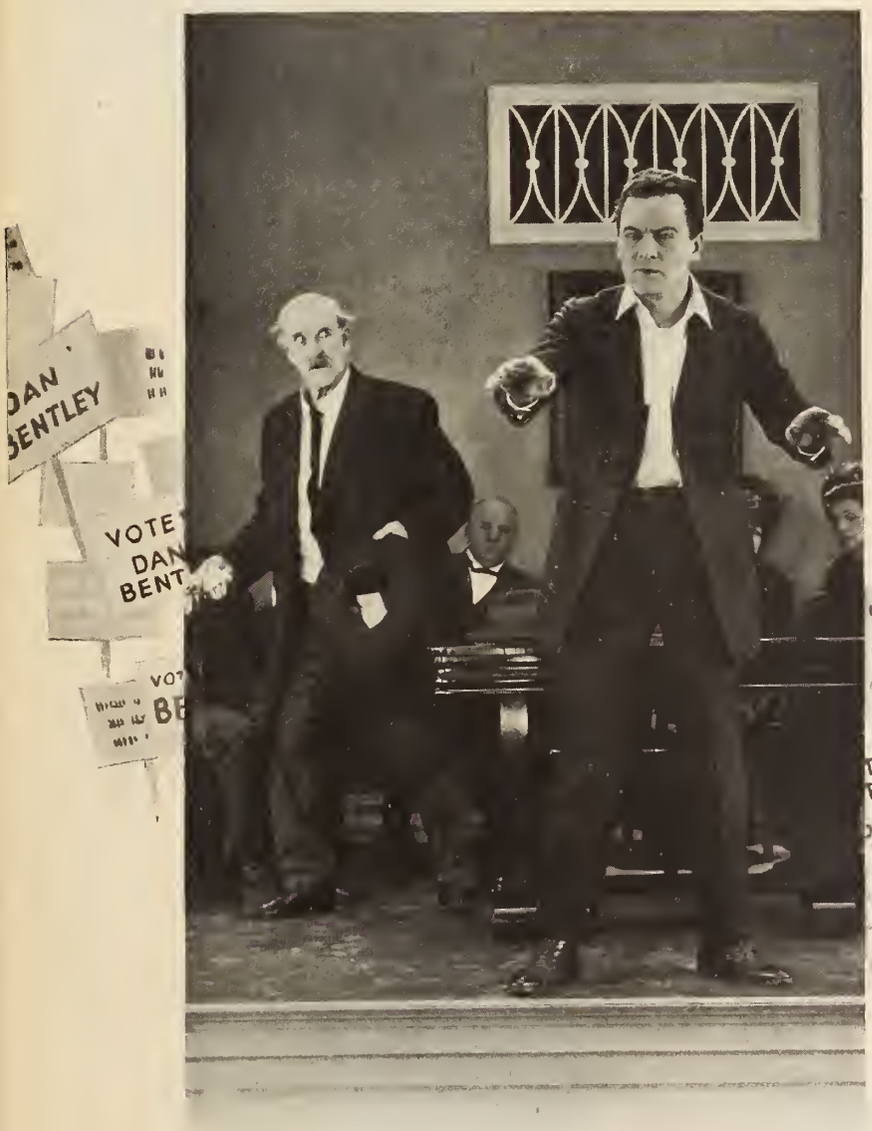
IN A GEORGE ADE STORY

"Our Leading Citizen"



AMERICA'S greatest humorist has written a story direct for the screen! And what's more, he worked with the director and scenario writer in the making of it!

That means something new and bright and entertaining. Tom Meighan never had such an altogether satisfying role.

A great supporting cast interprets this delightful comedy. Lois Wilson is leading woman, Theodore Roberts has a characteristic role, and others are Guy Oliver, Charles Ogle, Sylvia Ashton, Ethel Wales, Lucien Littlefield, and W. P. Carleton.

The hundred million admirers of Meighan and Ade will flock to see it!

WILDERNESS TALES

By Robert C. Bruce

The Artist Who Uses A Camera

are one-reel photoplays of scenic character which mark a definite step in the progress of the motion picture art.

The National Board of Review, in its publication for January-February, discussed the first of the series—"AND WOMEN MUST WEEP"—and declared it one of the "exceptional" pictures of the year. This is the only time this publication has ever deigned to discuss a one-reel picture of any kind.

The Editors-in-Chief of all the national trade journals in this industry have paid editorial tribute to these gems of the photo-dramatic art.

Mr. Rothafel is spending three weeks arranging a symphony for "MY COUNTRY," one of the series, and has declared this picture "one of the most beautiful motion pictures I have ever seen on the screen."

There are ten one-reel photoplays in the series of WILDERNESS TALES—

The Industry's leaders say the screen needs new blood!

The public is eager for moderate-priced entertainment, but—to re-kindle public confidence, the type of pictures needs changing.

"The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes" are a new series of short-reel features, to be released shortly by Educational, that meet every requirement for "better pictures."

For tense dramatic interest, suspense, vigor of story, continuity and excellence of photography they have never been excelled, and have seldom been equalled.

SHERLOCK HOLMES is a name to conjure with at your box-office. Conan Doyle's GREATEST OF FICTION CHARACTERS is not only pre-eminent as the Detective of English Fiction, but is also the best known and most enjoyed of all fiction personages.

"The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes" mark a new step in the progress of the motion picture art, and it is perfectly natural that Educational should sponsor these features—in Short Subjects.

PICTURE the splendors of the Orient transplanted by an exiled Chinese to his quarters in the frozen wastes of the North, where he gave shelter to soldiers-of-fortune, outlaws and the like. Imagine an American girl seeking refuge in this amazing spot.

Picture also the greatest man-hunt ever screened—brother tracking brother, over snow-clad mountains, across frozen rivers, along perilous ledges until at last both hunter and hunted stumble out of the blizzard into the cabin of the girl they both love.

These are but two of many situations from what has been called "unquestionably one of the two greatest pictures of the North ever made."

"I am the Law" marks the dawn of a new era in motion picture production. As much time, care and patience have been expended in the creation, development and presentation of this remarkable picture, as upon any dramatic success on the legitimate stage. At the outpost of the Northwest Royal Mounted. The commandant suddenly returning to find his wife in the arms of one of his own men. . . . . Then the crack of the dog-whip as the older man unmercifully beats his cringing betrayer. Wonderful acting! Acting such as you have seldom seen!

Then the drama of brotherhood. One brother compelled by the creed of the Royal Mounted to hunt down the other, but eventually offering the supreme sacrifice that this other may go free. Scenes that will make your heart beat faster.

And finally a pure, clean love story.

A beautiful girl and a handsome, dashing corporal of the Mounted. Romance with all the delightful freshness of the snow upon it. A story that will go down thru the years.

The Greatest Man-Hunt Ever Filmed

And a love-story long to be remembered

OVER the frozen wastes and snow-clad mountains of the North, across ice-bound rivers and along perilous ledges, through blinding blizzard and midnight darkness—brother tracking brother!

The one a murderer; the other the greatest man-hunter of the Northwest Royal Mounted, compelled by his creed to bring to reckoning the very man he had promised to protect.

And, in the back of each one's mind, the image of the girl they both loved.

This is but one of several elements that make "I Am the Law" the memorable picture that it is.

Written by the Northland's greatest story-teller; produced by the master of outdoor photodrama, "I Am the Law" will be talked of for years to come. As much time, patience and study have been lavished on it as on any dramatic success of the legitimate stage. It is Belasco-like in its perfection. Don't miss it.

A Love Story That Will Go Down the Years

HOW an American girl came to the frozen North;
—how she fell into the clutches of the notorious Fu Chang;
—how a handsome, dashing sergeant of the Royal Mounted rescued her;
—how he confessed a crime of his brother's, only in the end to be compelled to track that brother down;
—how the three—the girl, the tracker and the tracked—were snowed in by a blizzard—this is but the beginning of one of the most stirring love stories ever told—"I am the Law".

Adapted from a story by James Oliver Curwood, directed by that master of outdoor production, Edwin Carewe, "I am the Law" has had more time, patience and study lavished on it than most productions on the legitimate stage. It is Belasco-like in its perfection. Don't miss it.

PICTURE the mental anguish of a man—the greatest man-hunter of the Royal Mounted—compelled to capture, dead or alive, not only a brother officer in the service, but his own younger brother whom he had sworn to protect and keep straight—the fiancee of a girl for whom he himself would have laid down his life.

This is but one of the tense dramatic incidents in the most gripping, soul-stirring story ever told on the screen. A story of the romance, adventure and tragedy of the great Northland, by James Oliver Curwood, one of America's greatest story tellers.

Under the flawless direction of Edwin Carewe, "I am the Law" marks the dawn of a new era in motion picture production. The Gorgeous East—

Transplanted to the Rugged North

UP in the frozen Northland, on the very fringe of the law, lay an Oriental "Inn," a bit of Eastern color, in an incongruous setting.

There Fu Chang kept open-house for soldiers of fortune, outlaws and the like.

Into this amazing trap came an American girl. Luckily for her, a corporal of the Royal Mounted followed on her trail. See this wonderful story, a stirring tale of adventure and love, acted by an all-star cast—"I Am the Law."

By the Northland's greatest story-teller, James Oliver Curwood, directed by Edwin Carewe, the master of out-door photodrama.

My Wife Eh!

what have you got to say—

UNJUSTLY accused of forcing unwelcome attention on the wife of the man you most admire and respect—

What would YOU do?

To tell the truth meant impeaching the honor of his superior's wife—hurting the girl he loved who believed in and loved his own brother, the real culprit—disgracing his brother whom he had sworn to protect and keep straight.

To remain silent admitted his guilt, his own dishonor and possible dismissal from the service to which he had dedicated his life. And more—it killed forever his hope for happiness with the girl he loved.

What would YOU do?

DON'T miss this powerful, enthralling drama of the great Northwest, the most picturesque, soul stirring story ever told of the romance, tragedy and adventure of the North.

DO you want more proof that the all star cast's the thing? Here it is: Name, "Cardigan."

It is sure a downright relief to see a picture where everybody's on the job and nobody's walking around hogging the limelight and worrying because somebody else was accorded a big scene. In this photoplay, adapted from the historical novel by Robert W. Chambers, there's a lot of good work and everybody's doing it. And a casual glance at the cast reveals no name that carries any special weight.

BETTY CARPENTER.

Betty Carpenter, for instance. You wouldn't go around the corner to see Betty Carpenter, would you? Because you never heard of Betty Carpenter. Suppose, though, you DO go around the corner just out of curiosity. You'll be surprised! Here's a pretty girl who apparently doesn't know there's a camera "registering" her every expression. A pretty girl who dares to look ugly. A pretty girl who conveys joy and heartbreak without exhibiting facial or any other sort of acrobatics.

Then, William Collier Jr. Ah—you knew William's dad! But you hadn't heard much about William. Behold, then, a youthful edition of Rodolf Valentino. A lithe, brilliant, enthusiastic young chap, who demonstrates with no apparent effort to demonstrate, that he has romance, passion, shrewdness, bravery, and wiry good health wrapped up in the slim person that is himself. He's not as good looking as the adored Rodolf, but he has a world of charm and a "way wid him" that's going to set the flapper's heart to flapping or I miss my guess.

And so you can go down the line. Jere Austin has played leads opposite feminine stars and played them well. But he's not particularly well known, and in "Cardigan," while he has an important part, is NOT the hero. Which fact seems to trouble him not at all. He throws himself heart and soul into the rôle that is his.

The story is a romance threaded through the exciting days that presaged the revolutionary war. It has Indians in costume, council fires, and crooks, gallant bewigged defenders of the nation, and suave bewigged servants of the throne. It has deep forests and stately homesteads; exquisite gardens and fields that become scenes of carnage. It has humor and pathos, and punch. Yet it apparently makes no deliberate "yank at your emotions," as Eye Witness declares the Griffith film, "Orphans of the Storm," does.

No, "Cardigan" is an interesting story, simply and effectively picturized against a background that always pleases. It is not one of the world's greatest pictures, perhaps, but it is certainly one of the most delightful film offerings of the season.

Without doubt the salaries paid the players were small, as we have grown to think of movie salarites. But they were honest salaries to honest folks who put out an honest picture.

Back to normalcy! Attaboy!

This wonderful review is the most unusual praise given any motion picture by Mae Tinee in two years. When you please her with a picture you have passed muster with the most exacting screen critic in the world.

All the English language papers in New York (14) praised "Cardigan" and the Capitol Theatre topped $40,000 with it. All six of the Philadelphia dailies were unanimous in their praise.

From one end of the country to the other—Boston, Toledo, Minneapolis, Los Angeles, Seattle—"Cardigan" is a big, honest, valid box-office success and the public everywhere likes it in equal measure with the scores of critics who reflect public opinion faithfully.

"Good Short Stuff" is Not Good Enough for Universal

REGINALD DENNY

EVERY patron of your house will want to see this handsome hero of "THE LEATHER PUSHERS" series—the short features that made screen history—in the smashing Royal Northwest Mounted Police stories he is now making for Universal! Watch for them—they're as full of action as the North Woods are full of trees!

TOM SANTSCHI

EVERYBODY knows Tom Santschi—and everybody likes him! The great two-reel western features he is now making for Universal are the best of his career. They'll make your patrons beg for more—so don't make the mistake of letting this series of eight get past you! You'll be needing them!

NEELY EDWARDS

This popular young comedian will shortly be known from one end of the country to the other as "Nervy Nat." In this comic tramp role, Neely Edwards is making the most screamingly funny one-reel comedies that have come your way in a long time! They'll be released soon! Watch for 'em!

FASHIONS IN PICTURES

FASHIONS, like the sun, travel from East to West. There are fashions in motion pictures just as in everything else. The fad on Broadway today sooner or later becomes the craze all over the country.

MELODRAMA has come back. The big stage hits of the season have been melodramas, and the New York public has paid $5.00 a seat to see them. Melodrama is again ruling strong on the screen.

"FAIR LADY" is a big, high-class, stirring, thrilling melodrama—a melodrama that spells love, romance, adventure, intrigue. It furnishes entertainment that is all the rage everywhere.

SELL THIS great picture to your public as a melodrama; the kind of amusement the big towns are paying big money to see. Play up the thrills, the action, the heart beats! Your box office will give the answer.

WILL TELL more about this picture next week.

The man who sells amusement, like the man who sells merchandise, must study the styles, and the wants and needs of his public. The people of one city generally want what those of other cities want. Give it to them, and profit at the box-office.

Bull Montana

In His First Three Reel Comedy Special

"A Ladies' Man"

There'll Be Crowds at Every Theatre!

ONE thousand, eight hundred and seventy-one exhibitors of America have written or wired enthusiastic endorsement of BULL MONTANA as a box-office attraction that will get the crowds and provide something new and delightful in comedy entertainments.

Correspondence files—proving the most remarkable and unanimous pledge of support ever accorded a single idea since the birth of motion pictures—are open to all!

The market today is sprinkled with comedies of scattered appeal, most of which are accepted merely as "time-fillers," three or four of which are sold, accepted and exploited for their net value as crowd-getters and prestige builders.

BULL MONTANA, in finely produced, superbly cast and directed comedy specials, will instantly rank with or ahead of these acknowledged topnotchers.

It's in the cards by past performances—and a record of unsolicited publicity and advertising that has made this unique personality one of the most popular idols of the theatrical world.

Exhibitors feel this, know this, and admit this—That's why "There'll Be Crowds at Every Theatre!"

RUN over the list, recall every successful comedy of the past twelve months and you'll find none—bar none—that can equal "A Ladies' Man" for roars of laughter and concussions of thrills!

An effervescent, thoroughly human story of "Little Oswald," a foundling of unknown parentage, who is adopted by wealthy aristocrats, runs away from home at the age of ten and later returns—NOT as the Lord Fauntleroy that mama and papa expected, but as—well, it's too funny for words!

BULL MONTANA is a sensation as "Little Oswald." The supporting cast reads like a seven-reel super. Claire McDowell, Charles Mailes, Myrtle Lind, Chuck Reisner, Master Dinky Dean Reisner, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Frank Kingsley, "Snitz" Edwards and two hundred others!

A BIG, "different" Comedy of Quality that the entire industry can welcome with Pride and exhibit with Profit. Produced by a staff comprising the most skilled craftsmen in pictures!

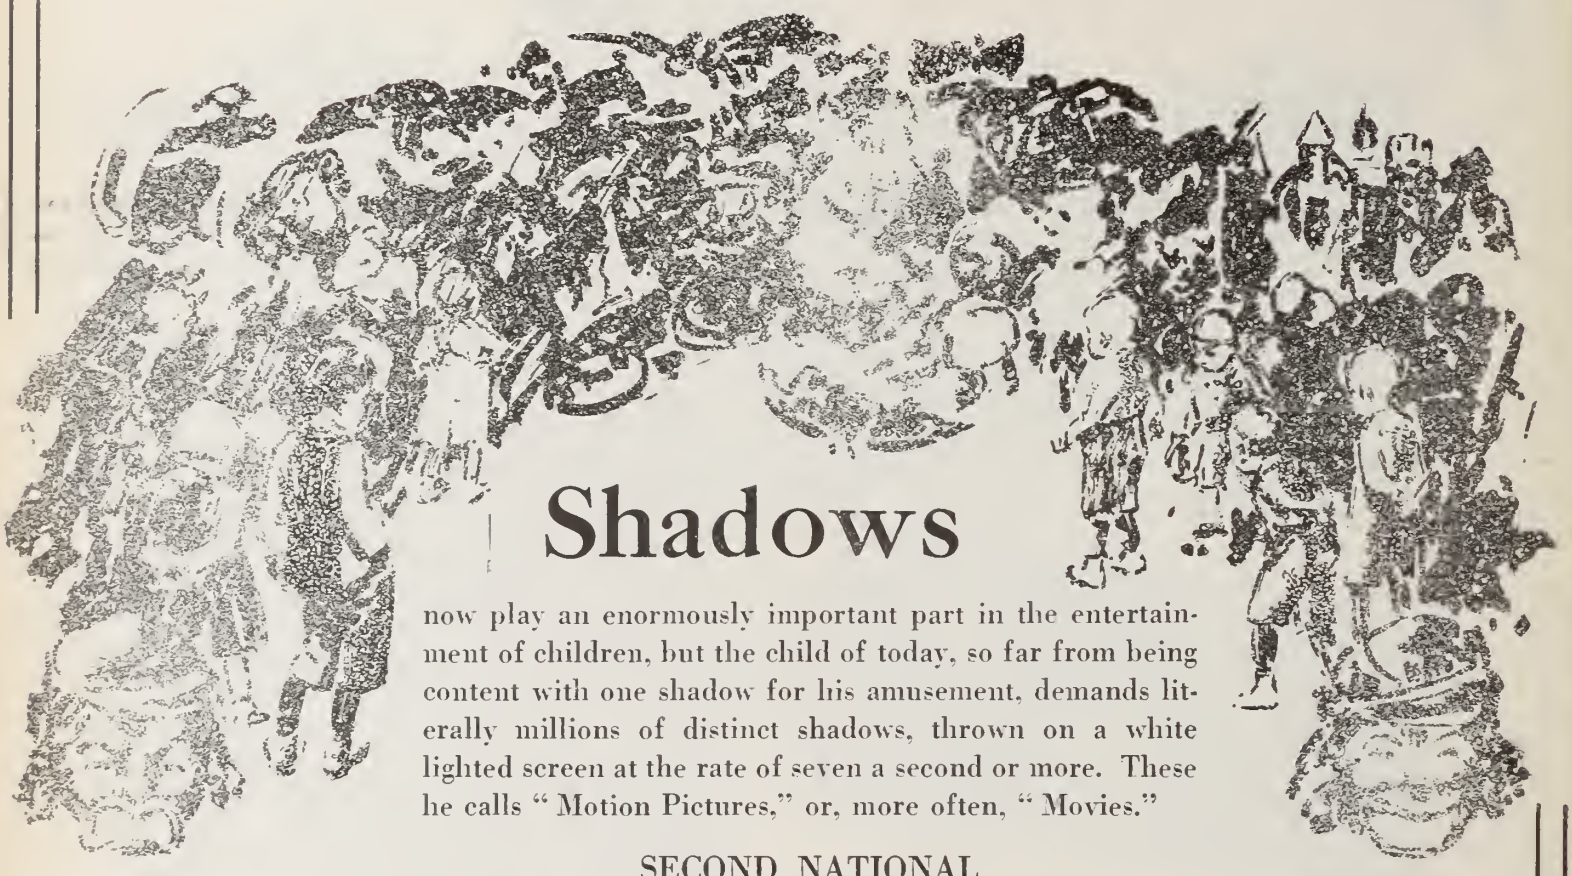
Shadows

have aroused the curiosity and held the interest of children always. It is different now, however, from what it was when Robert Louis Stevenson wrote the little poem for children, entitled "My Shadow."

"I have a little shadow that goes in and out with me,
And what can be the use of him is more than I can see.
He is very, very like me from the heels up to the head;
And I see him jump before me, when I jump into my bed."



Shadows

now play an enormously important part in the entertainment of children, but the child of today, so far from being content with one shadow for his amusement, demands literally millions of distinct shadows, thrown on a white lighted screen at the rate of seven a second or more. These he calls "Motion Pictures," or, more often, "Movies."

"It Certainly is a Piece of Good Showmanship to Cash In on the Selling Qualities of Such a Title as Adorns This"

—Laurence Reid in Motion Picture News

M.P. News says

"The Bootleggers"
Wid Gunning—Six Reels
(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT certainly is a piece of good showmanship to cash in on the selling qualities of such a title as adorns this production. The bootlegging enterprise is brewing and distilling itself into an enterprise which will soon have to be labeled Big Business. There is a world of suggestion in such a title. It conveys the idea of unadulterated melodrama—of conflict, hate, jealousy, mystery, surprise and exciting adventure. And this thought is brought home from the introductory sequence. If the story had nothing to recommend it the title would act as a magnet in drawing a crowd. And the offering as a result should play to packed houses.

There is enough thrill and action packed away in its six reels to satisfy the most jaded of spectators. What if some of its melodrama strains credulity? That is to be expected. The point is the author and director found it to advantage for the sake of adventure and romance to cram it full of elemental conflict and picturesque detail. And the result speaks for itself. The author reads his daily paper. He has omitted nothing in the scheme to catch the desperate bootlegger. The aerial patrol is utilized in the complicated pattern. You see the colorful smuggler and his bootlegging sweetheart. You look upon the heroine as she is coveted by the villain. The

New York Morning Telegraph says:

"'The Bootleggers' is a most exciting and all round fine picture—title should draw the crowds—action makes you sit forward in the orchestra seat and hold your breath—features the most talked of characters of today in a drama of Land, Sea and Air."—Suzanne Sexton in N. Y. Morning Telegraph.

Motion Picture News

Crippsville

A RECENT issue of a national weekly carried an article on censorship—a common—sensible, lucid article. To our mind it did not go far enough; it did not tell just what censorship is and how it works—or rather doesn't work.

But it certainly carries a message to this industry.

The article creates an imaginary little town called Crippsville. Nothing in the way of the drama ever came to Crippsville before. Only the wicked cities held the theatres. Now the drama—in film—goes to Crippsville every day and the whole family attends. The women of Crippsville want something to say about the kind of entertainment that Crippsville is housing every day; and they're going to have that say. Let no one mistake that!

They jump at censorship because it's the only thing offered them. It is all nicely sugar-coated by such smiling and benevolent gentlemen as a hired propagandist is hired to seem to be. And they swallow it whole, and, undoubtedly with entire self-satisfaction, not aware that the sugar conceals as bitter a pill as any true American ever swallowed. A pill so bitter that it won't stay down—for long.

But—there's the situation.

Crippsville.

Crippsvilles—several thousand of them, from Maine to California, and in them several millions of women who vote. Several millions of women who want to and who have every right to demand the right kind of entertainment for their hearth and home—for that's practically what it amounts to.

The hired propagandists—as narrow and dangerous a band as ever held sway in this country—offer them censorship.

And they're pretty apt to take it.

Because—we offer them nothing else. No true solution. Not even the truth about censorship.

But—it isn't too late. Far from it.

And—this industry is marching straight to Crippsville today.

It may be that some producers have never been to Crippsville. Some may not think of Crippsville as they film their stories.

But—we know this: that Will Hays is going to take these producers to Crippsville. He knows Crippsville—knows its huge importance, knows our huge responsibility, knows the straight road to Crippsville. And he won't lay down till he gets his people there. He's that kind of a man.

To the exhibitor we have this to say—and with all earnestness.

You are in Crippsville. Ninety-odd per cent of you. In your city neighborhoods, your suburbs, your towns and hamlets, you are right in the heart of Crippsville.

And you need not wait for Mr. Hays to get there.

There are plenty of pictures that Crippsville wants—plenty right now. A large list of selected pictures.

ACT!

Don't wait for the women of Crippsville to come to you. They'll come—sooner or later. But go to them first.

Go to the various club leaders and lay down this platform: You want to show the pictures they want. You want their active interest, sympathy and assistance. Your problem is their problem. You want them to help you select pictures.

You want, through them, the active cooperation of the newspaper, the school teachers, the clergy. You want the endorsement of the pictures you select, by the newspapers, in the schoolroom and from the pulpit.

You can get this help. There's no question about it. And you're going to have it. It's simply a question of whether you move first or your community moves first.

The picture theatre is the theatre of Crippsville.

Crippsville is the yard-stick of motion picture production.

And Crippsville runs this country.

Film Normalcy Is Predicted by Producers

Lasky and Smith, Back from California, Tell of Increased Production Plans

HEADS of large producing companies, who have returned from California during the week, express themselves as being most optimistic over prospects of returned prosperity in the movie game. Indications seem to be that the next few months will bring things back to normal.

Back from Hollywood, where he spent the last three months completing ambitious production plans for Paramount pictures, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, declared this week that increased production presaged the approach of better times in the motion picture business. May will be a red-letter month in the Lasky studio, he said, with no fewer than thirteen companies working continuously on a series of big pictures.

"After a careful survey of conditions I am confident that this increase in production forecasts a return to condition nearer to normal in the next few months.

"A glance at the pictures which either will be in production or will go into production during May will show the extent of our confidence.

"May 1st will see Cecil B. DeMille begin production on 'Manslaughter,' Thomas Meighan will play the role of the district attorney, Leatrice Joy will play the feminine lead and Lois Wilson, will be seen in the part of the maid.

"William de Mille's picture of 'Nice People,' which Clara Beranger adapted from Rachel Crothers' play, will be in production during May, with a cast including Wallace Reid, Bebe Daniels, Conrad Nagel, Walter Hiers and Eve Sothern.

"Penrhyn Stanlaws will begin his production of 'Pink Gods' during May with Bebe Daniels, James Kirkwood, Anna Q. Nilsson and Adolph Menjou in the cast.

"George Fitzmaurice's production of Mary Johnston's famous novel, 'To Have and To Hold' will be under way in May, with Betty Compson, Theodore Kosloff, Bert Lytell, Theodore Roberts, and George Fawcett in the principal parts.

"George Melford will begin 'Burning Sands' his companion picture to 'The Sheik' next month, with Milton Sills and Wanda Hawley in the leading roles.

"We have long been besieged with requests to star Theodore Roberts in a picture. The admirers of the grand old man of pictures will see him in the greatest role of his career in 'The Old Homestead,'

"'The Cowboy and the Lady,' with a cast headed by Mary Miles Minter and other well known players, will go into production under the direction of John S. Robertson.

"Irvin Willat will begin production of a special picture, 'The Siren Call,' with Dorothy Dalton and Jack Holt in the leading roles.

"'The Ghost Breaker,' will be started in May with Wallace Reid as the star, and Lila Lee heading a strong cast.

"Jack Holt will begin production of 'The Man Unconquerable,' under the direction of Joseph Henabery.

"Agnes Ayres will soon start work on 'Borderland.'

"Before the end of May Gloria Swanson will have returned from her holiday in Europe and will have begun work on the biggest picture of her career, 'The Impossible Mrs. Bellew,' under the direction of Sam Wood.

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, arrived in New York from California early this week after two of the busiest months of his life at the Vitagraph studios in Hollywood.

President Smith saw the completion of Vitagraph's latest special production, "My Wild Irish Rose," adapted from the stage success, "The Shaughraun," by Dion Boucicault. It tells a charming, yet intensely dramatic story of life in the Emerald Isle in the early years of Queen Victoria's reign.

The Vitagraph studios were working full blast during Smith's sojourn in California. Earle Williams finished his latest picture, "Restless Souls," a delightful comedy-drama adapted from Richard Harding Davis' story, "Playing Dead." Williams is now at work on another production, the title of which is soon to be announced.

Alice Calhoun completed one picture and immediately began another, the working title of which is "Blue Blood." William Duncan finished "The Silent Vow," a story of the Northwest Mounted Police, in which the star assumed a dual role. Larry Semon has been hard at work on his latest funmaker known under the working title of "The Substitute."

President Smith expressed himself as entirely satisfied with the progress all the companies were making at the Vitagraph studios. Things are going ahead at full speed on all sides, he said.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

ON the Sunday preceding the Washington convention of the M. P. T. O. A., May 7th, the Washington Post, well known as an administration organ and a newspaper of much consequence, will issue a large special supplement devoted to motion pictures.

The editorial contents which are being collected by Lesley Mason, with the trade paper editors acting as an Advisory Board, will be devoted to a fact survey of the industry and its public relations. Prominent writers and public men will contribute. The editorial outline is comprehensive and impressive. This supplement will be the first presentment by the industry of its true facts and policies.

A previous supplement issued by the Washington Post was devoted to the disarmament Congress.

P. S. Harrison's Reports of this week comes out editorially for Senator James J. Walker as President of the M. P. T. O. A. Mr. Harrison makes a warm eulogy of Senator Walker's ability and popularity with exhibitors everywhere. He states that despite his large political and legal affairs that, in his opinion, Senator Walker can be induced to accept the position.

MARCUS LOEW sounded a very sensible note of warning at the recent luncheon of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce at which Will Hays and Senator Walker pledged themselves for cooperation between the three branches of the industry. In brief Mr. Loew warns the exhibitor not to leap too fast in deciding that Mr. Hays is to serve immediately as a Court of Appeal for exhibitor complaints. There is a vast amount of work already facing Mr. Hays and also the exhibitor organization in building up public regard for motion pictures and public confidence in the industry. Much as he might like to serve in the capacity of a Court Mr. Hays would, for the present, at least, find it utterly impossible.

As we stated editorially last week we have many pressing commercial problems, in particular those that are, at the present, points of irritation between producer, distributor and exhibitor, but our greatest and most pressing problem—the one just without our door and the one which must take precedence over all others—is the big problem of the motion picture and its public relations. We can't do very much of consequence until we attend to this matter.

* * *

THE Washington convention convention looms up as the most important exhibitor convention thus far held. This is the time for construction. The industry needs it as never before and there seems to be a universal sentiment in favor of construction. We are optimistic enough to believe that a fine, solid platform of industrial cooperation will issue from this Washington meeting, which assuredly every one who can should attend.

Harry Houdini as President of the Society of American Magicians, which he states numbers a thousand members, has sent a letter to the Managers of the Broadway theatres. It is a strong letter of protest against the exposing, through motion pictures, of the professional secrets of his fellow members.

We might add that there are a good many motion picture illusions such, for instance, as stars, which should not be exposed too freely to the public gaze.

THOMAS D. SORIERO, Manager of the Strand theatre, Lowell, has opened up his spring campaign by giving away house lots located in the heart of the City of Lowell within ten minutes of the theatre. He induced the land company to give the lots away at no cost to the theatre and also to pay for the advertising. In return he gave the company the privilege of securing the names of patrons entering the theatre who desire to enter the land contest. The contest lasts for a period of four weeks. "My object," says Mr. Soriero, "in this real estate stunt is to stimulate the building boom that will surely start very soon."

In reply to our recent appeal for the preservation of important historical negative we are advised by the Eastman Kodak Company that Mr. George Blair will present a paper on the subject before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in May. The Eastman laboratory also is hard at work at present on possible methods of preserving film which will be reported upon as soon as they are obtained.

The Minneapolis convention of the Minnesota branch of the M. P. T. O. A. was a rattling good one; about 150 theatre owners were present. President Steffes and Vice President Hays are to be congratulated on the excellent organization of this influential body.

GREAT preparations are being made for the Southeastern Better Films Conference which meets in Atlanta on April 28th. The conference will be the first big educational gathering ever held in this country in the interest of better motion pictures. More than two hundred of the leading civic workers and educators of the nine southeastern States will be present. Prominent speakers will be Mayor James M. Curley of Boston and Senator Henry F. Ashurst of Arizona. Senator Ashhurst will officially represent Will H. Hays. Other topics to be discussed by distinguished authorities at the conference will be the influence of film upon the home, school and church life of America; the educational uses of pictures; modern plans to promote better film programs in particular cities and states; instructive film legislation; crime and motion pictures, and other phases of the Better Films Movement.

Beginning the experiment which proved that talking movies are possible by means of the human voice transmitted by radiophone. Harry J. Powers, Jr. (left), inventor of the movie-speakie, watched as Watterson R. Rothacker directed Frank Bacon in a short sketch. The motion picture camera recorded Bacon's actions and a stenographer took down his words. Later Bacon radiophoned these words to a projection room where the film was being screened. Bacon's words from the radio and Bacon's action on the screen synchronized. Talking pictures were a fact!

Much interest has been expressed in New York film circles over Ferdinand Earl's "Rubaiyat." Mr. Earl has finally assembled his picture and some few people have already seen it. It is a magnificent production. The picture will be reviewed specifically in Motion Picture News at a later date. We venture to say that the novel treatment of this picture will have a considerable effect on picture production. Mr. Earl is to be congratulated upon his remarkable work. The picture is in the hands of Frank M. Tichenor.

We do not know the details of the recent important affiliation between Goldwyn and First National. The little we have heard, however, and which deals only with the broader lines of the contract, induces us to say that it is not only advantageous all around but also a sound business arrangement that should help put this industry upon a more stable basis.

THE practicability of the radio as a time saver was for the first time applied to motion pictures recently by Watterson R. Rothacker, head of the film printing and developing concern bearing his name. To expedite the handling of the new John M. Stahl production "One Clear Call," the negative of which had been shipped to the Rothacker plant, Louis B. Mayer and Stahl from Los Angeles, "matched up" the negative and master print by means of a radio conversation. As a consequence, when the master print followed the negative to the Chicago laboratory, the negative was already cut and sorted according to scenes and the work of turning out final prints was pushed forward and finished in record time.

In connection with the inroads the radio is making into every side of public and private life, the story carried on page 2422 of this issue of its use in making "talking movies" a reality, is of double interest. The experiment was also conducted at the Rothacker laboratory.

Now Marshall Neilan comes along, through his irrepressible mouthpiece, Pete Smith, and announces the installation of a radiophone receiving and sending outfit in his Hollywood studio. The innovation allowing Mickey to sit in the studio and direct the action of his players at Santa Monica Beach miles away.

O. K. for some directors, perhaps, but if some others we know try it there will be immediate censorship of the air, so far as the language used is concerned.

We learned the other day of a picture—a good one, that could have been sold over a large circuit provided the distributor would guarantee that a "leech" picture, same title of course, would not also appear in the same district. The distributor could have bought off the other fellow and still have made an acceptable deal; but he construed the matter as "blackmail" and declined to pay it. How much longer will the industry, in particular the exhibitor who can settle the matter, stand for this sort of thing?

Mayor G. F. Freitas, Sandusky, O.

"I'll resign my position as Mayor of Sandusky, rather than take from the average citizen the little pleasure that life holds in store for him—and the Sunday movie is one of these little pleasures.

George F. Freitas, Mayor of the Ohio city, thus replies to heckling blue law advocates.

To our mind those few words as expressive of the attitude of a broad thinking, plain speaking executive, bear more weight than any preachment. And we venture to say Mr. Freitas will not have to resign his post—either now or later.

Congratulations—to Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Zukor upon the birth of a son, Eugene Zukor, at the Knickerbocker Hospital, New York, April 14.

The daily grist of mail brought the following letter of appreciation—and somehow, the day's tasks seemed lighter after reading it.

Dear Mr. Johnson:

That was a bully reference to our new booklet you made in "Pictures and People." I thought you might like to know that Mr. Rothaker was more than delighted with what you said about it and the way you said it.

Those few lines brought Mr. Rothacker so much pleasure that I am taking it upon myself to call your attention to the fact that the Rothacker Company's twelfth anniversary comes the first week in May. My good friend Mason has promised a birthday cake in the way of a news story; a little icing from the P-P column and would not the returns of the day be complete?

I want to say that, in my humble opinion the P-P column is the best thing in the film trade papers. With features such as this the NEWS will continue to cover the field.

Thanks. Cordially yours,

ROTHACKER FILM MFG. CO.,

Katherine MacDonald

"The most beautiful woman in the world" has been found. Of course, this is not the first time, nor the hundredth, that some artist or self elected judge of feminine pulchritude has announced his or her find of "the most beautiful woman." This time the Chicago Tribune and the Illustrated Daily News of New York embarked on the venture—and the wreath is placed on the brow of Katherine MacDonald.

It is an interesting commentary to note that the judge, Miss Antoinette Donnelly, upon setting forth to seek the prize beauty, some six weeks ago, went directly to the picture colony in Los Angeles.

Still—as First National's publicity experts inquire, "if not, why not?"

Congratulations are in order to Hugo Reisenfeld upon the celebration of the sixth anniversary of the Rialto theatre the week of April 23.

Motion Picture presentation has advanced by leaps and bounds since the opening of this edifice on the site of the historic Hammerstein Music Hall. And this theatre, and the other large Broadway houses which have come into being since as homes of the silent drama, are monuments to the progress made in presentation in recent years.

OUR very sincere congratulations to Will H. Hays and to Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky and Joseph Schenck upon their prompt and decisive action on the Arbuckle films. A large financial sacrifice had to be made; and arguments flow easily in favor of a man acquitted with a jury statement such as Arbuckle had.

But—there's the jury of the American public! And there's the motion picture! And there's the motion picture industry!

It was the right thing, rightly done.

We only hope the industry at large fully appreciates the situation.

At least no doubt can remain in any man's mind but that Will H. Hays and the Producers and Distributors Association mean business.

Commenting editorially on the Arbuckle films the New York Tribune says:

"The motion picture producers will do well to move to make permanent Director Hays's temporary order to hold up the exhibition of an Arbuckle film. The money they lose on any contract they may have with the actor will be more than made up by their gain in the esteeem of the clean minded."

Heywood Broun, in the New York World, takes his characteristic attitude that it isn't a question of public morals but rather of taste, and that the Producers' and Distributors' Association will do well to ban all films that offend in themselves and regardless of the careers of the principals.

Hays' Dictum on Arbuckle Pictures Accepted by Producers

Outlawing of Films Brings Cooperation of Producers and Distributors

WILL H. HAYS has tabooed the "Fatty" Arbuckle pictures, at least temporarily, and possibly permanently. Those producers most heavily interested financially in the disposal of the pictures have accepted the dictum gracefully. The amicable manner in which the situation, of such vast importance, was adjusted, bespeaks the sincerity of purpose of the new organization and is conclusive proof of the co-operation that is to be extended Hays as the arbiter of matters relating to the film industry. It is apparent that all parties are working mutually for the benefit of the industry.

The decision of Hays came after conferences during the week between him, Nicholas Schenck, representing Joseph Schenck, the producer, and Adolph Zukor and Jesse Lasky of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the distributors. At Hays' request it was agreed to withdraw from distribution all Arbuckle films, both old and new.

This is the first official act of importance of Hays since he assumed the office of president of the Producers and Distributors, Inc. The question regarding Arbuckle films is one that had been widely discussed both inside and outside of the industry, and speculation was rife as to what action the producers and distributors would take with the Arbuckle pictures, despite the fact that announcement had been made of a showing next week in New York of one of the pictures.

The Hays statement following his conference with the producers and distributors is as follows:

"After consultation at length with Nicholas Schenck, representing Joseph Schenck, the producer, and Adolph Zukor and Jesse Lasky of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, distributors, I will state that at my request they have canceled all showings and all bookings of the Arbuckle films.

"They do this that the whole matter may have the consideration that its importance warrants, and the action is taken notwithstanding the fact that they had nearly ten thousand contracts in force for these Arbuckle pictures."

In accepting the Hays dictum without protest the producers and distributors are taking a loss that in all probability means millions of dollars to them. Not only do they lose the contracts already on hand, but they are in possession of three pictures made previous to the Arbuckle Labor Day party in San Francisco, which have never been released. These are titled "Gasoline Gus," "Prepaid Freight" and "Leap Year."

Opinion has been divided both in and out of the industry as to whether or not Arbuckle films would ever become as popular as they were before the comedian was indicted in San Francisco in connection with the death of Virginia Rappe. As a means of testing public sentiment showings were to be made in various parts of the country of Arbuckle films, following his acquittal on the charge against him in the San Francisco courts.

The Rivoli and Rialto theatres in New York City were to have shown an Arbuckle picture next week as a medium to determine upon future action. Upon learning of the ruling of Hays, Hugo Riesenfeld, Managing Director of these theatres, withdrew the film and substituted a Wallace Reid picture in its place.

Statements have not yet been forthcoming from any of the parties interested, outside of the one submitted by Hays. The Famous Players-Lasky and the Schenck interests expressed their willingness to accept the ruling of Hays despite the huge monetary loss it meant to them. They are satisfied to take this judgment for what they termed the good of the industry.

Upon accepting office as head of the Producers and Distributors, Inc., Hays expressed his determination to endeavor to raise the film industry to a plane where it would have the approval of the public at large. His decision in the Arbuckle matter is taken as a proof of his sincerity in the issuance of that statement. It is evident, as a result of this ruling, that Hays considers only the welfare of the screen industry, and that no outside influence played any part in the ruling.

So far as has been learned the Hays action was not forced by any official situation. The New York censors have gone on record as saying that Arbuckle's record could have nothing to do with their consideration of any films in which he appeared, and nothing to the contrary has been announced by any other state board, so far as could be learned.

Arbuckle is at present in Hollywood, California. It is said his future activity is as yet undetermined. Whether his pictures will be shown abroad, where the Hays influence does not extend, is not yet known. Arbuckle has been quoted as saying since his acquittal of the charges against him that he hoped to proceed in his profession at once. It would appear now that if he did this he would have to go abroad. Other alternatives for him are to become a director or to proceed in the making of pictures under the management of some producing company not affiliated with the organization that is headed by Hays.

Hays Reception Big Boost, Declares Laemmle

CARL LAEMMLE, as his first act on reaching his office at 1600 Broadway, after his return from the coast, issued the following statement:

"The biggest thing that has happened for the good of the whole industry in a long time was the reception given to Mr. Hays by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce. I heard the news the minute I stepped off the train on my return from the coast, and it started my imagination along a mighty happy vision for the future.

"Mr. Hays in less than an hour established that friendly relationship between exhibitors and producers which should have existed long ago. He could not have done it in a million years if the exhibitors had not been impressed with his bigness and his sincerity and had not known that he was dealing on the level with them. And if Mr. Hays impressed the exhibitors, I want to say that Senator Walker was just as big in the impression he made upon producers and distributors. His speech came straight from the heart.

"Both men were right when they said there must be no yesterdays.

"I can't help admiring a big thing when it is done in a big way and I congratulate everyone who had any hand in this wonderfully important get-together movement. After the exhibitors and producers have worked shoulder to shoulder for a short time, both sides will discover that the other fellow hasn't any horns after all."

Lusk-Clayton Bill Fails to Get Approval

THE Lusk-Clayton motion picture bill, which was included among the thirty day measures in the hands of Governor Nathan L. Miller of New York state, was not approved by the State's chief executive. It had been presumed all along that the bill would find favor with the governor, particularly in view of the fact that it was sponsored by the commission and was drawn at the request of Chairman George H. Cobb.

The commission introduced the bill which carried with it a provision that it would have the power to issue subpoenas and call for the production of books and records in the courts.

Gradwell Quits Service With Gunning

ANNOUNCEMENT is made that Ricord Gradwell has discontinued with Wid Gunning, Inc., and is no longer acting as managing director of that corporation.

Exhibitors of Indiana Endorse Hays

The following statement was issued from the Indiana Exhibitors headquarters.

"We have noted with the greatest appreciation the enthusiastic reception of the exhibitors of the country of Will H. Hays's plea for confidence and co-operation within our industry.

"We in Indiana have recognized for years this is the solution of all our difficulties, and only because Will Hays is an Indiana man have we delayed in forwarding our congratulations on his broad aims for the good of us all, preferring to let our fellow exhibitors catch his splendid spirit first and give their expression of opinion of our big brained champion of right.

"We have absolute faith in Will Hays and his certain ability to establish thorough business principles heretofore so sadly lacking, that every honest exhibitor, producer and distributor can subscribe to, and we will give him our wholehearted support in his efforts. Indiana exhibitors are absolutely for the movement."

Alexander Charges Stoll with "Breach of Faith"

In a statement issued this week the Alexander Film Corporation charges the Stoll organization with "a breach of faith" in connection with the delivery of certain "Sherlock Holmes" productions for distribution through the Alexander Film Corporation. The Alexander Film company alleges that the Stoll organization "caused to be organized a new releasing organization to which it was proposed to hand over the remaining 'Holmes' productions not yet delivered to the Alexander firm." This action was taken, declares Alexander Film, after a national selling campaign had been undertaken by the Alexander concern in behalf of the "Holmes" productions. The complaint specifically charges the Stoll organization with trying to "shut the Alexander firm from further profits, that the Stoll firm might themselves reap the harvest that the Alexander organization had sown." The Alexander company announces the likelihood of court action.

Cleveland Exchange Men Adopt New Name

The Film Board of Trade of Cleveland is the new name of the motion picture exchange managers' association, which was recently formed here under the name of the Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers of Cleveland.

Three member exchange managers and three exhibitor members of the M. P. T. O. A. of Ohio constitute a board of arbitration. The exchange managers named were Robert Cotton, Fox; Paul Tessier, Pathe; and Herbert Ochs, Hodkinson. Exhibitor members are W. J. Slimm, Marquis theatre; John Kalafat, Five Points theatre; and B. Z. Lavine.

Reader Has His Say

"To the Editor of Motion Picture News:

"The expected has happened. On page 2335 of Motion Picture News for April 22, under the caption, 'Special Showing for "Smilin' Through,"' appears this: 'A song bearing the same title as that of the picture has been written by Arthur A. Penn. . . . The song was also placed on phonograph records by the leading phonograph companies. Pianola records have also been made.'

"While these statements are accurate, the clear inference, of course, is that I wrote the song, 'Smilin' Through,' after the picture was made—a trick that has been done often in the past. I know you will agree with me when I urge that in justice to myself the real facts should be part of the publicity attaching to this First National attraction. Briefly, then, they amount to this: If it had not been for my song, 'Smilin' Through,' there never would have been any picture bearing that title. I wrote and composed 'Smilin' Through' in the year 1918, and it was published that year by M. Witmark & Sons. Long before Jane Cowl appeared in the play—in which she is still starring—Reinald Werrenrath, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, made the song famous on his recital program, as well as his recording for the Victor Talking Machine Co. Moreover, all the numerous phonograph records and player rolls of my song were made and issued long before either play or picture was presented.

"Jane Cowl was so struck with the theme and title of my song that she sought and obtained permission to use it for her new play, which was produced in Pittsburgh under the title, 'Smilin' Through,' in the fall of 1919. The song is referred to in the play, lines from it were quoted in the most dramatic moment, and the music was and is used as a theme. When the picture rights were purchased for Norma Talmadge from the Selwyns, the title and the song were taken along, too, of course. Thus it will be seen that the enormous vogue of the title, as well as the existence of both play and picture, are the direct result of my own creation. I have never used anybody else's ideas and titles for any song I have written.

"The producers of the 'Smilin' Through' picture promised in writing to flash this acknowledgement of the source of title and picture on the screen. The showing at the Strand theatre revealed that this promise had been ignored. No such announcement was flashed. Nevertheless, I crave the courtesy of your space to place the real facts before your readers. I think I may claim this is the only instance on record where a play and a feature picture have been founded upon a song, instead of a song being written around a play or a picture.

"Very truly yours,

"ARTHUR A. PENN,

"Bayside, N. Y., April 18."

Withdrawal of Rachmann Ends Controversy

The long-drawn controversy between Samuel Rachmann and the other executives of the Hamilton Theatrical Corporation and the Efa Company, the German producing unit of Hamilton, which caused a great deal of sensational newspaper notoriety in Berlin and New York, was settled Monday night.

A contract was entered into under which Rachmann retired as vice-president and a director of the Hamilton company and also as a director and an executive of Efa and all of the German companies owned by Hamilton.

Rachmann will have no further connection with the management of the business of the Efa companies or of Hamilton, either directly or indirectly, but he retains his stock interest as heretofore. Ralph A. Kohn was elected vice-president in place of Mr. Rachmann.

The business of the Efa company and all of the other German companies owned by Hamliton will be run by the Board of Directors, of which Ike Blumenthal and Albert A. Kaufman are members.

New Owners of Cleveland Theatre Announced

Announcement has been made of the names of the men who have taken over the control of the million dollar Allen theatre, built just a year ago in Cleveland by the Allens of Toronto.

The Allen-Cleveland Company was recently incorporated in Columbus, to take over the Allen theatre from Jules and J. J. Allen. The officers of the new company are Thomas Coughlin, president, William R. Hopkins, vice president; I. W. Sharp, secretary; Robert J. Bulkley, treasurer. These, with the following, compose the directorate: Kermode F. Gill, Bascom Little, Whitney Warner, Louis Rorimer and Jules and J. J. Allen.

Lampert Bill Amendment Hearing Arranged

A hearing on the Lampert Bill for an amendment to the Copyright Law affecting the Music Tax, has been arranged by a committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America before the House Committee on Patents, for Friday, May 5th.

The committee which arranged the hearing consisted of: President Cohen, W. A. Steffes of Minnesota, M. E. Comerford and M. J. O'Toole of Scranton, Pa.; W. A. True of Hartford, Conn.; H. B. Varner of Lexington, N. C.; A. R. Pramer, Omaha, Neb.; C. E. Whitehurst, Baltimore, Md.; E. M. Fay, Providence, R. I.; W. R. Cadoret, Chicago, Ill.; R. F. Woodhull, Dover, N. J.; J. T. President Harding Invited to Attend May Convention at Washington

Chief ExecutiveCordially Receives Delegates But Withholds Decision

AN event of unsurpassed importance in the Motion Picture Industry occurred at Washington during the week when an invitation was extended to President Harding by President Sydney S. Cohen, of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, to attend the National Convention of that organization during the week of Monday, May 8.

The sessions of this convention will be held in the New Willard Hotel, Washington, and President Harding was asked to speak at the opening of the meeting.

President Harding is asked to attend the Convention in his combined capacities as the Chief Executive of the Nation and an outstanding and representative figure in American Journalism and the first active editor to occupy the chair of Washington.

President Cohen, the members of the Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and representative exhibitors from different parts of the United States gathered about President Harding in the Executive Offices of the White House and presented the invitation.

President Harding received this invitation in a most gracious manner. He referred to a previous meeting with the officials of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America on May 18, 1921, at which the use of the Screens to Governmental Departments for vocational guidance work, Americanization processes and other purposes were tendered. He said that the confidence then reposed in the Theatre Owners was well rewarded in meritorious service since rendered. He paid a high tribute to the screen, cordially thanked the Theatre Owners for the invitation and declared that he would make a definite statement to them in the matter as soon as possible.

The letter of invitation read by President Cohen was beautifully engrossed and in book form with red leather binding and gold and silk ornamentation.

It is as follows:

HON. WARREN G. HARDING,
President of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. President:

Years of practical demonstration of the publicity value of the wonderful visualizing powers of the Motion Picture, in its close adaptation to every varied phase of life, makes it fitting and appropriate that this great medium be known as the Screen Press of America.

As Theatre Owners, the custodians of this most potent agency for educational and entertainment purposes and for the dissemination of useful information, with its pronounced influence in moulding public thought and action along constructive lines, we are disposed to make this Screen Press of America of maximum service to the Government and People. The printed newspaper page and the printed and pictures celluloid film are joined as the world's most powerful publicity forces in the moral obligation and great duty of constant service to mankind and preserving always the liberty and rights of the people. In guaranteeing freedom to the press our Constitution imposes upon it, in its varied developments, this most necessary line of public action.

As an outstanding and commanding figure in American Journalism whose service in this relation as a newspaper editor so won the confidence and affection of the people, as to place you, by an unprecedented vote, in the highest office within the gift of free American citizens, we, the representatives of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, the custodians of America's Screen Press, hail you as the first Editor-President of the United States, a typical and true representative of the Liberty-Preserving publicity forces of our great country—the Newspaper and the Screen Press.

In this connection, Mr. President, we are pleased to advise you that the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will be held in the city of Washington, D. C., the week of Monday, May 8th, 1922. The sessions of the convention will be held in the New Willard Hotel.

Because of the intimate association of our respective lines of action in the publicity phases of our National life, our Board of Directors and Executive Committee, unanimously voted to tender to you, Mr. President, a cordial invitation to attend the opening session of our Convention on Monday, May 8, and bring to us such fraternal greetings and messages as in your judgment may seem fitting to the occasion.

We therefore, Mr. President, now formally extend to you this invitation, entertaining the hope that your presence at our convention will so stimulate and nerve into renewed patriotic action all elements of the American Press—printed and screened, that the maximum of real service to Government and people from these powerful agencies will always be available.

Fraternally and Faithfully yours,
MOTION PICTURE THEATRE
OWNERS OF AMERICA,
SYDNEY S. COHEN,
President.

Officers and members of the Convention Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at the White House, Washington, D. C., after tendering President Harding an invitation to the national convention to be held in Washington, D. C., the week of May 8th

Censorship Problems Develop New Aspects

Canadian City Bans Picture Which Is Approved in Adjoining Town—Other News

AN interesting result of the moving picture censorship situation in Canada was the fact that a big paramount release, "Deception," which has been condemned by the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors, was being advertised for presentation in Hull, Quebec, just across the Ottawa River from Ottawa, Ontario, on April 15 and 16, the picture to be shown at the Eden theatre, Hull. Advertisements for this fun made a special point of the fact that the picture had been condemned in Ontario but passed by the Quebec censors at Montreal.

The veto by Governor Nathan L. Miller of the proposed amendment to the New York Motion Picture Commission law seeking to greatly extend the powers of the censor board, is regarded generally in the motion picture industry as one of its signal victories of the year.

The bill, which was generally looked upon as a party measure, insomuch as it was introduced by Senator Clayton R. Lusk, had caused consternation among officials of the film producing and distributing companies, as it seemed to indicate a tremendous expansion of the Commission's powers.

Wire Briefs From Coast

HARRY RAPF is here to make "From Rags to Riches," with Wesley Barry for Warners.

P. A. Powers left for the East Friday. He will return in three weeks. He has negotiated with Ethel Clayton for a series of six features, and Carter De Haven for a series of comedies. It is understood contracts will be closed within a day or two.

Powers also made a contract for the distribution of six Chester Bennett productions, starring Jane Novak. The first is "Snow Shoe Trail," just completed. Bennett is next to make "Colleen of the Pines," starring Miss Novak. He will work at Robertson-Cole studio.

Jack White, Lloyd Hamilton, E. H. Allen, business manager, and Lloyd Bacon, scenario writer, are leaving for New York Thursday for a stay of one month.

Rubayiat Incorporated reelected officers last week at a stockholders' meeting, and a friendly adjustment of all differences was effected. The first Ferdinand Earle subject will shortly be released.

A windstorm Sunday tore out the end of the glass stage at the Fox studio. A big set being erected for Douglas Fairbanks' "Robin Hood" play and an old tenement street set at the same studio were also blown down. One workman was badly injured. There was no interference with production.

Tom Mix and a group of forty-five cowboys will go to the Pendleton roundup May 1st to 3rd, taking thirty-five horses.

Protests Bill as Hardship on "Industrial" Producer

IN a letter addressed to Hon. T. Frank Appleby of the House of Representatives, Edward Cave of the Bray Productions, Inc., protests that Bill H. R. 10577, which Mr. Appleby is sponsoring, will work hardship upon producers of industrial and commercial pictures unless provisions are made in the measure to meet conditions such as the following:

"The producer negotiates for production of film, amounting to from one to maybe five or six reels, the production to be financed by some industrial or commercial concern and to be used for business purposes. In the production of such film it becomes necessary to transport the film after development from the producer's establishment to that of the customer and the latter often is in a distant state. The film transported is not in all cases a finished production. For example, when first assembled, it is taken to the customer for a showing, and after this showing as a result of his criticisms, various changes may be made. Thus the film may be carried back and forth between the producer's establishment and that of the customer two or three times before being finally accepted.

"We do not find any provision in your bill to permit inter-state transportation of such film which clearly should not be interfered with.

"In view of the value of industrial and commercial motion pictures in building up business, and of the necessary high character of these productions in order to successfully represent the firms or organizations having them produced, it surely should not be made necessary for the producer to take out a license when undertaking the production of such films. That would be tantamount to requiring an advertising agency to take out a federal license for preparing and placing an advertisement for a manufacturer customer in the Saturday Evening Post.

"Unless provision is made to exempt industrial and commercial film, your bill will be opposed as an obstruction to legitimate business."

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has been advised by wire that the authorities of Alberta, Canada, have increased the examination fee for motion picture films from $1.00 to $3.00 per reel.

Col. John A. Cooper, Chairman of the Advisory Board of the Canadian Motion Picture Distributors' Association at Toronto, has filed a protest with the Prime Minister of Alberta at Edmonton, emphasizing the fact that the examining and licensing fees in other Canadian provinces range from $1.00 to $2.00 per reel.

The protest includes an argument to the effect that with a single exception in the six states in the United States where censorship laws are now being enforced, inspection and license fees do not exceed $2.00 per reel. The exception is New York State.

Ole M. Nelson, manager of the Majestic theatre, Grand Junction, Colorado, one of Harry T. Nolan's theatres, was acquitted in the County Court in that city on April 5, when Judge N. C. Miller directed the jury to bring in a verdict for the defendant on the charge of having violated the anti-Sunday section of the state statutes, known as Section 4000.

It is reported that the anti-movie leaders propose to gather more evidence, file new complaints and keep up the fight.

The case has been a sensational one in many respects, but probably the height of local tension was reached when it was charged in open court, during the selection of the jury to try Exhibitor Nelson, that Sheriff Ducray had excluded citizens of Grand Junction from the jury panel and had gone into outlying parts of Mesa County in order to be sure of getting jurymen who would be certain to hold out for conviction.

The admission of Sheriff Ducray that he had the movie cases in mind when he selected the panel for a term of the county court was sufficient to warrant the action of the court in placing the coroner in charge of the extra panel.

Section 4000 of the Colorado Statutes, under which the trial of Ole Nelson took place, is a much-disputed law, and by many authorities is held to have no place in the present statutes of the state.

To Study Reaction of High School Student to Film

FOR the first time in the history of education as connected with the motion picture there will be conducted a nation-wide survey of the influence of moving pictures on the average high-school student throughout the country.

The National Committee for Better Films, affiliated with the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, cooperating with several prominent educators, is broadcasting among some six hundred principals of high schools in cities ranging from five thousand inhabitants and under, to 75,000 and over, including New York City, a questionnaire on motion pictures to be answered by the students as a lesson in English.

This questionnaire, unlike some which are submitted with a view to bringing out a particular point either in favor of or against pictures, has no axe to grind, and seeks solely to discover the likes and dislikes of the younger generation who attend motion pictures, the relation of the pictures they see to their school work or their vocational selections, the number of times they are able to go to motion picture theatres, and the impressions carried away by them, etc.

Vitagraph, in this issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, has made a sincere and painstaking effort to give the exhibitor an informative, unbiased and helpful advertisement on "Too Much Business."

First, the aim is to present, through text and illustrations, and without superlatives, a definite idea of the character and appeal of this particular picture.

Secondly, to give the exhibitor advertising material he can use. Because the picture seems particularly fitted to newspaper exploitation, several newspaper advertisements are given and exact information as to where and how the cuts may be had.

Thirdly, the advertising paper is illustrated.

This is the kind of advertising we have earnestly advocated.

It is not merely at the exhibitor.

It is to him and through him.

To him—with information. No bunkum; just an intelligent fact analysis of what the picture is.

It is through him—to the public. Material for him to use, and safely use, to bring his public to his theatre—and keep them coming.

* * *

This is the kind of advertising the exhibitor wants. It is the kind MOTION PICTURE NEWS wants, because it wants its advertising pages to be useful.

It is logical, proper and successful merchandizing.

Brandt's Letter a Tribute to Cooperation

A GLOWING tribute to the amicable cooperation that has existed among exhibitors of the New York territory, the exchange managers as represented in the New York F. I. L. M. Club, and the Hoy Reporting Service, is embodied in a letter from William Brandt, retiring President of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Brandt's letter follows:

"F. I. L. M. Club,
719 Seventh Avenue,
New York City.
Gentlemen:

At this time, just prior to my being relieved from the office of President of this organization, I wish to extend my sincerest thanks and heartfelt gratitude for your very generous cooperation during my term of office.

The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and the F. I. L. M. Club of New York City have demonstrated to the entire film industry, that when there is a proper meeting of the minds, that cooperation is possible, and the precedent that we have jointly established, will serve as an example to those who think that the exhibitor and the exchangeman are natural enemies.

I most respectfully urge that this work be kept up. With many kind personal wishes, I am

Cordially yours,
(Signed) WILLIAM BRANDT.
Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce."

Radio Used in "Speaking-Movie" Experiment

An experiment recently conducted in the Chicago studio of the Rothacker Film Mfg. Co. resulted in the realization of a genuine "talking motion-picture." The invention is that of Harry J. Powell, Jr. The introduction of the radio made the new scheme possible. The method is briefly described as follows: A motion-picture is produced in the studio as usual, the scenario-writer having supplied the speaking lines and sound effects as if for a stage production. A number of theatres are equipped with radiophone receivers. At a broadcasting station are assembled the members of the cast; here is also located a "master projection machine," which it is believed can be synchronized with the projectors in the various theatres. The "master projector" throws the scenes on a screen at the broadcasting station in synchronization with the theatre projectors; the actors enact their parts in conjunction with the scenes on the screen, their voices being broadcasted to the various houses. Thus, the actions and voices of the players are registered at the same time before the different audiences. In the recent experiment Frank Bacon played the speaking role. Watterson Rothacker served as the director while Mr. Powers acted as cameraman. The Rothacker studio was used as the theatre and another print was run off at a neighboring broadcasting station. The experiment is reported to have worked out satisfactorily, action and sound being timed perfectly.

Edward Bowes, vice-president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and managing director of Capitol theatre, New York.

President Invited

In addition to President Cohen, the invitation was signed by Vice-Presidents, Executive Committeemen and the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

The coming Convention in Washington in May will be the largest gathering of men and women yet held in connection with any division of the industry or the theatrical business. The meetings of the Convention Committee in the consideration of its program and the replies received from invited guests and theatre owners, amply justify this statement.

The Vice-President was formally invited to attend the Convention and he accepted the invitation and said he would address the delegates to the convention unless pressing official business interfered.

Several joint sessions of the Convention and Washington Committees were held.

Neilan Joins Alliance with Goldwyn

ONE of the most significant producing alliances in recent years was consummated during the week when Marshall Neilan, recognized as among the screen's foremost directors, agreed to make his future productions in conjunction with the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

From this arrangement should develop some of the most important of all photo-dramas, for the Marshall Neilan unit will have at its disposal resources which insure productions of a magnitude even greater than those at this time associated with the Neilan name.

Marshall Neilan's company will work in Culver City at the Goldwyn studios and his first picture will be among the early fall releases. Before starting activity in California, Neilan, assistant director, cameraman and staff sail next Saturday for England on the S. S. Homeric.

Industrial Film Makers Hold Meeting

A meeting of producers of industrial films was held on April 19th at the United States Customs House at the invitation of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and was addressed by Mr. M. F. Leopold, representative of the government.

Mr. Leopold explained the work already done by his department in the free distribution to churches, schools and other non-theatrical organizations, of films showing the processes of production and manufacture of various commodities. This work has only recently been commenced and there is a tremendous demand for such films. These must comply with the government regulations—must pass a Board of Review and must be entirely free from advertising except for the initial title which gives the name of the manufacturing company whose plant is shown.

The object of this work is to spread information both at home and abroad regarding the great industries of this country, and to offset similar propaganda already under way by various other nations.

The Bureau of Commerce desires the cooperation of all producers of industrial film, and further information can be obtained from Mr. Leopold.

Fox Announces Release of Spectacular "Salome"

Hardly a month passes but William Fox hands out a money-making surprise to the exhibitors throughout the country. This time it is "Salome," treated in a sequence of tinted film upon which a small fortune has been spent in the making.

According to the officials at the Fox offices no single picture of the length and magnitude of "Salome" has ever been offered to exhibitors with sequences of scenes hand-painted.

Industry Rallies to Support of Big Charity Campaign in New York

Popularity Contest for Association for Improving Condition of Poor

WITH the full sanction and enthusiastic support of all of the companies represented in the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., and with the co-operation of local exhibitor bodies, Will H. Hays invoked the full energy of the motion picture industry to the drive of the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor. In addition to serving a worthy and very deserving charity, and serving it with a fulness that no charity, short of the Red Cross, ever received before, the leaders of the industry have chosen this opportunity to counteract much of the unfortunate criticism to which it has been subjected recently.

The support of this drive will take the form of a popularity contest to decide the King and Queen of the moving picture business, and almost overnight an organization was effected by the motion picture industry for full co-operation with the A. I. C. P. For the time being the motion picture working committee is operating from the office of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., at 522 Fifth avenue, and the A. I. C. P. is located at 1 East Fifty-seventh street.

The campaign was started on April 18th by the issuance to New York newspapers of the following statement from the office of Mrs. Courtlandt D. Barnes, Chairman of the May Carnival Committee:

"Under the auspices of the most representative men and women of New York, Their Majesties the King and Queen of the Movies will be crowned in New York on the night of May 9. Who are these rulers? Nobody knows now. The King and Queen are to be selected by votes of the people in a popularity contest which will open on Saturday, April 29, and continue until midnight of May 9, when the final count will be held at a May Carnival in the Hotel Astor, arranged for the benefit of the sick, the poor and the unemployed. Every vote cast will cost ten cents, and it will serve not only to designate some prince or princess of the screen for throne honors, but it will buy a bit of food, a few drops of medicine or some rays of sunshine for stricken tenement mothers, ailing children and unemployed sick men who are under the care of the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor (A. I. C. P.).

"The rules of the May Carnival voting contest are simple: All motion picture players are eligible. The contest will be divided into two classes—one for men and the other for women. The votes are to be sold for ten cents each, but only those ballots which have actually been paid for will be counted. There will be no restriction on the number of votes which one person may buy and cast for a single star. Because of this and because of the fact that every vote will be equivalent to a ten cent cash certificate to aid the sick and the needy of the city it is hoped that the volume of balloting will exceed that of any similar competition ever held.

"Stars and their managers may do as much campaigning as they desire, through personal appearance of the actors and actresses, through film announcements and by regular advertising. Producing companies have promised to have their stars participate actively. Once the voting has begun, electioneering will be in order.

"On behalf of many artists, campaigns are being planned and will be prosecuted vigorously, as every vote will mean ten cents more for the health and relief activities of the A. I. C. P. in the tenement districts. Throughout the period of the voting daily bulletins will inform the public of the standing of the leaders in the two classes.

"The balloting will continue up to midnight of the night of the carnival, May 9. The leading stars will appear in person at the carnival and managers and election committees of debutantes will sell votes for their favorites. A most elaborate entertainment for the evening is being planned, and the standing of the stars and the progress made will be communicated to the audience in some novel way. Votes will be auctioned off by one of the city's prominent auctioneers. When the contest is closed, the votes will be counted and the King and Queen will be announced and they will be crowned with ceremonies befitting their regal position.

"The voting and the carnival at which the winning actor and actress will be crowned will be held under the auspices of the May Carnival Committee, of which Mrs. Courtlandt D. Barnes is chairman. Among other social, business and philanthropic leaders who have accepted places on the committee are Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, 2nd, Mrs. E. H. Harriman, Judge Elbert H. Gary, Cornelius N. Bliss, Jr., Dwight W. Morrow, Thomas Cochran and R. Fulton Cutting.

"All of these people and also city officials are taking part in the preparations for the carnival and are giving their time and attention to make it one of the outstanding events of the year. Offices and equipment donated by the New York Trust Company in its branch at 1 East Fifty-seventh street have been opened, and the contest will be directed from there.

"The motion picture industry is co-operating to the fullest extent to make the contest a success. Under the chairmanship of Will H. Hays, former Postmaster General, a Motion Picture Committee has been formed, upon which most of the prominent producers, distributors and exhibitors have accepted places. The motion picture companies have placed their resources unstintedly at the disposal of the committee, and each one has assigned a man to give the contest his entire time, if necessary, in order to assure its success.

The personnel of the May Carnival Committee is:

Executive Committee, Mrs. Courtlandt D. Barnes, chairman; Courtlandt D. Barnes, James G. Blaine, Jr., Cornelius N. Bliss, Jr., E. H. Gary, Will H. Hays, Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, 2nd.

Finance Committee, E. H. Gary, chairman; James G. Blaine, Jr., treasurer; Thomas Cochran, R. Fulton Cutting, Gates W. McGarrah, Dwight W. Morrow, Seward W. Prosser.

Perkins, Mrs. Courtlandt D. Barnes, Mrs. John H. Prentice and Mrs. E. H. Harriman.

Illinois Theatre Owners Elect Officers

THE new board of directors of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners, which was elected at the convention in Chicago two weeks ago, held its first meeting Tuesday and elected officers of the organization for the ensuing year.

They are: L. M. Rudens, of Aurora, who succeeds himself as president; Sam Abrams, vice-president; J. B. Dibelka, secretary-treasurer; W. J. Sweeney, organizer.

The following arbitration committee to sit with a similar body from the Film Board of Trade and arbitrate differences arising between exhibitors and exchange men, was named: William Pearl and J. C. Miller of the state and J. B. Dibelka, George Hopkinson and Verne Langdon of Chicago.

A large number of directors were present and the meeting was most harmonious.

Activities of Exchange Managers, Exhibitors, Salesmen and Others

Kansas City

WHEN "Curley" Calvert, manager of Universal's Kansas City office, announced that try-outs were in order for a baseball team to represent the Kansas City film folk, he reckoned not with the number of prospective candidates. Following the initial call for practice, sex being no barrier, it now begins to look as though "Curley" will have to stage an elimination series before selecting a representative team, as about one-third of the Kansas City employes are clamoring for "berths" on the club—all except Pathe and First National, which will organize teams of their own.

Robbers who entered the film building in Kansas City last Friday night broke into the office of United Artists on the seventh floor of the building and took $50 from the desk of Leo J. Doty, assistant branch manager. The police have made no headway in the investigation which followed. Entrance to Mr. Doty's desk was gained by picking the lock.

That spring is blossoming forth with a rapid increase of business in the South can be stated on the authority of none other than Col. "Bill" Yoder, southern district manager for Pathe, who spent his semi-monthly week-end in Kansas City last week. Encouraged by the development of new oil fields, exhibitors of the South are building larger and better theatres, while the patronage steadily is increasing enough to justify the improvements being made.

Myron Selznick, with thirty members of his staff, was in Kansas City last week, on his way to Los Angeles. In the party was one member who was jubilant over the fact that California was to be their destination, Owen Moore.

"All the Moore tribe lives in California and I am mighty glad I am soon to be there," he said. "My mother and three brothers live on the west coast and I have not seen them in three years."

The Cozy theatre, Topeka, Kan., has just completed the installation of a Hope-Jones organ and, in the words of H. G. Gill, exploitation representative of First National's Kansas City office, "in order to give the organ the proper send-off before a large audience, the strains of melody were started on the opening day of 'Penrod,' which had been given a good advance campaign that assured capacity business."

L. J. McCarthy, who seems to do more than merely carry a folio for First National's Kansas office, has done the "unheard of." He has "gone and done it" for the first prize contest week in a seemingly close struggle among the members of the sales force. McCarthy reached the high mark with a pocket full of business that totaled more than $8,000. Not a bad week.

Pen Sketches

ARMED with a "three-cornered" experience, as exchangeman, producer and exhibitor, Bernard C. Cook, manager of the Standard Film Exchange, Kansas City, is one of the few men in the territory who truthfully can say: "Yes, I know just how you feel about it." Incidentally, in regard to feelings, Mr. Cook is in a fit of glee just now over the success of the picture "Mickey," which is doing a splendid "comeback" in the Kansas City territory.

Bernard C. Cook

Mr. Cook came to New York from Holland in 1906 and opened one of the first motion picture houses in Brooklyn, Saxe's Fifth Avenue theatre now standing on the site of Mr. Cook's old theatre. In 1908 Mr. Cook branched off into the vaudeville game and later made a tour from coast to coast, producing films for civic and other organizations in different cities.

In 1920 Mr. Cook accepted a position with Selznick in New York, but did not remain long in the East, coming to Kansas City as manager of the Peacock branch office. In May, 1921, he assumed managership of the Kansas City Standard office, which now is his present position.

Quiet, unassuming and a possessor of a most pleasing disposition, Mr. Cook's most staunch friends are in the ranks of the exhibitor.

HERE'S the man that has worn out more pencils than any other human being in the city of Buffalo. It's Al Teschmacher, booker at the Pathe office. Al has been booking pictures for various exchanges, but mostly for Pathe, since the town was rebuilt after its destruction by the Indians. He is known to every exhibitor and exchange man along the Niagara frontier, Southern Tier, western New York and so forth. In fact Al has been in the business so long and has accumulated so much money that he has been forced to build a palatial mansion in the Queen City of the Lakes. The banks refused to take any more of his "geld." Al has been in charge of the booking department of the Pathe exchange for the past decade and he will probably be in the same place for the next half century. "The Dean of Bookers" in spite of his long connection with the film industry, has never been in jail. In fact he is said to have amassed his present fortune by hard labor. He has never been tempted by bootlegging, which is now thriving in this stick of the woods. Al is the only part of the office equipment which will not be renewed when Pathe moves into the new Beyer Film building May 1. He will go intact.

Cleveland

J. E. STOREY, general representative for Pathe, spent a few days of last week giving the fellows of the local Pathe exchange the glad hand, and trying to convince them that business is fine. Storey is making a tour of exchanges.

Emery Downs, for ten years manager of the Knickerbocker theatre, has joined up with the local Pathe outfit, as sales representative. Downs is covering the Akron Canton territory with Pathe short subjects.

J. R. Johnson, who held the palm for stability, being local manager for Vitagraph for several years, is now right hand man to C. E. Almy, manager of the local Metro office. The interim between being manager for Vitagraph and assistant manager for Metro, was passed in the local office of United Artists.

James B. Reilly, local representative for the American Releasing Corporation has moved into his new exchange quarters, fifth floor of the Cleveland Film Exchange Building. G. W. Reed, who was with Reilly when he was manager for Realart, is again associated with him as assistant manager.

W. H. Donaldson is in charge of the local office of Second National Pictures. Office space has been secured on the fourth floor of the Film Bldg.

George Jacobs, manager of the Consolidated Film Service, one of Cleveland's independent exchanges, was in New York last week. It is rumored that Jacobs will have something interesting to announce upon his return.

Herbert Ochs has resigned as exchange manager here for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Des Moines, Iowa

C. W. ROSS has been appointed by Mr. H. M. Berman to represent him in this territory as special representative on "Foolish Wives." He left the local office this morning to call on the exhibitors relative to this Super-Jewel production.

Edgar B. Haines left for a tour of the north-east to interview exhibitors concerning "Foolish Wives" and other productions. He is expected to be back in the office on Friday or Saturday.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE.

The Chicago branch of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners held its annual meeting at the Vitagraph Projection Room last week and elected the following officers to serve for the ensuing year: Pres., Ludwig Siegel, Prairie Garden Theatre; Southwest Side Vice-Pres., A. Sapperstein, Palais Royal Theatre; West Side Vice-Pres., H. Goldson, Julian Theatre; South Side Vice-Pres., George Paul, Grand Theatre; Northwest Side Vice-Pres., Julius Lamm, Brunhild & Young Circuit; Recording Sec., Sidney Smith, Illinois Theatre; Financial Sec., Adolph Powell, Wicker Park Theatre; Treasurer, D. J. Chrissis, New Regent Theatre, and Board of Directors: L. H. Frank, Halsted Theatre; E. J. Haley, Hillside Theatre; Andrew Cuser, Queen Theatre; Nathan Joseph, Lincoln Theatre; J. Paley, Empire Theatre; Wm. F. O'Connell, Vernon Theatre; M. Siegel, New Home Theatre, and Joseph Hopp. The Chicago branch will move to its new offices at 752 S. Wabash Avenue on May 1st.

Nathan Ascher and R. T. Kattering were among the directors elected at the American Theatrical Hospital Association meeting held this week in the chambers of Judge Joseph Sabath, who was re-elected president for a third term. This hospital is unique, being the only theatrical edifice of its kind in the world where the ill and indigent actor or actress, whether connected with the speaking stage or the silver screen, may find expert attention and refuge. Funds for continuing the work will be raised by a benefit performance at the Colonial Theatre, Sunday afternoon, May 21st, at which all the leading stars in Chicago will be present.

The opening of the new Dittman house at Freeport, Illinois which has been named the Lindo, was an important event of the week, and a large party of Chicagoans attended the opening, returning on the morning following. The Chicago party included: Harry Lorch, Goldwyn; I. Decker and I. L. Leserman, Universal; E. J. Eichenlaub, Associated First National; Messrs. Agnew and Stover, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Weiss, Superior Screen Service; J. L. Friedman and I. Natkin, Celebrated Players; Edwin Silverman and "Red" Johnson, Select; I. M. Schwartz, Educational Film; Edward J. Mager, Chicago representative of the Dittman Theatres; Neil Caward and Paul Kuhn, Burnet-Kuhn Advertising Agency; Ralph Proctor, Universal, and Cress Smith, United Artists. The premier program included "Miss Lulu Bett," as the feature; "Out of the Inkwell." a Pathe News Weekly, and five acts of Orpheum Time Vaudeville. The Lindo, which was designed by Architects Rapp and Rapp, of Chicago, has twelve hundred and twelve seats and is one of the handsomest and most luxurious theatres in the state.

Chief of Police Fitzmorris, ex-officio head of the Chicago Moving Picture Censor Department, has stated that films featuring Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle will be passed on the same as any other features, and the fact that Mr. Arbuckle was put on trial in connection with the death of Virginia Rappe, will not be considered in censoring his pictures.

Harry A. Spanuth has taken over the lease of the Ziegfeld Theatre on Michigan Boulevard, one of the city's oldest first-run downtown houses. While Mr. Spanuth will continue the Ziegfeld policy of showing only the best features, he has cut the admission price from $1.10, including war tax, to 55 cents, all over the house, starting April 16th. One of Mr. Spanuth's first moves on taking over the theatre, was the installation of a complete radio-phone equipment, which will give afternoon and evening concerts daily. Mr. Spanuth will retain his interest in the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, and intends to put some important foreign-made pictures on the market at an early date.

Richard Kipling, of Kipling Enterprises, was in Chicago this week conferring with Sales Manager Belford, of his organization. Mr. Kipling is very optimistic over the outlook for independent producers of feature pictures and believes that by Fall a splendid market will await their product. After a visit to New York and other eastern cities, Mr. Kipling will return to California where he makes his productions.

Manager Schaak, of the Keystone, has taken over the active management of the Panorama Theatre on Sheridan Road.

Barney Ziv, well known in Chicago moving picture and newspaper circles, is now handling the publicity for the Chatham Theatre.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer will start wrecking McVicker's Theatre on May 1st, and as soon as the site is cleared, will rush the erection of a new McVicker's. This will cost upward of one and one-half million dollars. The new house will seat three thousand, and according to statistics, is located on the busiest street in the world. Jones, Linick & Schaefer have a surprise in store for the trade when they reveal their plans to insure rapid construction on this house, which is expected to be open for business in five months from the time wrecking crews get to work on the building.

The special showing of pictures, with a view to testing out the preferences of Chicago school children, is being continued at the Tivoli Theatre, five thousand boys and girls being admitted free each Saturday morning. Balaban & Katz are co-operating with Superintendent of Schools Peter A. Mortenson in this work and the results of the showing are being classified and will be passed on to film producers for their future guidance, as well as to school authorities, women's clubs, and parent-teacher associations throughout the country. To date pictures with a patriotic appeal lead in popularity, with nature studies a strong second, although a picture of a bear hunt met with disapproval, the youngsters fearing the cub was being hurt when trapped. On the other hand nature studies, which showed animals free in their natural haunts, were greatly applauded. Travel pictures, such as scenes in Normandy and Egypt, bored the youngsters, but the presentation of airships, automobiles, guided by wireless, and other speed contrivances went over big. After the grade schools have been given an opportunity to attend these selected shows, the high school pupils will be invited, and later programs will be given for the students of the University of Chicago.

Al Steffes, president of the Minnesota Motion Picture Theatre Owners, stopped off in Chicago for a few hours Sunday en route from Washington to his home. Mr. Steffes had been called to the national capitol by President Sidney Cohen to assist in personally extending to President Harding the invitation of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to attend the convention, which will open in Washington on May 8th.

Manager Harry Lorsh, of Goldwyn, has added three men to his sales staff. They are G. H. Oldfield, who is well known to Chicago exhibitors, having formerly been connected with Realart and other exchanges, and R. Lloyd, Harris and Barney Kean, both of whom have recently been connected with the Paramount exchange at Omaha.

Al Hoffman is now connected with Robertson-Cole's sales force and will cover city territory. Mr. Hoffman formerly was manager of the Paulina theatre and has a wide acquaintance in this district.

Among out-of-town movie men seen on film row this week were J. S. Jossey, representative of the Arrow Film Corporation, of New York; J. W. Bidwell, of the Reelcraft exchange of Davenport and Omaha; George Walker, of the Subway theatre, Elkart, Indiana; and J. J. Stewart, of the Victory theatre, Peotone, Illinois.

J. A. Steinson, formerly manager of Vitagraph's St. Louis exchange, has been appointed Chicago manager to succeed W. C. Brimmer, who resigned the Chicago managership last week. C. W. Taif remains as assistant manager and no immediate changes are contemplated in the staff, according to Mr. Steinson. Mr. Brimmer, in the year he has managed Vitagraph's local exchange, has made a splendid record and was one of the most popular managers in the Chicago territory.

O. A. Brown, manager of Associated First National's Indianapolis office, was in the city this week conferring with District Manager Seery and Manager Eichenlaub, of the Chicago exchange. Mr. Brown reports business in Indianapolis and throughout the territory is showing an improvement, outside of a few localities, and that theatre owners are much encouraged.

"Foolish Wives," Universal's super feature, opened at the Tivoli, Senate and Pantheon theatres this week to big business, despite adverse weather conditions, and next week will be shown at 32 houses, when 25 prints will be used. 164 Chicago theatres have now been booked to play this big production and Ralph Proctor, in charge of the picture in the territory, points with pride to the northside record, where every house but one will play "Foolish Wives."

Western Division Manager E. C. Jensen, of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, stopped off in Chicago enroute to Denver and the coast, where he will establish his headquarters at Los Angeles, having been assigned to the supervision of the entire western and southern territory. Mr. Jensen has recently been in Detroit and other key cities and states that the motion picture business in industrial centers is looking up, and that many houses which have been closed, are reopening. He states that all indications point to a splendid late summer and fall business for the motion picture theatres.

"Too Much Business" Section Announcement

The attention of the exhibitor is called to the special section on Vitagraph's comedy feature, "Too Much Business," immediately following the Exhibitors' Service Bureau.

Contained in the eight pages are: information that should enable the showman to put the picture over to big business; reproductions of ready to use ads; a visualization of the picture and facsimiles of the paper prepared on the production.

This section was prepared at the instigation of Motion Picture News with the belief that what is contained therein will be of actual service to the exhibitors who will play the picture.

Explanatory to the accompanying story relative to the lobby decorations on "The Rosary," recently used by Ascher's Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.

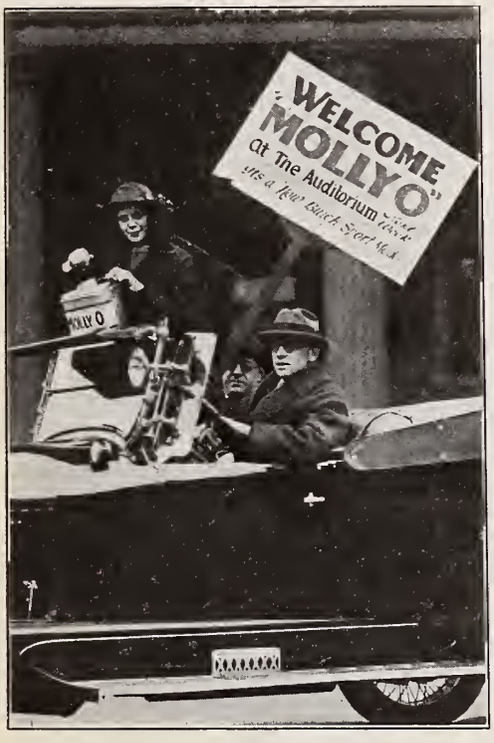
"Rent Free" Stunt Baits Fans Into Giving Some Dope

The Trio theatre, one of Milwaukee's neighborhood houses, wanted to get a slant on their patrons and got out a novel stunt to get the dope. It also built attendance for the showing of "Rent Free."

They distributed blank cards asking for the necessary information at the nearby schools. If the card was returned to the box-office filled out to the box-office it was good for a free admission.

The card wanted to know the names of the favorite stars and "Why or why not" the writer had not been attending the Trio theatre.

With the free admissions as the bait, the theatre got the information it wanted.



"Molly O" ballyhoo used by H. M. Rouda, of the Auditorium, Dayton, O.

Wettstein Originates Another Novelty Lobby Display

MANAGER WETTSTEIN of the Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., won unstinted praise for his pretentious lobby front on "The Rosary."

Combining a hand painted scene with cutouts of characters from the picture he produced a board for the front of the theatre 30 feet wide and 10 feet deep. the drab photograph fails to do justice to the harmonizing and attracting colors. The sign was a beacon fire for all passersby. The simile is apt for the manager got his idea from the fire scene in the picture; and it attracted the crowds just the same as a real fire would have done.

Realistic Prologue for "Orphans of the Storm" at the Mission Theatre

"Orphans of the Storm" when presented at the Mission theatre, Los Angeles, was preceded by an unique screen prologue conception, the work of Burrud-Sunset scenic pictures.

This prologue was the first of its kind offered in this country, and represented in a series of expressive pictures caught by the camera during atmospheric disturbances, what the thematic background of the Griffith story deals with—the turbulent stormy days of the French Revolution.

Burrud waited for days with his cameramen in the regions back of Arrowhead lake to catch a terrific blizzard. This, the opening of the screen prologue, represents the period of turmoil which reigned in Paris after the rule of Louis XVI. The prologue, going from the terrific swirl of snow and ice into the calm of a winter morning, expresses in natural wonders the revolutionary disturbances under Robespierre and Danton, and the short period of rest following. The aftermath—the crystallization of the country, laden with snow and ice, burdened by the weight of its own creation—again represents the period following the first fury of the people, when it was burdened by the tyranny of a small minority, the Judges of the Tribunal of the People, its own elected.

"Cooganizing Movies" Latest Streator Suggestion

"Cooganizing the movies" is a suggestion made in an editorial by a Streator, Ill., newspaper as the result of a nifty exploitation campaign on "Peck's Bad Boy," conducted by Bradford Brayton, manager of the Majestic. The editorial took this way of taking its stand with the motion picture people against the fanatical outburst and the suggestion of using young Jackie as the standard of motion pictures did more to create favorable sentiment for motion picture entertainment in Streator than any number of sermons from the pulpit could have done.

Incidentally, Manager Brayton had not one but fifty young Jackie Coogans invading the city during the showing of this attraction. They distributed handbills as part of the exploitation campaign and their invasion of the town hall and the mayor's office was a stunt that was reported by the newspaper, and won endless word of mouth advertising.

Oshkosh Fans Compete for Prizes

West Theatre Uses Clever Method in Selling "A Connecticut Yankee"

THE management of the West theatre, Oshkosh, Wis., conducted an elaborate exploitation campaign in connection with the engagement of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court."

As a started, 10,000 small cards were printed, each bearing this legend: "Ten One-Dollar Cash Prizes Given Away for First Ten Correct Answers. What Happened at 12:03 (noon), June 20th, Year 528 A. D.. Mail to 'Connecticut Yankee,' West theatre, before —."

These cards were mailed to more than three thousand names on the West theatre's list, and distributed by boys about the town. Free admission to the show compensated the boys' labor.

Special arrangements were made with the superintendents of schools, whose assistance resulted in putting the card into the hand of every Oshkosh school child.

Of course, the answer to the question was the great eclipse of the sun, which is capitalized in the picture. More than 3,500 replies were received from students and townspeople.

Another contest was announced in the newspapers prior to the opening of the engagement, and closed after the picture had been shown two days. This offered several cash prizes for the best two newspaper advertisements gotten up by patrons for use in advertising the picture. This contest brought even greater results.

Armored motorcycle riders "from King Arthur's Court" were sent through the city's thoroughfares carrying large pennants proclaiming the virture of "A Connecticut Yankee."

A special children's matinee was given during the week of the run, and, with further cooperation by the school authorities, tickets at reduced rates were distributed in the school rooms.

Tie-ups with a number of local book and stationery stores were effected and extensive displays of Mark Twain's work were placed in the windows. Placards and original posters also were inserted in these displays.

"Cryptograph" Has Ottawa Fans Guessing

MANAGER W. F. BROOKER of Loew's theatre, Ottawa, originated what he called a "cryptograph" recently that had all the local fans guessing. In an issue of the theatre's house organ, prizes were offered to patrons in a contest which consisted of the deciphering of two code words, "Oga Hmpue?" The first five correct replies were rewarded with passes which were good for two admissions at any performance. The code used proved to be a real puzzle to many.

The correct answer was "Quo Vadis." The solution was obtained by first writing a code alphabet and then a second alphabet, the "A" of which was placed under the code letter "O" and the remaining letters in regular sequence.

Novelty Ads. Used in Lorain, Ohio, Campaign

AUGUST ILG, manager of the Wonderland theatre, Lorain, Ohio, lined up a clever advertising campaign on "My Boy" and "Penrod," which he is running successively. Here's the stunt. He played "My Boy" first. During the engagement of the Coogan picture, he ran a verbal battle in the newspapers between Wesley Barry of "Penrod" and Jackie Coogan of "My Boy," as to their respective merits of their pictures. Barry argued the case of "Penrod" of course, and Coogan advanced the cause of "My Boy." The public is to decide the winner.

In this way Ilg kept the two features "My Boy" and "Penrod" in the public eye constantly for two weeks without interruption. Also he aroused a lot of interest in both pictures for people who were not regular movie fans.

Lobby and Ballyhoo Stunt Put Over by New York Audubon

The Audubon Theatre, New York, set another precedent in the exploitation of a news reel in its publicity campaign for the issue of Fox News containing the special feature "Vesuvius Conquered." The stunt was unique and the resulting box office returns amply justified the effort of giving widespread publicity to a short subject.

Mounted on an automobile truck were two papier mache volcanoes, each six feet in height. Each was shaped and painted to resemble the famous Italian fire mountain, and each exuded a heavy column of smoke, which came from large quantities of punk inserted and lighted within the miniature craters.

The ballyhoo was paraded about the streets of the city for six days prior to the opening. Large lettered banners gave the identity of the picture and the theatre.

With the opening of pictures showing one of the "volcanoes," still belching smoke, was placed in the theatre lobby and attracted considerable notice.

Wright's "Fool's Paradise" Prologue

Seattle Number Most Pretentious Ever Presented in Western City

"FOOL'S PARADISE," when it played the Strand theatre, Seattle, Wash., a few weeks ago, was given one of the most elaborate presentations seen in that city during the present season, by Manager H. B. Wright and his associates.

The lobby display, arranged and executed by members of the theatre staff, was exceptionally striking. It was done in brilliantly contrasting colors, and was as effective at night as during the day, because of the unusual lighting effects used. All of the large wording was lighted from behind through transparent letters. Each door panel contained a likeness of one of the leading characters of the picture, or an action still, in a red, flame-shaped frame upon an orange background.

On one side of the lobby the Mexican cantina, with its Spanish dancers and habitues, was duplicated. The other side featured the scene in the alligator den, with cut-outs of the alligators, open-mouthed, in the foreground. Exceptional coloring and lighting made these displays especially attractive. The entire theatre program was billed at the extreme sides of the lobby.

All of the ushers in the theatre were attired in Spanish or Mexican costumes, with wide-brimmed hats, fancy shawls and many-hued dresses to complete the atmosphere.

The prologue for the feature was presented by two Seattle dancers, Sylvia Bernhard and Irene Isham, in a specialty arranged by Conductor S. K. Wineland, of the Strand orchestra. It was a replica of the ice ballet scene in the photoplay itself, and was titled "The Dance of the Ice Palace." The stage was decorated with a large drop painted especially to represent the scene in the photoplay. Huge snow-men stood at both sides of the stage, and snow fell on the dancers during their entire performance.

J. Chambers, head doorman at the Strand, planned and executed a large part of the novel scenic and lighting effects, both in the prologue and lobby displays.

The accompanying photographs show the lobby display and prologue used by the Strand during the "Fool's Paradise" engagement.

Newman Theatre, Kansas City, Radio Broadcasting Station

HERE is the result of an exploitation stunt of Frank L. Newman at his Newman theatre last week in Kansas City—a top head story on the front page of the Kansas City Star:

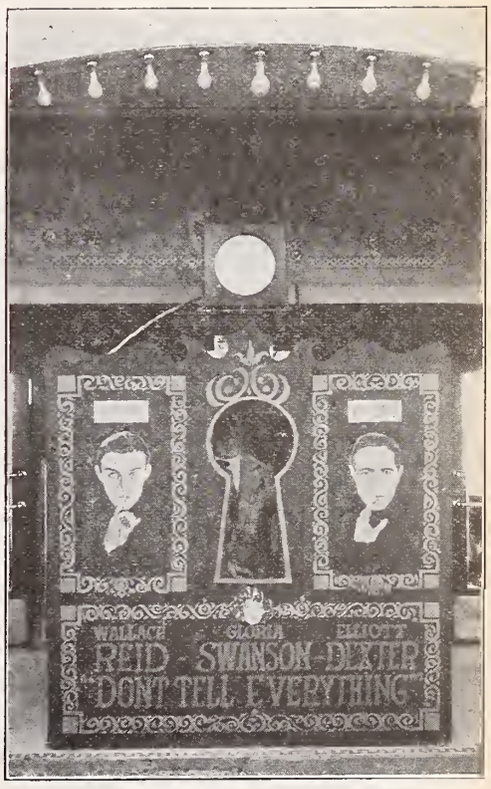
"An audience of more than 2,000 persons at the Newman theatre last night listened to the Newman orchestra play the special 30-minute program. Out in the residence districts of Kansas City and in the small towns in surrounding states an audience of countless thousands listened in with radio outfits."

"The broadcasting was done by the Star and the Western Radio Company. Two microphones were used. One suspended over the head of the audience beneath the balcony carried the louder strains of the orchestra, while the one in front of the pit transmitted the solo numbers by Miss Lillian Crossman and Frank Ridge."

Novelty Lobby Front Used on "World's Champion"

For a two-day run of "The World's Champion" at the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., Manager Frank Miller had an excellent "prize-ring" built in his lobby—a nice, heavy rubber mat or "pad" on the floor, ropes all around it, stools in two corners, flanked by pails, sponges, etc.

Two pairs of boxing gloves added a touch. In one corner was a life-sized cut-out of Wallace Reid, in ring costume, a flaming red bathrobe draped artistically over his shoulders. The faithful realism of the lobby proved irresistibly interesting to the Friday and Saturday patrons of the Modjeska, and "a good time was had by all"—especially the box office.



This lobby display on "Don't Tell Everything" is by A. C. Stalcup, manager of the Princess theatre, Eastland, Texas.

Kaliska Arranges Attractive Lobby for "Iron Trail"

Manager W. G. Kaliska of the Rialto theatre arranged one of the best and most attractive lobbies of his career for the showing of "The Iron Trail."

The Rialto is situated on a corner and has of course two entrances into the lobby. From each of these lobby entrances was a beaver board railroad, with ties, crossings and everything. The two roads converged into one at the box office, which was entirely hidden by a cut-out on compo board of the front of a train engine, life size and realistic, with bright headlight, etc. At one side was a sign reading: "Get Your Railroad Fare Here" and then a scale of the prices. A small cubby hole was cut in the train engine through which to sell tickets.

Back of the box office the wall of the lobby was covered with a realistically painted scene representing a portion of Alaska. At each door to the lobby was a railroad crossing sign post on which were hung red lanterns. Sticking out from the main entrance was the familiar red and green "boards" used as signals for real trains.

A bell was concealed on the marquee which was rung intermittently.

All in all, the lobby was complete in every detail and did not entail a great deal of expense.

Art Students Make Posters for "Forever"

THE Strand theatre, Portland, Me., accumulated seven art one sheets, reams of newspaper publicity, and the spirited co-operation of the schools, all for the cost of $10.

The bill was "Forever," and Manager William Peenes tied up the art classes to paint posters. Nearly one hundred students contested. Twenty-six posters were sent in and seven were judged good enough for display. These were put in the J. R. Libby store window, a location hitherto inaccessible to theatres.

The newspapers took it up, and Thursday night, the date the prizes were to be awarded, the theatre was packed. The audience acted as judges, giving their decision through applause.

Johnson Contributes "Polly of the Follies" Novelty

MANAGER HERB JOHNSON, of the Luna theatre, Lafayette, Ind., contributed quite a bit of novelty to the appearance of "Polly of the Follies" at his playhouse recently, by dressing four huge dolls in gorgeous array and arranging them on plush cushions under a banner inscribed "Famous Follies Girls."

Each doll was identified by a placard, named as follows: "Lillian Lorraine," "Ina Clare," "Maralyn Miller" and "Mary Eaton."

Then on the opposite side of the stage was a doll in grotesque garb with the following inscription: "Ziegfeld's latest recruit, 'Polly'."

This little innovation seemed to delight the audience and lend much distinction to the picture.

Simple But Effective "Peacock Alley" Lobby

TWO small cut outs, made from one sheets of May Murray in "Peacock Alley," standing in the center of the Victory theatre lobby, of Tampa, Fla., made a most effective display.

Of course there were the usual display boards of photographs and lithos, but those two little figures of Miss Murray stood out above them all.

On each side of the big electric sign, upon the marquee, was a large cut out of Miss Murray in her Peacock Gowns, taken from the 24 sheets, and the sign was topped off with a large peacock.

Canadian Manager Uses Ballyhoo for News Strip

An excellent exploitation stunt in connection with the Princess Mary's wedding section of Fox News was recently executed by the management of the Allen theatre, Regina, Sask., Canada.

A ballyhoo man, attired as a court page, with white stockings, pumps, plumed hat and elaborately decorated breeches and jacket, was sent out into the streets of the city carrying a banner.

It was the first time a Regina motion picture house had attempted to exploit a news reel feature, and the success of the idea, the management states, encourages repetition under similar circumstances.

Centralia Department Store Helps Hall Put on Fashion Show

"An Afternoon at the Modiste's" was the title of the prologue arranged by Manager C. W. Hall of the Illinois theatre, Centralia, Ill., for "Experience."

A local department store contributed the gowns and an experienced demonstrator to direct the happenings. Mr. Hall urged eight young society women, all members of the country club, to participate. Not only did the newspapers eat up news about the stunt, but the women attracted their own friends to attend, some of whom never visit a picture house.

Manager McDonald of the Istrione theatre, Jackson, Miss., used this lobby front during his showing of "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari"

Two views of the lobby display on "Wild Honey" used by Noble Hearne, manager of the Kinema theatre, Salt Lake City

Striking Lobby Display for "Wild Honey" at Kinema

Noble Hearne, formerly manager of the Frolice Theatre, San Francisco, has just been engaged as the manager of the Kinema Theatre, Salt Lake City. Hearne has started off his work in the new house with a smashing exploitation campaign on "Wild Honey."

Not only did he arrange a very striking lobby using cut outs from six and twenty-four sheets in the shadow box effect, but he astonished Salt Lake with a street ballyho, consisting of two riders, a man and woman in South Veldt costume representing Priscilla Dean and her leading man followed by a third rider on horseback bearing a transparency or sign telling about the picture.

The shadow boxes were built on the order of miniature stages on canvas backing painted by an artist, suggested scenes from the stills. An amber light and a moon transparency gave the punch to the scene while concealed purple lights around the frame work gave realistic color effects. These shadow boxes he made so they can be used again and again by changing the drop and the cut outs.

One of a number of window displays on "My Boy" put over by the Apollo theatre, New York

Painted Indian Made Palefaces Howl in Ohio Small Town

PAINTING up an Indian to make the palefaces howl was a splendid exploitation stunt for "The Paleface" at the Forum Theatre, Hillsboro, O. The theatre used every angle of exploitation from cutouts on automobile fronts, and poster wagons to a young miss who donned the feather headgear and redskin paint and paraded through the streets or rode on a shaggy pony as a ballyhoo attraction.

Cooperative Advertising Idea Invades Metropolis

Despite the fact that the metropolis is usually regarded as a tough proposition for exploitation campaigns it remained for Leo Brecher to put over one of the best ever recorded in the city for his Apollo Theatre on 125th st. The picture on which the campaign was engineered was "My Boy" and the men directly responsible for its successful consummation were Charles Fine, manager of the Apollo, Frank Schiffman, supervisor of Mr. Brecher's uptown theatres and S. Charles Einfeld representing First National in the campaign. Incidental credit goes to the art department and sign shop run on conjunction with the Brecher theatres which got up the displays that "sold" the retail merchants on the idea of co-operation.

It required hard and constant work to put the campaign across in one of the hardest boiled districts of the city. By the time all returns were in 12 retail stores had not only agreed to co-operate with window displays but joined together in offering prizes for the best solutions to the "Coogan Picture Puzzle"—a drawing which instigated interest in the number of articles beginning with "C" to be found in its four sides. The figure of the young star Jackie, of course, was the mainstay of the drawing.

The paper cutouts and stills practically monopolized the windows. The Appollo Theatre contributed its share by newspaper stories and advertisements supporting the contest and by the big display board especially erected above the marquee. The interior of the lobby harmonized with this arrangement.

Louisville Young Whistlers Compete in "Silent Call" Contest

When you can get the young Whistlers turning in their crayon sketches the way the Walnut theatre, Louisville, Ky., did for its presentation of "The Silent Call" it's a pretty fair indication that interest in the picture has been aroused to an abnormal point.

Youngsters living in and around Louisville were invited to submit drawings of the dog Strongheart, to be made from the half page advertisement that the theatre ran prior to the opening of the picture. The result surpassed all expectations. More than 100 drawings were turned in.

The newspapers played up the contest and the theatre lobby was decorated with the artistic efforts of Louisville's juveniles and the photographs of the three youngsters who were adjudged the prize winners.

Bain Turns Readers Into Copy Writers

A brand new tieup angle in which the readers of the co-operative ads were turned into ad writers was developed by D. M. Bain of the Victoria theatre, Wilmington, N. C., for the current bill, "Fool's Paradise."

He tied up ten merchants for ads to make up a co-operative page. The text of the ads was devoted to sales arguments for the film, although each ad was illustrated by a scene from the picture and a brief caption.

The readers of the ad were urged to write new ones. The best ad was awarded a prize of two tickets and the second best one ticket. Only two tickets were given any one person.

School Board Helps Price Sell "Penrod"

MANAGER PRICE of the Allen's Palace Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, found a way to reach the 15,000 school children of the city when he played "Penrod," by establishing a special Penrod prize for merit. By arrangement with the school board he had these prizes awarded to the pupils, showing the greatest improvement in their work the week prior to the showing of the picture. The prize consisted of a free pass to the Palace for the winning pupil and his parents. The most important point, however, was that each prize-winner was given a printed diploma—the Penrod Award of Merit, duly certified to by his teacher.

Having obtained the consent of the board, Mr. Price got the co-operation of the teachers by a special circular letter outlining the entertainment qualities of "Penrod" and the plan by which he was going to provide the scholars with an incentive to do better work. The official endorsement of the School Board helped and today many Calgary school children are proud of the signed Penrod diplomas on the walls of their rooms.

As an added exploitation stunt, Manager Price arranged with the Morning Albertan to run coupons for freckle-faced lads. Those who could show up at the Albertan office with twenty or more freckles were awarded a pass good at any performance, while those who showed up, but failed to meet the mark established by Freckles Barry, were given a pass for a special Saturday morning showing.

Connersville Sees Its First Lobby Display

A HUGE cut-out money bag advertising "Get - Rich - Quick - Wallingford," was placed in the lobby of the Lyric Theatre, Connersville, Ind., and was the first exploitation of this kind ever seen in that town.

The bag did away with nearly half the lobby and surmounting it was the figure of Wallingford taken from a poster. Manager C. F. Lewis is now addicted to exploitation after the success of his first stunt.

Dalton's Double Delivers Data

THE nearest thing to Dorothy Dalton to be found in Des Moines, Iowa, was a certain young lady with two deep dimples in either cheek.

She was garbed in the maritime breeches featured and sent around town in an automoible advertising "Moran of the Lady Letty," when Manager Stolte played it at the Des Moines theatre.

In order to slice off the automobile expense, Mr. Stolte tied up with the Reel Cab company, a prominent taxi-cab concern, who were glad to give vehicle and driver. This automobile was appropriately bannered so both the Rialto Des Moines and the cab company got over in the flash.

"Barnstormer" Lobby Front Represents Rural "Orpr'y"

Manager Willard Patterson claims, in his diversified experience, the distinction of being an oldtime trouper familiar with one night stands. When Charles Ray came along at the Metropolitan Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., in "The Barnstormer" Patterson had the picture sized up to a T.

He made over his theatre front to resemble one of the creaky one night stands, a ramshackle town hall such as might have held the original road company of "East Lynne." Hand painted scenery completed the effect of boards so wide apart that the rifts could have let a full blowing hurricane through without stretching.

The sign "Town Hall" figured prominently over the entrance. It fitted the picture and it was unique. The combination brought in all the fans who would be interested in a comedy of this nature and a lot of others who were attracted by the theatre front.

This cut shows two displays for "The Golden Snare" and "One Arabian Night," respectively, put over by Ernest G. Stellings, manager of the Grand theatre, Wilmington, N. C.

Stellings' Lobby Front on "One Arabian Night"

"One Arabian Night" received quite a bit of publicity and exploitation when E. G. Stellings played it at the Grand theatre, Wilmington, N. C. Three weeks in advance of the opening a teaser campaign was started in the leading daily paper by using specially prepared teaser ads. These ads were placed in the same position daily and kept the reader interested, leading up to the final display. Mr. Stellings also arranged for a full page story, under the heading of "Harem Secrets," in which the picture was referred to several times. This story appeared the Sunday preceding the opening. A lobby display was also erected, covering the box office, which represented an Arabian building. This display was placed in front of and under a blue scrim on which gilded stars were pasted. Blue lights behind this display gave a very good night effect, and the building painted in red and yellow gave a flashy display in the day time. Behind the window cut in the front of the display a painting of Pola Negri as the dancer was displayed.

This was one of the first big lobby displays Wilmington has seen in many months, and it proved quite profitable, as the cost was only about $7, it having been cut from beaver board. The scrim had been used before.

Schade Puts One Over on Sandusky Scribes

GEORGE J. SCHADE, owner and manager of the Schade theatre, Sandusky, O., pulled a peach in getting "Woman's Place" before his public just prior to its presentation.

Schade was elected to the City Commission, the five-man body governing Sandusky, last fall. He took his seat January 1 of this year and it was his vote that elected Capt. George A. Freitas, president of the International Licensed Tugmen's Protective Association, mayor of the city.

Schade and Capt. Freitas long have been the best of friends, The Star Journal, an evening paper, has been much concerned over the fact that the two, with J. Frank Donahue, a third commissioner, have been running things.

Early in the week before "Woman's Place" was given its first presentation, Schade casually dropped the remark that he was "through with Freitas" and that he had "another candidate for mayor in mind."

The expressions precipitated a political sensation.

Schade maintained silence until the opportune moment arrived. Finally, one day, he consented to an interview.

"Yes," said Schade. "I have another candidate in mind. I have been satisfied that 'Woman's Place' is in politics and I'm going to pay a little more attention to the women in the future.

"The candidate I have in mind is Constance Talmadge, who, if she ever runs for mayor of Sandusky, is surely going to get my vote and, I think I am safe in saying, the vote of Capt. Freitas, our present mayor, as well.

Atmospheric "Old Oaken Bucket" Lobby Draws Well for Miller

When "The Old Oaken Bucket" played a two-day run at the Rialto Theatre, Augusta, Ga., Manager Frank Miller's exploitation cost him scarcely anything in coin of the realm—but was excellent advertising for the picture.

The lobby of the theatre had been turned into a sort of "woodland bower" by great masses of vines,—the famous Southern smilax which grows profusely in the woods around Augusta—and tall leafy bamboo-cane from the river banks. These were massed about the lobby, completely hiding the walls. In the center of the lobby was an old-fashioned well-house of rough-hewn, time-worn timber, such as can be seen all through the rural districts of the South.

There was a bucket—an old oaken bucket, all moss-covered and iron bound, and full of clear water, as if freshly drawn. The only bit of advertising paper used, was a one-sheet tacked to the front of the well-house.

Illustrated Songs Once Again at Streator, Ill.

The bird who said there was nothing new beneath the sun has the dope all wrong, because a thing can become so old it's new again. With the swing of the cycle the illustrated screen song has made itself visible upon the exhibitorial horizon again.

Manager Bradford Brayton of the Majestic Theatre, Streator, Ill., is responsible for this "innovation" in his exploitation to work up community sings, the first one which was run in conjunction with the showing of "Wedding Bells." He gave the proper stage settings with a series of softly colored lights. Then screen slides were made to harmonize with a lot of current musical hits. Peppy songs from the "Scandals" were used to illustrate "Wedding Bells." "Out Where the West Begins" was used with "Bab Hampton of Placer."

The community sing has taken hold of Streator and the Majestic Theatre is being regarded as the meeting place for all its followers. Here's an example of how an exhibitor managed to dig up and renovate an old idea with satisfactory results for the box office, the picture and the dear public.

Hyman Observes Easter at Brooklyn Mark Strand

In line with his policy of commemorating important holidays on the stage, Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre, produced Buzzi Peccia's "Gloria," with Florence Mulholland, contralto, Easter Sunday.

A fanfare of trumpets, with the house and stage dark, preceded the actual production. At the conclusion the lights remained down and the curtain of the production stage opened, although the soloist, who then began to sing, was not visible.

Hyman's trump card in this number was a very fitting climax. As the last notes of the song were heard there appeared on the stage a flaming cross, which came as a complete surprise to the audience.

Another number that Hyman employed to add color to the day's performance was "Ai Nostri Monti," from Verdi's "Il Trovatore." A prison set was used here and the lighting in general was dark blue. The singers, Florence Mulholland, contralto, and George DuFranne, tenor, were seated at the center of the stage and were spotted in red from the sides.

The overture at this performance was Thomas' "Raymond." Another musical number was Charlotte Bergh, coloratura soprano, singing Gounod's "Valse," from "Romeo and Juliet."

Artistic "Sheba" Lobby Built at Chester, Pa.

THE manager of the William Penn in Chester, Pa., built a novel lobby display for "Queen of Sheba." As it appeared from the street it was really an artistic affair.

Using a cut out of the "Queen" he built a fan-shaped board back of her head and he studded this board with electric lights. The left hand of the "Queen" pointed to the box office. The "Queen" stood on the block letters, "Queen of Sheba."

Two flaming torches were shown back of the "Queen."

No one could walk by on either side of the street without being attracted by the sign when all the lights were ablaze.

Plunkett's "Pay Day" Prologue Utilizes Strand Quartette

When Managing Director Joseph Plunkett, of the New York Mark Strand theatre, has a picture with a genuine masculine tang to it, the Strand male quartette usually is to be found providing the harmony for the atmospheric prologue.

In presenting "Pay Day" Mr. Plunkett duly considered the role which Charlie was playing and presented his now famous quartet as bricklayers in the appropriate setting, a wall in the process of erection (see accompanying cut). The effect of the smoke-stacks in the background is achieved with the aid of a cut-out and the artificial smoke is manipulated from behind, emanating from the tubes representing the stacks.

At the opening the quartet renders "We Always Work with Pleasure on the Job," clanging their trowels to the rhythm of the music. Dusk is falling, and as the lights gradually dim, accentuating the horizon, the quartet finishes with "I'm Tired." As the members are bowing their heads in apparent exhaustion, the curtain falls.

Window display on "Molly O" secured for the showing of this picture at the Rialto theatre, Superior, Wis.

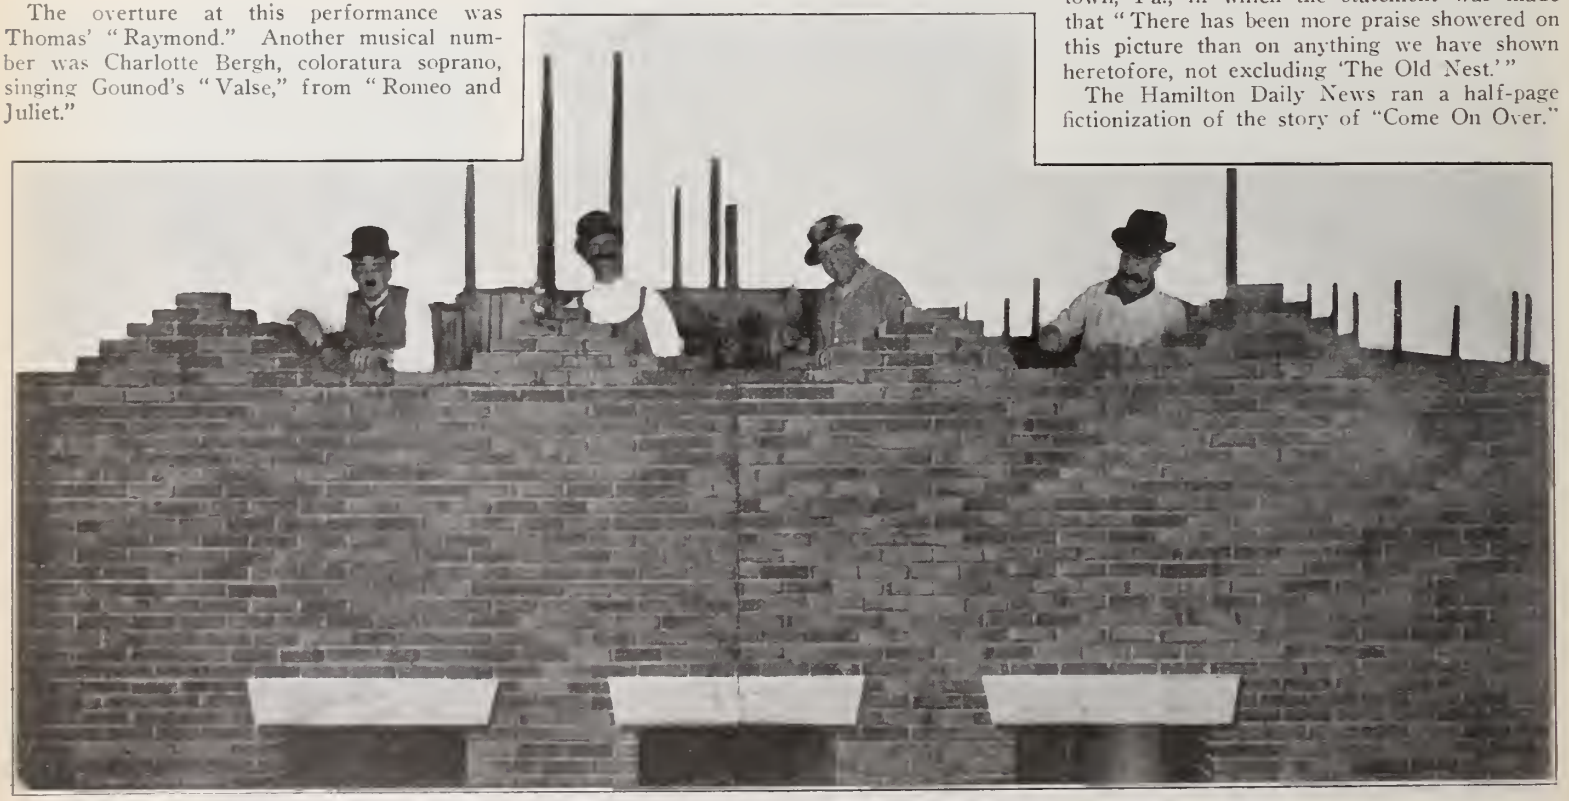
Well-Planned Newspaper Campaign Puts "Come On Over" Across

Fred S. Meyer, managing director of the Palace theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, found "Come On Over" an excellent production for almost exclusive newspaper publicity and exploitation. He used the stunt which he has worked before, and which other exhibitors have found valuable, of putting his advertisements into the form of open letters to prominent residents of the city, only in the case of "Come on Over" the messages were to prominent Irishmen only.

These ads were one column wide by nine inches deep and contained a shamrock in black with the title of the picture and the day of opening in white letters on it.

On the day of the opening Mr. Meyer ran a two-column advertisement, thirteen and one-half inches deep, in the form of a Weekly Letter from the Palace theatre, telling the public what the two attractions for the week were. In this he told his public why he had discarded the usual practice—regarded as good showmanship—of booking the cheapest pictures possible for Holy Week and had booked two of the most expensive, "Come on Over" and "Theodora." The first paragraph of the ad contained the letter from the Main Amusement Co. of Uniontown, Pa., in which the statement was made that "There has been more praise showered on this picture than on anything we have shown heretofore, not excluding 'The Old Nest.'"

The Hamilton Daily News ran a half-page fictionization of the story of "Come On Over."



This shows the stage setting and Mark Strand Quartette in costume for the prologue presented for "Pay Day" by Managing Director Joseph Plunkett, of the New York Mark Strand theatre.

Quick Lunch" Lobby Front Miller's Latest Stunt

FOR "Through a Glass Window" Manager Frank Miller, of the Rialto theatre, Augusta, Ga., built a red brick "quick lunchroom" in the lobby. This "lunchroom" was closed on all four sides, the interior being visible "through a (real) glass window." Inside the window could be seen a long counter, such as is familiar to "quick lunchrooms," on which, at regular intervals, were a plate, holding two doughnuts, a cup of coffee, a tin knife, fork and spoon and a paper napkin.

Back of the counter, and facing the window, was a cut out of May McAvoy as a waitress, holding a plate of doughnuts in her hand, with one poised on the long steel cooking-fork. Her back was to a cut out (used by furniture stores to advertise a certain brand of stoves) of a big coal range, on which were various pots and pans.

Morrow Turns Out Fine Lobby on "Saturday Night"

Floyd D. Morrow, manager of the Nelson Theatre, Fairmont, W. Va., took his lobby display on "Over the Hill," recently described in these columns, and treated it to a new coat of paint, with the result shown in the accompanying cut, showing the lobby front on "Saturday Night."

On one side was a scene of the bathing party; a strip of beaver board balloons at the top concealed the lights that illuminated the scene. On the other side was painted a Coney Island scene, with little buildings standing out from the background with holes punched around their outlines, giving the appearance of electric lights, several white lights behind giving the effect.

Mr. Morrow states that he is no artist, and renders an opinion that any exhibitor can obtain the scenic results he did by using a paint brush judiciously.

Local Merchants Aid Strand Sell "Forever"

THE Strand theatre, Cortland, N. Y., tied up six merchants for a co-operative page and enchanted the displays by making a puzzle out of a still from "Forever," the current bill.

The theatre offered seats as prizes to the twenty neatest solutions.

Another Riding Knight on "Connecticut Yankee"

The Wysor Grand Theatre, Muncie, Ind., used the old but highly effective "riding knight" stunt in connection with the publicity campaign on "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court."

These fully attired "knights" mounted on speedy motorcycles with side-cars attached, drove at high speed through the city's thoroughfares for three days preceding and during the run of the picture.

An effective mailing campaign also was pushed with highly satisfactory results. It consisted of a series of three post cards mailed to prospective patrons at intervals of two days.

Scene from Sid Grauman's prologue for "The Green Temptation" when this picture played Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles

Grauman Prologue Reproduction from Scene in Picture

UNDER the title of "The Den of the Cafe des Apache," Sid Grauman managing director of Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles presented an atmospheric prologue for "The Green Temptation."

In "The Den of the Cafe des Apache," Mr. Grauman reproduced the cafe, really an old Roman catecomb, in which a large part of the action of "The Green Temptation" transpires. Men dressed like Apaches, sat at cafe tables in the background, smoking cigarettes. An Apache youth and a girl companion entered separately and executed the action which constituted the heart of the prologue. This constituted a pantomine dance wherein the youth mutely demanded of the girl a necklace which she held in her hand. Through her secretive and explanatory actions toward him it was evident that the jewel had been stolen. She refused to yield the necklace to the youth. There ensued a struggle betwen them, always in the form of a dance, over the possession of the object. The lad finally wrested the necklace from his companion but she exhibited her affection for him in the dancing embrace which closed the prologue.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Green Temptation—
Fair picture and business good. (East.)

This is an average picture; did as well as most anything would have done during Holy Week. (Middle West.)

Love's Boomerang—
Picture and business both fair. (East.)

Played to very good attendance in spite of Holy Week. (East.)

The World's Champion—
Did very well considering Holy Week run. (East.)

Three Live Ghosts—
An excellent novelty feature which drew well and pleased audiences. (East.)

Fool's Paradise—
Everybody liked this picture and were satisfied with increased prices.

The Lane That Had No Turning—
Good picture and fine business. (West.)

Gasoline Gus—

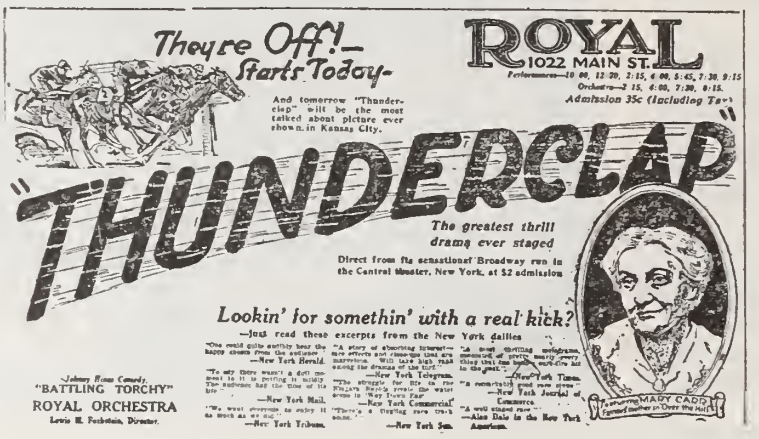
The Bride's Play—
Fine production. Good business during week. (West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Pay Day—
As good as anything Chaplin has ever produced. Excellent box-office attraction. Given equal prominence with feature. (Middle West.)

This "Cameron of the Royal Mounted" comes from the Liberty theatre, Kansas City.



This "Thunderclap" display was used by the Royal theatre of Kansas City.

Capacity business done with double feature program. Charles Chaplin popular here. (Middle West.)

Very well liked. Good business. (Middle West.)

Excellent picture and business very big. (East.)

The Seventh Day—
Not as interesting a story as "Tol'able David." However, did good business for four days. (Middle West.)

Capacity business was done with double feature program. Richard Barthelmess popular here. (Middle West.)

The Woman's Side—
Katherine MacDonald's always a certain bet for good attendance. Drew good crowds for week's run. (Middle West.)

Considered a very good picture by patrons. Nothing unusual but gets by very nicely. (Middle West.)

The Infidel—
Ordinary picture. Did fair business for week with added musical attraction. (Middle West.)

The Rosary—
Nothing remarkable about this. Paid fairly well. (East.)

Audiences like this one. Did average business. (Middle West.)

The Barnstormer—
Nothing exceptional in plot, but funny enough. Fair attraction. (Middle West.)

The Silent Call—
Fine audience picture held business up for week preceding Easter. (Middle West.)

Smilin' Through—
One of Norma Talmadge's best but business poor owing to Holy Week. (Middle West.)

Woman's Place—
Excellent picture and business very big. (East.)

Question of Honor—
Fine picture with good business. (East.)

GOLDWYN

Watch Your Step—
A fair picture and box-office attraction. (Middle West.)

Boys Will Be Boys—
Picture and business both poor. (East.)

All's Fair in Love—
The title proved the strongest factor in attracting good crowds for a wek's run. (Middle West.)

METRO

Turn to the Right—
Regard this as way above average but failed to bring out the people in Holy Week. Business poor. (Middle West.)

Nobody—
Not much to it. Fair week. (Middle West.)

Why Announce Your Marriage—
Average program subject which failed to enthuse audiences. Business about average. (East.)

Fair picture and box-office value. (West.)

De Luxe Annie—
Picture and business both poor. (East.)

AMERICAN RELEASING

Cardigan—
Good picture but business only fair. (East.)

Belle of Alaska—
Did not do a very good week's business, due perhaps to unusually strong competition. (Middle West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

A Doll's House—
People here liked it better than anything Nazimova has ever done. Business pretty good. (Middle West.)

The Ruling Passion—
Patrons say "Give us more like it." (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

Dangerous Little Demon—
Quite a thrilling picture and always good entertainment. Did as well as could be expected during Easter Week. (Middle West.)

Foolish Wives—
Fairly entertaining. Business fair. (West.)

FOX

Iron to Gold—
Business fair even during Holy Week. Picture liked by patrons. (East.)

Little Miss Smiles—
Splendid picture. One of Shirley Mason's best. Did big business for week. (Middle West.)

Shame—
Drew well during a two week's run here. (Middle West.)

Any Wife—
Mediocre picture and poor business. (East.)

Virgin Paradise—
Very good feature. Business good. (West.)

HODKINSON

French Heels—
Public liked this picture. Had a better week than we expected, being the week before Easter. Normally, would have done big business with it. (Middle West.)

R-C PICTURES

Beyond the Rainbow—
Did a good week's business and won the approval of all patrons. (Middle West.)

WID GUNNING

Girl from God's Country—
Fair outdoor picture. Held up for four days. (Middle West.)

EQUITY

Charge It—
Fair picture with corresponding business. (West.)

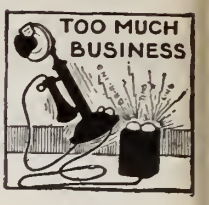
"Too Much Business" Exploitation

Suitable Contests—Use the Schools—
Baby Show—Nursery Idea Utilized



Explanatory to This Section

THIS special advertising section on Vitagraph's seven reel comedy "Too Much Business" is an honest attempt to outline to the exhibitor ways and means of selling the picture.

All the superlatives that often identify trade paper advertising on pictures have been eliminated. Every line of the whole eight pages and each illustration that has been used is intended to provide the showman with information he desires on the production or to aid him in properly advertising it to his public.

Because the section does not waste words and space proclaiming "the greatest picture ever made" and express similar sentiments in other equally familiar terms, it is not to be inferred that "Too Much Business" does not deserve words of commendation. It does. The picture is a cleverly constructed, adequately acted, carefully staged light comedy—one which will provide a fine evening's entertainment for the fans.

Use the Schools

PHYSICAL culture in many states is a most important part of the curriculum of the public schools and in the lower grades some very fine drills and dances have been rehearsed. A contest in a public school or schools in which the various classes compete for prizes, probably could be arranged in most cities, even to securing the actual assistance of the school authorities. In many cities the department of education has had hard work to "sell" the public that this sort of stuff in the schools is not a waste of the children's time and the taxpayers' money and a chance to present an argument for the idea, should be gladly welcomed.

* * *

THE baby show is always a source of interest to the public. The ways of putting over a baby show are many and varied and also most of them are well enough known to the showman so that detailed suggestions are not necessary here. It is a safe bet that you can get a newspaper to go in with you on this idea, too.

TO many of your patrons on this picture, the most enjoyable part of the feature will be those scenes which have to do with John Henry and his nursery. Linking up with this suppose you arrange to have a nursery at or near your theatre during the run of the picture, where the mothers among your patrons may leave their kiddies while they see the show. There is a fine opportunity for front page publicity if the idea was first announced to read that some well known and well liked bachelor was to head the affair. A tie up with local welfare clubs would be a practical solution of actually putting the idea over in such a way that the mothers would feel safe in "checking" their youngsters. If this isn't possible be sure that the matron of your nursery is some one who will inspire confidence.

Suitable Contests

THE business girl and her romances is really the theme of this picture. Offer prizes to the business girls of your city for essays on "The Business Girl and Her Romance." This stunt, of course, needs the cooperation of a newspaper and considerable promotion work. A humorous angle to this idea is possible by switching the theme of the contest somewhat so that your contestants write their essays from the angle of their preferences in lovers and love making.

THE "stenogs" can be used further in putting over this picture by inaugurating a speed contest on your stage. This idea probably would work out best if the actual contest was built up into a sort of a prologue, something along the line of the telephone girls' stunt, presented by Sid Grauman of Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles, some time and which is described in a recent issue of Motion Picture News.

Suppose you provide an office, stage setting fully equipped, with all modern fixtures and appliances. In this connection it will be easy to get the aid of your local merchants, typewriter agencies, etc. In this set seat your stenographers at the machines each operator prefers.

There would be several ways of pulling the contest. One would be to make it an affair for the various manufacturers of typewriters with each firm furnishing its expert operator. Then for someone to read the dictation direct to the machines, letting each girl go to it. The prizes should be awarded on speed, accuracy, etc. If this plan is followed out it would probably be better to take a number of short articles, so that if a girl got behind on one she would have a chance on the others, stopping for a few seconds between each story and timing each girl as to speed as she finished.

Suggestions of the Stills—Novelties—Newspaper Advertising—Lobby Decorations—Window Tie-ups

Just Some Plain Facts

"TOO MUCH BUSINESS" is a Vitagraph seven reel comedy adapted from the "Saturday Evening Post" story, "John Henry and the Restless Sex," by Earl Derr Biggers. The picture was directed by Jess Robbins. The scenario was prepared by Ford I. Beebee.

In the cast is Tully Marshall, Ethel Gray Terry, Edward Horton, John Steppling, Carl Gerard, Elsa Lorimer and other well known players.

"Too Much Business" is offered as one of the comedy hits of the season, at fair prices, and with every exploitation aid that Vitagraph can evolve; that the exhibitor playing it may be fully insured of adequate financial success.

Inexpensive Stunts

THE plan of dictating a longer story to each girl separately would probably be a more fair way to pull the stunt but it would take more time and be devoid of much of the entertainment values that the first suggested plan carries.

A half a dozen high speed typists, all banging away at the same time, has decidedly humorous possibilities.

This same idea carried out, without the aid of the manufacturers, would have a better home talent angle. However, it might be hard to get the really fast typists interested. Either scheme, it would seem, possesses sufficient novelty to interest the public. Take this up with the Woman's Page editor. She ought to fall for it.

Novelties

ON this page and the one immediately preceding will be found a number of silhouette illustrations. These are printed direct from cuts of the same size and any or all of duplicates of those used are available from your Vitagraph Exchange at small cost.

These cuts are suggested for use in teaser advertising, in jazzing up any displays you may decide to use in addition to the four that have been provided complete.

If used in connection with teaser ads the captions should be catchy. For instance: "Who said hard times? Too Much Business." "Good times are here. Too Much Business." "No dull times here. Too Much Business."

Newspaper Advertising

VITAGRAPH has prepared a considerable number of hand drawn cuts (electros or mats) and in addition four complete newspaper displays in the styles used by the largest theatres of the country. These latter are illustrated and explained on page 2445 of this section. These display ads in the sizes indicated by the captions are available in either mat form or electros at a cost not to exceed a dollar each. Attention is called to the fact that these displays are actually of the quality and style which the first run houses turn out, but at a cost many times that quoted.

The small illustration on the following page will explain what can be done in the way of novelty ads through use of the silhouette cuts previously mentioned.

Lobby Decorations

A LOBBY display consisting of eight 11 x 14 and two 22 x 28 colored photographs of actual scenes in the picture is available from your Vitagraph Exchange.

Oil paintings of sufficient size to attract instant attention can be ordered from any Vitagraph branch. These are not carried in stock for sale, but are rented at moderate charges.

Among the various styles and sizes of paper prepared on "Too Much Business" is a novelty three sheet, especially adapted for lobby use. In its entirety it is attractive and it also possesses cut-out possibilities. A reproduction of this three sheet is found on the page of this section devoted to the paper that has been prepared on the feature.

For those who desire a more elaborate display the office idea is suggested. Equip your lobby with modern office furniture. Same should be available on a cooperative basis from local dealers. Cut out the figures of John Henry and Myra at a desk in the six sheet, place back of a real desk and manipulate so the figures will appear lifelike.

For a banner across your front use the idea shown in the cut illustration appearing across the bottom of the following page. Any ordinary sign painter will reproduce this is a short time and at small cost. For a sign of this sort nothing is better on which to work than light colored flat finished sanitas (the oilcloth wall paper) in some attractive small figure.

Window Tie-Ups

THE stores that naturally might be expected to be sold with the idea of cooperative window displays are as follows:

Department and Children's Wear Stores: The tie-up is with the nursery scenes of the picture.

Stationery and Office Equipment Stores: The stills to work with these are those pertaining to the scenes in the business office.

Automobile and Automobile Supply Dealers: The principal characters in the feature are all employed by a firm selling automobile supplies. There is one scene in the pieture where Horton is struck by a car. This can be duplicated exactly.

Note.—"Too Much Business" is an adaptation of the Saturday Evening Post story, "John Henry and the Restless Sex," and ran as a serial in this publication recently.

Inexpensive Stunts

IN towns where the business men are personally known to each other, thereby insuring no offense, call the business people on the telephone either personally or by proxy with a message something like this: "This is the ..... theatre talking. We wanted to tell you that we have 'Too Much Business' this week, but that if you can let us know when you want to see the show, your seats will be reserved. We can send your tickets over if you desire."

* * *

ONE of the best business getters for a theatre, located in the average sized city, ever invented is the old stunt of taking pictures of the local kiddies on stereopticon sized plates (make a thin positive from the negative) and then throw them on the screen with captions identifying the children. This stunt will actually make money in itself—if it is followed up by a campaign to sell photographs in half dozen lots or so to fond parents of the children who have been caught by your camera man.

Talk to one of your local photographers and see if he isn't willing to tie up on the scheme. The cost of the negative is only a few cents and a photographer can snap a couple hundred "kids" in a day. The idea goes best when you work from the angle of taking the pictures without any attempt at "dressing up" the children. Just catch them in groups wherever they happen to be. A clever man with the camera can work in a lot of comedy.

This old stunt is especially well fitted for use in connection with "Too Much Business" as the day nursery scenes are an important part of the picture.

FOR theatres that consider the above mentioned stunt "small town stuff," the filming of children along similar lines is suggested. In this case it would probably be possible and certainly advisable to tie up with a local newspaper. A contest could be developed out of the scheme and possibly civic organizations interested.

Suggestions of the Stills

IN the early part of the film there is a scene showing John Henry bringing a bouquet to Myra. This still with a tie-up caption should win a place in a florist's window. An oil painting of this scene is available from Vitagraph Exchanges at a small rental.

Another oil painting, termed "No. 1" by Vitagraph, shows three views of a National automobile. This scene is certainly good for space for a window display with the local dealer selling this make of car.

One of the nursery scenes shows the kiddies playing with various toys. Local stores selling toys will cooperate with you in a window display.

Ballyhoos

THE scene of the picture where John Henry is "telescoped" by a car can be imitated by the use of a dummy and a cut-out head of Edward Horton, taken from the six sheet available from Vitagraph. The car ought to be obtained without charge by using the make of the one shown in the picture.

Another ballyhoo suggestion is to use three girls—two tall and one smaller—to walk the streets hurriedly enough to attract attention, two ahead and the smaller one behind. On the back of the smaller girl place a sign reading "We are hurrying to see "Too Much Business," or some caption of the sort.

Unusual Accessories

IN addition to the accessories previously mentioned, Vitagraph has prepared an attractive trailer that is available without cost to the exhibitor, a novelty four-page herald ready for the theatre imprint and sold at a moderate price, and materials for several puzzle contests.

A novelized version of the picture is also available either in boiler plate or mat form. A music cue sheet carefully compiled and properly synchronized and slides complete the list of accessories.

For exhibitors who wish to build their own ads, there are a variety of line cuts prepared for their use by the producer of the picture.

EFFICIENCY EDGAR—
Had Nothing on John Henry

JOHN was a whiz of a salesmanager but he got in dutch with his boss when he secured an option, object matrimony, on the heart and hand of the old grouch's pretty private secretary.

Then he went out on his own—started a hotel for kiddies—day nursery idea and things began to happen.

Sure, he got the girl—and his old job back too, but he learned much and often before this happened. To wit: that even a dyed-in-the-wool business girl likes to be wooed in the good old-fashioned way and that a man just doesn't belong when it comes to bossing an army of little shavers.

Detailed Description of the Production With Cut Illustrations

Visualizing "Too Much Business"

From the main title of "Too Much Business" the scene isris in showing Amos Camby (Tully Marshall), the irascible, crochety owner of a large industrial plant, seated at a desk of his private office, champing on his cigar butt fiercely (Illustration at right). Camby leans over a line of electric buttons and presses the one labeled "John Henry Jackson, Sales Manager." Even in the ringing of an electric bell there is a fierceness in his manner as if he were punching the head of Simon Stecker, president of the Acme Company and his business rival.

John Henry is not at his desk. The scene shifts and the young, good-looking sales manager (Edward Horton) is shown picking his way in and out through a maze of automobiles, evidently on his way to the office.

A cut-back thrusts you again into Camby's office. The door opens and in comes Ray Gorham, a clerk, who is anxious to advance even at the expense of others. This role is assumed by Carl Gerard. Camby asks him in his fierce way if he rang for him, and Gorham stammers that he wanted to tell him Mr. Jackson is late. When the irate Camby asks him why Jackson is late he answers he doesn't know. This angers Camby and he jumps violently from his chair and advances threateningly on his unfortunate assistant.

Left alone Camby rings for his private secretary, Myra Dalton, a role played by Ethel Gray Terry. Camby dictates a letter to his secretary and then turns to his business.

Meanwhile John Henry has been run down by Simon Stecker (John Steppling), the Camby rival, and with whom Amos without success has been trying to effect a consolidation.

When John Henry learns the name of the man who has run into him he hops into the car and begins to talk consolidation, with Stecker an unwilling listener. This scene cuts back to Camby's office, where Myra is shown urging Camby to sign a letter to Steppling which she has changed from the one dictated. Myra is successful in convincing Camby that the original letter would make him appear ridiculous and he signs, remarking to a visitor, in connection with the incident as registered by a title:

"If she ever looks twice at a man I will throw him down the elevator shaft. But she'll never marry. She's too much business. Not a sentimental bone in her head."

John Henry Jackson arrives in the office half an hour late. He walks over to Myra's desk and is informed that eight-thirty is the rule of the office. He humbly presents her with a bouquet, but she looks at them scornfully and throws them into the waste basket. (See cut at left.)

"There is too much business in this office, Mr. Jackson, to leave room for sentiment," she informs him.

Then she hands him a magazine with an article on efficiency and suggests that he read the part relating to punctuality. John Henry takes the magazine to his desk and in his discomfort tears off the date on his desk calendar, which happens to be November first and in tearing it into bits to throw into the waste basket the "ov" of November falls upon the "if" in the title "Let your life affairs be strictly business," making the article to read "Let your love affairs be strictly business." The idea pleases John Henry and he makes out a contract, and he briskly walks over to Myra's desk and asks her for an option of thirty days in marriage. The girl agrees, providing he doubles his income, and then to help him she goes into Camby's office and asks Camby if he will raise the salary of John Henry Jackson. Camby agrees, until he spots the diamond ring with which Jackson had sealed the agreement. He rises in great wrath, strides out of the office, and the next scene shows him by Jackson's desk. Jackson tells Camby he has a great surprise for Jackson, announcing that he is fired. He then informs Jackson that he will not get another job in the town, but Jackson is not discouraged and informs Camby that even he cannot prevent John Henry Jackson from going into business for himself.

John Henry walks over to Myra's desk and the next scene shows him telling her that she does not want him to make good. But she informs him that had she not wished him to make good she would never have signed the agreement, and with this encouragement Jackson leaves, determined to win success.

The tearing off of a calendar pad shows that a month has elapsed between this scene and the next. It is the day that John Henry's option expires. He has not been heard of from the day he was driven out of the office by Camby. Myra looks at her desk calendar and then registers that she wonders whether Jackson will claim his option.

The scene fades into Camby's office—in walks Stecker and agrees to consolidate with Camby, providing John Henry Jackson is made general manager. Camby tries to argue him out of the Jackson idea, but fails. A further condition is that John Henry Jackson must meet the Board of Directors at five o'clock that night. Camby rings for Gorham, who has taken Jackson's place and asks where the former sales manager is. But again Gorham announces that he does not know. He returns to his desk in time to take a message from a telegraph boy which gives Jackson's address. It is sent to Myra. Armed with this news, she goes into Camby's office.

Myra takes the message, which invites her to lunch with the former sales manager at the Hotellerie des Enfants, of which he is the director.

In Camby's office the irascible business man is talking with Jackson. He lost no time in getting him on the 'phone, but Jackson tells Camby if he has any business with him, he should call at the Hotellerie des Enfants. Camby slams the receiver down, grabs his hat and hurries to the Hotellerie des Enfants. Myra also leaves for that institution. Camby arrives first and in nosing around is mysti-

TULLY MARSHALL, the elongated screen and stage star, has upset some of the most cherished traditions of his profession. After years of playing character and heavy roles he has blossomed forth as a comedian—something that doesn't happen often in the acting profession, once a player gets a reputation for doing a certain line of parts of an opposite nature.

Mr. Marshall first became famous in "dope fiend" roles such as he played in "Paid in Full." When the films claimed him as it has most of the talented stage stars, he became a "villain" and a villain he stayed for some five years.

But when Jess Robbins was casting "Too Much Business" an adaptation of the Saturday Evening Post story, "John Henry and the Restless Sex," there was a part for which Mr. Marshall was an ideal type and in spite of tradition and perhaps some misgivings he was engaged for the role.

The result was that Mr. Marshall playing a grouchy business man in "Too Much Business" put over the principal comedy role of a picture that is as full of laughs as a porcupine is of quills in a way that would make Will Rogers green with envy.

"Too Much Business" comes to the —theatre as the principal film attraction soon. Besides Mr. Marshall, other players of note are Ethel Grey Terry and Edward Horton.

tified to see nurses walking hither and thither, some carrying babies and some carrying blankets and others leading children. He becomes curious to know the kind of business that Jackson is in and opening the door, steps into a room. No sooner within the door than some twenty-five youngsters, dressed as Indians, and waving wooden swords, rushed toward him. He is rescued by John Henry, who tells Camby that he is running a hotel for babies.

Camby tries every way to induce John Henry to return to his employment and is still arguing when a nurse informs John Henry that Myra Dalton is without. Jackson, without excusing himself, dashes from the office and leads the fair secretary into his dining room, where luncheon is served. Here the love interest is resumed, but each time that Jackson is about to take up his option he is interrupted. First by a mother who wishes to leave a child—then by the president of the Child's Welfare League.

In Jackson's office, Camby tired of waiting, crowds his hat on to his head and leaves. He goes to a telephone booth and calls Jackson. This causes another interruption at the luncheon, and leaves Myra wondering whether she would be happy with a man who has so much business.

The scent shifts to Camby's office. Gorham taking advantage of the situation, agrees to put John Henry out of business. Camby tells him to do it. Gorham goes to the Hotellerie des Enfants, hires away all the nurses. Pleased with his work he returns to Camby and tells him of his success, but Camby is a business man and berates Gorham for his foolishness, saying that Jackson will hire new nurses. Then Gorham returns to the Hotellerie des Enfants and gets into all sorts of difficulties with the children who find him under the table in Jackson's office.

The president of the Child's Welfare League agrees to help Jackson, who has discovered the loss of his nurses. She goes into a room to change her clothes and Gorham locks the door. Jackson enters the room and Gorham hides under the table. A child discovers him, but Gorham manages to quiet the youngster. In the meantime the woman is pounding upon the door to be released. Jackson, thinking it a prank of the children, tells her to be quiet or he will spank her. While Jackson is at telephone Gorham makes his escape, backing out of the office on his hands and knees into the hall, where he bumps into Myra, who is angry at Jackson's business and the two leave together.

Camby in his office is interrupted by a telephone message which is from his wife, telling him that she is imprisoned in Jackson's hotel. Meanwhile Jackson is having trouble with the children. He locks the girls and boys in separate rooms,

WHEN Sidney Drew, for twenty-five years acknowledged to be America's most distinguished comedian both on the stage and screen died, theatrical people said that never would another actor appear who could put over light comedy parts so successfully or who could be actually funny on the screen without resorting to slap-stick.

But the old saying that no man is so good that another can not fill his place holds good in the flicker drama just as it does in the more prosaic walks of life. A newcomer in pictures has taken the beloved Sidney Drew's place and curiously enough he not only possesses the late star's finesse and peculiar ability to make people laugh, but he looks like him.

The luminary is Edward Horton, whose first real comedy part in a photoplay was the juvenile in "Too Much Business," coming soon to the theatre. Jess Robbins, who produced "Too Much Business," was looking for a juvenile star who could play Earl Derr Bigger's irrepressible "John Henry," as described in the original story, "John Henry and the Restless Sex," recently published in the Saturday Evening Post.

A dozen players with country-wide reputations were tried, but none could make "John Henry" humorous. "They were as funny as a crutch," states Mr. Robbins in describing his find.

One evening Mr. Robbins and some co-workers were resting in a Los Angeles hotel, when one of the party spoke of Horton as a second Sidney Drew. "Lead me to him," shouted the director. "If he is anywhere near as good as Drew, I'll make him famous over night." And Robbins has made good his prediction for Mr. Horton made good as "John Henry."

feeds them jam tries to administer to the want of each one at the same time. Camby in his office grasps his hat, dashes out of the office and starts for the hotel, but arrives just after Gorham has placarded the place with a diptheria sign and warning the policeman to watch out that no one enters or leaves.

Cramby craws through some shrubbery and effects an entrance.

In the meantime, John Henry Jackson comes to the door, observes the sign and takes it down, but the over-watchful policeman forces him to get back into the house and return the sign to its place. Camby rescues his wife while being chased by the policeman and leaves the building. It is then late in the afternoon and mothers begin to assemble to call the children. They make a rush on the policeman who effectively bars the way and is not overthrown until his own wife tells him that their little Michal is inside. Then the policeman leads the raid and mothers rescue their children, breaking up the business of John Henry Jackson.

In Camby's office the board of Directors are in session. They are waiting for John Henry Jackson. Camby paces the floor. He flops down into a chair. He looks at the door and in walks the former sales manager. He demands fiercely to know why Camby had done this. But Camby informs him that he has not done anything, it was Gorham, who had designs upon Myra. Stecker rushes up, grasps Jackson's hands and thrusts the papers before him, which must be signed before the consolidation is completed. Jackson asks where Gorham and Myra are and is informed that they had left together. Jackson dashes out of the office. Camby smiles to the directors, takes up the papers, tells them that he will bring back the signed papers and exits. Once outside he locks the door and keeps the directors there and dashes off in pursuit of the former sales manager.

At the railroad station Jackson overtakes Gorham and Myra. He pushes the youth aboard the moving train and then turns fiercely upon Myra, telling her his option has not expired and that he would hold her to the bargain. She shakes her head but does not meet his eyes. He makes the situation clear to her just as Camby rushes up with the papers and forces Jackson to sign them while embracing his sweetheart.

The picture is in farce comedy, but contains no slap stick. It has a logical well developed plot and the continuity is perfect from beginning to end.

From a photographic angle, "Too Big Business" is exceptional. The tinting is uniform and the picture is sharp at all times. There is no trick stuff in the whole seven reels.

Jess Robbins, who directed, has built his story slowly but surely to a logical climax and there is no padding. Exhibitors are advised that there is no opportunity to cut the picture without harming the continuity. However, the seven reels will screen in less than the average time consumed on a picture of its length, owing to the fact that it is light comedy and speeding does not destroy the correct tempo.

Tully Marshall carries off the acting honors, although Edward Horton as the energetic sales-manager is a close second. His part requires careful handling and a finesse that few juveniles are capable of delivering. Ethel Gray Terry makes a winsome heroine, but her role does not call for a great deal of acting.

The minor roles are all played by a correct cast of types. There has been a special attention to details throughout.

ABOVE

The attractive 24 sheet which has been prepared is shown above. Three actual scenes from the picture have been adapted in making the poster and the colors used make a flash that will make people stop, look and listen.

LEFT

This cut shows one of the three sheets available. Scenes from the production are used in this poster also. It is lithographed in attractive colors. Suitable either for posting or lobby display use.

RIGHT

Here is shown a novelty three sheet from an artist's drawing that can be used as is to good advantage but is especially adaptable for cut-outs and for working over into a panel for your frames.

BELOW

The six sheet for "Too Much Business" offers two very fine opportunities for cut-outs as both illustrations (actual scenes in the picture) can be used for this purpose. Use the lower one in decorating your lobby as suggested by the exploitation pages preceding.

LOWER CORNERS

The one sheets on the production are illustrated in the two lower corners. These posters show scenes from the picture also.

Producer Gives Lecture on Picture Subject

RAYMOND L. DITMARS, who produced "The Four Seasons" for the Kineto Company of America, lectured last week on the subject of the picture before the National Geographic Society at Washington.

Following the lecture he received a letter from Gilbert Grosvenor, president of the Society.

"The Lecture, 'The Four Seasons,' which you gave us was extraordinarily interesting and I wish to express the hearty thanks of the members of the National Geographic Society for the opportunity of hearing it and seeing your fascinating motion pictures. May I also extend my personal congratulations on your initiative and energy in preparing this valuable contribution to our knowledge of the animal and insect world."

"The Four Seasons" is playing in all the important centers of the country to enthusiastic audiences. It is being distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Brandt Plans Distribution in Ohio Territories

Extensive plans covering the physical distribution of "Cap'n Kidd," Eddie Polo's first independently-produced chapter-play in the Cleveland and Cincinnati territories are well under way, according to a telegraphic dispatch received this week from Joe Brandt, president of the Star Serial Corporation, which controls the Polo product for world distribution.

While the names of the two exchanges are not known at this writing it is definitely established that the distribution of "Cap'n Kidd" in both Ohio territories will be handled through two of the largest state rights territories in the Middle West.

Upper N. Y. Rights Sold on "Determination"

Clinton M. White, sales manager of the Lee-Bradford Corporation, recently stopped at Buffalo on his way West and closed a contract on "Determination" with Zimmerman of the Nu-Art Pictures Corporation for the Upper New York State rights.

This production has already been placed with F. F. Proctor's theatres in Albany, Troy, Schenectady and Amsterdam.

Big Feature Rights Corp. Acquires Kentucky and Tennessee Territory

THE Big Feature Rights Corporation of Kentucky, through their representative Lee L. Goldberg, this week acquired the rights to "Cap'n Kidd" for physical distribution through Kentucky and Tennessee. The news of this sale was made public the early part of the week by Joe Brandt, president of the Star Serial Corporation, which controls the world's rights to the Polo product.

The consummation of the contract between Goldberg and Brandt covering the distribution of "Cap'n Kidd" was to a great degree facilitated by the showing of the first two episodes of Polo's first independently-produced chapter-play. So impressed was Mr. Goldberg with Polo's work and so favorably did the story of "Cap'n Kidd" appeal to the Kentucky exchangeman that in less than twenty-four hours after the screening of "Cap'n Kidd" contracts between the Star Serial Corporation and the Big Feature Rights Corporatian were signed and closed.

Goldberg has started an intensive and far-reaching advertising and publicity campaign in behalf of "Cap'n Kidd" in his territory.

"Your Best Friend" Praised

New York Critics Are Unanimous in Endorsement of Vera Gordon Picture

"YOUR BEST FRIEND," a Harry Rapf production starring Vera Gordon, directed by Will Nigh and distributed by the Warner Brothers, has been acclaimed another great screen attraction by the New York newspaper critics, following its presentation at the Central theatre.

The New York Telegram said: "'Your Best Friend,' which opened in the Central theatre, Broadway, last night with Vera Gordon in the title role, proved on a par with 'Humoresque' in which the justly famous 'mother of the screen' also starred."

The New York American said: "'Your Best Friend' full of action on screen at Central."

The Tribune said: "After viewing Vera Gordon in 'Your Best Friend' we are more consumed with admiration than ever."

Variety said: "A sure-fire hit from the box-office standpoint that is bound to stand with the other winners that William Nigh has written and directed in the past."

Larry Reid in Motion Picture News said: "A mother picture which carries all the humanities—the tender heart throbs expressed through scenes of touching pathos and the contrasting shafts of humor so admirably balanced is 'Your Best Friend.' It is a great box-office bet. Certain to get over everywhere because of heart appeal of mother love."

Houdini Provided Finish in Event of Death

IT is not generally known that in producing his motion picture, "The Man from Beyond," Houdini was dubious as to his ability to successfully combat the perils which he was called upon to experience in the filming of the story.

As a protection for his picture, in the event of his death or mutilation, Houdini caused to be photographed in advance of his performing the several perilous stunts he does, an entirely different finish to his picture than was called for in the original script, or which is the one used in the finished production, now being shown at the Times Square Theatre, New York City. This emergency ending would have been used had Houdini forfeited his life.

Second National Issues "Exhibitors' Guide"

Second National Pictures Corporation has put out the third issue of its standardized press book under the title "Exhibitors' Guide," in releasing "The Night Riders," a special production visualizing the popular novel of the Canadian Northwest by Ridgewell Cullum.

A feature of the new issue is a column of paragraphs carrying on two ideas developed in recent advertising by Second National in trade papers—"Why" and "Shadows." This, it is announced, will be a standing feature in forthcoming issues of the "Exhibitors' Guide," for the exploitation of "Broken Shadows," from the novel, "Nance," by Charles Garvice; "Mr. Pim Passes By," picturization of the A. A. Milne drama, and other forthcoming releases.

Fourth Novelty Review Series Is Ready

Raymond Harris, manager of Burr's Novelty Review, announced this week that the fourth of this unique one-reel series is now ready for distribution. It consists of an animated cartoon called Pa Piktur, working in conjunction with a human character, in which Pa takes a trip to Mars via torpedo. The second subject shown is a lesson in toe dancing, demonstrated by Albertina Rasch, the internationally famous terpsichorean. The third element is a color subject called the Colorcraft, depicting Russian costumes in color and their application to American styles.

Superior Feature Service Enters Coast Field

Another film exchange has made its appearance on Los Angeles' "film row." It will be known as the Superior Feature Service. Ed. K. Lamson, one of the best known state rights salesmen on the west coast, is sole owner of Superior.

Lamson has purchased the far western territory for the Pacific Film Company's entire series of features consisting of "The Able Minded Lady," with Henry Walthall; "The Girl from Rocky Point," with Ora Carew; "The Forest King," with Reed Chapman and Lillian Hall and "The Fatal 30" in which John J. Hayes, president of Pacific, is featured with Fritzi Ridgeway.

Zambrino Will Exploit "Mother Eternal"

Frank Zambrino, pioneer organizer of the "Unity Features" and "Pioneer Feature" Exchanges in Chicago and Indianapolis has announced plans for an advertising and exploitation campaign on the feature "Mother Eternal" that will entail a large expenditure. The campaign is to pave the way for the run of Ivan Abramson's Graphic Film Corporation production in Zambrino's territory, which includes the states of Illinois and Indiana.

Zambrino has also booked the production for a two weeks' run at Adams theatre in the Chicago loop opening April 16th. This first run will act as the first shot in the compaign which was announced at the offices of Graphic this week.

One more Graphic film exchange has been added to the original twenty that are to handle Graphic products throughout the country on a partnership basis. The Graphic Film Exchange of Atlanta, Ga., to be operated by C. D. Danford of Atlanta, has been incorporated.

"Wandering Boy" Is Sold

Arthur Ziehm Purchases Rights for Continental Europe Distribution

"WHERE IS MY WANDERING BOY TO-NIGHT?" the B. F. Zeidman-Equity picture, has been sold for all of continental Europe, it is announced this week by Louis Baum, general manager of Equity. Arthur Ziehm will control the European rights to the picture.

Ziehm has for a long time been widely known as a discriminating foreign buyer and at present time is handling, in addition to "My Wandering Boy" some of the biggest productions of today. Their territory embraces practically all of the Continent, including France, Germany, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Spain, Switzerland, Austria, Belgium, Czecho-Slovakia, Hungaria and the Ukraine.

In this country, "Wandering Boy" is nearing the one hundred per cent sales mark. In addition the confidence of the independent exchanges is being justified by the reception accorded the production by the exhibitors themselves. Equity is in receipt of word from practically every buyer of the feature that unusually big and long runs have been booked.

In addition to the European sale, a deal for Australia and New Zealand has been consummated, announces Mr. Baum, and the rights for Mexico have also been disposed of. Baum expects that within the next three weeks the entire world rights will have been sold on the production.

Burnside Leaves with "Yankee Doodle, Jr."

M. J. Burnside, producer and distributor of "Yankee Doodle Jr." left New York this week on an important sales trip that included Cleveland, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis and Chicago.

Burnside took a print of "Yankee Doodle Jr." with him on the trip and made his first stop in Cleveland, Ohio. Several important announcements as to the closing of territory will be made by Burnside on his return from Chicago early next week.

"Ten Nights in Barroom" for Saxe Circuit

From the home office of the Arrow Film Corporation comes word to the effect that the Kay-Bee Distributing Company of Milwaukee has booked "Ten Nights in a Barroom" over the entire Saxe Circuit, for what they consider a larger rental than any picture has hitherto received.

"Ten Nights in a Barroom" has written history in the Independent field, and stands out conspicuously even in a season which is marked by the presence of more than the usual number of "big" pictures.

Ministers Endorse Bible Filming Project

Barrett McCormick of the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, has signed with Harry Charnas of the Standard Film Service of Cleveland for the entire series of the Great Stories of the Bible produced by Sacred Films Incorporated. The initial episode "Creation" opened Easter Sunday at the Allen theatre and was received with acclaim by the ministers and school teachers as well as McCormick's regular patrons.

The Philadelphia Ministerial Association, whose roster contains many names of advocates of rigid censorship, has gone on record highly endorsing the Bible filming project.

The ministers of Pomona, California, whose bitter fight against the theatre interests last year aroused the entire industry, have been won over to the Bible filming.

Warner Announces Three New Territorial Deals

That the latest Vera Gordon picture, "Your Best Friend," a Harry Rapf production, is being eagerly sought by state right buyers is evidenced by the announcement of Harry M. Warner, of Warner Brothers, that three more exclusive territorial deals were consummated last week. Within the past fortnight more than six other exchanges, purchased the picture, it is reported.

The latest buyers of the Warner feature are the Creole Enterprises, New Orleans, covering the states of Louisiana and Mississippi; Warner's Exchange, of Los Angeles, purchasing the rights of Arizona, California, and Hawaii; and Warner's Exchange, Detroit, covering the state of Michigan.

Conan Doyle to Receive Novel Two-Reeler

Executives of the Alexander Film Corporation will concoct a novel two-reeler to be personally presented to Sir Arthur Conan Doyle when the latter returns to Great Britain after he has concluded his American lecture tour.

The reel will depict all of the malefactors pictured in the fifteen screen adventures of Sherlock Holmes. Working collectively as authors, editors, cutters and titlers the Alexander executives hope to contrive a fairly coherent story that will combine all of the iniquitous men and women who furnish the evil impulse and criminal design of the screen playlets.

First Picture Completed in New Burr Studio

A wealth of real feature scenes, aided by a plot that is full of hilariously comic incidents is said to mark "Torchy Steps Out," the latest of Mastodon's two-reelers, just completed at C. C. Burr's new studio in Glendale.

Since this was the initial production to be made in Burr's new studio, the whole cast and staff were particularly anxious to make this latest "Torchy" a real noteworthy achievement.

Pirate Artist Is Engaged for Polo Serial

FRANK W. Small, recognized as one of the foremost pirate artists in the country has been engaged by the Star Serial Corporation, through the Ritchey Lithograph Company, to draw the series of one, three and six-sheet posters for "Cap'n Kidd," Eddie Polo's first independently-produced chapter-play.

The Ritchey Company who have been retained by the Star Serial Corporation to make the posters for the Polo production were instrumental in securing Small's services and the promise that he would do the work for the entire fifteen chapters.

Good Business Reported on "Determination"

Last week marked the premier showing of "Determination" over the B. F. Keith Circuit. It played for the entire week at B. F. Keith's 81st Street theatre and B. F. Keith's Flatbush theatre, Brooklyn.

The Thomas Film Company of Washington, D. C., advises that the second week of "Determination" in Baltimore at Whitehurst's New theatre played to five times greater business than it did the first week.

"Determination" opened at the Majestic theatre, Wilmington, Del., on April 17th to capacity business and will remain there for the entire week. On April 24th, it opens at the Court Theatre, Wheeling, W. Va., for the entire week.

Arrow Bans "Hokum"

Common Sense Applied in Pictures Is Best Asset, Says Dr. Shallenberger

"MOVIE HOKUM" is a term that has recently come into general use among reviewers of motion pictures. The reviewers reflect the opinions of the general public. People talk now of "movie stuff," "movie hokum," where once they stood for anything and everything on celluloid, accepting it as something altogether immune from adverse criticism. But times change.

How is movie hokum to be denied admission to the screen?

Simply by the exercise, not merely of common honesty, but a little common sense.

"Common sense," remarks Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow Film Corporation, the largest independent motion picture distributing corporation in the world, "is one of Arrow's greatest and most valuable assets. Without it we should have made no progress; we should not have obtained any results. With it the horizon of Arrow's future is boundless.

"Arrow never releases a picture before it has passed through the sieve of Common Sense. The wheat is sifted from the chaf. It doesn't matter a bit to Arrow's picture appraisers what a picture has cost. The big question is, 'Will it get over with the public?' Insofar as it is possible to standardize these things the Arrow aggregation of experts endeavor to arrive at a fairly close idea as to how any picture that is submitted to them will be received by the public. Will it make money for the exchanges buying the picture? Will it make money for the exhibitors showing it, Will it satisfy his patrons?"

Recently Arrow's judgment was confirmed by the great success of "Ten Nights in a Barroom." Other pictures coming, which in Arrow's opinion are likely to be just as successful, are, "The Innocent Cheat," "Chain Lightning" and "Back to Yellow Jacket," all Ben Wilson productions, as well as the various pictures of the Curwood series and many others of equal magnitude.

"Squirrel Comedies" Are Going Rapidly

There has been considerable enthusiasm shown over the novel Squirrel Comedies, which are being handled by the Lee-Bradford Corporation.

The first one is entitled "The Romance of Curly Squirrel." The second, which has just been completed, is entitled "A Whirl Through Squirrelville."

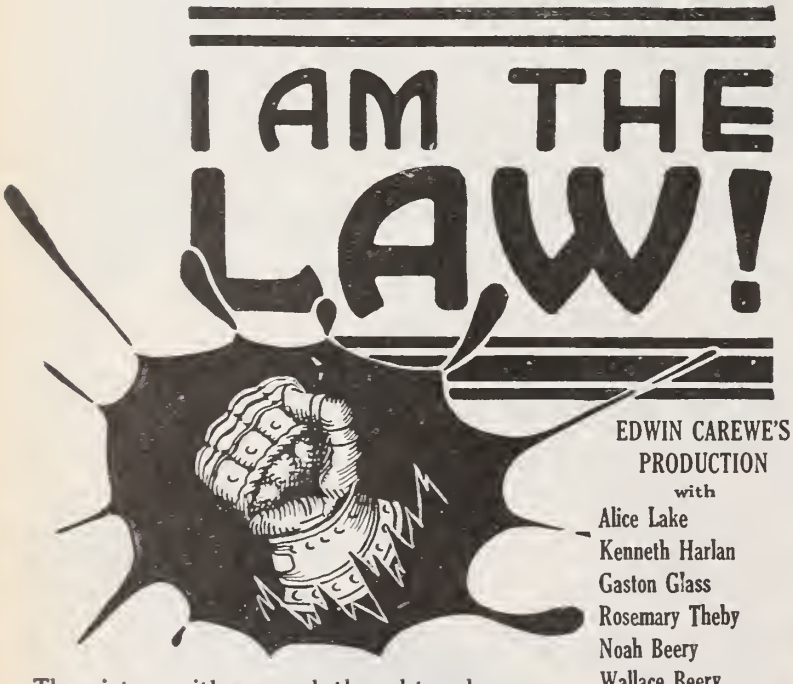
This series has been purchased by the American Feature Film Company of Boston, who are the distributors of all the Universal product for that territory. The Nu-Art Pictures Corporation, Buffalo, has purchased the entire series for New York State with the exception of the Greater New York territory.

West Likes "Big Boy" Williams Series

The offices of Di Lorenzo, Inc., are in receipt of advices this week from Di Lorenzo, who is now on a sales tour of the country in behalf of the "Big Boy" (Guinn) Williams series, that exchangemen of the Middle West are highly enthusiastic about "Big Boy's" work in his latest picture, "Blaze Away."

Negotiations are being entered into whereby Di Lorenzo is selling the whole series of six productions instead of individual sales on each production.

Frederich Herbst, producer of the series, is sparing no means to make this series of six productions as acceptable as possible, not only from the basis of actual picture entertainment value, but also from the standpoint of price to exchangemen.



The picture with as much thought and effort behind it as any legitimate play ever had.

Territory All Booked on "Burn 'Em Up Barnes"

C. C. Burr, president of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., announced this week that "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," starring Johnny Hines, has cleaned up solid as far as territory rights are concerned.

The only three territories that remained unsold were disposed of. New England was purchased by Sam Moscow Film Co., at 54 Broadway, Boston. The Favorite Film Co., of Detroit, secured the rights for Detroit, while Washington territory was taken over by Lew Bache, Associated First National Pictures representative in that territory.

It was less than six months ago that the picture was first shown to buyers, and there is now not a single foot of territory left, according to Burr.

Pacific Film Co. Will Resume in June

The Pacific Film Co., Inc., will resume production about June first, after a "lay off" of several months. The last picture Pacific produced was "The Able Minded Lady," starring Henry Walthall, supported by Elinor Fair, which is now being state righted through exchanges handling Pacific products.

Second Armstrong Comedy in Production

The second comedy of a series of eighteen which the Reaguer Productions, Inc., is making for release through the Pacific Film Co., Inc., now in production. "Billy" Armstrong is being starred, with Hap H. Ward leading the supporting cast.

"Slow and Easy," Reaguer's first Armstrong comedy, has been previewed in Los Angeles. A sales print is on its way to Julius Singer, Eastern Representative of Pacific.

Director of Advertising Weds Art Critic

Cloudesley Johns, director of advertising and publicity for Second National Pictures Corporation, was married Saturday to Mrs. Adele M. Alexander, art critic. The couple will make their home in Coytesville, N. J.

Johns was born in California, and for years was the friend and associate of Jack London, C. E. Van Loan and George Sterling.

H. Weaver and R. Eddy Arrive in East

Harvey C. Weaver, general manager, and Robert Eddy, director of the Paul Gerson Pictures Corporation are in town from the Coast and are stopping at the Hotel Astor. They are arranging for the distribution of the Plum Center Series, two-reel character comedies featuring Dan Mason, which will be announced later. Robert Eddy directed the first Toonerville Trolley Comedies.

Many Sales Reported on "David and Jonathan"

Reporting to the head offices of Second National Pictures Corporation in New York, Herman Rifkin of Boston, in charge of distribution of Second National releases for the New England Territory, modestly states that "David and Jonathan," the first release, sold itself to B. F. Keith's Boston Theatre, Boston; B. F. Keith's Victory Theatre, Providence; Poli's Plaza Theatre, Worcester; Poli's Palace Theatre, Springfield."

In his advertising Mr. Rifkin is earnestly urging exhibitors in his district to consider the releases already offered, "David and Jonathan," by E. Temple Thurston, featuring Madge Titheradge; "Her Story," by Dion Titheradge, with Madge Titheradge; "The Night Riders," by Ridgewell Cullum, featuring Maudie Dunham, Albert Ray and Andrew Beaulieu.

"I Am the Law" Sold for California

C. C. Burr, president of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., announces that another territory has been sold on the Edwin Carewe independent special, "I Am the Law." Louis Hyman of the All Star Features Company of San Francisco, has purchased the Californian rights on the feature. Burr received the following wire from Mr. Hyman:

"Just closed 'I Am the Law' with your representative, Lester Scott. Congratulate you on this picture. Assure you it wil go into best houses. If state right man could get one picture a month like 'I Am the Law,' it would give him product with which to compete with biggest releasing organization in industry."

Hallroom Boys Comedies Featured in Erie

Percy and Ferdie Hallroom Boys Comedies have been selected for featuring in the Strand Theatre, Erie, Pa., for two consecutive weeks, according to word from the Masterpiece Film Attractions of Philadelphia, which is handling these two-reel gloom-chasers in that territory.

Shopping Favorite Pastime

Fineman Declares Real Pictures Will Bring Producers Their Full Worth

MOTION picture shopping is now the favorite pastime of exhibitors throughout the country, according to B. F. Fineman, president of Edwin Carewe Productions, Inc., who has just returned to New York from Los Angeles with a print of his Edwin Carewe independent special "I Am the Law."

"The period of readjustment in the picture industry through which we have just passed," said he, "has been a mighty good thing for the producer who honestly believes in making real pictures, for his product now stands a much better chance to get what it is really worth than even during the inflated period of the war.

"While business was rushing the theatre patron had no occasion to use discrimination in the selection of his entertainment. This relieved the exhibitors from the necessity of exercising discrimination in providing their entertainment. The result was that as the inferior picture was quite as well patronized as the picture of superior merit, the producer took the attitude that extraordinary effort in production was unnecessary.

"Readjustment has changed all this. Reduced wages have forced the patron to curtail his allowance for entertainment. Instead of going to the theatre six nights a week, he is doing well to now average three nights a week. The result is that he is more careful to see that none of his allowance is wasted on inferior amusement.

"In planning the production of "I Am the Law" I continually kept this in mind. A vast number of stories were considered before we made the final selection. In assembling the cast Carewe determined to secure the best players available, and I am satisfied that we got the best in such people as Alice Lake, Kenneth Harlan, Gaston Glass, Rosemary Theby, Noah Beery and Wallace Beery. The result as shown in the finished product of "I Am the Law" has justified our extraordinary efforts."

Burr Says Prosperity Is Here

Increased Independent Production Brings Film Return to Normalcy

C. C. BURR, president of the Affiliated Distributors, Inc., believes that not only has the low water mark of depression been reached in the motion picture industry, but that the tide of prosperity has risen to almost its normal level.

"As the production of steel is a true barometer of conditions in the industrial world, so motion picture production is a true index of conditions in that field. And surely no one will deny that the production of pictures has vastly increased during the past few months. This increase is particularly notable in the independent field, with which I am more familiar.

"Everyone now realizes that there is an actual shortage of good I realized that this was bound to happen as far back as last summer.

"Banking my belief on what I felt was inevitable, I prepared to go after a share of excess of demand over normal supply. I made "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" starring Johnny Hines when it looked as if there wasn't a chance to squeeze in another independent production. That was less than six months ago, yet every single territory has been sold on the pictures, and I am only sorry that there was not twice as much territory to sell.

"I planned the Edwin Carewe special "I Am the Law," which has just been completed, and already the entire foreign rights and the rights to six territories in the United States have been disposed of.

Brandt Leaves on Trip With Film Show

Joe Brandt, president of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, has left on an extended tour of the key cities taking with him an entire sales program film show and preceded by a special advance man.

It is Brandt's policy to make a special trip throughout the country every few months for the purpose of feeling the States Right pulse.

The program consists of the material on which C. B. C. is concentrating its sales force at present —including the Eddie Polo serial "Cap'n Kidd," the Geo. H. Davis-Joe Brandt feature "Life's Greatest Question," the Hallroom Boys Comedies, the Sunrise Comedies, two reelers featuring Billy West, and the Carnival Comedies, another series of two-reel gloom chasers.

Attractive Exploitation for Sunshine Comedies

Attractive and effective paper of style and coloring that will dress any lobby or theatre-front will be a feature of the release of each of the new Sunrise Comedies.

The C. B. C. Film Sales Corp. which is distributing this series of gloom-chasers produced by Harry Cohn and featuring Billy West announces that special attention is being given to the preparation of this exploitation material, believing that nothing so sells a comedy to the public before they have seen it as a piece of paper showing a situation that makes 'em laugh.

Dillon's First Picture Is Nearing Completion

Edward Dillon, who is putting the finishing touches to his first production, "A Lady by Luck," that will inaugurate Dillon's régime as an independent producer, denied this week that the First National had contracted for his pictures. Dillon admits that a number of releasing organizations have opened negotiations but that he has not completed any contractural arrangement with any concern.

Dillon has only a few more scenes to shoot and then he will lose no time cutting and titling the first production for the local market.

Gigantic Mediaeval Set for Vignola Subject

An entire French village of the sixteenth century, complete in every detail so that the most exacting student of history can find no fault with it, was built this week at the huge Famous Players studio in Long Island for Cosmopolitan's "When Knighthood Was in Flower," which Robert G. Vignola is now making. This is probably the largest set ever put up in the interior of a studio. It fills completely the entire floor space of the big plant which ordinarily accommodates with ease a score of sets of average size. Designed by Joseph Urban, this set is declared to be a marvelous example of mediæval architecture with its fantastic carvings and decorations. Because of the strenuous use to which it is subject it has been built of heavy materials that give it a solid, permanent look and make it appear like the real thing itself.

Books 48 First National Releases in Block

Patrons of the New Rialto theatre at Whitestone, Long Island, are to have a diet of First National attractions for the next six or seven weeks.

The owner, Robert Lowenberg, who is not a franchise holder, discovered that pictures released by Associated First National were making an especial appeal to his audiences, and as a result he booked forty-eight of them in one block. He has scheduled the majority of them for the next six weeks.

Lowenberg changes his program every day and on many days runs two feature pictures.

Four Edw. MacManus Films to Feature May Allison and Robt. Ellis

ARTHUR S. KANE signed a contract late last week with Edward A. MacManus for the production for Associated Exhibitors of four features in which May Allison and Robert Ellis will be featured. The productions will be made in Porto Rico, the first to be delivered about August 1st, in time for Associated Exhibitors' autumn schedule.

The features will be from the script of Charles A. Logue, who is well known as an author, scenario writer and director. A unique point in the production plans is an arrangement for the author and the featured leading man, Mr. Ellis, to act as co-directors.

Three hours after Mr. Kane and Mr. MacManus had closed their deal the Atlantic Fruit liner Tanamo sailed for Porto Rico from New York, with Mr. MacManus, Mr. Logue, Miss Allison, Mr. Ellis, a complete cast and a full complement of cameramen and technicians aboard.

Associated with Mr. MacManus in the present enterprise are a number of wealthy Porto Ricans. He has a fully-equipped studio located on thirty-three acres of property at San Juan, and access to more than 2,000 acres of picturesque tropical land owned by his associates.

Mr. MacManus was one of the pioneers in the production and promotion of the serial picture. While with McClure's he promoted "What Happened to Mary" with Edison, and he is well known for his "Perils of Pauline" and "Exploits of Elaine," among the first of the multiple reel serials, and many other productions. In announcing the signing of the contract Mr. Kane expressed enthusiasm over the addition of May Allison and Robert Ellis to Associated Exhibitors' list of featured players.

Metro to Star Billy Dove

First Production to Be Started Soon at Metro's Coast Studios

MISS Billy Dove is to be a Metro star.

Miss Dove will leave for Hollywood within a few days, there to begin her first Metro picture; probably a comedy-drama. Details of the title and exact nature of the initial photoplay have not as yet been made public. The new Metro star has been seen recently in prominent roles in Cosmopolitan Productions, distributed by Paramount. Her picture career has been, by reason of her youth, brief, yet by reason of her exceptional beauty and ability, brilliant.

According to Mr. Atkinson, decision to enter into a contract with Miss Dove to star in Metro pictures was motivated by Marcus Loew.

The Metro vice-president and general manager said, in regard to Miss Dove's engagement:

"Mr. Loew came to a first decision regarding Miss Dove at the opening of his new State theatre in Boston, where she appeared personally. He was familiar with her work for Cosmopolitan, of course, and impressed by it, but I believe it was the personal triumph of Miss Dove at the opening of his new Boston picture house that made the choice final. The ovation the young actress received there was to Mr. Loew proof of her magnetism. It was confirmation of his own belief in her potentialities.

"Following Miss Dove's appearance at the State, in Boston, there were many requests from other exhibitors in New England for similar personal appearances. This likewise Mr. Loew took into consideration."

Mr. Atkinson stated further that every effort will be put forward to obtain for her the most suitable dramatic material, a director capable of bringing out the best in her, supporting casts of the first class, and production effects in keeping with the high quality of the other elements of her photoplays.

Bull Montana Cast Is Being Selected

The second Bull Montana comedy special, under the working title, "Lowry From the Bowery," is now being cast, with production scheduled to begin next week. A third story entitled "Fifth Avenue," is in preparation. A fourth story—to be an adaptation from a widely read novel by an eminent author—has been purchased by Stromberg and will be given elaborate production.

Feature casts, similar to the Claire McDowell, Charles Mailes, Myrtle Lind, "Snitz" Edwards, Chuck Reisner, Frank Kingsley and Stanhope Wheatcroft lineup as prescnted in "A Ladies' Man," are to be characteristic of the Bull Montana comedies.

Strong Cast Is Seen in "A Pasteboard Crown"

Not the least of the reasons why the Travers Vale production, "A Pasteboard Crown," released by Playgoers Pictures, April 16th, got off to a good start, is the large number of names of box-office value connected with the picture, declares a statement from the Associated Exhibitors' home office.

The cast assembled by Travers Vale includes Evelyn Greely, who has won previous success in "The Road to France," "The Allies," and "Diane of Star Hollow"; Robert Elliott, known to picture-goers by his performance in "Resurrection," "Checkers," and "Unknown Love"; J. H. Gilmore, who has appeared in "The Kentuckians." "Democracy," and "The Magic Cup"; Dora Mills Adams, who played in "Piccadilly Jim," "You Find It Everywhere," and "Determination." Gladys Valerie, Jane Jennings, Albert Roccardi, and Eleanor Woodruff also appear in important roles.

Jack Holt Unit on Location at Balboa Beach

Balboa Beach, Cal., is being utilized for some of the important scenes in Jack Holt's new Paramount picture, "The Man Unconquerable," which will represent pearl fishing activities and waterfront scenes, supposedly in the South Pacific. Joseph Henabery is directing this production which is an adaptation by Julien Josephson of an original story by Hamilton Smith. Sylvia Breamer is leading woman, Clarence Burton and Jean de Briac are a pair of villains and Edwin Stevens and other prominent players are seen in character roles.

"Hot Off the Press"—Hal Roach—Pathe

Type of production.....1 reel comedy

"Snub" Pollard plays the part of the janitor in the newspaper plant. He washes the windows, oils the presses and gets into trouble with the managing editor In a little encounter in the shop "Snub" wrinkles the foreman's white coat. To repair the damage he offers to iron the jacket and runs it through the presses. It comes out smooth and flat, but has the latest news printed on the back. A reward is issued for the return of some missing jewels, and this provides most of the action and the comedy business. Some funny situations lead "Snub" on to the trail of the jewels, which he not only saves, but at the same time also secures a "scoop" for the newspaper Several very clever gags are included in this amusing single reel comedy. "Snub" Pollard is funny and will get a good many laughs.

"Years to Come"—Hal Roach—Pathe

Type of production .....1 reel comedy

"Years to Come" is one of the funniest comedies starring "Snub" Pollard that has been made this season. All the gags used and all of the situations presented are related to the main idea and support the theme. In "Years to Come" the women wear trousers and the men have been reduced to the weaker sex. "Snub" is very dainty in his frills and lace. He takes care of the house and cooks the supper while Marie Mosquini enters as the tired business woman. She comes home without candy or flowers and because a little soap happened to fall into the coffee she raises the devil and leaves for her club. While poor neglected "Snub" is weeping a stage door Jenny enters and tempts the sorrowful husband with a bottle of "booze" and they were just about to have a great time when the wife returns and high comedy follows. The idea is cleverly worked out and a good many of the laughs are obtained from burlesque situations and the satire that is created. "Years to Come" is certain to entertain and provoke a good deal of laughter

"Pathe Review No. 150"

In addition to the second of the clever "camera caricatures" series, this issue also contains an exceedingly interesting feature, "The First Flash of Life," which shows graphically the beginning of life within a fish egg, photographed with a microscopic camera. There are also other entertaining sections which make this one of the very best of the Pathe Reviews.—C. S. S.

Pathe Review No. 149

Type of production.....1 reel magazine

This number marks the third anniversary of Pathe Review. With this number the scope of the Review is widened, the selection more varied and special attention given to subject matter of an instructive and entertaining nature. A special unique comedy section is accomplished by photographic distortions of the human face. This is a process that transforms and caricatures without the aid of pen and ink. The camera lense twists the faces and makes them appear as though they were of India rubber. The effects are very amusing and laughable. Under the caption of "The Four Footed Derrick" scenes in India illustrating how a large elephant moves huge logs and piles them with almost human intelligence. At the command of his driver the beast will lift up the desired log and carry this half-ton weight for quite a distance. Sometimes to save energy he will push the log along the soft ground with his foot. These scenes in India are instructive and entertaining at the same time. The slow motion section illustrates some details of the feeding of trout at the New Jersey State Fish Hatchery. The fish come up and eat out of the keeper's hand. Slow motion brings out the details of these shots. You see the fish leave the water and snatch at the meat held in the keepers' hand. Another series of flashes show how a fish develops from the egg. All stages of his growth are clearly illustrated in this scientific chapter. The usual Pathe colored travel shots are included in this number, which is certainly one of the very best that has yet been issued. Its interest is varied and the subjects are unusual in character and entertainment value.

The special features added to Pathe Review in celebration of its Third Anniversary have attracted the most favorable commendation.

The new and better Pathe Review gives tone to your whole program. It contains the choicest of the choice in short, snappy, interesting subjects of travel, science, nature, etc.

Pathe's Releases for Week of April 30

"TOLD at Twilight," a Pathe Playlet featuring Baby Marie Osborne, heads Pathe's list of short-subjects scheduled for release the week of April 30th. "The Tunnel Menace," the fourth episode of Charles Hutchison's serial "Go-Get-'Em Hutch," is also another important issue on the April 30th schedule.

"Pipe the Whiskers" is the title of the current re-issued one-reel comedy starring Harold Lloyd. "The Boy and His Dog" is the latest animated "Aesop's Film Fables" cartoon. "Kill the Nerve," is the title of the Hal Roach comedy featuring "Snub" Pollard. Pollard plays the role of a dentist, and the subject is said to furnish some uproarious fun.

Pathe Review No. 153 includes "The Huskies of Alaska," showing the dog-teams of the frozen North in action; "Brain Tests," a series of interesting experiments by Dr. Samuel B. Heckman of the Educational Clinic of the College of the City of New York; "Crystal Close-Ups," and the "Seven Ages of Romance."

Educational Films Are Given Approval

Seventy-six short subjects released by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., are included in the list of selected pictures for the year 1921 issued recently by the National Committee for Better Films of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures.

The Educational Pictures listed include twenty Christie Comedies, sixteen Mermaid Comedies nine Torchy Comedies, nine Chester Comedies, three Selig-Rork Photoplays, four Campbell Comedies and several other miscellaneous subjects.

"How to Grow Thin," Educational's recently released one-reel special, and "A Rag Doll Romance," a Campbell Comedy, are named in the most recent list of the committee.

Big Authors Represented

Stories by Well-Known Writers Are Found in New Goldwyn Group

SEVEN authors of national, and most of them of international, fame are represented in the group of eight pictures forming Goldwyn's fourth group of releases of fifth year product. The authors are Rupert Hughes, Gouverneur Morris, Basil King, Zane Grey, Nalbro Bartley, Perley Poore Sheehan and Archibald Clavering Gunter. Goldwyn's policy of filming stories by famous authors, whether original scenarios, novels or plays, has been continued because of the great success achieved by such productions in the past.

The authors' participation in the filming of their stories for the screen has involved the closest co-operation between writers and the producing forces. Rupert Hughes' part embraces the actual directing of his own stories, while Gouverneur Morris and Basil King spend much of their time on the "set" while their stories are being filmed. The stories whose screen adaptations will find places in Goldwyn's new group of photoplays are listed as follows:

"Yellow Men and Gold," a Gouverneur Morris subject directed by Irvin V. Willat; "The Wall Flower," a Rupert Hughes story which the author directed for the screen with Colleen Moore and Richard Dix in the leading roles; "The Dust Flower," Basil King's latest novel; "When Romance Rides," founded on Zane Grey's "Wildfire" and produced by Benjamin B. Hampton; "Golden Dreams," another Zane Grey story filmed by Benjamin B. Hampton; "Always the Woman," the Perley Poore Sheehan contribution in which Betty Compson is starred; "Head Over Heels," Edgar Woolf's musical comedy based on Nalbro Bartley's story of "Shadows"; "Mr. Barnes of New York," Archibald Clavering Gunter's "best seller" of the late 'eighties in which Tom Moore is starred. In "Head Over Heels" Mabel Normand plays the leading role. This photo-farce was directed by Victor Schertzinger and Paul Bern.

New Series for Educational

12 Two-Reelers Based on Sherlock Holmes Stories; First Due in May

EDUCATIONAL Film Exchanges, Inc., will begin some time in May to release a series of twelve short reel features from the popular Sherlock Holmes stories by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. This is the first time these stories, the foremost of all detective stories ever written, have been put on the screen.

This series of pictures, each in two reels, will be known as The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes. Each will be a complete story and a complete short feature in itself. They were produced in England, and are enacted in the very locations in and about which Conan Doyle wrote. Eille Norwood, famous English actor, portrays the role of Sherlock Holmes. Herbert Willis takes the part of his bosom friend, Dr. Watson.

The release of The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes begins at a particularly opportune time, since the author of these famous stories is now in the United States on a lecture tour, which will attract added interest to his works. Exhibitors showing these new short features will also derive great help through the stories now being printed in sixty-three big newspapers all over the country. The McClure Newspaper Syndicate is supplying these sixty-three papers with a series of thirty-seven of the Sherlock Holmes tales, which are run one a week.

The first picture of the series to be released by Educational will be "The Devil's Foot." Two other pictures are now being prepared for early release—"The Dying Detective" and "A Case of Identity." Others in the series of twelve pictures will be "A Scandal in Bohemia," "The Noble Bachelor," "The Yellow Face," "The Red-headed League," "The Copper Beeches," "The Empty House," "The Tiger of San Pedro."

Calls "Grandma's Boy" Lloyd's "Greatest"

"'GRANDMA'S BOY,' is in my opinion the greatest comedy Harold Lloyd has ever produced, and it is safe to say that when it is released this picture will be hailed by public and critics alike as one of the greatest comedies ever made."

This is the verdict of Verne C. Wickham, of the Long Beach, Cal., Press. It was expressed after an evening at Hoyt's theatre, Long Beach, where "Grandma's Boy," Lloyd's five-reel comedy, literally stopped the show at a pre-view. In the April 1st issue of the Long Beach Press, Mr. Wickham wrote:

"Harold Lloyd's latest comedy, 'Grandma's Boy,' was pre-viewed last night at Hoyt's theatre before a crowded house. This was its first showing before an audience. Lloyd was 'trying it on the dog' last night and it was approved.

"For fully ten minutes at the conclusion of the showing the house was in an uproar, and the first vaudeville act had to make several attempts before it could start its performance."

Exploitation Expert Is Engaged by R-C

Nat. R. Rothstein, advertising and publicity director for R-C Pictures announces this week the appointment of Albert Boasberg to the exploitation staff of R-C. Mr. Boasberg comes to R-C after extensive experience in exploitation, advertising and publicity. For the past year he has served as field exploitation man for Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation, working in New York, Washington, Detroit and Albany.

Mr. Boasberg will form the nucleus of the R-C exploitation department which it is intended to enlarge. This is in accordance with the plans of that company announced recently by the new management, to make exploitation an integral part of its distributing organization.

Lon Chaney Picture for Release in May

In accordance with Carl Laemmle's promise to exhibitors to release a Jewel for spring and summer business, the release date of May 15th has been definitely agreed upon for launching Lon Chaney's individual starring picture for Jewel.

It has been Laemmle's contention that a box-office attraction of this kind was of more assistance to exhibitors during the summer than if released in the regular fall program.

The new Chaney picture, which has been called variously "Wolfbreed" and "The Mask," has been definitely titled "The Heart of a Wolf." The story was directed by Robert Thornby.

Kirkland Co-Director with Henry Lehrman

David Kirkland calls attention to the fact that his name does not appear upon the screen as co-author and director of the Selznick production, "Reported Missing." Inasmuch as the Selznick office verify Mr. Kirkland's statement THE NEWS desires to give him the credit which is due him as a co-partner with Henry Lehrman in the production of this feature.

First Nat'l Subjects for "Mothers' Day"

IN anticipation of Mother's Day to be celebrated Sunday, May 14th, Associated First National Pictures, Inc., has prepared a list of eight of its productions in which the mother theme is predominant.

The eight First National attractions on the list are "Mother O' Mine," "The Song of Life," "Hail the Woman," "Kindred of the Dust," "The Rosary," "The Woman in His House," "Scrap Iron," and "Tol'able David." In each of these a mother plays an important part. All of them have met with exceptional success and have been classified among the best productions in the history of the screen. They will serve to boost attendance on Mothers' Day and especially where they are properly exploited.

Second Paramount "Block"

Another "Revival Week" Program of Seven Productions Announced

THE series of seven productions recently released in block by Paramount, constituting a "Revival Week" program, are reported to have proved so popular with exhibitors and public that it has been decided by Sidney R. Kent, general manager of distribution, to issue a similar block of seven more of the biggest Paramount and Artcraft successes.

The second block will consist of the following features: Cecil B. DeMille's productions, "Why Change Your Wife?" "The Woman God Forgot" and "We Can't Have Everything"; Mae Murray in "The Gilded Lily," the Paramount Artcraft special production, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me"; the William A. Brady production, "Little Women," and Elsie Ferguson in "Barbary Sheep." These pictures are now available for bookings under the same conditions as the previous block, and play dates may be arranged as soon as the new prints are distributed to the exchanges, the Paramount home office announces.

"The success of our experiment in releasing in block 'The Miracle Man,' 'Male and Female' and the other big pictures as played for a week with daily change at the Rialto theatre, New York, has induced us to continue the policy," declared Mr. Kent. "Scores of leading theatres have already played them and exhibitors without exception are reporting unusually heavy business. Our contention that any picture is new until it has been seen is being vindicated daily at the box office.

In connection with the second block of pictures just announced, Mr. Kent expressed the following opinion:

"These are seven of the greatest money-getting pictures for exhibitors that our organization ever put out, and it is my opinion that they rank today with the very best that is reaching the market."

"Silent Call" in Tenth Week in Los Angeles

Last Sunday "The Silent Call," the photodrama with a canine star, began its tenth week at Miller's theatre in Los Angeles, and is expected to complete a twelve weeks' run before it is taken off.

"The Silent Call," which is a First National attraction presented by H. O. Davis, was adapted by Jane Murfin from the Saturday Evening Post story, "The Cross Pull," by Hal G. Evarts and directed by Laurence Trimble. "Strongheart," a Belgian police dog, is the "star" of the production, and it is his "acting" which is responsible for the phenomenal success of the picture in Los Angeles and elsewhere.

Scene from "Tracks," a Noble Johnson production released by Playgoers Pictures

Playgoers' Picture Set for May 7 Release

Playgoers Pictures has set May 7th as the release date for the new Noble Johnson production, "Tracks," John C. Ragland announced this week. This is a picture in six reels from the story by Mark Noble.

Despite its locale—broad Texas ranges—the story is declared to be much more than a Western, essentially. The cast includes Willis Patton, Noble Johnson, Beatrice Burnham, Francois Dumas and J. Farrold McDonald.

Hilliard Signed for Vitagraph Cast

With the engagement of Ernest Hilliard as the "heavy," the cast of "Linda" Webster Campbell's latest production for Vitigraph, starring Corinne Griffith, is now complete, and work on the interior scenes will begin at once at the Brooklyn Studios, it is announced.

The exteriors for the production were made at Charleston, South Carolina, and were made while Hilliard was completing work in Hugo Ballin's latest production for Hodkinson, starring Mabel Ballin, as they did not call for the appearance of the "heavy" which Hilliard is to portray.

Others in the cast are Vincent Coleman, Herbert E. Holmes, Diana Allen, and Mona Lisa.

Two-Reel Westerns Are Added to Pathe List

ELMER PEARSON, general manager of Pathe Exchange, announces that, in its program for increased and a wide variety of short subjects, Pathe will add a new series of specially prepared two-reel Western features to its weekly releases—the "Santa Fe Mac" stories featuring Leo. D. Maloney. They are declared by Pathe to be clean dramas, shaped with effective craftsmanship and pervaded by the quickened inspiration of all outdoors.

Both Mr. Maloney and Ford I. Beebe, who is associated with him in the productions, and who will direct, have promised that the two reelers will be in the nature of outdoor classics, combining swift action with tension and originality of plot.

Clara Kimball Young Series for Metro

METRO announces this week the completion of arrangements to release, except in New York and northern New Jersey, a series of special proudctions starring Clara Kimball Young.

These big pictures are made by the Samuel Zierler Photoplay Corporation in California, and in New York and northern New Jersey the distributors will be the Commonwealth Film Corporation, which is under the same management as the producing unit.

The first of Miss Young's pictures to be released by Metro will be "The Hands of Nara," by Richard Washburn Child, one of the foremost American novelists and now United States Ambassador to Italy. The story appeared originally as a serial in Collier's Weekly, for sixteen weeks, and it is published in book form by E. P. Dutton and Company.

Dawley Will Direct for Achievement Films

J. Searle Dawley has been engaged as Director General for Achievement Films, Inc., according to announcement by Gilbert E. Gable, president of the company. Dawley is acting president of the M. P. D. A., and has directed such stars as Mary Pickford, H. B. Warner, Billie Burke, Marguerite Clark, Elsie Ferguson and Doris Kenyon.

Dawley will supervise a series of six features for Achievement, the first of which will be "Face Value," an original story by Bob Dexter.

William Dudley Pelley will head the scenario department for Achievement.

National Picture League Endorses Films

"No Parking," a Christie Comedy featuring Neal Burns with Helen Darling and the baby and dog team, Jane Hart and "Laddie," and "Fresh From the Farm," a Christie Comedy featuring Bobby Vernon with Josephine Hill, both current Educational releases, are approved as "Family Films" by the National Motion Picture League in its latest bulletins.

"Nights of Many Shadows," the latest of the Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce released by Educational, is aproved as an "Instruction Film."

Melford to Start New Subject April 17

April 17 is set as the starting date for George Melford's big new production for Paramount Pictures, "Burning Sands," by Arthur Weigall, adapted by Olga Printzlau. Milton Sills and Wanda Hawley are to be the principal players in this picture, which promises to eclipse even "The Sheik" in thrills, suspense and spectacle. Mr. Melford is now at Palm Springs looking up locations.

B'way Run for "The Trap"

Lon Chaney's New Universal Film Will Open April 22 at Central

"THE TRAP," a forceful Universal-Jewel photo-drama of the Northwoods, starring Lon Chaney, will have its premiere showing in the Central theatre, Broadway and 47th Street, New York, on Sunday, April 23rd. The original story was called "Wolf-breed" and was written especially for Chaney by the Universal City scenario department. During production, the picture was called "The Mask."

Andrew J. Cobe, manager of the Central theatre, has arranged an unusual presentation for "The Trap," said to be well in keeping with the theme of the picture. The Chaney picture will be shown in the Central for several weeks, no definite time having been determined for its run.

Chaney's role in this picture is described as a Jekyl-Hyde role minus the revolting changes of the famous Stevenson's dual personality character. It shows the actual character changes of a normal human being under stress of circumstances. It is real, rather than fanciful. This is said to make it one of the most gripping, and realistic character portrayals ever enacted for the screen. A strong cast, exceptional settings, and the re-appearance in Universal pictures of Stanley Goethals, the cute youngster of "Outside the Law," are other points which help to make "The Trap" a super-production, Universal asserts.

The supporting cast includes Alan Hale, Dagmar Godowsky, Irene Rich, Spottiswoode Aitken, Herbert Standing and Frank Campeau. Robert Thornby, who directed "The Fox," one of Harry Carey's greatest successes, also directed "The Trap." He took his company to the Yosemite National Park for locations. Most of the action was filmed amid the scenic grandeur of that place.

"Four Horsemen" Sets Record in La Crosse

A run of seventeen days, the longest of any picture that ever played La Crosse, Wisconsin, is the record of Rex Ingram's production for Metro of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," according to a telegram received from A. J. Cooper, manager of the Cooper Amusement Company, by the Minneapolis office of Metro. The original booking of seven days had to be extended ten days more to accommodate the unprecedented crowds which insisted on viewing the picture. Capacity business was in order at all times, with a scale of $1.50 top, during the original run, it is stated.

"The Vermillion Pencil" Highly Rated

"The Vermillion Pencil," the current Sessue Hayakawa release, now being distributed by R-C Pictures is rated as a "superior" picture in the latest issue of Screen Opinions, a weekly reviewing service. The feature is placed in Class A-B, the second highest rate possible to be given and the highest awarded any of the nine features reviewed in that issue. It is called the best picture which Hayakawa has ever made.

"My Old Kentucky Home" for N. Y. Showing

Pyramid's first picture, "My Old Kentucky Home," will be seen at the Cameo theatre, New York City, the week of April 23rd. The story is from an original by Anthony Paul Kelly and will be the first of a series of Ray C. Smallwood Productions, which will be shown under the Pyramid banner.

The story is a southern romance, depicting the beauty of a girl's devotion, and the fidelity of a boy's first love. Monte Blue and Sigrid Holmquist are given ample opportunity to lift the story above the usual theme by some splendid acting.

Testify to Popularity of Pathe Review

In a statement issued this week from the Pathe headquarters, a series of exhibitor letters is submitted as evidence of the popularity of the Pathe Review as an entertaining educational short-subject. Excerpts, typical of the testimonials received, are quoted as follows:

"Have used the Pathe Review since opening my theatre over three years ago and consider it the best in a single reel of its kind."—Wm. Tishkoff, Empress, Rochester.

"I consider Pathe Review a feature in itself, educating, instructive and entertaining. Short subjects such as the Review are the life and blood of the business. Why say more?"—Tom O'Brien, Orpheum theatre, Buffalo.

"We have always considered the Pathe Review a splendid 1,000 feet of film. With 'Camera-Caricatures' added to its many other interesting subjects, the Review will be of even greater value to our screen than heretofore."—H. C. Morse, Elmwood theatre, Penn Yan.

Canada Cooperating on Goldwyn Campaign

Exhibitors in Canada as well as the United States are giving the Goldwyn company the fullest cooperation in the Goldwyn-Photoplay New Faces Opportunity now in progress. The latest request is from the Allen theatres in Canada, fifty in all, for slides and any other publicity material that exhibitors may use in connection with the campaign.

A prize of $500 is to be awarded the exhibitor who secures the winner.

Strong Supporting Cast for Doris May

In "Gay and Devilish," the forthcoming R-C release, Doris May will be supported by what is probably the strongest cast which ever appeared in any of her pictures. The leading male role is played by Cullen Landis. Jacqueline Logan, Otis Harlan, and Bull Montana complete the more important members of the cast. "Gay and Devilish" was directed by William A. Seiter, and the story was especially written for the star by Charles Logue.

Paramount's Releases for April 23rd

DOROTHY DALTON in "The Crimson Challenge," a Paramount picture, and Wanda Hawley in the Realart picture, "The Truthful Liar," are the features scheduled for release April 23 by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

In "The Crimson Challenge" Dorothy Dalton has a typical two-gun role, one certain to delight the fans who remember with pleasure her work in "The Flame of the Yukon." Jack Mower is Miss Dalton's leading man. Frank Campeau, Clarence Burton and George Field are in the Cast.

Wanda Hawley's role in "The Truthful Liar" is that of a "butterfly wife." The story was written specially for Miss Hawley by Will Payne. Thomas N. Heffron directed. Miss Hawley's leadman is Edward Hearn.

Charles Miller Picture Nearing Completion

Word has been received from the Charles Miller studios at Port Henry, New York, that the first independent Charles Miller production, with the working title "Bring Him In," has been finished as far as the actual placing in of the titles, Miller directed the picture, which is a northwesterner, but not of the snow variety.

Earl Fox is the featured player, and the supporting cast includes Frank Losse, Harry Lee, Charles Mackey and Doris Miller, daughter of Miller. Miss Miller is the only woman in the picture. Plans of distribution will be announced later.

Del Andrews Signed for Hunt Stromberg Staff

Among the important appointments to the Hunt Stromberg production staff is that of Del Andrews, who has resigned from the Thomas H. Ince studios to become production manager and chief film editor. Among the important Ince productions edited by Del Andrews are "Lying Lips," "The Bronze Bell," "Bellboy 13," and The Hottentot." Lyman Broening and Steve Evans have been appointed to the Stromberg camera staff.

12 First Nat'l Films Begun

Nine Subjects Being Edited; Mack Sennett is Completing "Suzanna"

WORK on almost a dozen big First National pictures is scheduled to start on the Pacific Coast within the next few days. Several features are now in the course of production and nine are being cut and edited at the various studios.

Allen Holubar this week finished "shooting" "Hurricane's Gall," starring Dorothy Phillips, and "Preferred Pictures" completed camera work on "The Woman Conquers," starring Katherine MacDonald. Marshal Neilan has completed the editing of "Fools First," and has left for New York with the negative of "Her Man."

First National pictures now about to leave the cutting rooms are: "Heroes and Husbands," starring Katherine MacDonald; Maurice Tourneur's "Lorna Doone"; Norma Talmadge's "The Eternal Flame"; J. L. Frothingham's "The Man Who Smiled"; John M. Stahl's "One Clear Call"; Anita Stewart's "Rose o' the Sea"; Charles Ray's "Alias Julius Caesar"; Buster Keaton's "The Frozen North," and Thomas H. Ince's "A Man of Action."

Another week of "shooting" will witness the completion of Mack Sennett's National feature, "Suzanna," starring Mabel Normand. The latest Bevan-June comedy, now being made on the Sennett lot, will soon be finished.

Constance Talmadge is scheduled to commence work soon on "East Is West," which will take her company to the Orient, and her sister, Norma, will soon start the picturization of Edgar Selwyn's famous stage play, "The Mirage."

Thomas H. Ince has started work on "The Sunshine Trail," starring Douglas MacLean. Charlie Chaplin is preparing his script for his eighth First National two-reel comedy, and Allen Holubar is selecting his second story, which is to star Dorothy Phillips.

Lois Wilson in Cecil DeMille Cast

Lois Wilson's name is the latest to be added to the growing list of notables who will appear in Cecil B. DeMille's forthcoming production of "Manslaughter." Thomas Meighan and Leatrice Joy have been cast in the leading roles.

Fox Production Units Busy on the Coast

THE William Fox headquarters in New York reports production activities to be in full swing at its studios on the West Coast.

Charles Jones has just started on a new picture under the temporary title of "West," with Robert Eason directing. Edward Sedgwick is back on the lot and has started work on a new picture with Tom Mix called, for the moment, "The Gun Fanner." Lupino Lane, having finished "The Reporter," is working on another comedy, and Shirley Mason has completed "Very Truly Yours," from the story by Helen L. Hawkins and under the direction of Harry Beaumont.

Tully Prepares to Film "Omar the Tentmaker"

Richard Walton Tully is preparing for the filming of his next subject for First National, "Omar the Tentmaker," in which Guy Bates Post will play the leading role. The picture will be adapted from Tully's dramatic success of the same title in which Guy Bates Post also took the leading role. The picture will be made at the United Studios.

Mr. Tully who has arrived in Los Angeles from New York was delighted with the favorable reception extended by First National officials in New York to his first production, "The Masquerader." Mr. Tully declared that the film version with Guy Bates Post in the leading role will prove even more popular than the stage play which also presented Mr. Post in the leading role.

Abe Stern in New York on Way to Europe

Abe Stern, Secretary and Treasurer of Century Comedies, has arrived in New York from Chicago, where he held a conference with mid-Western exchange men. Stern will stay in New York about two weeks and has booked passage on the Aquitania for Europe, where he will arrange for European booking of the Century stars.

Elinor Glyn to Write Hollywood Defense

ARRANGEMENTS have been completed between Sol Lesser and Elinor Glyn whereby the former will produce for the screen an original story to be written by the well-known authoress. The picture will bear the title of "The Eyes of Truth" and will be a comedy-drama having as its secondary theme a defense of Hollywood. Madame Glyn left Los Angeles last week for New York where she will write the screen story for Mr. Lesser. Later she will sail for England to meet long-standing professional engagements.

Mr. Lesser in a recent statement on the Coast declared that while the defense of Hollywood against villifying propoganda would be "secondary to the dramatic interest" it would be none the less effective. "I welcome the opportunity afforded me through the brilliant writings of Madame Glyn to set the truth before the world," declared Mr. Lesser. "When it sees our side of the case—the whole truth and nothing but the truth—its judgment must be in our favor.

"I expect to commence active production with a high-grade director and cast, as soon as I receive this story from Madame Glyn."

Charles Ray Player Was Once Noted Athlete

Eddie Gribbon, who plays the part of Russell, head of the labor representatives in "The Tailor Made Man," Charles Ray's first and forthcoming picture for United Artists release, started out in life by being far more interested in athletics than in things pertaining to the stage or the screen.

For seven years Gribbon was engaged in professional baseball and played on teams representing Trenton, New Bedford and other minor organizations.

Gribbon also did his best to get his features displaced by acting as boxing partner to such husky ring maulers as Mike Gibbons, Eddie McGoorty, Gunboat Smith and other shining lights of the pugilistic world.

Kempner Announces Four Re-Issues Ready

J. L. Kempner, president of Kempson Pictures, Inc., announces that the first four re-issues of the company are now ready, and prints have been shipped to the various Hodkinson Exchanges, through which distribution will take place.

The four pictures are "The Way of The Woman," starring Norma Talmadge; "Marionettes," with Clara Kimball Young; "Red Head," with Alice Brady, and "The Argyle Case," starring Robert Warwick and Elaine Hammerstein. In addition to new prints for each production, there has also been supplied a brand new line of paper, cuts and lobby displays.

"New Era of Serials Here"

Educators and Y. M. C. A. Head Laud Pathe Serial "Go-Get-'Em Hutch"

THAT a new era of censor-proof and yet truly realistic serial productions was inaugurated by Charles Hutchison's chapter-picture, "Hurricane Hutch," is the contention of the Pathe home-office in a statement issued this week from that source. Moreover, Hutchison's newest serial, "Go-Get-'Em Hutch" is reported to be sustaining the reputation for new high-class serial standards established by its predecessor. In support of its assertion, the Pathe headquarters submits some of the appreciative comments made by men associated with welfare and educational institutions, after viewing "Go-Get-'Em Hutch." A few of these comments are quoted as follows:

"I certainly want to thank you for being given the opportunity to witness your latest serial, "Go-Get-'Em Hutch," featuring Charles Hutchison. I believe this is just the style of entertainment our boys and girls should see, and your company is to be congratulated on producing such a clean and yet interesting serial. It is a clean, exciting, well-acted story."—Edwin H. Reeder, Supervisor of Visual Instruction in the Public Schools of Detroit.

"As a member of the committee I viewed the chapter picture, 'Go-Get-'Em Hutch.' I find this picture intensely interesting and full of thrills, but clean in every respect. I would have no hesitancy whatever in recommending it to any organization that may care to use it."—C. E. Reid, Detroit Y. M. C. A.

"'Go-Get-'Em Hutch' certainly can be classed as a clean film and one that is full of thrills. . . . I am personally interested in the presentation of clean films for the sake of the country's boyhood, and I wish you every success in your efforts to co-operate with character-building agencies in putting out pictures which are fit for the young to see."—A Jamieson, Member of Executive Council of the Boy Scouts of America.

Travelaugh Due April 23rd

"Such Is Life in London's West End" First of R-C Short-Subjects

IN accordance with the expansion plans inaugurated by R-C Pictures, under the management of P. A. Powers, who recently became managing director of that organization, the first R-C short subject released, the Hy Mayer Travelaugh, "Such Is Life in London's West End," will be offered on April 23rd. Heretofore R-C has distributed exclusively feature subjects from its own Coast studios and a few outside productions.

In branching out into the short subject field R-C is inaugurating a program which is expected to expand until it embraces the best short reel pictures which can be obtained. "It is not our intention," states J. I. Schnitzer, general manager of R-C Pictures, "to spasmodically issue short subjects. We are going to afford the exhibitor a steady supply, but we will not pick up any cast-off comedies or scenics to do it. We are planning far ahead and the two series which we are able to announce at present certainly proves that we are making the right kind to start.

"Fifteen subjects comprise the first series of Travelaughs. These are all interesting pictures, some of which have already run at the Capitol theatre in New York and won the approval of the New York press as among the highest class short subjects ever released.

"Our second release is Starland Revue, another novel single reel subject. Bringing all the Broadway stars, the heroes and heroines of the American drama to the screens of every city and town in the country is the job of Starland Revue, and Jack Cohn, its producer, is doing it in a most fascinating manner."

A moment from "The Infidel," Katherine MacDonald's new production for First National release

"Trimmed in Scarlet" for Priscilla Dean

Universal has brought a big new vehicle for Priscilla Dean. "Trimmed in Scarlet," a thrilling stage play of several years ago, has been acquired by John C. Brownell, Universal scenario chief, and will be put into continuity form so that Miss Dean can use it for a screen drama as soon as she has completed her present picture, "Under Two Flags."

"Trimmed in Scarlet" is from the pen of William Hurlbut. It was first produced in England in 1919, where it played in the Cort and in the Globe theatres for long runs. It was produced in America in 1920 in the Maxine theatre, with Miss Elliot playing the principal role.

Rupert Hughes Has Nine Films to His Credit

JUST how extensively the well-known author has allied himself with the motion-picture screen is shown in a striking résumé of Rupert Hughes's work in connection with Goldwyn pictures for the past two years. The statement from the Goldwyn office reads in part:

"Rupert Hughes, novelist, dramatist and scenarist, has written nine photoplays for Goldwyn within the past two years, four of which have been among the biggest money-makers and finest artistic successes of that period; two others have nearly equalled them in popularity; two more are awaiting release, and Mr. Hughes is himself directing the photography on the newest one, which is at present called "The Bitterness of Sweets."

"The nine photoplays written and produced within the past two years, in the order of their production, are 'Scratch My Back,' 'Hold Your Horses,' 'Dangerous Curve Ahead,' 'The Old Nest,' 'From the Ground Up,' 'The Wall Flower,' 'Come On Over,' 'Remembrance' (the title of which may be changed) and 'The Bitterness of Sweets.'"

A. E. Releases in Force in Detroit April 9

The week of April 9th might truthfully have been called "Associated Exhibitors Week" in Detroit. John H. Kunsky booked one of this organization's features for his magnificent Capitol Theatre and selected two others to comprise a double bill at the Liberty.

Florence Vidor in "Woman, Wake Up," was the outstanding attraction at the Capitol, which is the newest and finest picture house in the city and one of the best in the country. The double feature program at the Liberty was formed of Harold Lloyd's "A Sailor-Made Man," and the dramatic production, "Handle With Care," featuring Grace Darmond.

Tourneur Unit Leaves for Europe April 29

Maurice Tourneur, director, J. J. Cohan, production-manager, and the leading members of the cast to appear in Goldwyn's picturization of Hall Caine's celebrated novel, "The Christian," will leave for England, April 29th, according to the latest advices received from the Goldwyn studios. Charles Van Enger has been engaged as Mr. Tourneur's cinematographer.

Coincident with the departure of Director Tourneur and his company for Europe, Goldwyn will launch a vigorous exploitation campaign that will be continued from that time until the picture is released, it is announced.

Wm. Desmond to Star in Universal Serial

THE Universal headquarters announces the engagement of William Desmond to star in a new "historical-educational serial" for Universal release. The new chapter play, the action of which will be laid in Alaska, has been tentatively called "The Great Conspiracy." The production will consist of fifteen chapters, developed under the authorship of George Moran and under the supervision of William Lord Wright, chapter-play editor at Universal City. Perry Vekroff has been engaged to direct Mr. Desmond in the new serial.

Chapter-by-chapter the play will show President Andrew Johnson and his cabinet negotiating the purchase from Russia, the actual purchase for $7,200,000, the first settlements, the gold strike and the spectacular development of the virgin territory in recent years. A romantic theme has been interwoven into the colorful history.

New Vehicle Gives Tom Moore Different Role

In "Mr. Barnes of New York," Tom Moore's last Goldwyn picture, the Irish comedian has a role that is different from any in which he has hitherto appeared and yet one that gives his genial, happy humor full play. Tom Moore fans will find much to delight them in the humor, the drama and the swift action of "Mr. Barnes of New York," which is based on Archibald Clavering Gunter's famous novel.

Supporting Tom Moore is the usual evenly balanced Goldwyn cast, including Naomi Childers, Sydney Ainsworth, Anna Lehr, Lewis Willoughby, Otto Hoffman and Ramon Samaniego. Victor Schertzinger directed.

Cabanne Film in Washington May 7 to 10

Exhibitors who attend the national convention in Washington in May will have the opportunity to see "Beyond the Rainbow," the William Christy Cabanne production, released by R-C Pictures, at Loew's theatre in the Capital. The picture has been booked at that house for May 7th to 10th inclusive, and special plans are being made to prove to the exhibitors that this sixteen-star production is as powerful a box office attraction as early reports have indicated.

Gloria Swanson Going Abroad on Vacation

Gloria Swanson, Paramount star, sails on Saturday, April 15, for Europe on the Homeric. Miss Swanson has just completed "Her Gilded Cage," under the direction of Sam Wood, and her present trip will afford her a long-deferred vacation. She will be accompanied by Mrs. Frank Urson, wife of the Paramount director, and they will spend several weeks in Paris and London.

Fox Offers New Special

"Monte Cristo" Made by Emmett J. Flynn on Next Season's List

ALMOST every week William Fox announces a new special for the 1922-1923 season. Only a short time ago he let exhibitors know that he would put out a gigantic spectacle, "Nero," recently completed by Director J. Gordon Edwards in Italy. He followed this with the announcement that he had almost ready "The Town that Forgot God," directed by Harry Millarde—who made "Over the Hill."

Now comes the announcement that Alexandre Dumas' "Monte Cristo," made by Emmett J. Flynn, will be one of the big features for next season's release. Mr. Flynn is the man who directed that famous screen comedy-classic "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court."

An all-star cast, headed by John Gilbert, was assembled to handle the many difficult roles in "Monte Cristo." Others in the cast are Estelle Taylor, Gaston Glass, Robert McKim, Virginia Faire, Maud George, Spottiswoode Aitkon, Renee Adore, George Seigmann, William V. Mong, Harry Lonsdale, Albert Prisco and Ralph Cloninger.

"To the generations that have read the story, and to all who know its general outline, it will be interesting to learn that the screen version, simplifies and concentrates the dramatic narrative; assembles and sharpens the salient characters; assorted and links the most graphic episodes; retains in abundance the situations in the novel as originally written; and crystallizes in singularly inspiring manner the swift, resistless action of the romance," declares the statement from the Fox home office announcing the new special.

"Orphans of Storm" Wins

Los Angeles Critics Praise Griffith Film at Showing in Mission

"IN 'Orphans of the Storm,' D. W. Griffith has made a magnificent picture, has made his visioning of France beautiful, and has told a story that touches the heart strings and makes them vibrate to the more thrilling harmonies of conflict and struggle and life," said Edwin Schallert, in the Los Angeles Daily News when he reviewed Mr. Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm," when this United Artists release was shown at the Mission theatre. "This romance of the French Revolution peals forth a revelation of his comprehension and genius. The feature furnishes unqualified proof of his ability to handle mobs and to typify the human element in the mob."

"The greatest picture Griffith has ever made," is the comment made by Florence Lawrence in the Los Angeles Examiner. "The gigantic mob scenes, the great moments of the tribunal and of the guillotine are of an emotional intensity seldom if ever attained in any dramatic medium. Mr. Griffith has not limited himself in this production to the massive features which he understands so well, but has intruded into the domains of his brother directors, and offers in this picture scenes of a delicacy and pictorial charm rarely equalled."

"'Orphans of the Storm' transcends the colloquial term, entertainment," said Guy Price, in the Los Angeles Evening Herald. "It is a historical document of rare entertainment value. Gorgeous are the settings; and the detail has been treated with infinite care."

Edward J. Montague, prominent author and screen story adapter, now head of the Selznick scenario staff, who has emigrated to the West Coast with the Selznick company that recently was transferred.

Two Leading Men for Betty Compson Cast

"The Bonded Woman," Betty Compson's Paramount picture now in production under the direction of Philip Rosen, claims distinction by reason of the fact that it has two leading men, John Bowers and Richard Dix being the two contenders for the favor of the heroine. The picture is an adaptation by Albert Shelby LeVino of John Fleming Wilson's story, "The Salvaging of John Sumner." Much of the action takes place on the sea, and there are two shipwreck scenes.

Neilan Completes New First Nat'l Release

Marshall Neilan's latest production for First National, suggested by the Saturday Evening Post story "Her Man," by George Pattulo, was completed last week. In the leading roles are Matt Moore and Leatrice Joy. Supporting Mr. Moore and Miss Joy are Raymond Griffith, Helen Lynch, George Barnum, Fritzi Brunette, F. D. Phillips, Dick Wayne, Josephine Crowell, Tom Wilson and George Dromgold.

Ollendorff to Sketch News for Kinograms

JULIAN OLLENDORFF, whose unique work is so well known throughout the industry, has joined the Kinograms staff to sketch current news for Educational's news reel.

Each issue of Kinograms in the future will close with Sketchograms by Julian Ollendorff, in which this talented sketch artist will put news items of the "human interest" kind into sketches drawn under the camera.

This is a new departure in the field of news reels, and is in line with the policy of Educational and the Kinograms Publishing Company to give the very best in straight news pictures and in features in this rapidly advancing news reel. Mr. Ollendorff's work for Kinograms is along the line of the work done in his popular series of Sketchografs released by Educational.

Booking Film Version of Kipling Ballad

Pathe's one-reel special feature picture version of Kipling's "Ballad of Fisher's Boarding House" makes its point with emphasis on Broadway, where it had a highly successful week at the Strand theatre and was immediately booked for Proctor's Fifth Avenue house. The Kipling special, it is announced, has been booked by the Keith and Loew theatres in New York and vicinity and is assured a prosperous career throughout the country.

Two New Stories for Marie Provost

Having finished "Her Night of Nights," under the direction of Hobart Henley, Marie Prevost passes under the direction of Stuart Paton. The vehicle selected for the Prevost-Paton combination is entitled "Never Mind Tomorrow." It is an original composition by Bernard Hyman of the Universal scenario staff.

The second picture selected is entitled "The Bob Cat." The story is an original one written especially for Miss Prevost.

Record Showings Mark Educational Week

FIRST reports from several of the branches of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., show that Educational Pictures Week, April 16 to 23, opened with a record number of showings for Educational Pictures.

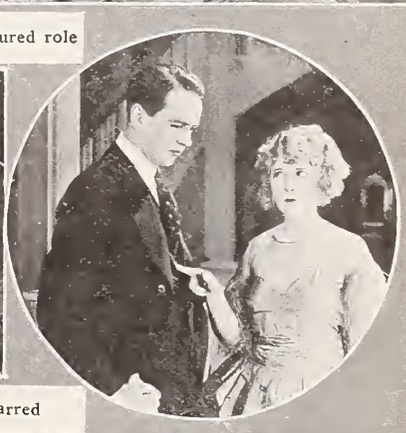
Without counting the many spot bookings expected during the week, several of the branch exchanges showed practically 100 per cent bookings at the beginning of the week, according to word from the Educational home-office.

Indications were that with a very few exceptions every important first run theatre in the country was running one or more of Educational's short subjects.

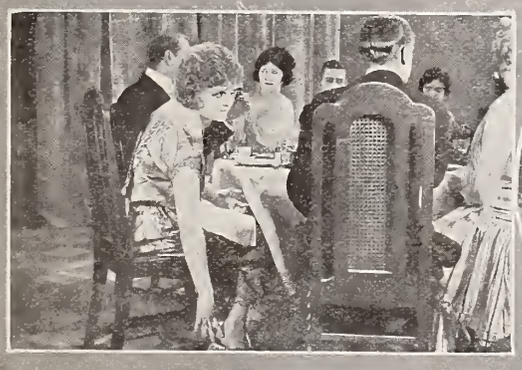
Action Stills from Releases of the Week

"The First Woman," an R-C release with Mildred Harris in the featured role

"Find the Woman," a Paramount picture with Alma Rubens in the featured role



"Without Fear," a William Fox production in which Pearl White is starred



"A Wonderful Wife," a new Universal release with Miss Du Pont as the star

Reviews of Latest Short Subject Releases

"Rome"

(Kineto Review—Urban—One Reel)

WHEN will the rest of the world ever tire of seeing on the screen or reading about the ancient city, capital of Italy, "The City Eternal"? If such views as the Kineto Review offers are always available, "Rome" stands a chance to continue as a leading factor in educational film offerings.

With the camera taking views of the great city from St. Peter's and from the Castle of St. Angelo, photographing downward, showing plainly what one would look long and high to command sight of, new and heretofore unseen marvels are in plain sight. In addition to the famed churches, are streets showing the shopping and business districts, the Roman wine-cart, used for no other purpose than to transport wine, in broad daylight and the ruins of the Roman Forum listed among the vivid illustrations. Instructive and unusually well photographed.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Japan, the Garden of the East"

(Kineto Review—Urban—One Reel)

VIEWS of scenically beautiful Japan seem always new and worth while. A single reel incorporating views of some of the most interesting places and beauteous spots, therefore, would add materially to any program; especially well edited to run ahead of a feature-length picture with Oriental locale. It takes in an important coaling station on the Island of Yezo, skips to Lake Motosu, one of a number of beautiful lakes at the foot of a snow-capped mountain, 12,000 feet in height. Our American showmen would be interested in seeing "The Ginza" street of the "movies," where banners exploiting film offerings are displayed in lavish style. New exploitation angles. This reel is composed entirely of views in Japan, closing with Lake Chuzenji, of famed beauty, made more enticing by moonlight on the waters.—LILLIAN GALE.

"My Country"

(Bruce Wilderness Tales—Educational—One Reel)

AFTER all, America IS some country. And "lest we forget" it will benefit all concerned to offer the public at large a look at a most picturesque and entertaining reminder that there is scenery right in our own country, equal to holding its own any time. The subject is a Bruce Scenic (although one of the series of "Wilderness Tales") showing the grandeur of the great Pacific Northwest, made up of the finest photographic views even Bruce has ever offered. While major value is in beauty and pictorial marvels, it tends to stir every drop of dormant patriotic blood in one's veins. It would add to and fit in any program.

Long shot of the tops of gently waving poplar trees, supplies one of the most novel and interesting scenes, but the fifteen mile fog under the camera lens, is described ably in the sub-title that precedes: "It churns and rolls, dashing an imaginary surf against the rocks." This reel is deserving of enthusiastic praise, has no story interwoven, needs none and could stand even without the well written sub-titles. —LILLIAN GALE.

"Such Is Life in Volendam"

(Hy Mayer Travelaugh—R-C Pictures)

HERE is a quaint and charming study of Hollanders as they are found in Volendam. Being a race of people who are sticklers for custom—who because of their stolidness and phlegmatic temperaments, never let modern conventions break up their traditional manner of living, one sees them in their low flatlands content to find expression in their own modest way. Volendam is Dutch to the core. The windmills and canals see to that—as well as the native dress. The camera catches some queer looking types, the men bringing a chuckle with their characteristic customs.

The wooden shoes, the wide, flapping trousers, the short coat and the hands of the native always sunk deep in the trouser pockets, the sailor-like strut, the curious quizzical expressions—these are brought forth with marked local color and atmosphere. The women and girls lend a picturesqueness to the study with their Dutch caps, their tight bodices and full skirts. They assume a keener interest in things than the opposite sex. Some are even willing to flirt and register romance. These simple, quaint people are never in a hurry. They are content to ply their trades without any ostentation. Length one reel.—LAURENCE REID.

"Such Is Life in London's West End"

(Hy Mayer Travelaugh—R-C Pictures)

THAT picturesque section of London known as the West End has been caught by Hy Mayer's brush and camera. The artist dissolves his drawings and you are given close-ups of quaint characters—the flower woman, the bobbies. There is humor in the brush because the original portrays a lovely bit of femininity and the dissolve offers some picturesque type who would never win a beauty prize. The shots disclose the Nelson monument, Trafalgar Square, the jolly old Strand, Piccadilly y' know, the Thames embankment, Covent Garden, the museum and a number of other interesting landmarks. The atmosphere is caught in every scene. You are a visitor drinking in all the historic highlights. The traffic is heavy on the Strand. No street cars, but plenty of buses, and pedestrians passing along in the characteristic British way—not hurriedly but taking their time. One reel.—LAURENCE REID.

"No Brains"

(Century Comedy-Universal)

THIS Century releases generous amount of humor on a familiar theme. Harry Sweet is the featured player who is equipped with a goodly amount of nerve, but is sadly lacking the gray matter known as brains—from which the offering gets its title. The comedian seeks a position in the big city and the conflict arrives when he arouses the enmity of a burly giant after the same job. Of course, the star outwits the brute, but doesn't escape his wrath. Sweet falls in love with the owner's daughter and wins her after an encounter or three with his enemy. Father-in-law puts the final touches to Harry's success by adding a "son" to the sign in front of the factory. A neat little filler with enough humor distributed to satisfy. Length two reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"Any Old Port"

(Christie Comedy-Educational—Two Reels)

THE Christie people have a lot of fun satirizing a honeymoon aboard an ocean liner in their newest release, "Any Old Port." It will be mighty difficult for the spectator to discover where the producers leave the studio and take to the high seas. Which is another way of saying that no expense has been spared to make the offering realistic with the correct backgrounds and atmosphere. Neal Burns and Josephine Hill are the honeymooners and the former is eager for a sea voyage in order that his bride will be unable to walk home to mother. The stage is all set for the wedding and the bridal couple, desirous of outwitting the guests, agree to separate and meet on the boat It is when they are aboard the steamer that the comedy enters upon its high jinks.

It must be made plain that the ceremony has been postponed, but the youth's boss entreats him to take the trip anyway. The action here enters upon a domestic quadrangle, for the young man's former fiancee has a knack of losing her footing and being caught in a tight embrace with him. To complicate matters the girl's husband is purser of the boat. The incident discloses some amusing gags as the would-be benedict endeavors to find accommodations. His sweetheart has repulsed him. And out of revenge he smokes her out and gives an alarm of fire. A storm comes up to add a good gag or three. In the end the skipper marries the romantic couple and all's well. "Any Old Port" releases some entertaining sequences and should provoke a generous amount of laughter. —LAURENCE REID.

"Danger"

(Hammons-White—Educational—Two Reels)

ONE of the many varieties of "slap stick" comedy. Only this one has to do with happenings in a fashionable hotel, where a young man ambitious to create a demand for "Volstead Perfume," starts the series of comic incidents by filling an atomizer with strong drink, and spraying possible customers, to arouse their appetites.

At the same time, a Princess in distress, guest in the hotel, is endeavoring to flee from Bolsheviki guardians, who plot to eliminate her, an obstacle between themselves and power.

As rapidly as one predicament is overcome all concerned find themselves facing other laughable troubles. There is plenty of action and a certain element of comedy, although it would not appeal to high class audiences, in the least.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Wicked Cat"

(Pathe—One Reel)

One of a series of animated cartoons illustrating in pen and ink "Aesop's Film Fables," from the pen of Cartoonist Paul Terry, all about a cat and the cat's friends and enemies, one that will especially entertain youthful picture fans, who like story books in action. The moral of the fable is "The want of a good excuse never kept a villain from crime," a black cat the villain in the cartoon play.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Wall Flower"

Goldwyn—5500 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles B. Larkin)

RUPERT HUGHES has scored again. This time it's a romantic drama of youth, setting forth in novel and entertaining manner the metamorphosis of a decidedly "plain" country girl who goes through the fire of society lite and comes out "whole." Colleen Moore as Idalene Nobbin, an "ugly duckling," does quite the best bit of acting of her screen career. Miss Moore lives the part. It's a living, breathing thing that stands out in the maelstrom of characters that come each day, but which like the Arabs as silently slip away.

Idalene is a product of the countryside who is being constantly nagged by her mother and who believes herself cut out for a wall flower for the rest of her life Being awkward and homely she sees little glory in her future. There are no sweetheart, husband, babies, home, anywhere in her horoscope. Then one day something comes into her life. It's an invitation to a dance given by Prue Nickerson. There is much excitement in the little household, a scrumptuous dress to make, a warning to keep her toes pointed out and even a few moments of solo terpsichore in the privacy of her room. On the night of the dance the entrance of Idalene "fully equipped" is accompanied by a wave of snickering on the part of the "hoi polloi." None of the boys want to dance with her. She is naturally tickled to death when Roy Duncan, football hero, is forced to ask her to dance by Phin Larrabee who resents Roy's attentions to Prue, his own sweetheart. To get even with Roy, Larrabee tells him Prue's name is Idalene Nobbin, so Roy invites Idalene and her mother to the Junior Prom. Discovering the "mistake" he tries to force his friends to dance with "the boiled potato." Idalene, sitting out one dance, overhears one of the boys commenting on her "accomplishments." Her heart is broken. She rushes into the night and throws herself in front of an auto. She is picked up by Pamela Shiel, a society girl and her guest, Walt Breen. Both legs are broken. Pamela and Breen decide to flood the girl's life with sunshine as an experiment. She is nursed back to health and put through a course of "400" lessons. The wall flower becomes a real beauty. At the next dance she is the cynosure of all eyes. Idalene falls in love with Breen and all's well that ends well.

"The Wall Flower" was written and directed bv Mr. Hughes. It's a picture marvelously true to life, beautifully photographed and set in attractive backgrounds. The cast is an excellent one. Richard Dix has the leading male role, which does not call for much acting. The scenes at the dances in the home and at the college are realistically and finely staged. The auto accident is a thriller. Gertrude Astor is an attractive Pamela and Laura La Plante adds the youthful touch in her characterization of Prue. Rush Hughes and Tom Gallery as the college boys who put pep into the action. The feminine part of the audience will like this picture, the flappers especially should go wild over it. "The Wall Flower" affords a solid hour of refreshing entertainment.

The Cast

Idalene Nobbin	Colleen Moore
Walt Breen	Richard Dix
Pamela Shiel	Gertrude Astor
Prue Nickerson	Laura Laplante
Roy Duncan	Tom Gallery
Phin Larrabee	Rush Hughes
Allen Lansing	Dana Todd
Mrs. Nobbin	Fanny Stockbridge
Mrs. Nickerson	Emily Rait

By Rupert Hughes. Directed by Rupert Hughes. Photographed by John J. Mescall. Continuity by Rupert Hughes.

The Story.—Idalene Nobbin, repressed by her family, is dressed so queerly that she seems to herself an ugly duckling. At dances she is left "at the wire." She tries to kill herself because the boys laugh at her, but succeeding only in getting both legs broken. The wealthy girl and her guest picking her up after the auto has passed over her, take her home and when she has recovered, teach her the ways of modern society. The wall flower blossoms into a lovely girl. She finds a sweetheart and they life happily ever after.

Production Highlights—Scenes of college life at the Junior Prom. The dance at Prue's home. The beautiful gowns. The atmosphere of youth. The famous author, who also directed and wrote the continuity. The auto accident. The "making over" of Idalene. The exquisite photography. A fine cast.

Classification—A romantic drama of youth depicting the evolution of a "Sis Hopkins" into a regular girl.

Exploitation Angles—Put row of chairs down one side of the lobby, with a wax figure of girl in one of them, labelled "The Wall Flower." Beauty shop tie ups. Girl in "Sis Hopkins" costume on street with appropriate advertising. The theme of the story.

Drawing Power—This one should be a box office knockout in any theatre, the patrons of which appreciate a good, clean, entertaining picture well acted.

"No Trespassing"

Hol-Tre-Hodkinson—Seven Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE romantic element is the outstanding feature of this picture, adapted from "The Rise of Roscoe Paine," one of Joseph C. Lincoln's Cape Cod stories and which serves as Irene Castle's newest expression. Insofar as plot complications are concerned the screen version has very few. It is a simple tale telling of the regeneration of the hero, who is inspired to make a man of himself through a girl's influence. The action takes place within the aristocratic circles of a New York family—these shots reflecting the society and business life of the house of Colton, and naturally are interiors.

It is when the scene shifts to their summer home on the Massachusetts coast that the exteriors are called upon for atmosphere and local color. And Edwin L. Hollywood has succeeded in catching the correct perspective. He deserves praise for the genuine background of his interior sets, which look like the real thing and which are rich in detail.

The plot centers upon a defiant youth who wastes his time fishing and hunting, and who intrigues the charming daughter of Colton because of his indifferent manner. He holds title to a strip of land skirting the shore and it is the financier's object to gain possession of it to please a whim of his haughty wife. The youth refuses to sell until one of his friends needs some ready money. There is the conflict. The picture could be speeded up in the early reels by dispensing with irrelevent scenes, many of which depict various couples in conversation. However, the continuity furnished by Howard Irving Young is compact enough and builds with its romantic quality ever dominant.

The interludes present Irene Castle in various costumes, which, of course, will delight the feminine patrons who look upon her as the creator of fashions. There is a fine flavor to the exteriors, which show her riding or driving about the country. It is suggestive of romance. The punch scene discloses a rival financier desirous of outwitting Colton and stooping to desperate deeds to accomplish his end. The father is overcome by gasoline fumes in a launch and his injury compels him to forget business. Consequently the young people manage his affairs and succeed in eliminating his opponents. As a reward the youth is given a position in his office. The picture stresses too many insignificant details. Really the story could be told with a few bold strokes through suggestion, and five reels are quite enough. The scene of the villagers storming the house of the hero with the intention of driving him from town doesn't ring true. However, "No Trespassing" carries an appeal which makes it a likely tale certain to be appreciated most everywhere. The star could stand many more close-ups than are offered here.

The Cast

Mabel Colton	Irene Castle
James Colton	Howard Truesdale
Mrs. James Colton	Emily Fitzroy
Roscoe Paine	Ward Crane
Mrs. Paine	Eleanor Barry
Dorinda	Blanche Frederici
Lute	Chas. Eldridge
Capt. Dean	Leslie Stowe
Nellie Dean	Betty Bouton
Victor Carver	Al Roscoe
Simeon Eldridge	Harry Fisher
George Davis	George Pauncefort

By Joseph C. Lincoln. Scenario by Howard Irving Young. Directed by Edwin L. Hollywood. Photographed by Robert A. Stuart. Produced by Hol-Tre Productions, Inc.

The Story—Girl accompanies wealthy family to summer home in New England fishing village and proceeds to fall in love with young idler. She encourages him to develop ambition. His indifference toward her and his defiance of her father builds a deal of conflict before he proves his manliness by rescuing the parent from desperate rivals and saving his fortune.

Classification—Romantic drama building a deal of adventure. Shows character development in case of hero. Society life and the simple life of villagers is well contrasted. Charming exteriors.

Production Highlights—Charming exteriors which suggest romance. Fine details suggesting the real thing in interiors. Love interest. The climax when youth reveals his character.

Exploitation Angles—Here you have Joseph C. Lincoln to exploit as author of story. His fame as vivid writer of life around Cape Cod has won him recognition everywhere. Irene Castle has romantic opportunities. Linking up the names of both is a good angle. Picture suggests atmospheric prologue.

Drawing Power—Most fiction readers are familiar with Lincoln's works. So they will doubtless patronize feature. Picture will draw well in most communities. Needs exploitation, however.

"Without Fear"

Fox—4,406 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE age-old conflict between democracy and aristocracy forms the background of Pearl White's latest feature entitled "Without Fear." It is worked out fairly well and develops some interesting moments. Its strength, however, rests in the sympathy bestowed upon the self-made millionaire who is snubbed by society. When his neighbor, the heroine—the daughter of a social and financial lion encourages him you take notice of the conflict between them. The girl defies her parent and the youth, scorned, takes it all good-naturedly.

The producers have provided some effective sets and the director has paid particular attention in building his scenes so that the utmost sympathy is extracted. Miss White has a few emotional opportunities of which she cakes advantage. The hero, played by Robert Elliot, is always in the picture. He is compelled to express the necessary pathos. Which he does without over-doing it. There is a crafty individual whose purpose is to embarrass the heroine and her father. But he never becomes dominant. And some of the titles have to do with stock-ticker talk. But the main argument reveals the hero constantly snubbèd. A time comes when the financier is forced to the wall and naturally he goes begging to his youthful neighbor to tide him over. The latter is magnanimous enough to share his riches. This leads to a fairly dramatic climax showing the father suspecting the hero of compromising his daughter. A storm of abuse is heaped upon the young man before the complications are cleared with democracy and romance triumphant.

The theme is sufficient to interest seven out of ten spectators. Inasmuch as most patrons belong to the great middle-class they will look upon the story in a sympathetic mood. The main title is hardly expressive of the plot. It is more suggestive of a burly westerner who can tote a gun or two. The star is bedecked in some stylish modes and the society atmosphere will intrigue the feminine mind.

The Cast

Ruth Hamilton.....Pearl White
John Miles.....Robert Elliot
Warren Hamilton.....Charles Mackay
Mrs. Hamilton.....Marie Burke
Walter Hamilton.....Robert Agnew
Bill Barton.....Macey Harlam

By Paul H. Sloane. Directed by Kenneth Webb. Produced by Fox.

The Story—Revolves around idea that democracy conquers aristocracy. Millionaire's daughter carries on secret romance with wealthy neighbor who does not belong to society. Father forbids affair when he learns of it, but is forced to recognize his neighbor when he fails in business. Mushroom millionaire wins out in the end because he is of the right sort.

Classification—Romantic drama presenting conflict between aristocracy and democracy. Social snobbery is held up to the light and displays its shortcomings. Features romantic conflict and some dramatic moments.

Production Highlights—Scene when girl defies father and carries on secret romance with rich neighbor. The moment when latter is snubbed. His manly conduct and generosity in coming to rescue of man who has scorned him. The climax when father places wrong conclusion on affair. His humility at end. Work of well balanced cast.

Exploitation Angles—This picture offers opportunities for a smart teaser campaign conducted along lines of "aristocracy versus democracy." This idea will stimulate a healthy desire on the part of the great middle class to see feature. Pearl White has a following and her name should be prominently mentioned. Bring out the romantic phases but keep to your main argument that a name in the blue book is no criterion of a man's worth.

Drawing Power—Will go with Pearl White fans. Details should not be explained as plot is too familiar. Should go first rate with neighborhood houses. Plot and characterization carry sympathy.

"The Night Riders"

Second National—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE very title of this production enhances its value in stimulating curiosity on the part of the passer-by. In all probability he will be encouraged to witness it and once in his seat he is certain to find adequate entertainment insofar as providing him with an hour of adventure, action and suspense. The idea is not a new one, but it has been dressed up with plenty of characteristic detail. The spectator develops a suspensive frame of mind in trying to identify the ring-leader of the night riders. Who is he—the foreman or one of the subordinates? You are kept guessing. Meanwhile there is a deal of smart riding and considerable complication which concerns cattle-rustling.

The owner of the ranch has a peculiar affliction which enables him to see at night but which leaves him sightless during the daytime. This character is not clearly defined. For that matter the entire characterization suffers in this direction aside from the hero who is pictured as a cultured young Easterner determined upon a career in the West. Albert Ray is hardly vigorous enough to give a sense of reality to the figure. And when he overpowers the big, burly foreman you excuse it on the ground that the former is the hero and the latter the villain. There is action a-plenty and the suspense is ever dominant. In fact it mounts with creditable tempo when you attempt to identify the chief of the white-robed riders.

The love interest comes to the foreground here and there to give it balance, but the attention is not so keen. It is when the ranch-owner attempts to injure permanently the youth who has been shot and whose sight is affected that you begin to suspect him. The Mounted are called in and for once they look like real redcoats. A chase is developed which leads to nothing before the climax reveals the ranch-owner as the culprit. He always makes a get-away but on this occasion an accident results in his death. The foreman is only a henchman. The picture is admirably staged regarding exteriors and the atmosphere is genuine because the ensemble suggest honest-to-goodness cowboys and ranch-hands. The cast is unknown with the exception of Albert Ray. Andre Beaulieu does the best work as the arch-villain.

The Cast

Diana Marbolt.....Maudie Dunham
John Tresler.....Albert Ray
Julian Marbolt.....Andre Beaulieu
Jake Harnach.....Russell Gordon
Dr. Ostler.....C. McCarty

By Ridgewell Cullom. Scenario by Alexander B. Butler. Directed by Alexander B. Butler. Distributed by Second National.

The Story—Treats of Eastern youth who seeks career on western ranch. Arriving there he encounters several adventures chief among which are a band of night riders. Falls in love with girl whose father objects to romance. Youth is shot but recovers and when villain dies it is learned that the owner of ranch is the leader of the riders. The hero has a posse in Northwest Mounted and they pursue and capture the bandits.

Classification—Western with a development of thrills showing raiding by night riders. Much melodrama and some romance. Northwest Mounted are used to provide suspense and atmosphere.

Production Highlights—The good atmosphere; the scene when youth punishes villain; the moment when owner of ranch stumbles into room to injure the hero. The real thing in Northwest Mounted characters. The pursuit and capture.

Exploitation Angles—This one has a good title which inspires a feeling of suspense. Played up for circus exploitation should get crowds. A night rider masked and wearing a white cape and hood will stimulate a desire to see picture. Should be advertised for releasing a melodramatic line of adventure and thrills.

Drawing Power—There is no question that this picture will get a crowd if properly exploited. Needs heavy campaign. Will go best in houses which cater to westerns. Best suited for small towns. Title is certain to attract. Players unknown and featuring them will do no good. Colorful teasers and ad talk is best angle to fill the house.

"The First Woman"

R-C Pictures—4950 Feet

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

NUMEROUS followers of motion pictures have expressed their desire to see the effect of unbecoming garments upon the usually well groomed and beautifully gowned leading woman. How the absence of costly apparel, designed expressed to accentuate her major points of attractiveness would gauge her appeal. Their curiosities may be satisfied with seeing Mildred Harris in the leading role of "The First Woman."

Sounds like a picture artfully constructed to arouse discussion among thinking people. Contrary to the main title indication, it is light comedy-melodrama, a play within a play, with no direct appeal to any particular class or age, entertaining and sufficiently interesting to amuse a mixed audience. Offers some decidedly pleasing photography, played by thoroughly efficient artists. The story is one regarding an ambitious young actress, also capable of playing the violin, but up to time of the story's beginning, has achieved little success and no fame in her work. She had scored a hit in giving imitations of a famous comedienne, but to Paul Marsh, handsome, sucessful playwright, she did not offer a solution to his problem of a leading woman for his latest play. Because, he stubbornly refused to consider even meeting an unknown quantity. It so happened that the girl was also a chum of the playwright's sister, and admired by his manager. These, together with the sister's fiance, concoct a plan to prove the histrionic ability of the charming young and talented ingenue, themselves all assuming roles to be played right along with their everyday lives, commanding an audience for the girl, who wins not only the part, but the author.

Posing as a misguided unfortunate from the Canadian forest country, there are sequences of flash-backs which show the girl in the predicament she represents herself to be in, to the playwright. In these Miss Harris dressed in coarse, supposedly unbecoming clothes, is none the less appealing than when she is dressed in the present day fashions, with the frills young girls add to their wardrobes. She is indeed, pretty as well as clever in the portrayal, while a very satisfactory performance is given by each member of the cast, the leading masculine role ably handled by Percy Marmont. A very smooth and pleasing entertainment.

The Cast

Paul Marsh.....Percy Marmont
Jack Gordon.....Lloyd Hammond
Tom Markham.....Donald Blakemore
Prof. Bazzufi.....Oliver La Baddie
Eloysius Bangs.....Wallace Baker
Mr. Sham.....Andy Hicks
Judge Stone.....J. A. West
Jacquis.....Joseph G. Portell

The Priest.....Corydon W. Hatt

Police Sergeant.....Stephen Geitz
Mrs. Giggleton.....Mrs. J. Montgomery
Marie.....Betty Hall
Elsa.....Flora Arline Arle
The Girl.....Mildred Harris

By Glenn Lyons. Directed by Glenn Lyons. Photographed by Aldin Knechtel.

The Story—Successful playwright seeks leading woman for play just completed. His manager suggests talented violinist and one who has excelled in imitations, but has no "name value" upon the stage. Playwright refuses to grant interview. His sister, her fiance, the manager and mutual friends plan to trick playwright into meeting the girl and an acknowledgment of her histrionic ability. They win. Girl interests playwright professionally and personally. Double wedding for his sister, her fiance, and ambitious, talented young lady to playwright.

Classification—Satirical comedy-melodrama. Romantic, involving two love affairs, one the outcome of a playwright's difficulty in selecting a leading woman for new play because of women he visualizes seem scarce.

Production Highlights—Several dramatic climaxes well worked up. Most praiseworthy one when playwright finds he is victim of plan to force his notice of struggling young actress. Scenes in Canadian woods, a part of the story within the story.

Exploitation Angles—Beauty and developing ability of Mildred Harris. Fine, well balanced acting on part of Percy Marmont, popular with "fans."

"Lying Truth"

American Releasing Corporation—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

WELL directed, compelling melodrama, good story, capable cast, pleasing photography. "Lying Truth" is a dramatic animation illustrating the injustice of condemnation upon circumstantial evidence. For story value, and by way of arriving at necessary dramatic climax to sustain interest, the misunderstood young life of Bill Claiborne is depicted, along with happenings of singular coincidence, which would point to the assumption that he murdered his foster brother, Sam.

It would appear the boys had been friends since their early years, and that eventually, Sam's father adopted Bill. The own son grew up to be a sort of ne'er do well, while the adopted one became a law student, in addition to his duties on the editorial staff of a small town daily.

Incidentally, the town's richest man is also the father of the most attractive girl ,who responds to Bill's obvious liking, the two youngsters intent upon his ultimate success, with a purpose.

Sam likes the girl, too. And when he has become addicted to a drug, by the contamination of unworthy associates, Bill indicates that Sam's attentions are most unwelcome. Girl's father, being the city vice king, resents the admiration of the struggling young business man, accepting in plain preference that of the worthless cad.

With a view to stirring up news, so as to increase the circulation and thereby the business of the "Gazette," Bill stages a bogus murder. It happens about that time Sam, unable to secure any more drug without money, disappears, and when found, would seem to have been murdered. Therefore, suspicion points to the half brother, to whom the father left such property as he had. Then, under the leadership of the rich man, who owns the part of town where a vice crusade might injure his ambitions, public sentiment is turned against the innocent youngster, and he barely escapes being lynched before the mother arrives with a note which clears him, her own son confessing to intended suicide. These intensely dramatic situations work up into a final climax, riding on the wheels of suspense, entertaining and carrying a lesson. Happy ending, the love interest bringing the girl and boy to an understanding, the irate father reconciled.

The Cast

Lawrence De Muidde.....Noah Beery
Sue De Muidde.....Marjorie Daw
Horace Todd.....Tully Marshall
Bill O'Hara.....Pat O'Malley

Written and directed by Marion Fairfax. Produced by Eagle Producing Company.

The Story—Sensational expose of circumstantial evidence, involving two young boys, one a student, striving to improve his position in life. The other, a scape-goat, who becomes addicted to drug habit. Both care for one girl, daughter of richest man in town, who owns all the property in the vice district. Ambitious young man stages artificial murder to get town's interest in his paper being first to get the story. At same time, drug fiend, without money to buy more cocaine, commits suicide. Circumstantial evidence points that foster brother committed the murder. Written confession saves him from lynching, just in time.

Classification—Melodrama, with thrills, suspense and exciting events, crowded into expose of injustice of circumstantial evidence.

Production Highlights—Scene where composing room of newspaper office is wrecked by angry mob intent upon lynching innocent man. Scene where fugitive defends himself from maddened people by throwing heavy sacks from loft, down on them.

Exploitation Angles—Splendid cast, including several favorite screen players. Sensational expose. Possible newspaper cooperation.

Drawing Power—Depending upon exploitation. Mob scene, leading up to lynching party after their man. Picture will satisfy as film entertainment.

"Find the Woman"

Cosmopolitan-Paramount—6 Reels

(Reviewed by Pearl Gaddis)

THIS picture seems to have everything to recommend it—a strong story, excellent direction, a cast it would be hard to beat, direction so good that you forget it is direction, lavishly mounted—a story in which the characters act like human beings, possessed of human emotions and human self-control—and there isn't a slow moment in it from start to finish.

It is full of action and suspense—the action that springs from mental conflict, the suspense created by watching real human beings work out their destiny. Your interest is captured in the opening scene, when you witness the arrival in New York of Clancy Deane, from Zenith, Maine, who is going to be an actress. Lest you get the wrong idea, and picture Clancy, penniless and hungry, trudging the streets and looking for work (which is the sort of story a fresh, pretty young girl arriving in New York for the first time, seems to suggest to most movie directors), Clancy is well-dressed and has money. She meets the Webers, rather a doubtful couple, and then the story shifts to the Carey home—rather somber magnificence of the old, well-bred families—and the story is off. From the opening scenes, it moves forward steadily, consistently, with never a hiatus in the continuity, the mystery building briskly up to the really thrilling climax—an exhibitor can hunt far and long before he finds another box-office bet that has so much to recommend it.

The cast is an eye-opener—every player does his or her part to make up a perfectly balanced whole—no one player deserves mention above another—all are excellent. Miss Rubens is lovely, and little Eileen Huban gives a fine performance as Clancy. Harrison Ford, as usual, gives a good account of himself. Arthur Donaldson plays a heavy with his usual ability, making the character interesting and human as well as wicked.

The Cast

Sophie Carey.....Alma Rubens
Philip Vandevent.....Harrison Ford
Clancy Deane, alias Florine Ladue.....Eileen Huban
Marc Weber.....Norman Kerry
Fay, his wife.....Ethel Duray
Don Carey, Sophie's husband.....Henry Sedley
Morris Beiner.....Arthur Donaldson
Graham Walbrough.....George MacQuarrie
Detective Spofford.....Sidney Deane

Story by Arthur Somers Roche. Continuity by Doty Hobart. Photographed by Ira H. Morgan. Director, Tom Terris. Produced by Cosmopolitan. Released and distributed by Paramount.

The Story—Clancy Deane, from a little New England town, in New York, stage-struck; Marc Weber, who lives by his wits, and Fay, his wife, who adores him; Sophie Carey, and her husband, Don, scions of a fine and wealthy family, who have made shipwreck of their marriage, and are separating, for the last time; Judge Walbrough who loved Sophie before she married Don, and still loves her; and to connect all these elements, Morris Beiner, a theatrical agent who uses his office and profession as a cloak for shady deals. Gets some letters written to Judge by Sophie. Tries to get Marc to help him blackmail Sophie, fails, and he and Marc break, Marc swearing to "get" Beiner. Clancy calls on Beiner for assistance in getting work—there is a struggle, when he becomes suspicious of her connection with the Webers despite her protestations of innocence. Beiner is found dead in his office, and suspicion points to practically everybody in the cast. It is a genuine mystery, solved only in the last half of the last reel.

Classification—Mystery melodrama, heart-interest finely developed. Splendidly staged.

Production Highlights—Settings, lavish yet chosen with good taste; photography, the best. Scenario, story, and direction above the average. Fine cast, and good work of each member of it.

Exploitation Angles—Many of them—teaser stuff, about the murder and the mystery. The cast, any one of which, almost, is worthy of being starred. Story by Arthur Somers Roche, read by thousands.

Drawing Power—Good for any house. Should draw splendidly either in down-town theatre, or in neighborhood, and there isn't anything that could possibly offend the most fastidious patron.

"The Angel of Crooked Street"

Vitagraph—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

HERE is a feature that comes as a welcome relief. It's a clean, wholesome story with an absorbing plot, a wealth of dramatic situation and some fine bits of character work, not only by the star, but by most of the members of supporting personnel.

The story opens in one of the much talked of "Main Street" towns, where the heroine, because of an invalid mother, is forced to work as a servant in the home of the wealthy Sanfords. A stranger comes to town, robs the home and gives the girl one of the stolen jewels to sidetrack suspicion from himself. The girl is tried, convicted and sent to a reformatory. On being discharged, she swears to get even with Mrs. Sanford, who refused to come to her aid in her hour of need. As a result of the shock of the girl's sentence, the mother dies. Drifting to the city, the heroine becomes mixed up with a gang of crooks. She plans to marry the son of Mrs. Sanford who is attending college in the city and thus bring disgrace upon the Sanford name. In working out her plot, she is assisted by the gang. A series of real exciting situations follow, including a thrilling bit of "third degree" police work following the death of a stool pigeon who was attempting to frame the girl and Mrs. Sanford's son. The girl in the end finds herself falling in love with the man whom she had sought to use as a means for revenge and the inevitable clinch follows.

The picture is one of unusual interest as it sets forth in realistic manner modern police methods in getting evidence. There are some very fine crook types, notably those contributed by Scott McKee as "Silent" McKay, Rex Hammel, as "Kid Glove" Thurston, William McCall as "Cap" Berry and Walter Cooper as Dan Bolton, the stool pigeon. Miss Calhoun as Jennie Marsh, the heroine, is refreshing at all times. She is an attractive figure on the screen and should soon take her place among the biggest of the film players. During the action of the story, Miss Calhoun wears some stunning gowns which will please the feminine part of the audience. The scenes in the little country town are intensely human. The country dance, rural orchestra, refreshment stand and all, are realistically staged. The production shows excellent direction on the part of David Smith, while Steve Smith, Jr., has photographed the work unusually well. Another important point in favor of the feature is its wholesomeness. There is nothing to which anyone can object. It's an ideal picture for any house and if properly exploited will pull them in and satisfy them after they are in.

The Cast

Jennie Marsh.....Alice Calhoun
Schuyler Sanford.....Ralph McCullough
"Silent" McKay.....Scott McKee
"Kid Glove" Thurston.....Rex Hammel
"Cap" Berry.....William McCall
"Mother" De Vere.....Nellie Anderson
Mrs. Phineas Sanford.....Martha Mattox
Mrs. Marsh.....Mary H. Young
Stoneham.....George Stanley
Dan Bolton.....Walter Cooper

By Harry Dittman. Directed by David Smith. Scenario by C. Graham Baker. Photographed by Steve Smith, Jr.

The Story—Deals with a young girl who has been unjustly imprisoned and who seeks revenge. She learns, however, that vengeance is not hers to take, and after several complications into which is woven a pleasing love story, the girl emerges a better woman because of her adventures.

Exploitation Angles—Alice Calhoun Clubs have been organized in many cities. Get their cooperation. The small town stuff. The police and crook theme. Chance for good lobby display. Style show on gowns worn by star.

Drawing Power—Will probably go good in second class downtown first runs, high class neighborhood theatres. Play up story.

Production Highlights—The false accusation and trial of the heroine. The "Main Street" town scenes. Arrival of the girl in the city and her meeting up with the gang of crooks. "Framing" of the girl and her lover. Death of the stool pigeon. "Third degree" methods at headquarters. Excellent character types. A real absorbing plot. An attractive star.

Classification—Story of intrigue, romance, country life, city environment, adventure and drama. Intensely melodramatic in closing reels.

"Mr. Barnes of New York"

(Goldwyn—5,100 Feet)

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

WHAT'S in a title? We expected to see a light comedy drama with old Gotham as a background; instead and much to our surprise, we found Tom Moore as a genial New Yorker of the '90s, side whiskers, bushy hair and all, moving through a story of the most melodramatic type, stumbling into a love affair in Paris and getting mixed up in a deucedly exciting Corsican vendetta.

So much for so much, but we don't fancy Tom in a role of this character. Also, he doesn't belong in a character and story of this nature. Then again folks may like the novelty. To say the least, it's a distinct departure from anything Tom has offered heretofore on the screen. Archibald Clavering Gunter wrote the tale, which we are given to understand was quite a success as a stage play many years ago.

While, for the most part, the picture's action is taken up by very dramatic situations, there are some delightful comedy moments, such as the scenes in a first-class railroad coach on a French train, in which Tom, in order to get acquainted with the heroine, has to almost "starve her to death." These moments are reminiscent of Eileen Huban's charming stage bit, "Paddy, the Next Best Thing."

The plot starts off with a pistol duel between a native Corsican and an English naval officer, in which the former is killed. As a result of this duel a vendetta is started which draws Mr. Barnes, who is touring about the Continent, into its meshes. The rest of the story is taken up with the attempt of the sister of he dead man to find and kill the murderer of her brother and Mr. Barnes' efforts to stop her from carrying out her threat.

The entire picture has a foreign background, and the producer and director must be given credit for closely duplicating a Continental atmosphere throughout. The character types are good and the costumes attractive. The scenes in a Paris art salon are unusually well staged. The opening duel and its resultant vendetta, the Corsican wedding and the reproduction of the fashionable pleasure resort at Nice are so well done as to almost make one believe they were staged on the spot.

Mr. Moore is fortunate in having a good cast in his support. Naomi Childers is the heroine, and while her part does not call for much acting she does that little well and is quite a stunning picture in her old-fashioned gowns. Anna Lehr shows her ability in emotional acting as Marina, the Corsican, and Sydney Ainworth is acceptable as Danella. Like all Goldwyn offerings, "Mr. Barnes of New York" is well photographed.

The Cast

Mr. Barnes.....Tom Moore
Enid.....Naomi Childers
Marina.....Anna Lehr
Danella.....Sydney Ainsworth
Anstruther.....Lewis Willoughby
Tomasso.....Otto Hoffman
Antonio.....Ramon Samaniego

By Archibald Clavering Gunter. Directed by Victor Schertzinger. Scenario by Gerald Duffy. Photographed by George Brewster

The Story—Mr. Barnes, traveling on the Continent, becomes involved in a duel in Corsica as a result of which a native slays an English naval officer. A vendetta results. The sister vows to seek the murderer and revenge her brother. Her efforts in carrying out her threat form the basis of the plot. Most of Mr. Barnes' work is taken up in preventing the murder of the brother of the girl he has fallen in love with. It is believed that the girl's brother is the murderer, but it develops that he loaned his pistols to a fellow officer and that it was the latter who shot the Corsican.

Classification—Melodramatic adventure story carrying real atmosphere, excitement and incident. Departure for star.

Production Highlights—Foreign background which appears genuine. Well staged scenes in Paris salon. The opening duel and vendetta. The Corsican wedding. Good acting and direction.

Exploitation Angles—Billed as a departure for Tom Moore will bring them in. Play is adaptation of successful stage play of a few seasons ago. This should be mentioned in copy. Teaser campaign and colorful prologue will put it over.

"A Wonderful Wife"

Universal—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS story has been ground through the fiction and movie mills so often that it fails to intrigue the imagination insofar as building a vein of interest and suspense. A wife who likes to experiment with amours in order to advance her husband's position may be catalogued as possessing unbounded virtue and devotion. But seeing her trespassing on forbidden ground destroys the sympathy because her conduct is so mercenary. Somehow the story doesn't ring genuine. It is theatrical in its important scenes and climaxes. And the characterization is of the machine-made variety. In its favor is a fairly colorful atmosphere. And you do catch the environment of the figures.

The locale is an army post situated off the coast of Africa with an officer being dispatched from England to take orders from his superior, a notorious woman-hater. The latter, mistrustful of the new arrival, seeks his opportunity to embarrass him. And succeeds when, after falling in love with the captain's wife, he sends him on a punitive expedition to the interior of the jungle. His orders were to give him the command at Malta. The wife has recognized the trend of events—has noticed that the superior is a supreme egotist. Consequently she plays upon his vanity. Result? His passionate desire to win her by sending her husband into the jungle where the chances are a hundred to one that he would not come out alive. Meanwhile to build the conflict and complicate it, another officer's wife matches her wits with the young Englishman. And when he refuses to respond to her subtleties, she, cat-like, informs his spouse.

The climax reveals an expedition of her own and the rescue of her husband and the superior officer's finish. The action is arbitrary because the scenes are so theatric in design. Perhaps had Miss du Pont invested the role with suppressed emotion the story would carry more sincerity. Vernon Steele, as the husband, does good work with limited opportunities. Pictorially the picture is well lighted and offers some adequate sets and locations.

The Cast

Chum.....Miss du Pont
Alaric.....Vernon Steele
Gregory.....Landers Stevens
Halton.....Charles Arling
Diana.....Ethel Ritchie
Nugent.....Harris Gordon
Native Groom.....Nick De Ruiz

By Dolf Wyllarde. Scenario by Arthur Statter. Directed by Paul Scardon. Produced by Universal.

The Story—Army officer's wife tired of the monotony in an African post sees chance for adventure as well as opportunity of advancing her husband by carrying on a flirtation with his superior officer. Her compromise builds a deal of trying situations before she accomplishes her purpose.

Classification—Domestic drama detailing life in far-off army post with the triangle theme being the motif. Dominant with romance and intrigue.

Production Highlights—Good atmosphere suggesting army life in African post. Climax when superior officer sends subordinate to interior of jungle in order to be rid of him.

Exploitation Angles—Miss du Pont should be exploited as heroine of "Foolish Wives." If you have run the Stroheim picture your crowd will want to see the star in this feature. Bring forth that it presents army life in a far-off post of Africa. Stills of the star and scenes from production will help in a lobby display. A paper campaign looks like the best angle.

Drawing Power—Picture will draw best in neighborhood houses. Crowd who have seen "Foolish Wives" will probably want to see star in new effort. Not a winner for discriminate audiences as theme, plot and characterization are too familiar.

"The Woman's Side"

(First National—5,800 Feet)

(Reviewed by Eugene Carlton)

REMEMBER the feeling you had at the ball game when an error robbed the home pitcher of credit that was due him? You are possessed with just such a feeling after witnessing "The Woman's Side." Eliminate a few weak scenes from the picture and it would rank as one of Katherine MacDonald's strongest. As it is, the "punch" of the production is greatly weakened by some untimely love scenes that could advantageously be left out altogether. Assuming the role as the daughter of a political candidate, Miss MacDonald works like a Trojan and her work, emotional acting and facial expressions, deserves credit that only a leading star could lay claim to.

The background of the plot, especially the political angle, approaches nearer to reality than is accomplished in the average production, while the newspaper phase of the story smacks of true life. For a production containing so many minor plots, the picture unwinds itself with pleasing continuity. A disreputable candidate for governor, an unworthy wife of the opposing candidate, the son of a newspaper man and the daughter of an "honest" politician step into their roles with machine-like familiarity that is commendable. An effective climax is brought about when the heroine discovers that the woman whom she had thought her mother is a woman whose real name she did not know, and a sudden turn of events brings defeat to the disreputable candidate and the marriage of the heroine to the son of a newspaper editor who has upheld the opposing candidate.

The Cast

Mary Gray.....Katherine MacDonald
Theodore Van Ness, Jr.....Edward Burns
Theodore Van Ness, Sr.....Henry Barrows
Judge Gray.....Dwight Crittenden
The ex-Mrs. Judge Gray.....Ora Devereaux
Big Bob Masters.....Wade Boteler

Produced by B. P. Schulberg. Written and directed by J. A. Barry. Photographed by Joseph Brotherton.

The Story—Worthy candidate for governor has as his opponent the attorney for his wife, who is seeking a "trumped up" divorce. Attorney tells editor, who is backing worthy candidate, of the story of the divorce. Daughter of worthy candidate overhears threats of attorney to father and goes to attorney's office to plead that newspaper story be suppressed. Father follows daughter and forces opponent to withdraw story. Daughter pleads with mother to aid father, but is told by the woman that she is not her mother. Uworthy candidate is badly beaten in race and daughter marries son of the newspaper editor.

Classificotion—A political drama, mixed with some genuine comedy and human interest features.

Production Highlights—Scene where heroine, in the car of her father's political opponent, makes speech in behalf of her father; also scenes of heroine acting as good samaritan in slums.

Exploitation Angles—The line, "What would you do if you found out that you didn't know the real name of your mother and that the man whom you thought to be your father was not your father at all," can be used effectively in newspaper space. As Katherine MacDonald is 90 per cent of the strength of the cast, she should be played up to great extet.

Drawing Power—Not a very good bet outside the larger cities. Should do good business in first run and larger neighborhood theatres, especially where Katherine MacDonald is popular.

"The Truthful Liar"

(Paramount-Realart—5,600 Feet)

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

"A TRUTHFUL LIAR!" Wanda Hawley! Both give the impression that a light comedy of married life is about to unfold on the screen. However, Wanda's admirers are in for a surprise, for here we see the "jazz" girl of "The Affairs of Anatol" pass from the light comedienne type of characterization to an emotional role that gives us an insight into a hitherto unsuspected ability.

Miss Hawley as an emotional actress is really capable! In fact, we were agreeably surprised.

The story seeks to send home the lesson that the young wife who thinks only of having a good time is heading her matrimonial bark toward the rocks. This "sermon" is well put over. It never becomes "preachy." We believe this picture to be quite the best thing Miss Hawley has done for the screen. Her former features have come and gone and not created much of a stir in their coming or their going. Here is a feature, however, that has a real interesting plot that holds the attention well throughout.

David Haggard and Tess, his wife, have few tastes in common. David is kept away from home with his engineering pursuits. Tess is a "climber." During one of David's out-of-town trips Tess persuades Arthur, with whom she has grown up, to take her to the Metropolitan club, a gambling house—just for a lark. The place, however, is raided by a gang of gunmen; Tess loses her jewels and Arthur is wounded in the wrist by a stray bullet. Fleeing from the scene, the pair summon a taxi and go to Arthur's boarding house. Here a blackmailing housemaid observes their predicament. Haggard, returning, observes his wife's rings missing. The wife, lying, says they are being cleaned. A policeman enters with the loot taken at the gambling house and tells Tess that, through influence, the police commissioner is allowing her to pick out her rings. Arthur is furious at the deception. However, it is only the first. One deception follows another. There's an exciting search for an implicating letter which the wife has written to her youthful friend denouncing her husband. There is a murder of the man who is holding the letter for a huge sum. Further complications! More truthful lies! It's all absorbing stuff and it grips.

The raid on the Metropolitan club is the bombshell that explodes the action. It's a good piece of screencraft. There are dramatic moments when the husband discovers that his wife has been involved in the raid and that she has lied to him, when the wife visits the rooms of Frank Potts, a political crook., when the police commissioner visits the home to arrest the wife for the murder of Potts, when the incriminating letter falls into the husband's hands, when Vanetti, an old time enemy, kills Potts. There are any number of stirring situations in this picture.

Miss Hawley does exceptionally well in the role of Tess, while Casson Ferguson as Arthur, Edward Hearn as David and George Seigmann as Potts have the principal supporting roles.

The picture shows some fine directing, for which Thomas N. Heffron deserves credit. The settings, interior and exterior, are good. Photographically, "The Truthful Liar" leaves nothing to be desired. During the action of the story Miss Hawley wears a number of gowns which will interest the women. We recommend this picture for a place on any program.

The Cast

Tess Haggard	Wanda Hawley
David Haggard	Edward Hearn
Harvey Mattison	Charles Stevenson
Arthur Sinclair	Casson Ferguson
Larry Steffens	Lloyd Whitlock
Mark Potts	George Seigmann
Peter Vanetti	E. A. Warren
Police Commissioner	Charles K. French

By Will Payne. Directed by Thomas Heffron. Scenario by Percy Heath. Photographed by William Collins.

The Story—Tells of the adventures of a young wife, who caring more for the bright lights than the fireside, gets into a mess following a raid on a fashionable gambling house and has a stirring time of it when she tells her husband some "truthful lies," when her part in the raid is discovered.

Classification—Domestic drama carrying considerable dramatic and much melodramatic action.

Production Highlights — The raid on the gambling house. Discovery by husband of wife's part in raid. Third degree methods used by police in attempt to locate murderer of Potts. The search for the implicating letter. Miss Hawley's work in her first really emotional role. The fine setting given the production.

Exploitation Angles—Boost this one as the strongest dramatic picture in which Wanda Hawley has so far appeared. The title. The "Third Degree" element. The gowns worn by the star. The widow display opportunities on Miss Hawley's beauty. The gambling end.

Drawing Power—This one should go over in the downtown as well as the neighborhood house. It is a clean picture containing lots of action and is a production that will stand up under any boosting you give it.

"The White Masks"

(W. M. Smith Productions—5 Reels)

(Reviewed by Eugene Carlton)

COMEDY triumphs over drama in "The White Mask." If the producer actually intended to feature the dramatic element of the story he defeated his purpose, much to his own advantage. Few western pictures contain the humorous "gems" that are sprinkled throughout this production. In fact, the principal trend of the plot only serves as an unwelcome delay to the continuance of comedy. Franklyn Farnum seldom will be seen in a role more uniquely adapted to his personality than that of the impromptu fight promoter which he portrays. First, it should be understood that the production is good—good because it is a burlesque of technique, defying all traditions of repetition of age-worn plots and bringing out the typical personnel of small western towns with rare accuracy.

A blue-eyed heroine, oppressed by the proverbial huge, dark-complexioned gambler; the hero, a "city feller," of course, and a two-fisted cowboy who makes his debut in the prize ring, furnish action that would win the approval of the most adverse critic. It is when a "stranger" adopts a cowpuncher as his pugilistic entry in a nearby town that the fun begins. A ring battle, one that could only be imagined as occurring in the West, carries the real "kick" of the production. However, in order that the title of the picture may be vindicated, the Ku Klux Klan element is given prominence in the climax of the story and the heroine is freed from the clutches of the villainous gambler and—quite naturally, marries the "stranger."

The Cast

Jack Bray	Franklyn Farnum
Olga Swenson	Virginia Lee
"Shorty" Rush	"Shorty" Hamilton
John Dougherty	Al Hart
Crossett	George Rheem

Produced by W. M. Smith Productions. Directed by George Holt. Story by E. H. Corr. Photography by R. E. Lyons.

The Story—Following a scuffle on the depot platform, a "stranger" offers "Shorty" an opportunity to enter the prize ring in a nearby town. The fight is arranged, the money wagered, when the "stranger" and "Shorty" learn they are to be tricked. By a ruse "Shorty's" opponent's attention is attracted in the second round and "Shorty" slips over a knockout. Pretty girl, a victim of gambler, who has robbed her of her fortune. The gambler is the head of a "white masked" organization, and is about to bring about the hanging of the "stranger" when the former's unfair dealings with the girl are exposed and he is forced to leave town.

Classification—Western comedy-drama, full of humor and carrying a strong appeal for lovers of physical thrills.

Production Highlights—Fight scene, when window is smashed and revolver discharged, just before the K. O. is slipped over; parade of the Six-o-One; ride of the heroine to prevent the hanging of the hero.

Exploitation Angles—Rent a horse. Hire a man, garbed in white Ku Klux Klan costume, bearing the title of the picture, to ride about town.

"Belle of Alaska"

American Releasing Corp.—5000 Feet

(Reviewed by Eugene Carlton)

TO fans who have been waiting for a story of the Alaskan gold fields, which is not "scrambled" by the much too frequent injection of minor plots and unessential courtships, "Belle of Alaska" will fill the bill. In fact, the continuity of the production is its strongest feature. A small, but highly capable, cast performs in a manner that stamps the picture as a genuine drawing card. The complex and mysterious elements are entirely separate of the theme, the foundation of the plot depending upon a simple but "differently" told story that does not wane in interest and contains a climax that is far from the "stereotype" variety.

Jane Novak is deserving of no small credit for her work in this production, assuming the role of a Kansas house wife with ease and familiarity that is almost convincing, even to a native Jayhawker. As a husband of somewhat doubtful worth, Noah Berry renders splendid support to the star. Being a native Missourian, it requires little effort for him to portray the character selected for him.

Gamblers don't usually emerge the victors in love affairs, but in this case, after a husband has deserted his wife, the owner of a gambling hall wins the heroine, after one of the most realistic encounters that could be shown on the screen.

The Cast

Ruth Harkin	Jane Novak
Wade Harkin	Noah Beery
"Lucky" Vail	J. Frank Glendon
"Chicago Belle"	Florence Carpenter
Dugan	Leslie Bates

Produced and directed by Chester Bennett.

The Story—Kansas farmer and wife sell belongings and start for Alaska in search of gold. Husband deserts wife, after obtaining money, husband sailing for Alaska and wife remaining ashore. She meets a gambler and his "lady friend." Later the wife sails for Alaska, after having been forced to commit murder in self-defense, and ship is wrecked. Gambler's "lady friend" is on board and drowns, the wife assuming the former's name upon reaching Alaska. She meets her husband, but the gambler also loves her. The husband and gambler fight, a bullet from the "unknown" hand killing the husband.

Classification—A human interest drama of the frozen North, containing plenty of thrilling action.

of Manufacturing Precision

TIME is the final critic of the in-built greatness of the new Motiograph DeLuxe. The eye alone cannot detect the thousandth-of-an-inch accuracy that is reflected in every moving part of this truly great projector. The Motiograph faces the wear and tear of years—secure in a perfection that comes through being built to a rigid standard of manufacturing precision. To deviate from this standard in the slightest degree would be to court the evils of vibration and friction, with a consequent loss of accuracy in its projective ability.

The New Motiograph DeLuxe represents the very highest development in the art and science of Film Projection. Its hitherto unapproached precision of definition, its absolute steadiness, its silence in operation, its unequalled durability and its absolute dependability—these qualities distinguish the New Motiograph DeLuxe from the rest.

It will serve you now and for many years to come, paying dividends in satisfaction, greater stamina and longer life.

P. M. ABBOTT - - - - - - - - - - - TECHNICAL EDITOR

An Exhibitor Who Knows How to "Buy"

Mr. Joplin, president of the Delft Theatres, Inc., was very much surprised when, upon investigation, he found the magnitude of the problem confronting an exhibitor selecting the most satisfactory ventilation system for his particular theatre. However, in the following, Mr. Joplin relates just how he tackled this proposition and secured good results:

The average theatre owner is often under a great handicap in buying equipment, because the apparatus he has to buy is of an extremely technical and intricate nature. To buy intelligently requires a scientific training. No one included in the ordinary theatre staff is capable of giving satisfactory advice, so the owner must go outside for help.

This help can be obtained in several ways. First, by consultation with other theatre owners who have bought the things under consideration; second, by appealing to the technical department of a trade paper or exhibitors' association; third, by taking the matter up directly with the manufacturers.

The first method is far from satisfactory, as most theatre owners buy blindly, or if not, are inclined to ride hobbies. Nine out of ten will recommend the type previously bought to justify their act in buying, whether it has proved satisfactory or not. The second method is better because the papers and associations are interested in improving the industry, and have fairly reliable and impartial information. This should be availed of so far as possible. The third method is best. The purchase of the simplest equipment involves considerable sums of money, and it is well worth the while of any owner to give the matter a little intensive study.

Get all you can from other owners and technical departments—it is good so far as it goes—but no one knows your problem as you do yourself. The writer has used a method on several occasions with good results, which is illustrated by the following concrete example.

It was desired to install a cooling system in a theatre, seating 1,200, and built a year ago. Instead of canvassing other theatre owners, requesting information on types, sizes, etc., an appeal was made to The Motion Picture News for a list of reputable manufacturers of ventilating and cooling apparatus. Such a list was cheerfully supplied. To each of these names a letter was sent. This letter gave enough general information concerning the theatre and what was desired to accomplish to enable the manufacturer to figure accurately.

Out of the total list of names, forty-five

A Splendid Example

Mr. Morgan Joplin, president of the Delft Theatres, Inc., is a successful exhibitor, even in these lean times. The story herewith presented as told by Mr. Joplin explains why we would just naturally expect success from this type of a business man. It's something to be an exhibitor and know how to buy pictures, but it's a whole lot more to have the initiative to intelligently buy theatre equipment or any other supplies that are needed. And when we say "buy," it doesn't simply mean investing money in any equipment which strikes the fancy; we mean getting the best to be had at a reasonable figure.

Only an extremely small percentage of exhibitors know how to select a satisfactory equipment for their theatres. The procedure as outlined by Mr. Joplin can well be taken as an example to follow when making an investment. It is not desired to create the impression that this is the only procedure to follow in detail, but rather, problems of a similar nature may well be attacked along these general lines.

Colorado Most Elegant Theatre in Rocky Mountain Region

Has Seating Capacity of 2,526; Also $50,000 Robert-Morton Organ

Denver's huge new Colorado theatre at Sixteenth and Curtis streets is the largest and most elegant motion picture house in the Rocky Mountain West, having a seating capacity of 2,526, of which the main floor alone accommodates 1,481 and the spacious balcony, including loges, 1,045.

With its remarkable $50,000 Robert-Morton organ, its excellent concert orchestra—the largest theatre orchestra in Denver—its beautiful mezzanine floors, its marble staircases, its complete picture projecting equipment, its many entrances and exits, its colored floodlights, its fixtures and furniture, its lovely draperies and curtains, its mural paintings, its ushers in uniform, with its myriad interior splendors, the Colorado can be compared only to the greatest theatre of New York, Chicago or California.

The Colorado is a sister theatre to the America, which was built five years ago, opening February 10, 1917, and both houses are operated by the Bishop-Cass Theatres Company of Denver, of which the officers are Oscar D. Cass, president; Edward A. Bishop, vice-president; Alvah G. Talbot, vice-president and managing director; E. E. Newman, treasurer, and Joseph S. Jaffa, secretary.

The beautiful Colorado was designed by W. E. Fisher and A. A. Fisher, architects, and constructed by the C. S. Lambie Company, under the supervision of Clarence H. Johnson, construction engineer of the Bishop-Cass Theatre Company. The impressive interior decodation was done under Arthur R. Willett of New York, who was assisted by Denver artists.

The Colorado is built of concrete reinforced with steel. It represents all that is up-to-date for the recreation, comfort, safety and health of a discriminating public. By means of a huge series of motor-driven fans above the proscenium arch, the largest of their kind ever installed in Denver, it is possible to change all the air in the big theatre every two minutes.

So conveniently are the spacious entrances and exits designed and distributed that capacity crowds can enjoy the theatre without any inconvenience whatever. The upper part of the delightful balcony is provided with special entrances leading to the second mezzanine promenade.

The great Robert-Morton organ is the only one of its kind in Denver. All the resources of a symphony orchestra are at the disposal of the artist: violins, flutes, harps, oboes, tubas, trumpets, tambourines, chimes and also all the functions of a great pipe organ, from the thinnest faint vibration down to the powerful diapason tones.

This instrument is operated by what is known as electro-pneumatic action. It has the double-touch system, so that its four-key manuals give the effect of eight. In those four key manuals are 244 keys, and there are also on the console thirty-two pedal keys, fifty push buttons and 279 tablets. It is remarkable to note that all these motions and the starting and stopping of the air vibrations are absolutely instantaneous and capable of repetition at least twenty times a second, were it possible for the organist to play it that fast.

During the opening performances this organ has been played by Edward Sawtelle and R. Jefferson Hall, artists of excellent reputation. Mr. Sawtelle has come to Denver from New York as personal representative of the Robert-Morgan Company. The organ chambers are built in three sections above the proscenium arch, which towers high above the main floor.

The concert orchestra, which is the largest in any Denver theatre, is under the direction of Neils M. Dahl, musical director of the Bishop-Cass Theatres Company, whose record in choosing suitable music for motion picture programs has been eminent. Before coming to Denver, Mr. Dahl played in the Copenhagen Symphony orchestra and also in the Strand orchestra in New York.

Some thing new and especially attractive for Denver is the mezzanine promenade thru which the balcony is entered. This floor has a large opening directly over the parquet, thru which nearly all of the 1,481 seats on the main floor can be seen. In the dome above is a wrought iron chandelier with crystal ornament and the curving walls of the dome are adorned with cameo effects representing dancing, music, hunting, fishing, horticulture and other classic arts and industries.

On either side of this mezzanine promenade, which looks into the main foyer on the Sixteenth street side, are imposing lounges, one for men and one for women, with the parlors adjacent to retiring rooms. The lounges are invested with tapestried furniture, mirrors, console tables, straw-colored carpets to harmonize with the tan walls, and torchere lamps with parchment shades.

The second mezzanine is similarly equipped. It is long and spacious, opening into the upper part of the balcony. Both floors can be reached either from the main floor or the building proper.

The decoration of the whole theatre follows Spanish renaissance design. The ceiling is blue, the walls are Spanish red, mottled with suitable ornament. Below the upper frieze are a series of arches, done in gold and ivory, displaying conventional eagles and the most characteristic of the Western animals—on one side the bear, bison and antelope, and on the other the panther, elk and mountain sheep. The front of the balcony shows ornamental motives based on the coats of arms of Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain.

From the central open-work dome of the great arched ceiling hangs a costly and gorgeous wrought iron chandelier with crystal lights and gilt ornament; a most imposing fixture; and the periphery of the dome can be given any tint by ingenuous flood lighting.

The proscenium frame is of intricate open-work pattern, with an heroic figure of Aurora, goddess of the dawn, at the top, and the coat of arms of Colorado and a classic mask worked into decorative relief at the bottom. The pro-

Program for the Spring Convention Society of Motion Picture Engineers

The Committee on Papers and Arrangements have prepared a program of business and pleasure that should appeal to all members and guests of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers attending the Spring Convention at the Hotel Bellevue, Boston, Mass., May 1-4, 1922. The papers will range from the extremely technical to the more general and popular, the entertainment will be novel, distinctive and pleasing. Boston, moreover, with its historical places, beautiful rides, seashore and country, will make an ideal place for the first Convention to which the ladies are especially invited as guests. They will be well taken care of during the business sessions and will mutually share with us in the evening diversions.

Monday morning May 1st will be devoted to the registration of members and guests, opening exercises, President's address, other routine business and a paper. In the afternoon four papers will be presented. In the evening a party is planned for the opening night of the "Pops," a unique and entertaining innovation distinctive to Boston by the renowned and unexcelled Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tuesday will be devoted to a trip to the works of the General Electric Company at Lynn, Mass., where three papers, committee reports and several demonstrations will be given. Prof. Elihu Thomson will speak at a buffet lunch which will be served in the experimental Motion Picture theatre. If time permits an opportunity will be afforded to visit some of the other departments after which a short ride is planned along the famous North Shore. The ride will culminate in a Shore Dinner of shell fish, etc., after which the party will return to Boston.

Wednesday morning's session will consist of the presentation of several committee reports and three papers. After luncheon an automobile trip throughout historic Concord and Lexington (Paul Revere's Ride) is suggested. Wednesday evening will be the banquet, to which the ladies are invited. Dr. C. E. K. Mees will give us, druing the evening, a complete review on Color Photography illustrated by lantern slides, motion pictures and demonstrations.

Thursday morning there will be presented the remaining committee reports and three papers. The afternoon and evening are left open.

Final program and detailed information of trips and social events will be given out at the registration desk at the Hotel Bellevue.

enium frame holds an inner frame of opalesnt glass thru which any desired color can be rown. Masked niches above the exits also e provided with color equipment, so that at y time the entire theatre can be flooded with y color of the rainbow, all lighting being conolled from the operator's booth.

The theatre is provided with several curtains. wo of rich red hang over the screen, which of the most modern type. The frame of the reen is beautifully done in antique motifs of ue and gold. Lovely draperies hang on either de of it. The stage is of sufficient size for etentious dramatic offerings. On each side the stage adjacent to the proscenium arch, e elevated balconies for singers. These balnies have beautiful draperies.

The projection booth is a marvel of modern cinematographic achievement. A battery of six powerful machines is directed at the screen. Three of these are the latest Power's projectors, one is a double-dissolving stereopticon and two are spotlights. The booth is outside the theatre proper, built in the court of the building. It is as if the pictures came thru a long low window from some point outside; and all apparatus in which heat generates are in the open air above the booth. The booth can be isolated from the theatre by a metal door over the port thru which the pictures are shown. The operator has all appliances for comfort without leaving his post.

The Colorado Theatre is equipped with two sources of electricity, the 220 volt city circuit and the 110 volt direct current circuit, generated with its own plant. Thus interruption of either circuit by weather conditions should never interfere with the showing of pictures.

Two of the projectors are to be used for regular work; the third is focused for shorter range, so that in case a prolog setting is being put in place on the stage, an extra screen can be dropped down in front and the show continued without delay. This machine can also relieve the others should it be necessary to make adjustments on them.

Every electric system in the great Colorado can be controlled from this bootn. Its huge switchboard is complete and efficient. An automatic rewinding machine, a novelty for Denver, eases the work of the operator, rewinding the films as soon as they are run through the projectors.

The Colorado can handle crowds all the more easily because, like the America, it has two entrances, one on Sixteenth street which leads thru a beautiful foyer with cove-lighting, to the parquet, and one opening from Curtis street. Both entrances are inclined planes. There are no steps. Impressive marble staircases rise on either side of the Sixteenth street foyer, leading to the mezzanine promenade and balcony. The doorman and ushers in the Colorado are attired in stylish gray uniforms.

Attracting the eye above either of the impressive entrances is an electric sign 72 feet high, spelling the name Colorado in a brilliant pillar of light, each letter being five feet high and seventeen inches wide. A Colorado state flag in color waves at the top of each of these signs.

It is indeed difficult to describe the many surprising beauties of the Colorado theatre, but when the public once sees the interior, with its complete and wonderful accouterments, its comfortable chairs, its imposing roominess, it will realize that in the Colorado theatre Denver has an institution of which to be intensely proud and a peerless testimonial to the highest achievement in Twentieth century theatre building.—

National Anti-Misframe League Forum

GENTLEMEN:

Manager Mahon called my attention this evening to the Anti-Frame League, and before I get busy and have no time, I want to enter my application for a membership.

In the past couple of weeks I have had enough "grief" with films to last me the rest of my life, and you can believe me that I am strong for any organization which is for the prevention of cruelty to the inmates of the projection rooms.

I have not used one of the blanks in your good magazine to enter my application, as we save every one of them for reference work when selecting pictures, motion picture supplies, etc. Hope you will appreciate this and let this matter of "good manners" slip by.

As to the bronze buttons. Get them ready for distribution and declare open season on all operators who do not wear them.

Manager's name is H. C. Mahon, care of Electric Theatre, Gridley, Kansas.

Keep the good work going, and count on me to boost for every pound in me.

Very truly yours,
T. E. SLAVENS.

DEAR SIR:

It has been with increasing interest that I have watched the growth of your forum and although I read with interest the doings of the brother projectionists, I have neglected to place my application to join your forum.

I have been a reader of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS for a few years and have always found the projection and construction department very interesting.

I have been in this end of the game for nearly eight years and at the present time I have charge of all projection at this Marine Post. We have at the present time nine theatres in operation for the amusement of the men and at each one of these places we have a Powers machine. I have my own repair department and do all of the repair work myself. Our picture in the Lyceum, which is the main theatre, is 14 x 18 feet, our throw is 95 feet, and we use A. C. at the arc. Our projection here is claimed to be the best in this part of the country and we do get wonderful projection—it can't be beat. I will forward you some pictures of our department some time.

I am about to start a motion picture operators' school for the benefit of the men in the service who desire to learn this interesting work. I will put them through a six-months course, covering every phase of the work, and of course I do not expect to make expert projectionists in this length of time, but I do hope to give them a broad enough knowledge so that they can handle a machine with ease. Of course they can learn more as they go along, and get experience in the theatre. The school will be equipped with a Powers and Simplex machine, and all of the other equipment that goes to make a first class operating room. Instructions in the care of films and equipment will be one of the main subjects. The repairing of equipment and the wiring of equipment will be another interesting part of it.

The main point of this letter is to forward me about a dozen blanks for entrance in your forum, but if you would be interested further in our school and the work we are doing I will be only too glad to write you fully on this subject.

Anticipating an early reply, I beg to remain,

Very sincerely,
THOMAS NAPOLETANO.

Corporal, U. S. Marine Corps. Chief of Projection. P. O. Box 162, Paris Island, S. C.

Error in Addresses

There have been returned to us by the post office department as unclaimed two membership cards addressed to E. F. Brandon, Columbus, Miss.; and L. J. Martin, Rockford, Ill. If these two brothers would kindly advise us of their correct addresses we will forward their cards immediately. Also the above holds true of a letter addressed to Brother Henry Ward, Midland, Ind., in which we have answered a question on film cement. We hope to hear from the above mentioned members in the near future.—Editor.

DEAR ED:

A few lines of thanks for my membership card now you have made me feel 100 per cent. stronger in helping my brother operators, and hope they all feel the same about it as I do. My manager was proud to see me with it, as I was to get it, and now I am asking you to send me N. A. M. L. labels and button.

In consideration of the projectionist's report, I stand ready for anything in the betterment of our work and would like to have a good look at any operator that doesn't. I have already had a supply of report blanks under print for that purpose, but was only waiting to see if I was accepted as a member, and now as I am, will use them and hope everyone else will do likewise.

I am, projectionally yours,
LE ROY STARKS.

Member Number 1708, Star Theatre, 2515 Avenue D, Galveston, Texas.

DEAR SIR:

Am enclosing 25c in stamps for which please send one of the new N. A. M. L. buttons at once.

Very truly,

DEAR SIR:

I am sending you 25c for a new membership button. Kindly send it as soon as you can. Stamps enclosed.

Very truly yours,
ANDREW GMITTER, 1517.

E. Mauch Chunk, Pa.

Dear Editor:

Since my last letter to the N. A. M. L. there has been a great deal of discussion as to change over devices. At present I am using a fairly good device, that of writing down the scene or title at the end of a reel which I feel can be improved, and therefore would like to hear from some brother member who is using Behlen Film signal on Simplex machines, stating what results he is receiving from same.

I am very much in favor of getting the bronze button for the league members and would like you to forward one to me as soon as you receive them. When sending the button, do not forget to mention the price, as I will forward same at once. Respectfully,

WM. A. RAMER, No. 1399,

NATIONAL ANTI-MISFRAME LEAGUE PLEDGE

AS a motion picture projectionist who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the projection-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in reasonably good condition, according to conditions of film when received. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother projectionists and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

N. A. M. L. FORUM

Dear Editor:

As you know Mr. Jones of this theatre is a member of your N. A. M. L. My employer and I would like to join as we feel it is one of the best movements yet thought of.

Yours truly,
Kenneth D. Davidson,
Harold Ginther, Mgr. and Operator.
Opera House,
Uhrichsville, Ohio.

Dear Editor:

Inclosed you will find application for membership in the N. A. M. L., which I trust you will accept. I have been chief projectionist at the Star for 2 years, read the N. A. M. L. Forum every week and like the way the League is putting things over the top. Wish that I was the only one that was left out of it. As I never use a punch or tin foil of paper marks on my film as a signal, and never run a show without inspecting my film before running, I never have any trouble, only sometimes a misframe or two and then mark it by putting a strip of paper I have for that purpose in the bottom magazine as near the bad place as possible and on rewinding I remedy same, so that when I send them back they are minus all bad patches, misframes, etc.

If all operators would come together and throw away those old punches or give them to some children or conductors, maybe we could get better service from the exchanges.

Projectionally yours,
LeRoy Starks,
Star Theatre, Galveston, Texas.

Dear Editor:

Please find enclosed 25c for which send me a new N. A. M. L. button, also send me some labels as I am out.

How to "Buy"

per cent of the manufacturers submitted more or less reasonable propositions. Then followed conferences with the representatives of the various manufacturers. At this point the owner must begin to really study the situation intensively. He should familiarize himself with the details of each proposition submitted so that he can discuss the various points with the representatives of the other companies.

In this particular case it was important to discover which bidder knew most about the subject, as the apparatus must be properly designed and installed to obtain efficient results. On this account, various changes were suggested to the representatives with requests for new prices. Some bidders then rearranged their proposition and furnished new prices, not only once, but several times. Other bidders stuck to their original scheme, maintaining that it was the only solution of the problem. The writer felt that the latter class probably knew more of the subject and, therefore, were surer of themselves; hence greater consideration was given their proposals.

Finally, in order to compare the prices and weigh the relative merits of all propositions submitted in the fairest way, a table, shown page 2473, was prepared. Each proposition for comparison was reduced to the cost per thousand cubic feet capacity, and these figures are shown at the extreme right.

However, the work could not be awarded to the bidder on a basis of cost per thousand cubic feet only, as the various proposals were not sufficiently uniform. A careful comparison was made which resulted in choosing the proposal of bidder No. 9 for the following reasons:

1. Bidder appeared to be best informed on the subject.
2. Apparatus was simpler, required only two fans and one motor.
3. Lighter in weight.
4. Roller bearings.
5. Cost per 1,000 cubic feet was very low and included wall bracket for motor.

In general this method applies to all purchases of equipment. The important points to remember are: Don't buy from the first salesman that comes to you; get the names of reliable manufacturers, and make a short, intensive study of what you propose to buy. Then buy, not from the lowest bidder, but from the one who gives you the most intelligent proposition at a reasonable figure.

Simplex Distributors Steps on the Gas

Simplex distributors are stepping some these days, and that their results have not been in vain, is proven by a number of installations that have been recently made in the most elaborate theatres.

Among these may be mentioned the new Orpheum theatre, Trenton, N. J., which has a seating capacity of one thousand and was equipped by Lewis M. Swaab & Son of Philadelphia, Pa., with two of the latest type of simplex Projectors. This organization also recently equipped the 1,200-seat Plaza theatre, Milford, Del., which is said to be one of the finest in the state. In addition to the Simplex Projectors a Superlite Screen, G. E. Generator Set, ticket selling machine, ticket chopper and a spotlight were also installed.

Rowland & Clark's, State theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., was Simplex equipped by Hollis-Smith-Morton Co. of the same city who state that they will also equip the new Rowland & Clark theatre, which is about to open in Pittsburgh's most aristocratic neighborhood which will seat 1,800. It will be called the Manor.

Argus Enterprises, Inc., Los Angeles, Calif., report the installation of Simplex Projectors and a Simplex Dissolver in the Hill Street Junior Orpheum theatre of the same city, while the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Co., Detroit, Mich., state that they have equipped the new Capitol theatre, Jackson, Mich., which will be under the management of W. S. McLaren, a well-known and popular Michigan exhibitor.

Statistics released by the moving picture censors' department for the Province of British Columbia for the past year show that there are 74 moving picture theatres in operation in that Province. It is interesting to note that a rather unusual number of traveling cinematographic show companies are operating in British Columbia because of the scattered population and mild climate. The figures show that no less than 28 of these traveling companies were licensed during the past year, these companies making use of public halls and other buildings or grounds in which to offer performances. The Provincial license fees range from $25 for the small traveling show to $300 for the large and imposing moving picture palace. The total receipts during the year for moving picture theatre licenses aggregated $16,827.

Notification has been made by the Provincial authorities of Nova Scotia that all upstair or second-story moving picture theatres in that Province must be permanently closed by Monday, May 1. Action has been taken practically at the request of the Board of Fire Underwriters who apparently look upon the second-floor theatres as an extra hazard. It was intimated about one year ago that the clamp would probably be applied to such theatres in the Province, of which there are a number.

Upstairs theatres in Nova Scotia include the Princess theatre at Truro; Green Lantern at Weymouth; Orpheum at Bridgewater; Opera House at Windsor and Alexander Hall at Lunenburg. It is expected that most of these theatres will be converted into lodge or social club assembly halls.

A proposal of the Saskatchewan Government to open its moving picture censorship offices at Regina, the Provincial capital, is causing the various film exchange companies in Canada some concern. By making this move, the Province of Saskatchewan may make it necessary for the exchanges to open additional branches at Regina in order to take care or censorship details and to distribute films in Saskatchewan. At present this is all done from Winnipeg, the capital of Manitoba, where the censors of both Provinces conduct their work jointly and economically.

The Providence theatre, Kamsack, Sask., recently suffered a serious fire loss and the house has been temporarily closed.

Various cities of Canada are once more adopting the daylight saving plan without regard to the interests of local theatre proprietors. Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto and other large centers will go into "summer time" on April 30 and God's time will be resumed on September 30. Small cities, such as Oshawa, Ontario, have refused to tinker with the clock and will observe standard time throughout 1922.

The important announcement has been made that the Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange, Limited, has made arrangements to handle the distribution throughout Canada of the British releases for which the Canadian rights are obtained by the Anglo-Canadian Picture Plays, Limited, of Montreal.

WESTERN NEW YORK

"The public will be the ultimate judge in the showing of Arbuckle comedies," said Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, when asked what would be the attitude of local theatres on the presentation of "Fatty's" comedies now that the actor has been acquited. "We are in no position to judge the man," said Mr. Franklin. "We will probably show his pictures in our theatre and let the public decide if we are to continue to show them. If the pictures are not wanted we surely will not show them."

"As long as the man has been acquitted of the charge against him, it would not be fair to stand in his way to earn a living," said Mrs. Walter W. Steele, president of the Buffalo Women's City Club, the organization which is conducting a campaign for clean pictures. "If he makes good, clean pictures, that is all we are interested in," said Mrs. Steele. "Gasoline Gus" was screened by Mr. Franklin one evening last week and this may be the first Arbuckle comedy to be shown in Buffalo soon.

Despite the appeal of Mayor Frank X. Schwab that all picture theatres close during the Passion Hours on Good Friday, the Buffalo Theatre Managers' Association did not approve closing from 12 to 3 p. m. "Inasmuch as the theatres throughout the country will run their regular performances on Good Friday the managers of the playhouses in Buffalo cannot see why this city should be made an exception," said Harold B. Franklin, a director of the association. "The question was given serious thought, but as the majority voted for 'open house' the public will be given its amusement the same as any other day."

The Buffalo council this week will decide the fate of the daylight saving ordinance. The theatres of the city have had petitions in the lobbies for folks to sign asking the repeal of the ordinance. Mayor Schwab has recommended that the ordinance be repealed, but the newspapers have started a vigorous campaign in favor of daylight saving. The exhibitors claim the ordinance does harm to their business during the summer months.

The new Amendola theatre opened in Niagara Falls, N. Y., Saturday evening, April 15. John Amendola is the manager. Frank Amendola built the house, which has a seating capacity of 1,000. It is located at Pine avenue and 15th street.

CLEVELAND

Martin G. Smith, president of the M. P. T. O. A. of Ohio, was in Cleveland lalst Tuesday. Smith addressed the members of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

At the last meeting of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, the following members were appointed as delegates to attend the national convention in Washington: M. B. Horowitz, of the Washington Circuit; W. J. Slimm, Marquis theatre; Frank Gross and Sam Barck, both of the Market Square theatre; E. Mandelbaum, of First National Exhibitors' Company; M. Fine and D. Schumann; Martin Brown, Henry Lustig, Ernest Schwartz, Ben Lavine and Abe Kramer.

Louis Israel, prominent local exhibitor, and owner of the Heights theatre, is about to solve the problem of Sunday closing by running free shows on Sunday. His first free show will be Sunday, April 23. The Heights is a beautiful theatre of a thousand seats. It is located in the village of Cleveland Heights, a residence suburb of Cleveland. The mayor of Cleveland Heights prohibits the showing of motion pictures on Sunday. This has worked a hardship on the Heights theatre because all Heights patrons desiring to see a show on Sunday can in ten minutes reach the motion picture center at Euclid and East 105th street, which is in Cleveland and hence open on Sunday. Israel is not giving the free show in opposition to the legal decision handed down by the mayor of Cleveland Heights village but only to keep his patrons from getting the city habit. The experiment is being watched with interest.

FLORIDA

Bean & Trumbull are opening a new theatre in St. Petersburg, Fla., which will be called the Egypt. This house will be exclusively for negroes and gives this city two theatres for colored people, the Maceo Amusement Co. of Tampa, Fla., having opened the Dream theatre there about a montth ago.

C. D. Cooley, the general manager of the Consolidated Amusement Co. of Tampa, Fla., gave the patrons of his Victory theatre a treat recently by engaging Miss Agnes Robinson, a singer formerly with the New Orleans French Grand Opera Company, as an added attraction to his picture program.

M. Diaz, manager of the Royal theatre, West Tampa, Fla., is advertising special summer prices of 5c and 10c for his mid-week shows. These prices will prevail for three days each week, with the regular 10c and 20c prices continued the other four days.

ALBANY, N. Y

If the present plans of Uly S. Hill, manager of the Mark Strand theatre in Albany, N. Y., mature, a new theatre and hotel combined will be erected in Bennington, Vt. Mr. Hill appeared before a gathering of Bennington business men the past week and presented a proposition whereby he and Charles H. Hess would agree to raise $100,000 towards the project with $65,000 to be taken care of through the issuance of preferred stock. The building would cost $165,000, and would be located in the business center of the city.

The Nova Operating Company of Watertown has added the Grand theatre, located in Johnstown, N. Y., to the number of houses already under its management throughout New York state. The house will open on April 17 with a combined program of vaudeville and pictures, under the management of Ernest Hickey. Mr. Hickey was formerly connected with Goldwyn.

KANSAS CITY

When the new business manager of the M. P. T. O. Kansas assumes office, probably next week, he will start with a "clean slate." An entire new set of books will be arranged. The first official duty of the new executive will be to attend the M. P. T. O. A. convention in Washington. Three men, one a prominent lawyer of Kansas City, Kas., and former candidate for congress, are being considered for the office.

Three ministers of Burlingame, Kas., who tried to close up the Panama theatre of R. V. Turner on Sundays, met with defeat. Mr. Turner was arrested each Sunday in February, but the broader-minded citizens of Burlingame, a small village, decided among themselves that it was time for action if they desired to attend motion picture shows on Sundays. Hence the reformers were quietly sent unheralded on their way to other parts.

PITTSBURGH

Fred J. Herrington, secretary of the M. P. T. O. of Western Pennsylvania, is a candidate for the legislature from the sixth district, Pittsburgh.

Jules Naples, owner of the Rex theatre, Youngwood, has sold his theatre to Harry Petz of Jeannette. Harry has closed the theatre for a thorough overhauling and will go after business with a will. Harry has been in the movie business since its very inception.

Hollis, Smith, Morton Co., accessory dealers formerly located at 636 Grand street, will move May 1st to 1022-24-26 Forbes street.

Movie Men's Club, formerly located at 1023 Forbes street, has moved to 1012 Forbes street. Tom Freeman, one of the oldest operators in this section, has charge of the quarters.

The Motion Picture Salesmen's Association of Pittsburgh met at the Chatham Hotel on Friday, April 7.

The Jackson theatre of Rivesville, W. Va., will close temporarily, or until things get better in that town.

Frank Rodgers is the new owner of the Arcade theatre, Morgantown. The Arcade is the oldest theatre in Morgantown, W. Va.

INDIANAPOLIS

City councilmen who have been threatening to pass an ordinance prohibiting sale of tickets to movie shows unless there is a seat for each purchaser are not quite so rabid lately. They now are discussing introduction of a bill to require exhibition of the S. R. O. sign when no seats are left.

The new photoplay house which Stegmeier Brothers are building in North Illinoiis street, and which the Central Amusement Company has leased, was named the Apollo last week. The house seats 1,200 and will be finished in a few weeks.

Super programs of the type run by the Chicago and Tivoli in Chicago are being tried out at the Circle, beginning this week. If proper support is given the policy will be continued. The orchestra was increased from fifteen to thirty pieces, Rudolf Kafka retaining directorship. Stage specialties, prologues and heavy overtures are additions to the program under the new plan. The specialty this week was a band of sixteen girls playing eight pianos.

ExecutiveChanges Made in Poli Circuit

Important changes in executives of the Poli motion picture and vaudeville circuit, made by S. Z. Poli just prior to his departure on a European trip, have been announced at the New Haven offices.

A. J. Vanni, past manager of Poli's Palace theatre at Hartford, is made head of the motion picture department, succeeding Richard C. Miller, recently resigned because of ill health. Henry P. Menges, who has been manager of the Bijou at New Haven, becomes manager of Poli's Palace in Hartford.

J. C. Wodestsky, manager of the Lyric theatre at Bridgeport, Conn., succeeds Menges as manager of the Bijou. The Lyric has been closed for extensive alterations.

Other changes on the circuit include the retirement of Fred Valles as manager of the Plaza at Worcester, Mass. He is succeeded by L. L. Curtis. Edward Alvord becomes manager of Poli's Palace theatre at Waterbury, Conn., succeeding Patrick Liddy, and Earl W. Sipe has succeeded William A. Moore as manager of Poli's Meriden, Conn., theatre.

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

Bears the words "EASTMAN" "KODAK" —in black letters in the transparent film margin, as a means of positive identification, exactly as you see them in the section of film reproduced above.

If you see these same words in white on a black strip you have incontrovertible proof that they were so printed by the finisher to mislead, not stenciled by the manufacturer to identify, and that the stock is not Eastman.
